gavel n. 1805, American English, of unknown origin. —v. 1925, American English; from the noun.

gavotte or gavot n. 1696 gavotte, borrowing of French gavotte, from Provençal gavoto mountaineer's dance, from gavot an Alpine inhabitant gawk v. 1785 gawk, perhaps an alteration of obsolete gaw, Middle English gouwen to stare (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gā to heed). Alteration from gaw to gawk may have been influenced by gawk hand left hand (1703 contraction of gaulick, gaulish hand), and by other verbs in English such as talk, walk and caulk. —gawky adj. 1759, from gawk (in gawk hand) + -y¹.

gay adj. Probably about 1300, splendid or beautiful; earlier, as a surname (1178); borrowed from Old French gai gay, merry; perhaps from Frankish (compare Old High German ugāhi pretty, modern German dialect wāeh). The meaning of joyous or merry appeared probably about 1380. The slang sense of homosexual is first recorded in 1951, apparently shortened from gay cat homosexual boy (about 1935, in underworld and prison slang), but used earlier for a young tramp with a connotation of homosexuality (1897, in American English slang). —n. 1971, a homosexual, American English; from gay, adj.; re-development of earlier gay, n. excellent, gallant, or fair person (probably about 1380; also from the adjective). —gaiety n. 1634 gaity, merrymaking; later cheerfulness, mirth (1647); borrowed from French gaieté, from Old French gai, influenced by English gay; for suffix see -TY². —gaily adv. Before 1375, formed from Middle English gai + -li -ly¹.

gaze v. About 1395 gazen to stare; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish gasa to stare, gape). —n. 1542, something which is stared at; later, a long, steady look (1566); from the verb.

gazebo n. 1752, summerhouse or turret on the roof of a house, often having six or eight sides and a fine view; supposedly derived from gaze and -bo, abstracted from Latin future tenses in -bō, such as videbō I shall see, on the pattern placebō I shall please; perhaps influenced by the earlier formation belvedere a cupola (1596), ultimately formed from Italian bello handsome + vedere sight, from Latin videre (to see).

gazelle n. 1600, borrowed from French gazelle, from Old French gazel, from Arabic ghazāl.

gazette n. 1605, borrowed from French gazette, from Italian gazzetta, from Venetian dialect gazeta newspaper (originally a small coin); for suffix see -ETTE. The gazeta was first published in Venice in the mid-1500's, and was possibly so called from the price of the paper, or from the meaning of little magpie, applied to the newspaper by association. —v. 1678, announce or name in an official gazette; from the noun. —gazetteer n. 1611, journalist, probably from French gazetier (earlier gazettier), from gazette. The meaning of a geographical index, developed from Echarde's The Gazetteer's or Newsman's Interpreter (1704).

gear n. Probably before 1200 gære equipment, arms, apparatus (about 1250); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gervi, gorvi apparel, related to gerr ready, gerva make ready); cognate with Old High German garawī, garwī adornment, garawen make ready, Old Saxon garewī apparel, gæwian make ready. The meaning of wheels with interlocking teeth in machinery is first recorded in 1523. —v. Probably before 1200 geren equip oneself for fighting, dress; probably from the noun. The meaning of to mesh, fit together, be in gear, is first recorded in 1734.

Geiger counter n. 1924, in allusion to its inventor, the German physicist Hans Geiger, and earlier Geiger-Müller counter, in reference to its co-inventor, W. Müller.

geisha n. 1887, borrowing of Japanese geisha, literally, person accomplished in the social arts (gei art, performance + sha society).

gel n. 1899, shortened form of gelatin; perhaps influenced by earlier jell (1870) jelly. —v. 1917, from the noun.

gelatine n. 1713, jellylike substance; later gelatin substance obtained by boiling animal tissues, bones, etc. (1800); in part, borrowed from French gelatine clear jellylike substance, fish broth, from Italian gelatina (gelata jelly, from gelare to jell, from Latin gelāre freeze see JELLY + ITALIAN -ina -ine²), and in part formed from Latin model gelātinus* jellylike, from gelāta* jelly, from gelāre freeze. —gelatinous adj. 1724, formed from English gelatine + -ous after French gélatineux, from gelatine.

geld v. About 1300 gelden, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gelda castrate, from geldr barren; cognate with Old High German galt barren, galza, gelza castrated swine, Middle Low German gelde barren). —gelding n. Before 1382 geldyng a gelded man; earlier, in the surname Geldyng (1296); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic geldingr, from gelda castrate).

gem n. Before 1300 gemme precious stone; also figuratively, precious thing; borrowed from Old French gemme, a learned borrowing from Latin gemma precious stone, jewel; Middle English inherited another form gyimme (recorded probably before 1200); developed from Old English gim (about 750), also borrowed from Latin gemma, but this form disappeared in the early 1300's. —v. 1610, from the noun. —gemstone n. (about 1000)

—gen a combining form meaning something that produces or causes, as in allergen, antigen etc. Borrowed from French -gène, from Greek -genēs born, from génos birth.

gender n. Probably about 1350, grammatical class referring to nouns and pronouns; later, referring to verbs (about 1450). The sense of kind, sort, class of individuals or things, is first recorded in 1378; all borrowed from Old French genre, gendre, learned borrowing from the stem of Latin genus (genitive generis) kind, sort, gender; see GENUS.

gene n. 1911, borrowed from Greek geneá generation, race; see KIN; originally introduced as German Gen in 1909 and proposed then in the English form gene.

genealogy n. Before 1325 genealogi account of the descent of a person or family; borrowed through Old French genealogie, from Late Latin genealogia tracing of a family, from Greek genealogiā (geneá generation, descent + -lógos student of). —genealogical adj. 1577, formed in English from Middle French généalogique + English suffix *-al*¹; replacing earlier genealogical (1447).

general adj. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French general or directly from Latin generālis relating to all, of a whole class, from genus (genitive generis) stock, kind, GENUS; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

Apparently the sense of general pertaining to all, gained prominence in Latin, and thence probably in Western Europe, as a part of the Aristotelian vocabulary which was the result of the new medieval studies of Greek philosophical thought. —n. About 1380, a whole class of things or people; probably from the adjective. The meaning of commander of an army, is first recorded in 1576; borrowed from Middle French général, relating to all, general. —generality n. Probably about 1378 generalite, borrowed from Latin generalitatem (nominative generalitas), from generālis GENERAL, adj. The later generalitee (1425) was borrowed from Middle French généralité, from général GENERAL, n.; for suffix see -ITY. —generalize v. Before 1751; re-formed from general, adj. + -ize; earlier generalisen (before 1425), probably also formed in English. —generally adv. 1340, formed from English general + *-ly*¹.

generation n. Before 1325 generacion offspring, descendant; borrowed through Old French generation and directly from Latin generātiōnem (nominative generātiō), from generāre bring forth; GENERATE; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of a group of descendants of one family or of one period of time, is first recorded before 1325. —generate v. 1509, probably a back formation from earlier generation; and, in some instances, either developed from English generate, adj. (probably before 1425), or borrowed directly from Latin generātus, past participle of generāre bring forth, beget, produce, create, from genus (genitive generis) kind, race, GENUS. —generator n. 1646, person or thing that generates, borrowed from Latin generator, from generāre; for suffix see *-OR*². The meaning of a machine that generates, is first recorded in 1794, and a machine that generates electric energy, in 1879.

generic adj. 1676, belonging to a kind or class, general; formed in English from Latin gener-, stem of genus kind + English suffix -ic. The noun use is first recorded in English in 1807.

generous adj. 1588, of noble birth, magnanimous; borrowed through Middle French généreux, or directly from Latin generōsus of noble birth, from genus (genitive generis) race, stock, GENUS; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of unselfish is first recorded in English in 1696, probably from earlier French, and that of plentiful (as in a generous helping of food), is found in English in 1615. —generosity n. Probably before 1425 generosite excellence, nobility; borrowed from Latin generositatem (nominative generositās), from generōsus of noble birth; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of magnanimity, is first recorded in 1623, and that of unselfishness in 1677.

genesis n. Old English (before 1000) Genesis first book of Old Testament containing an account of creation; borrowing of Latin Genesis, from Greek genesis origin, creation, generation. The general meaning of origin, creation is first recorded in 1604.

genetic adj. 1831, pertaining to origin; borrowed from Greek genetikós genitive, from genesis origin; for suffix see -IC. The biological sense of having to do with origin and natural growth is first recorded in Darwin (1859). —geneticist n. 1913, formed from English genetic + -ist. —genetics n. 1872, laws of origination; formed from English genetic + -s, on the pattern of esthetics, etc. The sense of the study of heredity was introduced in 1905.

genial adj. 1566, nuptial, generative; later, conducive to growth (1647); borrowed from Latin geniālis, pleasant, festive (literally, pertaining to marriage rites), from genius guardian spirit; see GENIUS; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The meaning of cheerful and friendly, is first recorded in 1746. —geniality n. 1609, festivity; formed from genial + -ity. The sense of cheerfulness is first recorded in 1652.

—genic a combining form of adjectives meaning producing, as in carcinogenic (producing carcinogens or substances that can cause cancer), pathogenic; or well-suited to reproduction or dissemination, as in photogenic. Formed from English -gen + -ic.

genie n. 1655 geny guardian spirit; borrowed from French génie, learned borrowing from Latin genius GENIUS. The extension of meaning to the powerful spirit of Muslim mythology, appeared in 1748 from French génie, used to render the Arabic word jinnī, pl. jinn spirit.

genital adj. Before 1382 genytale pertaining to animal generation; borrowed through Old French genital, or directly from Latin genitālis pertaining to generation or birth, from a lost noun geneta* (compare Greek genetē birth); for suffix see *-AL*¹. —n. genitals pl. Before 1393, formed from English genital, adj. + -s.

genitive adj. Before 1398 genityf, case in grammar showing possession, source, or origin; in English, the possessive case; borrowed through Old French genitif, genitive, or directly from Latin cāsus genitīvus genitive case (expressing origin), from a lost noun geneta* birth.

genius n. Before 1393 genius guardian spirit; borrowed from Latin genius guardian deity or spirit, inclination, wit, talent, from the root of gignere beget, produce; see KIN. The meaning of a person endowed with natural ability or talent, and also the sense of natural ability, quality of mind, appeared in 1649.

genocide n. 1944, formed in American English, from Greek génos race, kind + English *-cide*²; coined in reference to the extermination of Jews under the Nazis in World War II.

genotype n. 1910, borrowed from German Genotypus, from Greek génos race, kind + German Typus type (from Latin typus, form).

genre n. 1816, borrowed from French genre kind, sort, style, from Old French; see GENDER.

genteel adj. 1599 gentile stylish, fashionably elegant; borrowed from Middle French gentil nice, graceful, pleasing, from Old French, high-born, noble; see GENTLE. The form genteel represents a reborrowing from French.

gentian n. 1373 gencyan plant with funnel-shaped flowers; borrowed possibly through Old French genciane, and directly from Latin gentiāna, said by Pliny to be used in allusion to Gentius, a king of ancient Illyria.

gentile or Gentile n. Found earliest in a surname (1160), but recorded first in literature before 1382, one who is not a Christian, a pagan; confused in Middle English with Gentle one who is not a Jew (probably 1384); both forms borrowed from (ecclesiastical) Late Latin gentilis foreign, heathen, pagan, from Latin gentilis person belonging to the same family, fellow countryman, from gentilis, adj., of the same family or clan, from gēns (genitive gentis) race, clan; see GENTLE. Late Latin gentilēs, from gentilis was used to translate Greek ethnikós, referring to tà ethnē the nations, and in turn translating Hebrew ha gōyīm the (non-Jewish) nations. —adj. Probably about 1380, pagan or heathen; borrowed from Late Latin gentilis foreign, heathen, from Latin, of the same family or clan.

gentility n. 1340, borrowed from Old French gentilité, and directly from Latin gentilitās relationship in the same family or clan, from gentilis; see GENTLE; for suffix see -ITY.

gentle adj. Probably before 1200 gentile noble, of a good family; borrowed from Old French gentil high-born, noble, from Latin gentilis of the same family or clan, from gēns (genitive gentis) race, clan, from the root of gignere beget; see KIN. Gentle in the sense of kind, gracious, etc., is first recorded about 1280. —gentleman n. Probably before 1200, wellborn man; formed from English gentle + man. The meaning of a well-bred man, is first recorded probably about 1150.

gentry n. About 1303 gentry nobility of rank or birth; borrowed from Old French genterie, or perhaps an alteration of earlier genterie, gentrice (recorded before 1225); borrowed from Old French genterie, variant of gentilise, gentillise noble birth, gentleness, from gentil; see GENTLE. —gentrification n. 1977, formed from English gentrify, on the analogy of such pairs as qualify, qualification. —gentrify v. 1973, formed from English gentry + -fy.

genus n. 1630, back formation from earlier genusflection, modeled on Late Latin genūflectere (Latin genū KNEE + flectere to bend; see FLEX). —genusflection n. Probably about 1425 genusflection; borrowed possibly through Middle French genuflexion, and directly from Late Latin genūflexiōnem (nominative genūflexiō), from stem of genūflectere genusflect.

genuine adj. 1596, natural, native; borrowed from Latin genuinus native, natural (perhaps influenced in stem by ingenuus native, freeborn, upright, and in formation by contrasting adulterīnus spurious); from the root of gignere beget; see KIN.

genus n., pl. genera 1551, kind or class of things, in logic; borrowed from Latin genus (genitive generis) race, stock, kind; cognate with Greek génos race, kind, and gónos birth, offspring, stock; see KIN.

geo- a combining form meaning earth, as in geography, geocentric from the earth's center; or geographical, as in geopolitics. Borrowed through French and Latin, from Greek geō-, combining form (as in geōmetría geometry) of gē earth.

geodesy n. 1570 geodesie surveying; borrowed from New Latin geodaesia, from Greek geōdaísia division of the earth (ultimately from gē earth, land + daiein divide). —geodesic adj. (1821) —geodetic adj. (1834) geography n. 1542, borrowed from Latin geōgraphia, from Greek geōgraphía description of the earth's surface (gē earth + -graphía description, from gráphein write). In some instances borrowed from Middle French géographie. —geographic adj. 1630, a shortened form of earlier geographical, in some instances, borrowed from Middle French géographique. —geographical adj. 1559, from Late Latin geographicus (from Greek geōgraphikós, from geōgraphía geography) + English -al.

geology n. 1735, study of the earth; borrowed from New Latin geologia, from Medieval Latin, study of earthly things, from Greek gē earth + -logía; see -LOGY. —geological adj. (1795) —geologist n. (1795) geometry n. About 1330 geometrie, borrowed from Old French géométrie, from Latin geōmetria, from Greek geōmetría measurement of earth or land, geometry (gē earth, land + -metría, from metrein to measure). —geometric adj. 1630, shortened form of earlier English geometrical. —geometrical adj. 1392, formed in English from Latin geōmetricus, Greek geōmetrikós, from geōmetrēs land measurer (gē earth + metrein to measure) + English suffix -al.

geranium n. 1548, borrowing of Latin geranium, the plant name, from Greek geránon the plant name (diminutive of géranos CRANE, so called from the supposed resemblance of the seed pod to the bill of a crane).

gerbil n. 1849 gerbille, borrowing of French, from New Latin Gerbillus the genus name (gerbo, variant of jerboa JERBOA + -il -le¹).

geriatrics n. 1909, formed in English from Greek gêras old age + iātrikós of a physician (iātrós, related to iāsthai heal, treat, of uncertain origin). —geriatric adj. 1926, back formation from geriatrics.

germ n. About 1450 germ bud or sprout, later, earliest form of a living thing (1644); borrowed from Middle French germe, from Old French, from Latin germen (genitive germinis) sprout or bud. The sense of the seed of a disease is first recorded in 1803; later, with the sense of microbe or microorganism (1871, in germ theory).

german adj. having the same parents, as in brothers-german; related as a child of one's uncle or aunt, as in cousin-german. Probably about 1300 germain; later german (before 1387); borrowed from Old French germain, from Latin germānus of brother and sisters, related to germen (genitive germinis) sprout or bud; see GERM. Related to GERMANE.

German n. Before 1387 Germanyn, German member of the Germanic tribes; later, native of Germany (1530, relating to the Holy Roman Empire); borrowed from Latin Germānus, a member of the Germāni, a group of peoples or tribes inhabiting central and northern Europe at the beginning of the Christian era. The origin of the Latin name is unknown (it was not used by Germanic peoples who have used Deutsch, see DUTCH). —adj. 1552, of Germany or its people, from the noun in English, and probably influenced by Latin Germānus of or pertaining to the Germāni or to Germānia the country of the Germanic peoples. —Germanic adj. 1633, of Germany or the Germans, formed from English German, n. or adj. + -ic, and probably influenced by Middle French germanique, and Latin Germānicus, from Germānus German. —n. 1892, the language family of the Germanic peoples, replacing the older term Teutonic.

germane adj. closely connected, appropriate, relevant. 1340 germayn, a figurative use (with variant spelling) of GERMAN of the same parents, related.

germanium n. 1886, New Latin germanium; formed from Germania Germany, from Latin Germānia country of the Germanic peoples + -ium.

Germano- a combining form meaning of Germany or of the Germans, as in Germanophile; or German and —, as in Germano-American. Formed from German and the connecting vowel -o-.

germinal adj. of or in the earliest stage of development. 1808, borrowed from New Latin germinalis in the germ, from Latin germen (genitive germinis) sprout, bud, GERM; for suffix see -AL¹.

germination n. About 1450, borrowed from Latin germinātiōnem (nominative germinātiō) sprouting forth, budding, from germināre to sprout, put forth shoots, from germen (genitive germinis); a sprout or bud. for suffix see -ATION. —germinate

v. 1610, probably a back formation from germination, replacing earlier germynen (recorded probably in 1440); borrowed through, or by influence of, Middle French germiner, from Latin germināre; for suffix see -ATE¹.

gerontology n. 1903, formed in English from Greek gérōn (genitive gérontos) old man + English -logy.

gerrymander n. arrangement of electoral divisions to give one political party an unfair advantage. 1812, American English, formed in allusion to Elbridge Gerry + (sala)mander. Governor Gerry's party redistricted Massachusetts in 1812 to enable the Antifederalists to retain a majority; consequently Essex County was divided so that one district looked somewhat like a salamander, a figure that was widely caricatured and given the name Gerrymander. —v. 1812, American English, from the noun.

gerund n. 1513, probably a shortening of earlier gerundif (referring to nouns as well as adjectives); influenced in the distinction of applying only to nouns by Late Latin gerundium, patterned on participium participle, from Old Latin gerundum (Classical Latin gerendum) to be carried out, the gerund form of gerere to bear, carry. —gerundive n. Before 1425, gerundif (referring to both nouns and adjectives); borrowed from Late Latin gerundivus modus mood, from gerundium gerund. —adj. 1612, from the noun; for suffix see -IVE.

Gestalt n. 1922, in the compounds Gestalt-psychologists and Gestalt theory; earlier, as part of a German compound Gestaltqualität the quality of a Gestalt (1909), from Middle High German gestalt form, configuration, appearance, abstracted from ungestalt deformity, noun use of the adjective ungestalt misshapen (un- UN- + gestalt, obsolete past participle of stellen to place, arrange).

Gestapo n. 1934, borrowing of German Gestapo, acronym formed from Ge(heime) Sta(ats)-po(lizei) secret state police, formed by the Nazis as a para-military instrument to carry out state political policy.

gestation n. 1533, borrowed from Latin gestātiōnem (nominative gestātiō) a carrying, from gestāre bear, carry, gestate, a frequentative form of gerere to bear, carry, bring forth; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of pregnancy or development of young in the womb, is first recorded in English in 1615. —gestate v. 1866, back formation of gestation, perhaps modeled on Latin gestātus, past participle of gestāre; for suffix see -ATE¹.

gesticulation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin gesticulātiōnem (nominative gesticulātiō), from gesticulārī to gesture, mimic, from gesticulus a mimicking gesture, diminutive of gestus (genitive gestūs) gesture, carriage, posture; see GESTURE; for suffix see -ATION. —gesticulate v. 1601, back formation of earlier gesticulation, possibly influenced by French gesticuler, but probably modeled on Latin gesticulātus, past participle of gesticulārī; for suffix see -ATE¹.

gesture n. About 1400, bearing or deportment; borrowed from Medieval Latin gestura bearing, behavior, from Latin gestus (genitive gestūs) gesture, carriage, posture, from ges-, stem of gerere to bear, carry. The meaning of movement of the body to emphasize speech, is first recorded in English about 1454. —v. 1542, from the noun.

get v. Probably about 1200 geten obtained by effort, gain, acquire; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic geta to get, reach).

Even though vestiges of the Old English equivalent form -gietan (found in various compounds, such as begietan beget, forbietan forget, undergietan understand) remain in the past participle gotten, the verb get is a Middle English borrowing.

gewgaw n. Probably before 1200 giuegaue; of uncertain origin (possibly a reduplicated form connected with Old French gogue joke, game).

geyser n. 1780, in allusion to Icelandic Geysir, the name of a hot spring in the valley of Haukadal, Iceland, from geysa to gush, from Old Icelandic geysa.

ghastly adj. Before 1325 gastli; earlier gastlich (probably before 1300); formed from gast (past participle of gasten to frighten, make horrible; developed from Old English gæstan to frighten) + -lich *-ly*². The spelling ghastly (with gh-) is influenced by ghost, with which gastli, ghastly was often confused, especially in Middle English; see GHOST. —adv. 1589, from the adjective.

gherkin n. 1661 girkin, borrowed from Dutch gurken, plural of gurk cucumber, a shortened form (corresponding to English cuke) of augurk, agurk cucumber; of uncertain origin; probably from a Slavic source (compare Polish ogórek cucumber, Czech okurka, Serbian ugorka, possibly from Medieval Greek angourion watermelon). The suffix -kin was adopted in Dutch (-ken); see KIN. The h was added in the 1800's to preserve the so-called hard g.

ghetto n. 1611, a part of a city to which Jews were restricted, chiefly in Italy; borrowed from Italian ghetto, of uncertain origin; suggestions include borrowing from Yiddish get deed of separation, special use of Italian (Venetian) getto foundry (near the site a ghetto in that city); Egitto, a borrowing from Latin Aegyptus Egypt; or abstraction from Italian borghetto small section of a town.

By 1892, the word had acquired the meaning of any section inhabited by Jews, and since the early 1900's it has been used to describe similar quarters of minority groups.

ghost n. Probably before 1200 gost, gast spiritual being; angel, devil, or spirit; developed from Old English (before 800) gāst soul, spirit; cognate with Old Frisian jēst spirit, Old Saxon gēst, Middle Dutch gheest (modern Dutch geest), Old High German geist (modern German Geist), Old Icelandic geiska in geiskafullr full of fright, Gothic usgaisjan frighten. The spelling ghost appeared about 1425 (probably influenced by Middle Dutch gheest).

The transferred sense of a faint image or shadow, slight suggestion (as in a ghost of a chance) is found in 1613. The artistic ghost who does work for another, is first found in the 1880's. The verb use of to act as a ghost (writer) is recorded in 1922.

ghoul n. 1786, borrowed, from Arabic ghūl, an evil spirit that in Muslim countries is believed to rob graves and feed on corpses, from ghāla he seized.

GI or G.I. adj. 1936, American English, apparently from G(overnment) I(ssue), as in G.I. shoes, G.I. trucks, and applied to anything associated with servicemen (a GI haircut, a GI bride); possibly influenced by the abbreviation for Galvanized Iron (1928), in G.I. can, referring to such iron garbage cans used at military bases. —n. Informal. 1943, American English, from the adjective.

giant n. About 1300 geant, geaunt mythical being of superhuman height; borrowed from Old French geant, from Vulgar Latin gagantem* (nominative gagās), variant of Latin gigās giant, from Greek gigās (genitive gigantos) one of a race of savage men eventually destroyed by the gods. The spelling was first altered from ge- to gi- about 1350, after the Latin. The meaning of a human being of unusually large stature, is recorded in 1559. —adj. Before 1425 geaunt, as an attributive use of the noun.

gibber v. 1604, probably back formation from gibberish. —gibberish n. About 1554 gibbrish (gibbr- imitative of the sound of chatter, probably influenced by jabber + *-ish*¹).

gibbet n. Probably before 1200, a gallows; borrowed from Old French gibet, diminutive of gibe club, perhaps from Frankish gibb* forked stick (compare German Bavarian dialect Gipfel forked branch); for suffix see -ET. —v. 1597, from the noun.

gibbon n. 1770, borrowed from French gibbon, who supposedly based the name on a word of the French colonies in India.

gibbous adj. Before 1400, borrowed from Late Latin gibbōsus hunchbacked, from Latin gibbus hump, hunch.

gibe or jibe v. 1563, implied in giber one who gibes; of uncertain origin (perhaps borrowed in the sense of use horse-play, from Middle French giber to handle roughly, or possibly an alteration of gaber to mock). —n. 1573, from the verb.

giblet n. Usually, giblets, pl. heart, liver, or gizzard of a fowl. 1440 gybelet, earlier gyblot unnecessary addition or appendage (about 1303); borrowed from Old French gibelet game stew; of unknown origin.

giddy adj. Probably before 1300 gidi unstable or crazy; developed from Old English (about 1000) gidig, spelling variant of gydig* insane or mad, possessed by a spirit, probably derived from Proto-Germanic judizás*, from judán* GOD + -ig *-y*¹ possessed.

gift n. About 1250, thing given; earlier, in the proper name Witegift (1104); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gift, usually written gipt a gift). The Old English gift does not seem to have long survived Middle English (probably disappearing shortly after 1110), and is recorded only in the sense of payment for a wife; however, cognates are found in Old Frisian jeft gift, Old Saxon gift, Middle Dutch ghifte, Middle Low German gifte gift, Old High German gift (modern German Mitgift dowry), and Gothic -gifts in fragifts espousal, all from the same Germanic source found in Old English giefan to GIVE. A specialized meaning in English is that of inspiration, found as early as 1175, and later developing into the sense of natural talent, first recorded in before 1325. —v. 1500's, surviving especially in gifted talented; from the noun.

gig¹ n. light carriage. 1790, a small rowboat or sailboat; 1791, light carriage; perhaps transferred uses, referring to their bouncing action, of ghyg, gigge spinning top, found in early compound whyrlgyg (1440); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish gig spinning top, and Old Icelandic geiga turn sideways).

gig² n. job. 1926, a single musical engagement, said to be used by U.S. jazz musicians as early as 1905; of uncertain origin.

giga- a combining form meaning one billion, as in gigacycle, gigahertz, etc. Borrowed from Greek gigās giant.

gigantic adj. 1612, of a giant or giants, possibly formed by substitution of -ic from gigantine (1605); or formed in English from earlier gigant giant (probably before 1425) or Latin gigant- (stem of gigantem, from gigās giant) + English suffix -ic. It is also possibly borrowed directly from Greek gigantikós, from gigās (genitive gigantos) GIANT.

giggle v. 1509, probably of imitative origin, similar to gaggle, cackle. —n. 1577, from the verb.

gigolo n. 1922, borrowed from French gigolo, from gigolette dancing girl, prostitute. The word appeared in Middle English giglot (probably 1350–75) in reference to villainous men, and earlier as gigelot, in reference to women (before 1325); borrowed from Old French.

Gila monster n. 1877, American English, in allusion to the Gila River, which runs through the habitat of this lizard.

gild v. Probably before 1300 gilden, developed from Old English gyldan (especially in compounds, such as ofergyldan cover with gold); cognate with Old Icelandic gylla to gild, and Old High German -gulden in ubergulden cover with gold and derived from Proto-Germanic zulthianan*, from zulthan* gold, the source of Old English gold GOLD.

gill¹ n. organ of breathing. Before 1325 gille, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gjalnar gills, Swedish gel, geel gill or jaw, modern Swedish gäl gill, Old Danish -gæln in fiske-gæln fish gill, modern Danish gjælle gill, Norwegian gjell).

gill² n. measure for liquids. 1310 gille; borrowed from Medieval Latin gillo, gello earthenware jar, and from Old French gille, gello a wine measure, probably a learned borrowing from Late Latin gillō, gello.

gillie n. Before 1605, attendant on a Scottish Highlands chief, from Gaelic gille lad, servant, from Old Irish gilla young man, lad. The meaning of attendant of a sportsman, is first recorded in 1848.

gillyflower n. 1551, spelling alteration (by association with flower) of earlier gilofre clove (before 1300); borrowed from Old French gilofre, girofle clove, ultimately from Greek karyōphyllon clove, nut leaf, the dried flower bud of the clove tree (káryon nut + phýllon leaf). The original meaning of clove carried over in the sense of flower with clovelike fragrance (1380).

gilt n. 1432, from gilt, gilte, past participle of Middle English gilden, v.; see GILD. —adj. Probably before 1400 gilten, formed as a blend of gilt (past participle of Middle English gilden, v.), and earlier gilden, adj. (1070), developed from Old English gyldan, v.; see GILD.

gimbals n.pl. 1780, earlier joints or connecting links (1577), alteration of gimmels, gemels a hinge (1536), found in Middle English meaning twins (before 1382), plural of gemel twin, borrowing of Old French gemel twin, from Latin gemellus, diminutive of geminus twin.

gimcrack n. 1618, affected or showy person, fop, of uncertain origin; a possible altered form of gibecrake a kind of ornament (1360; earlier in the surname Gybecrake, 1229; perhaps formed in English from Old French giber to rattle, shake + Middle English crak sharp noise, crack). The meaning of showy trifle is first found in 1839.

gimlet n. 1350 gymbelette, as a ship carpenter's tool; later gymlet (1475); borrowed from Anglo-French gimbelet, perhaps from Middle Dutch wimmelkijn, diminutive of wimmel auger, drill.

gimmick n. 1926, American English, a gadget or device for performing a trick or deception, perhaps an alteration of gimcrack. The sense of a tricky or clever idea, is first recorded in the 1940's. —gimmickry n. (1952) —gimmicky adj. (1957) gimp¹ n. braidlike trimming. 1664, of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Dutch gimp, of the same meaning.

gimp² n. lame person or leg. 1925, a lame leg; perhaps formed by association with limp. The sense of a person who is not very adroit, is found about 1952.

gin¹ n. alcoholic drink. 1714, alteration and shortening of geneva a spirit flavored in Holland with juice from juniper berries (1706). The name is an alteration of earlier Dutch genever, jenever juniper, from Old French genevre, from Vulgar Latin jeniperus*, altered from Latin jūniperus juniper.

gin² n. machine for separating cotton from its seeds. 1740, American English, from earlier gin any ingenious device or contrivance, skill, artifice (probably about 1200); borrowed from Old French gin machine, device, scheme.

ginger n. 1363–64 gynger; earlier gingivre, and gingivere, (probably before 1200); developed, with influence of Old French gingibre, from Old English (about 1000) gingifer. Both the Old English and Old French forms were borrowed from Medieval Latin gingiber, from Latin zingiberi, from Greek zingiberis, from Middle Indic, as represented by Tamil iñci ginger and vēr root.

Ginger spirit, spunk, temper, is first recorded in American English, in 1843. —gingerbread n. Before 1450 gyngere brede a kind of stiff pudding; earlier, preserved ginger (1228); borrowed from Old French gingembraz, gingembras, from Medieval Latin gingibratum*, gingebrada (from gingiber); the last syllable re-formed in Middle English to conform to the sense of bread. The later sense of a kind of cake, is first recorded after 1570.

gingerly adv. 1519, elegantly, daintily (walking or dancing), of uncertain origin; perhaps formed in English from ginger-, from Old French gensor, genzor pretty, delicate + English suffix *-ly*¹. Extended sense of the word was first recorded to mean with extreme caution, especially to avoid making noise or injuring something (1607), and later cautiously or warily (1647). —adj. 1533, dainty, delicate, mincing; probably from the adverb. The sense of very cautious or wary, is recorded in the 1800's.

ingham n. 1615, borrowed through Dutch gingang, ginggang, Dutch traders' rendering of a Malay word transliterated as ginggang striped, especially later, in reference to cloth.

gingival adj. 1669, formed in English from Latin gingiva gums + English *-al*¹. —gingivitis n. 1874, formed in English from Latin gingiva + English suffix -itis inflammation.

ginkgo n. 1773, borrowed from a Japanese word transliterated as ginkō, from Chinese yin-hing (yin silver + hing apricot).

giraffe n. 1594 gyrassa, borrowed from Italian giraffa, from Arabic zarāfa, probably from an African language. The spelling of this word in English has varied, depending on which language was the immediate source. The current spelling in English is a borrowing from French girafe, but earlier forms, such as jarraf and ziraph (1600's) were probably taken directly from Arabic. In Middle English the spelling gerfauntz (about 1400) came possibly from Middle French gerfaucz, from an Egyptian form of Arabic; and gerfaunt was probably formed in Middle English from Old French ger-, in gerfaucz + -faunt, abstracted from Middle English olifaunt elephant.

gird v. Probably before 1200 gurdan, developed from Old English gyrdan put a belt or girdle around (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian gerda to gird, Old Saxon gurdian, Old High German gurtan (modern German gürten), Old Icelandic gyrdha, and Gothic bigairdan, from Proto-Germanic zurdjanan* and zurdanan*. The figurative sense of prepare for action, is first recorded before 1500. —girdler n. 1611, main supporting beam; formed from gird, v. + *-er*¹.

girdle n. Probably about 1200 girdel, before 1200 gurdel; developed from Old English (about 1000) gyrdel belt, sash, cord, etc., worn around the waist; cognate with Old Frisian gerdel girdle, belt, Middle Low German and Dutch gordel, Old High German gurtel (modern German Gürtel), Old Icelandic gyrdhill, and related to Old English gyrdan to GIRD. The modern sense of a lightweight, elastic corset, is first recorded in 1925. —v. 1582, encircle; from the noun.

girl n. Probably before 1300 gyrle child of either sex, young person; perhaps related to Old English gierela garment. Such forms as appear in Low German gör, göre child (modern dialectal German Göre girl), Norwegian dialect gorre, and Swedish dialect garre, gurre a small child, may be cognates or simply accidental, vaguely similar forms. Girl with the specific meaning of female child, is first recorded in English before 1375.

girth n. Probably before 1300 gerth belt placed around an animal's belly; earlier, in the compound Gerthmakere; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gjörð girdle, belt, hoop, from Proto-Germanic ertu*). The meaning of the measurement around an object, is first recorded in 1664.

gist n. 1711, the basis for a legal action, found in Je scay bien ou gist le lievre I know well which is the very point of the matter, quoted in a French-English dictionary (1611), and also found in Anglo-French law cest action gist this action lies; gist being from Old French gist in gist en it consists in, it lies in (third person singular present indicative of gisir to lie), from Latin jacet it lies, third person singular present indicative of jacere to lie.

The extended meaning of the essential part or essence of anything is first recorded in English in 1823.

give v. About 1200 gifen (with initial guttural g), alteration of earlier yiven, yeven (before 1131). This change probably took place by influence of Scandinavian forms (compare Old Icelandic gefa to give, Swedish giva, Old Danish giva), as seen first in early texts of the north of England, where forms with g originated. The vowel also fluctuated even in Middle English and there is disparity within texts, perhaps being merely graphic but indicating the range (giefan, gifan, gyfan, gefan), and between texts (yiven, yeven). Middle English yiven, yeven developed largely from the West Saxon dialect form in Old English giefan (usually transcribed giefan in this book to show antecedents of the development of g; recorded about 725, in Beowulf).

The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian jeva to give, Old Saxon geban, Middle Dutch gheven (modern Dutch geven), Old High German geban (modern German geben), Old Icelandic gefa, and Gothic giban to give, from Proto-Germanic zebanan*, altered by influence of its opposite nemanan* take, from the original stem gab-*, as in Gothic gabei riches. —giver n. (1340) gizmo n. 1943, American English, of uncertain origin; an arbitrary formation probably out of the same linguistic mechanism as gadget, dingus, thingumbob, and similar words referring to things whose names are unknown or difficult to remember.

gizzard n. Before 1450 gyssour second stomach of a fowl; earlier gisser the liver (1373); borrowed from Old French gisser, guiser formed by a sound change of dissimilation of Latin gig-, in gigeria, gizeria (neuter plural) cooked entrails of a fowl. Addition of the final -d in the 1500's, to form gizzard, came from the influence of words ending in -ard, such as coward, dastard.

glacial adj. 1656, cold, icy; borrowed probably through French glacial, from Latin glaciālis icy, frozen, full of ice, from glaciēs ice; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

glacier n. 1744, borrowed from French glacier (earlier, dialectal glacière), from Old French glace ice, from Vulgar Latin glacia*, from Latin glaciēs; see COLD.

glad adj. Probably before 1200 glad joyful, merry, mild, gracious, pleased; developed from Old English glæd bright, shining, joyous (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian gled smooth, Old Saxon glad- (in compounds such as gladmōdi joyous, happy), Old High German glat shining, Middle High German gelat, glat shining, smooth, slippery (modern German glatt smooth), Middle and modern Dutch glad smooth, and Old Icelandic gladhr bright, glad, from Proto-Germanic gladaz*. — gladden v. Before 1400 gladenen to rejoice, make glad; formed from earlier gladen make glad (probably before 1200; developed from Old English, about 950, gladian be glad, make glad) + *-en*¹.

glade n. About 1400 glade a bright or open space in a wood, a clearing; earlier in the place name Gledele (1131–41); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gladhr bright). Later writers associated it with shade or an open area in the woods. In American English the sense of a marshy tract of low ground covered with grass, is first recorded in 1644; since the 1800's such tracts are often called everglades, from the Everglades region in Florida.

gladiator n. Probably before 1439, borrowing of Latin gladiātor (literally, swordsman), from gladius sword, allegedly from Gaulish kladyos* (compare Welsh clddyf sword). In some later instances the word spelled with -our may have been borrowed from Middle French.

gladiolus n. About 1000, as Latin gladiolum; later, Anglicized as gladiol (probably 1440); and perhaps reborrowed (1567) from Latin in the form gladiolus wild iris (literally, small sword), diminutive of gladius sword (so called by Pliny in reference to the plant's sword-shaped leaves).

glamour or glamor n. 1720, Scottish glamour magic, enchantment, spell; possibly earlier glamer, alteration of English GRAMMAR and its Scottish variant gramarye occult learning or scholarship. The meaning of magical beauty or alluring charm, is first recorded in 1840. — glamorize v. 1936, American English; formed from English glamor + -ize. — glamorous adj. 1882, formed from English glamor + -ous.

glance v. 1441 glawncen to glide off at a slant as a weapon does, probably variant of earlier glacen to graze, strike a glancing blow (about 1300); borrowed from Old French glacer, glacier to slip, make slippery, from glace ice; see GLACIER. The meaning of look quickly (first recorded in 1583), was probably further influenced by glenten look askance; see GLINT. — n. 1503, from the verb, probably influenced by glente, n., a glimpse, look (before 1338). The meaning of a brief or hurried look is first recorded in 1591.

gland n. 1692, possibly a shortened form of earlier glandele, glandula, n. (before 1400); borrowed through Old French glandule, or directly from Latin glandula; and borrowed from French glande gland, tumor, altered form of Old French glandre gland, swollen gland in the neck, from Latin glandula gland of the throat, tonsil, diminutive of glāns (genitive glandis) acorn. — glandular adj. 1740, borrowed from French glandulaire, from glandule small gland, from Latin glandula; for suffix see glanders n. About 1410 glaundres; borrowed from Old French glandres, plural of glandre GLAND.

—AR. This word replaced the adjective glandulous (recorded before 1400).

glare¹ v. About 1275 glaren to shine with a brilliant light; borrowed perhaps from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German glaren to gleam, related to glas GLASS. The meaning of to stare fiercely, is first recorded about 1387–95. — n. Probably before 1400 glayre, bright light; later, a fierce look (1667); from the verb. — glaring adj. 1387–95, from glare, v.; later, conspicuous (1706).

glare² adj. bright and smooth. 1832, American English as glare ice, from earlier glare icy condition (1567); probably an extended use of *glare*¹, n.; and a confusion with glair, n., clear, glistening (1296, borrowed from Old French glair, from Gallo-Romance clāria*, from Latin clārus clear). — n. 1854; from the adjective.

glass n. Probably about 1225 glas; earlier gles (probably before 1200); found in Old English (about 750) glæs; ultimately derived from Proto-Germanic glāsa-n*, from the base gla-, variant of glē- (compare Old Frisian gles glass, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, Middle High German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch glas, modern German Glas, and Old Icelandic gler glass). The meaning of a drinking glass is recorded probably before 1200. — v. 1577, cover or protect with glass; earlier, fit or provide with glass, especially with glass windows (1369); from the noun. — glassy adj. Before 1398, formed from Middle English glas glass, n. + *-y*¹.

glaucoma n. 1643 glaucome, borrowed from Greek glaukōma cataract, opacity of the crystalline lens, from glaukōs bluish green, gray; (originally) gleaming, of uncertain origin. The distinction between cataracts and glaucoma was not established until about 1705.

glaze v. 1369 glasen to fit or furnish with glass; from glas GLASS, probably influenced by earlier glazier. — n. 1784, substance used to make a glossy coating; from the verb; earlier a window (before 1700). — glazier n. 1296–97 formed from glas, n., and glasen, v. + -ier.

gleam n. Probably before 1200 gleam beam of light; developed from Old English glām brightness, splendor, radiance (about 725), from Proto-Germanic glaimiz*; cognate with Old Frisian glā to glow, Old Saxon glimo, Old High German gleimo glowworm, Old Icelandic gljá. — v. Probably about 1200 gleamen, from gleam, n.

glean v. About 1330 glenen to gather; borrowed from Old French glener, from Late Latin glennāre make a collection, from Gaulish (compare Old Irish doglinn he gathers, or gleans). — gleanings n. pl. (1440) glee n. Before 1250 gle, developed from Old English (about 700) gliu, (before 800) glio; later glīu, glēo entertainment, mirth, jest, from Proto-Germanic gliujan*; cognate with Old Icelandic glý joy. Throughout Old and Middle English glee was largely of poetic use and became rare after the 1400's. Its revival remains unexplained. —glee club 1814, a group of singers organized originally to sing part songs and glees (song of three or more parts, 1659, from music or musical entertainment, probably before 1200).

glen n. 1489, small, narrow valley, in Scottish; developed from Gaelic gleann; earlier, glenn mountain valley; cognate with Old Irish glenn, Irish gleann and Welsh glyn valley.

glib adj. 1593, speaking or spoken smoothly or too easily; 1598, easy or offhand; 1599, smooth and slippery, as of a surface; earlier, as an adverb (1594); possibly a shortened form of obsolete glibbery slippery; possibly borrowed word from Low German glibberig smooth or slippery, from Middle Low German glibberich (glibber jelly + -ich -y¹).

glide v. Before 1200 gliden; found in Old English glīdan move along smoothly and easily (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian glīda to glide, Old Saxon glīdan, Middle Low German gliden (modern Dutch glijden), Middle High German glīten, Old High German glītan (modern German gleiten). from Proto-West-Germanic glīdan*. —n. 1590, from the verb. —glider n. 1440 glydare person or thing that glides, formed from glide, n. + *-er*¹. The sense of an airplane without a motor, appears about 1897.

glimmer v. Before 1375 glimeren to shine brightly; probably a frequentative form related to Old English glāem brightness; see GLEAM, and cognate with Middle Dutch glimmen to glimmer, and Middle High German glimmern to glow. The meaning of shine brightly, died out in the early 1500's, leaving only a weakened sense of shine faintly. —n. 1590, from the verb.

glimpse v. 1592, to shine faintly, alteration of glymsen to glance at (1450); earlier, to glisten (before 1325); developed possibly from Old English glimsian*; cognate with Middle High German glimsen to glimmer, and glimmern to glow; see GLIMMER, and possibly from Proto-Germanic glīm-/glaim-/glim-*; see GLEAM, GLIMMER. The p is possibly an intrusion that developed dialectally to facilitate pronunciation. The meaning of catch a quick view of, is first recorded in 1779. —n. About 1540 glimse momentary appearance; from the verb; earlier glimpsing imperfect vision (about 1359).

glint v. 1787, Scottish, shine with flashing light; apparently an alteration of earlier glenten to gleam, flash, glisten (probably about 1380); probably from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish glinta to slip, shine, and dialectal Norwegian gletta to look), from Proto-Germanic glenti-*. —n. 1826, from the verb.

glissade n. 1843, a sliding step in ballet; later, a slide down a slope, especially in ice or snow (1862); borrowed from French glissade, from glisser to slip or slide, from Dutch glissen, from Old Dutch glissen, glitsen; for suffix see -ADE.

glisten v. Probably about 1200 glistnen to glitter or gleam; developed from Old English (about 1000) glisnian, a form related to glisian glisten, and cognate with Old Frisian glisia to glimmer or blink, Middle Low German glisen, glissen to glitter, Middle High German glistern to sparkle, dialectal Norwegian glissa to glitter, and Old Danish glisse to shine. —n. 1398, from glistening, n., from the verb.

glitch n. 1962, American English; probably borrowed from Yiddish glitsh a slip, from glitshn to slip, from German glitschen, and related to gleiten to glide; see GLIDE.

glitter v. About 1380 gliteren to flash, sparkle; earlier glideren (probably before 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic glitra to glitter, related to glita to shine); for suffix see -ER⁴. The Old Icelandic forms are cognate with Old Saxon glītan, Middle High German and modern German glitzern to glitter, Old High German glīzzan to shine, Gothic glitmunjan to glitter, and Old English glitenian to glitter. —n. 1602; from the verb.

glitzy adj. 1966, probably formed in English from German glitz(ern) to GLITTER + English suffix -y¹. —glitz n. 1978, back formation from glitzy.

gloaming n. About 1425 gloming, Scottish; developed from Old English (about 1000) glōmung, from glōm twilight, related to glōwan to GLOW; for suffix see -ING¹. The word continued to be used by Scottish writers after falling into disuse in standard English and was reintroduced through their writings in the 1800's.

gloat n. 1575, to look with a secret or sidelong glance; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic glotta smile scornfully, Swedish glutta to peep, peer). The meaning of gaze or ponder with pleasure is first recorded in 1748.

globe n. About 1450, anything round like a ball, a sphere; borrowed from Middle French globe, and as a learned borrowing directly from Latin globus sphere. The meaning of the planet Earth, is first recorded in 1553, in which globe is also used to mean a sphere with the map of the earth on it. —global adj. 1676, spherical; formed from English globe, n. + *-al*¹. The meaning of universal, world-wide, is first recorded in 1892. —globular adj. 1656, borrowed from French globulaire, modeled on Latin globulāris*, as if formed from globulus; for suffix see -AR. —globule n. 1664, borrowed from French globule, from Latin globulus, diminutive of globus globe; for suffix see -ULE; or perhaps a back formation from globular. —globulin n. 1835, in botany; 1845, of blood; formed from English globule + *-in*².

glom¹ v. 1907 glahm, grab, snatch, steal. American English underworld slang, variant of earlier Scottish glau (1715); apparently developed from Gaelic glam to handle awkwardly, grab voraciously, devour. The slang phrase glom on to, meaning to get hold of is first recorded about 1960 in American English.

glom² v. 1945, American English, look at, watch, perhaps a transferred use of GLOM¹. —n. 1953, American English; from the verb.

gloom n. 1596, in Scottish, sullen look; probably from the verb. The sense of darkness or obscurity, is first recorded in 1629, and that of a state of melancholy or depression, appears in 1744. —v. About 1300, implied in glouminge scowling, frowning; later, gloumben (probably about 1380), and gloumen look gloomy or sullen (probably before 1400); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian glome to stare somberly). —gloomy adj. 1588, dark or obscure; formed from English gloom, v. + *-y*¹. The figurative sense of downcast or depressed, is first recorded in 1590.

gloria n. Before 1225, song of praise to God, or its musical setting; borrowing of Medieval Latin Gloria, in Gloria Patri, name of a Medieval Latin hymn praising God, which begins "Glory be to the Father," from Latin glōria glory.

glory n. Probably before 1200 gloire splendor (of Christ), praise (to God); later glorie (probably about 1200); borrowed from Old French gloire, glorie, learned borrowing from Latin glōria great praise or honor of uncertain origin. —v. About 1350 glorien rejoice; borrowed from Old French glorier, and directly from Latin glōriārī, from glōria glory. This verb may also be a back formation from earlier glorify. —glorify v. 1340 glorifen; borrowed from Old French glorifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin glōrificāre, from Latin glōria glory; for suffix see -FY. —glorious adj. About 1275 glorius; borrowed from Old French glorieus, from Latin glōriōsus full of glory, famous, from glōria glory; for suffix see -OUS.

gloss¹ n. luster. 1538, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic glossi flame, related to glossa to flame); cognate with Middle High German glosen to glow, and Dutch (obsolete) gloos a glowing, which is a possible alternative source of the English word. —v. Before 1656, from the noun. The figurative meaning of smooth over or hide is first recorded in 1729, influenced by *gloss*², v. —glossy adj. 1556, formed from English *gloss*¹, n. + *-y*¹.

gloss² n. explanation. 1548, a reborrowing directly from Latin glōssa obsolete or foreign word which needs explanation, from Ionic Greek glōssa (Attic glōtta) obscure word, language (literally, tongue). —v. 1579, from the noun. The extended meaning of explain away (gloss over, 1764), is first recorded in 1638. Gloss replaced earlier glose in both noun and verb (n., about 1300, borrowed from Old French glose explanation, and directly from Late Latin glōssa, glōsa, from Latin glōssa; v., before 1378 glosen interpret, comment, provide with a gloss, borrowed from Old French gloser make an explanation, from glose; and probably developed in English from the noun in the sense of provide with a gloss, but an earlier sense in Middle English, to flatter or use deceit, about 1300, was most likely borrowed from Old French).

glossary n. Probably about 1350 glosarie; borrowed from Latin glōssarium, from Greek glōssarion, contemptuous diminutive of glōssa obsolete or foreign word which needs explanation; for suffix see -ARY, but compare this normalized use of the suffix with -arion from the Greek -arion used as a diminutive showing contempt.

glottis n. 1578, New Latin, borrowed from Greek glōttis (genitive glōttidos), from glōtta, Attic dialect variant of glōssa tongue. —glottal adj. 1846, formed from English glottis + *-al*¹.

glove n. Probably before 1200 glove, developed from Old English glōf covering for the hand (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Icelandic glōfi glove. —v. About 1400, from the noun.

glow v. Old English glōwan shine as if red-hot (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian glēd glow, blaze, Old Saxon glōian to glow, Old High German gluoen (modern German glühen), and Old Icelandic glōa to glow, from the Proto-Germanic base glō-*. —n. About 1450 glou glowing heat; from the verb.

glower v. Probably before 1400 glören to glare, glower; earlier, shine (probably about 1350); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian glora to glow, stare, Icelandic glōra to gleam, glare). The Middle English glören is directly related through the Proto-Germanic base glō-* to Old English glōwan to GLOW; which influenced the spelling glower. —n. 1715, from the verb.

glucose n. 1840, borrowing of French glucose, from Greek gleitkos must, sweet wine, related to glykys sweet.

glue n. 1225 glu substance used to stick things together; borrowed from Old French glu, glus, from Late Latin glūs (genitive glūtis) glue. —v. About 1392 glewen; earlier gliwen (about 1380); borrowed from Old French gluer, from glu, n. —gluey adj. Before 1398 glewy; formed from Middle English glue glue + *-y*¹.

glum adj. 1547 glumme, probably developed from Middle English gloumen become dark (about 1300), later gloumben look gloomy or sullen (about 1380); see GLOOM, v.

gluon n. 1972, American English, formed from glue + -on.

glut v. Before 1333, implied in gloutinge a feasting to excessive fullness; later glotten (probably before 1400); probably borrowed from Old French gloter, glotoier to swallow, gulp down, from Latin glutire swallow, gulp down. —n. 1579, excessive flow; from the verb.

gluten n. 1803, sticky substance in flour, specialization of earlier meaning, animal albumin or fibrin (1597); borrowed probably through Middle French gluten, from Latin glūten (genitive glūtīnis) glue, related to Late Latin glūs GLUE. —glutinous adj. Probably before 1425 glutinose, glutinous; borrowed probably by influence of Middle French glutineux, from Latin glutinōsus, from glūten (genitive glūtīnis) glue.

glutton n. Probably before 1200 glutun greedy eater; borrowed from Old French gluton, gloton, and from Latin glutōnem, accusative of glutō glutton, related to or formed from glutire to swallow, gula throat. —gluttonous adj. About 1350 glotonis; later glotonos; borrowed from Old French glotonos, from gloton glutton; for suffix see -OUS. —gluttony n. Probably before 1200 glutunie, borrowed from Old French glutonie, from gluton glutton.

glycerin n. 1838, sweet syrupy liquid obtained from fats and oils; borrowed from French glycérine, formed from Greek glykerós sweet (related to glykys sweet) + French -ine *-ine*².

glycogen n. 1860, carbohydrate stored in the liver and other tissues; borrowed from French glycogène, formed from Greek glykys sweet + French -gène -gen.

gnarled adj. 1603, probably a variant of knarled, probable diminutive of knar knot in wood (1382; earlier, a rock or stone, before 1250); cognate with Middle High German knorre knobby protuberance (modern German Knorren). Gnarled occurs once in Shakespeare and is not recorded again until the 1800's. —gnarl v. 1814, back formation from gnarled. —n. 1824, from the verb or back formation from gnarled.

gnash v. 1496, possibly a variant of obsolete gnasten (before 1325, but implied earlier in gnaisting action of grinding the teeth, about 1300); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gnastan a gnashing), of unknown origin. The ending in -sh may have been influenced by the similar use of -ish from French verb stems to create such a formation as banish.

gnat n. About 1250 gnatt, developed from Old English gnætt (before 899); earlier gneat (before 830, erroneous spelling by analogy with plural forms). Old English gnætt is cognate with Low German gnatte gnat, dialectal High German Gnatze, from Proto-Germanic gnattaz*; East Frisian gnit, Middle Low German gnitte (modern German Gnitze), Middle High German gnaz scurf; and ultimately related to Old English gnagan to GNAW.

gnaw v. Before 1200 gnawen, developed from Old English (before 1000) gnagan; cognate with Old High German gnagan, nagan (modern German nagen), and Old Icelandic and Swedish gnaga; cognate with Lettish gñēga one who eats with long teeth. Whether the Old English is cognate with Old Saxon knagan, and Middle and modern Dutch knagen is conjectural.

gneiss n. 1757, borrowing of German Gneiss, from earlier variants Geneuss, Knaust, probably alterations of Middle High German gneist, gneiste, ganeiste spark (perhaps because the rock sparkles), from Old High German gneisto spark.

gnome n. 1712–14, borrowing of French gnome, from New Latin gnomus, possibly with the meaning of earth dweller. The word is often said to have been coined from a Greek form gēnōmos* earth dweller, as gnomes were considered protectors of the treasures of the earth.

gnomic adj. 1815, full of instructive sayings; borrowed, perhaps through French gnomique, from Late Latin gnōmicus concerned with maxims or didactic, from Greek gnōmikos, from gnōmē thought, opinion, maxim, intelligence, from gignōskein to come to know; see KNOW; for suffix see -IC. It is also possible that gnomic is a shortened form of earlier gnomical (1603).

gnomon n. 1546, rod, pointer, or triangular piece especially on a sundial; borrowed from Latin gnōmōn, from Greek gnōmōn indicator (literally, one who discerns), from gignōskein to come to know; see KNOW.

Gnostic n. 1585–87, believer in a mystical religious doctrine of spiritual knowledge, practiced in early Christian times; borrowed from Late Latin Gnōsticus, from Late Greek Gnōstikós, noun use of adjective gnōstikós knowing, able to discern, from gnōstós knowable, from gignōskein to come to know. —adj. 1656, relating to knowledge; from the noun. —Gnosticism n. 1664, formed from English Gnostic, n. + -ism.

gnotobiotic adj. 1949, formed in English from Greek gnōtós known (from gignōskein to come to know) + English biotic of life, as in antibiotic. —gnotobiotics n. 1949, formed from gnotobiotic.

gnu n. 1777 gnoo, African antelope, wildebeest, borrowed probably through Dutch gnoe, alteration of Hottentot i-ngu black hartebeest or white-tailed gnu, from Southern Bushman, transcribed as !nu: (in which ! and : represent clicks).

go v. Probably before 1200 gon, gan to walk, move along; developed from Old English gān to go (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Low German gān to go, Middle Dutch gaen (modern Dutch gaan), Old High German gān, gēn (modern German gehen), Old Danish and Old Swedish gā (modern Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish gå), and Crimean Gothic geen, from Proto-Germanic gai-/3æ-*.

The Old English verb form for the past tense was ēode (Middle English yode), replaced in the 1400's by went, the past tense of wenden to direct one's way; see WENT, WEND. —n. 1727, action of going, gait; also, on the verge of destruction; from the verb. The sense in on the go, is first recorded in 1843, and that in at one go, in 1825. —adj. 1951, American English, in order; (used in aerospace jargon); from the verb. —go-ahead n. 1838, implied in earlier go-aheadism. —go-between n. (1598). —gocart n. 1676, a litter or sedan chair also infant's walker. —go-getter n. 1922, an energetic person (antecedents are found in goer, n., about 1378, and in a surname, about 1250). —going n. Before 1250; goings, as in goings on (1775, but implied in earlier rules of goings, about 1475). —goner n. 1850, formed from English gone + *-er*¹. The idea is found in gone goose (1830).

goad n. Before 1200 gode; developed from Old English (about 725) gād; cognate with Langobardic gaida spear, from Proto-Germanic gaidō*. The sense of anything which urges on, appeared in 1600. —v. 1579, from the noun.

goal n. 1531, place where a race ends; of uncertain origin. An isolated form gol boundary or limit, appears before 1333, and does not recur in the record before 1531, becoming very common thereafter. It is suggested that goal developed from Old English gāl* obstacle or barrier, for which indirect evidence is furnished by the apparent derivative gēlan to hinder.

goat n. Before 1200 got, and geat; developed from Old English (about 700) gāt she-goat; cognate with Old Saxon gēt she-goat, Middle Dutch gheet (modern Dutch geit), Old High German geiz (modern German Geiss), Old Icelandic geit (Norwegian geit, Swedish get, Danish ged), Gothic gaits goat, she-goat, from Proto-Germanic gaitaz*. In Old English, gāt was a specialized term, as the male goat was called bucca; see BUCK¹. In the late 1300's the sexes began to be distinguished through the use of he-goat and she-goat. —goatee n. 1844 goaty; 1847 goatee man's beard like that of a he-goat, English goat + -ee, variant of -y². — goatherd n. (1229, in the surname Gothirde) — goatskin n. (before 1387) gob¹ n. lump, mass. About 1382, Middle English gobbe, borrowed probably from Old French gobe mouthful or lump, from Old French gober gulp or swallow down, probably from Gaulish gobbo-* (compare Old Irish gob beaklike mouth or face, and Gaelic gob beak, mouth).

gob² n. sailor. 1915, American English, probably a shortened form of earlier British nautical slang gobby a coastguardsman (1890); said to be derived from dialectal gob spit (extended sense of gob¹), from lump of chewing tobacco.

gobbet n. 1290, a fragment or piece; borrowed from Old French gobet mouthful, piece, diminutive of gobe GOB¹; for suffix see -ET.

gobble¹ v. eat fast and greedily. 1601; probably a frequentative form of gob from gobben to drink something greedily; for suffix see -LE³.

gobble² v. make the throaty sound of a turkey. 1680, probably imitative, but perhaps influenced by gobble¹ or GARBLE. — n. 1781, from the verb. — gobbler n. 1737, English gobble, v. + -er¹.

gobbledygook n. 1944, American English; formed in imitation of the gobbling of the turkey cock.

goblet n. Probably about 1380 gobelot, goblot; borrowed from Old French gobelet, diminutive of gobel cup, probably related to gobe gulp down; see GOB¹.

goblin n. Probably before 1320 gobylyn mischievous sprite or elf; borrowed possibly from Old French gobelin, which was apparently the source of Medieval Latin Gobelinus, the name of a spirit that supposedly haunted the French town of Evreux, in the 1100's. Though French gobelin was not recorded until almost 250 years after appearance of the English term, it is probably reasonable to assume the French term was in existence long before it was recorded, as it is a French ghost that is mentioned in the Medieval Latin text of the 1100's, and few people who believed in folk magic used Medieval Latin. German Kobold a spirit of the earth, is probably of different origin.

God or god n. Old English (about 725) god Supreme Being, deity; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Dutch god Supreme Being, deity, Old High German got (modern German Gott), Old Icelandic godh, guðh, and Gothic guth, from Proto-Germanic gudān*. The Germanic words for god were originally neuter, but after the Germanic tribes adopted Christianity, God became a masculine syntactic form. — god-child n. (probably before 1200) — goddamn n., v. (probably before 1398) — goddaughter n. (about 1250) — goddess n. (probably before 1350) — godfather n. (before 1200) — godly adj. (probably 1384) — godmother n. (about 1273) — godsend n. (1679 God's send) — godson n. (1205) — Godspeed n. (1275) gofer n. 1956, American English, alteration go for, so called from the worker being told to go for coffee, spare parts, etc. Also a pun on gopher in the sense of a little animal who runs around.

goggle v. 1540 gogle roll one's eyes; stare with bulging eyes, from gogelen to roll about (probably about 1400), also influenced by gogel-eyed squint- or one-eyed (about 1384); of uncertain origin. — n. 1651, goggling look; earlier, person who goggles (1616); perhaps from gogle eye(s), or from the verb. The plural form goggles large eyeglasses for protection, is first recorded in 1715.

goiter or goitre n. 1625, borrowed from French goître, goitre, from a dialect of the Rhône region, from Old French and Old Provençal goitron throat, gullet, from Vulgar Latin guttur-iōnem*, from Latin guttur throat.

gold n. Old English (about 725) gold a shiny, bright-yellow precious metal; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon gold gold, Middle Dutch gout (modern Dutch goud), Old High German gold (modern German Gold), Old Icelandic goll, gull (Swedish, Danish guld, Norwegian gull), and Gothic gulth, from Proto-Germanic gulth-*. — adj. Probably before 1200; from the noun. — golden adj. About 1300, formed from gold, n. + -en². Golden replaced the earlier Middle English form gilden, which developed from Old English gyldan. — gold-enrod n. (1568) — goldfinch n. 1229, in the surname Goldfinch, developed from Old English gold-finc (about 1000). — goldsmith n. Old English gold-smith (about 1000).

golf n. 1457, Scottish golf, gouf the game of golf, played first in Scotland in the 1400's; perhaps alteration of Middle Dutch colf, colve stick, club, bat (modern Dutch kolf); cognate with Middle Low German kolve club, bat, Old High German kolbo club (modern German Kolben club, mallet), and Old Icelandic kolfr bolt, rod, from Proto-Germanic kulb-*. — v. 1800, from the noun.

gonad n. 1880, from New Latin gonas (pl. gonades), from Greek gonē seed, from gignesthai be born.

gondola n. 1549; borrowed from Italian (in Venetian dialect) gondola; earlier in English goundel; borrowed from Old Italian gondula, of uncertain origin (possibly from Italian diminutive of gonda a kind of boat. — gondolier n. 1603, borrowed from French, and directly from Italian gondoliere, from gondola gondola; for suffix see -IER.

gong n. About 1600, borrowed from Malay gōng or Javanese gong, alleged to be a formation imitative of the sound made by the instrument.

gonorrhea n. 1526, borrowed, probably through Middle French gonorrhēa, from Late Latin gonorrhoea involuntary discharge of semen, from Greek gonorrhōia (gónos seed + rhōē flow, from rhein to flow); so called from the discharge of mucus in the disease mistaken as a discharge of semen.

gonzo adj. 1972, American English, borrowed from Italian gonzo simpleton or blockhead, first appearing in gonzo journalism referring to a personal style of reporting.

goo n. 1911, American English; perhaps a shortened form of burgoo thick porridge (1787) or stew (1853), but more likely a back formation from goosey (1905, formed from (bur)goo + -ey).

goober n. 1833, American English peanut, of African origin; perhaps Bantu (compare Kikongo and Kimbundu nguba peanut).

good adj. 1124 god; later good (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 725) gōd having the right or desirable quality. Old English gōd is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon gōd good, Dutch goed, Old High German guot (modern German gut), Old Icelandic gōðr, and Gothic gōths or gōds, from Proto-Germanic gōdaz*. —n. 1102 god; developed from Old English gōd that which is good (about 725, in Beowulf); from the adjective. The plural form goods property or possessions, is first recorded about 1280; the singular form in the same sense, is found in Old English about 950. —goodly adj. Probably about 1150; developed from Old English gōdlic (about 1000). —good will (Old English, about 725).

good-by or good-bye interj. 1811 Good-bye; earlier godbwyre (1573–80); a contraction (by confusion of god good, and God God) of “God be with ye (you),” paralleling good day and good night (before 1200).

goody n. something very good to eat. 1745, formed from good + -y. —adj. 1830, good in a weak or sentimental way; formed from good + -y. The reduplicated form goody-goody, appeared in 1871, probably by association with goody, n. a person who makes too much of being good. —interj. 1796 goodie exclamation of pleasure, formed from good + -ee, alteration of -y.

goosey adj. See GOO.

goof n. 1916, American English, a stupid person or fool; possibly a variant of dialectal English goff foolish clown or silly fellow (1869), from earlier goffe (1570), probably borrowed from Middle French goffe awkward or stupid, of uncertain origin. Alternatively, early modern English goffe may have developed from goffen to speak in a frivolous manner (about 1175), possibly from Old English gegāf buffoonery, and gafetung scoffing, related to modern English gaff to jest. The sense of a blunder, appeared about 1954, probably influenced by modern English gaffe blunder. —v. 1932, American English waste time, loaf (also in the phrase goof off, 1941); 1941, to blunder; from the noun. —goofy adj. 1921, American English slang, stupid or silly, formed from goof, n. + -y.

googol n. the number 1 followed by 100 zeroes or 10¹⁰⁰. 1940, coined possibly as a word from children’s vocabulary, perhaps with some influence of the comic-strip character Barney Google.

goon n. 1921, American English goon a stupid person, possibly a shortened form of earlier gooney stupid person (1896). The meaning of thug hired to disrupt labor disputes, is first recorded in 1938.

goose n. Old English (about 700) gōs; cognate with Old Frisian gōs, gōz goose, Middle Low German gōs, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch gans, Old High German gans (modern German Gans), and Old Icelandic gās, from Proto-Germanic gans-*. The loss of n (English, Old Frisian, Middle Low German, and Old Icelandic) is a normal development before s. The plural geese is from Proto-Germanic ans-iz*, and if the s is formative to a base gan-*, then a connection can perhaps be established with gannet, and gander. —gooseberry n. 1530, formed from English goose + berry. —goose flesh (before 1425) —gooseneck n. (1688, iron hook; 1827, curved metal pipe) —goose pimples (1914) gopher n. 1814, American English, of uncertain origin; perhaps an alteration to Anglicize American French (Louisiana) gaufre honeycomb, waffle (said to be a general term for many mammals in allusion to the structure of their burrow), from Old French gaufre, from Frankish (compare Middle Dutch wafel honeycomb).

Gordian knot 1579, in allusion to the knot tied in legend by Gordius, king of Phrygia; for suffix see -AN. The one to loosen the knot should rule Asia; instead Alexander the Great cut the Gordian knot, which means to solve a difficult problem in a quick, easy, or unexpected way.

gore¹ n. blood that is shed, clotted blood. About 1150 gore; developed from Old English gor dirt, dung (about 725), related to gyre dung, and cognate with Old High German and Middle Low German gor dung, Dutch goor dingy, Old Icelandic gor cud, slimy matter; of uncertain origin. The meaning of blood is first recorded as thickened or clotted blood, especially that shed in battle (1563, found in the distinction blood and gore, also Dutch bloed en goor). —gory adj. About 1480, Scottish gorrie bloody, formed from gore + -y.

gore² v. to wound with a horn, tusk, etc. Before 1400 goren, Scottish gorren to pierce, stab; origin uncertain (occasionally attributed as a variant of gore spear, from Old English gār).

gore³ n. long, triangular piece of cloth made in a skirt, sail, etc. About 1250, a skirt; developed from Old English gāra angular point, as of land (before 899); cognate with Old High German gēro, kēro (modern German Gehren, Gehre), Old Icelandic geire, and related to gār spear (from its shape). —v. put or make a gore in. 1548, from the noun.

gorge n. deep, narrow valley. About 1350, throat; earlier, as a surname (1185); borrowed from Old French gorge throat, bosom, from Late Latin gurga, variant of gurgus gullet or throat, jaws, probably from classical Latin gurgus abyss or whirlpool, related to gurguliō gullet. The transferred sense of a narrow valley or ravine, is found in 1769, possibly influenced by a similar sense in French. —v. Probably before 1300, eat greedily; from Old French gorger, gorgier, from Old French gorge throat.

gorgeous adj. About 1495, borrowed from Middle French gorgias elegant, fashionable, fond of jewelry (probably with reference to gorge neck), perhaps from Old French gorge bosom, throat (also in reference to something adorning the neck); see GORGE. The forms gorgayse, gorges, and gorgyas eventually gave way to the spelling gorgeouse (also recorded before 1500).

Gorgon n. any of three hideous sisters in Greek legend whose look turned the beholder to stone. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin Gorgō (genitive Gorgōnis), from Greek Gorgō, from gorgós terrible.

gorilla n. 1847, American English, borrowed from Greek Górrilai, pl., the name given to a group of wild, hairy creatures in a Greek translation of the Carthaginian navigator Hanno's account of his voyage made along the northwest coast of Africa about 500 B.C.

gorse n. 1287 gorste; earlier Gorst, in the place name Gorstley (1228); found in Old English gors (before 800), gorst (about 950); cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German gersta barley (modern German Gerste), Middle Dutch gherste (modern Dutch gerst), from Proto-Germanic gurst-/gerst-*.

gosh interj. 1757, altered pronunciation and spelling of God, originally in the phrase by gosh, probably developed from gosse (before 1553).

goshawk n. Probably before 1300 goshauk, developed from Old English gōshafoc (about 1000); from gōs GOOSE + hafoc HAWK.

gosling n. About 1350 goselyng; earlier, in the surname Goseling (about 1275), from Middle English gos goose + -ling; replacement of earlier gesling (recorded probably before 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gæs-lingr).

gospel n. the teachings of Jesus and the Apostles. Before 1250 gospel, developed from Old English godspell, gōdspel good news (about 750, a compound of gōd good + spell, spel story or message, a translation of Latin bona adnūtiatiō, itself a translation of Greek euangēlion evangel). The first element (gōd) of the Old English compound gōdspell was mistakenly associated with god God, and for this reason a short o appeared in the Old English variant godspell.

gossamer n. Probably before 1300 gossummer, seemingly formed from gōs goose + sumer, sumor summer.

The reference is to the threads spun especially in fields of stubble or on bushes in late fall. It is unclear whether or not the analogy of these threads is to the downy appearance of gossamer and further to the time of year when geese are in season; thus a name for Indian summer as the season of the goose and cobwebs. Dutch has a similar allusion to summer threads in zomerdraden, also German Sommerfäden, and Swedish sommartråd. —adj. filmy. 1806–07, very light and thin; from the noun.

gossip n. Probably before 1300 gossip godparent; (also) a familiar acquaintance; developed from Old English (1014) god-sibb godparent (god God + sibb relative). In Middle English gossip was extended in use to a form of address for such an a familiar acquaintance, and was later applied to anyone who engages in familiar or idle talk (1566). Probably by influence of the verb, gossip further developed the meaning of idle talk about others, trifling or groundless rumor (1811). —v. 1590, to act as a familiar acquaintance; from the noun. The meaning of talk idly, mostly about other people's affairs, is first recorded in 1627.

gouge n. 1350–51, borrowing of Old French gouge, from Late Latin gubia, alteration of gubia hollow beveled chisel, probably from Gaulish (compare Old Irish gulban prick, sting, gulba beak, Welsh gylf sharp point, knife, beak). —v. 1570, cut with a gouge; from the noun. The meaning of dig, tear, or force out, with, or as if with, a gouge, is first recorded in 1616.

goulash n. 1866, borrowed from Hungarian gulyás, from gulyás herdsman and hús meat (in Hungary, a beef or lamb soup first made by herdsman while pasturing).

gourd n. About 1303, melon, borrowed through Anglo-French gourde (Old French cōorde), ultimately from Latin cucurbita, of uncertain origin (possibly related to cucumis CUCUMBER).

gourmand n. 1450 gourmaunt glutton; borrowed from Middle French gourmant, gourmand glutton (originally, gluttonous), of uncertain origin.

gourmet n. 1820, borrowing of French gourmet, alteration (probably influenced by Middle French gourmant gourmand) of Old French grommes, pl., wine tasters, wine merchant's servants, of uncertain origin (perhaps related to Old English grom* man servant).

gout n. About 1300 goute; earlier gute in the compound gut-feastre festered gouty swelling (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French gote, goute gout, drop, from Latin gutta a drop (in Medieval Latin, gout), of unknown origin. The disease was thought to be caused by drops of viscous humors seeping from the blood into the joints. —gouty adj. Before 1398, formed from Middle English goute gout + *-y*¹.

govern v. Probably about 1280 governen to rule; borrowed from Old French gouverner govern, from Latin gubernāre to direct, rule, guide (originally, to steer), from Greek kybernān to steer or pilot a ship, direct. —governess n. About 1450 governesse, a shortened form of earlier gouvernouresse woman who rules, (also) a governing or guiding influence (about 1370); later, guardian, governess (about 1422); borrowed from Old French governeresse (gouverneur governor + -esse -ess). —government n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French gouvernement (gouverner govern + -ment -ment). —governor n. Probably before 1300, protector or guide; borrowed from Old French gouverneur, and directly from Latin gubernātor (nominative gubernātor) director, ruler, governor, (originally, steersman, pilot), from gubernāre to govern; for suffix see -OR². The sense of ruler or lord is first recorded before 1338.

gown n. Probably before 1325 gunne an official's robe; borrowed from Old French goune, gone, from Late Latin gunna leather garment, skin, hide, of unknown origin. —v. 1422, from the noun.

grab v. 1589 grabbe probably borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German grabben to grab; cognate with Old English græppian to seize (which did not survive into Middle English), East Frisian and Low German grapsen to grab, snatch (modern German grapschen), and Old Icelandic grāpa. —n. 1824, from the verb. —grabby adj. 1910, greedy; formed from English grab + *-y*¹.

grace n. Probably before 1200 grace God's favor or help; borrowed from Old French grace pleasing quality, favor, good will, thanks, from Latin grātia pleasing quality, goodwill, gratitude, from grātus pleasing, agreeable. The meaning of goodness, virtue, graciousness, is first recorded about 1330, and that of beauty of form or movement, pleasing quality, charm, in 1340. —v. Probably before 1200 gracen to thank; borrowed from Old French gracier, from grace thanks, grace. The meaning of give or add grace to is first recorded before 1586. —graceful n. (before 1449) —gracious adj. About 1303 gracyous filled with God's grace; later, beautiful, fair (about 1325); borrowed from Old French gracieus having grace, pleasing, from Latin grātiōsus, from grātia GRACE.

grackle n. 1772 gracule, 1782 grakle, Anglicized forms of the New Latin genus name Gracula, from Latin grāculus jackdaw, a European crow.

gradation n. 1538, climax; borrowed from Middle French gradation and directly from Latin gradātiōnem (nominative gradātiō) an ascent by steps, a gradation or climax, from gradus step, degree. The sense of gradual change is first recorded in 1549; and one of the steps in a gradual change, in 1599.

grade n. 1796, step or stage in a process; borrowed from French grade grade or degree, learned borrowing from Latin gradus (genitive gradūs) step or degree, replacing Middle English gree, gre step or degree in a series; degree in order, rank, amount, or intensity; academic degree (probably about 1303); borrowed from Old French gre, grei step, from Latin gradus, related to gradī to walk, step, go. —v. 1659, arrange in grades; from the noun.

gradient n. 1835, rate at which a road, railroad track, etc., rises; probably from grade, n. step or degree, patterned on quotient, salient. —adj. 1641, (of animals) characterized by walking, ambulant; later, going up or down gradually (1855, from the noun); borrowed from Latin gradientem, present participle of gradī to walk, go.

gradual adj. Probably before 1425, having steps or ridges; later, taking place by degrees (1692); borrowed from Medieval Latin gradualis, from Latin gradus step.

graduate adj. Before 1415, in the phrase graduate man; borrowed from Medieval Latin graduatus, past participle of graduari to take a degree, graduate, from Latin gradus step, GRADE; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —v. 1421, confer a university degree on; probably from the adjective, and borrowed from Medieval Latin graduatus, past participle of graduari. The technical use of divide (a scale, etc.) by degrees, appeared probably before 1425. —n. 1459, borrowed from Medieval Latin graduatus, past participle of graduari. —graduation n. 1423 graduacion act of conferring a university degree; borrowed from Medieval graffiti n.pl. 1851, ancient drawings or writings scratched on walls, as those of Pompeii and Rome; borrowing of Italian graffiti, plural of graffito a scribbling, from graffio a scratch or scribble, from graffiare to scribble, ultimately from Greek gráphein draw, write. The transferred meaning, applied to recently made crude drawings or scribbles, is first recorded in English in 1877.

Latin graduatiōnem (nominative graduatio), from graduari; for suffix see -ATION.

graft¹ n. shoot inserted into another plant. Probably about 1475 grafe, alteration of earlier graft (probably about 1387); borrowed from Old French grafe graft or stylus, from Latin graphium stylus, from Greek grápheion stylus, from gráphein write. This use of graft is an allusion to the shape of a stylus which looks like a modern pencil. —v. Probably about 1475, implied in grafting, alteration of earlier graffen (about 1378); probably borrowed from Old French grafier to graft, from grafe, n.

graft² n. 1865, American English, perhaps from the verb. In 1901 the word was applied to the money so obtained. —v. 1859, American English, possibly an extension of *graft*¹, v., in the figurative sense of insert something as if by grafting.

graham adj. (of crackers, bread, etc.) made from unsifted whole-wheat flour. 1834, American English, in allusion to Sylvester Graham, 1794–1851, American dietetic reformer, whose ideas were part of the popular wisdom from the 1830's to the 1850's.

Graill n. Probably before 1300 greal, cup, earlier a dish, used by Christ at the Last Supper, and into which Joseph of Arimathea received the last drops of blood of Christ; borrowed from Old French grail cup; earlier, flat dish, from Medieval Latin gradalis a flat dish or shallow vessel, perhaps through Gallo-Romance grātālis*, or directly from Latin crāter bowl, from Greek kráter bowl, especially for mixing wine with water.

grain n. About 1202, in the surname Graindorg; later greyn small, hard particle (about 1300), and seed of plants or flowers (about 1325); borrowed from Old French grain, grein, from Latin grānum grain, seed; see CORN¹. The meaning of granular texture is first recorded before 1420.

gram n. 1797 gramme, borrowing of French gramme, from Late Latin gramma small weight, from Greek grámma small weight (originally, something written), from the stem of gráphein to draw, write.

—gram¹ a combining form meaning: something drawn or written, message, as in telegram, monogram; or something recorded, record, as in cardiogram. Borrowed from Greek -gramma, from grámma something written.

—gram² a combining form meaning: so many grams, as in kilogram = one thousand grams; or so many parts of a gram, as in centigram = one hundredth of a gram. Borrowed from Greek grámma small weight; something written.

grammar n. 1176, as a surname Gramaire a grammarian or scholar; later grammar, gramere (before 1387); borrowed from Old French grammaire, gramaire learning, especially Latin learning, philology, an irregular learned borrowing from Latin grammatica, from Greek grammatikḗ téchnē art of letters, from grámma (genitive grámmatos) something written, letter, from the stem of gráphein to draw or write. — grammarian n. Probably about 1375, learned man; about 1378, Latin scholar; borrowed from Old French gramarien, from gramaire grammar. — grammatical adj. 1526, borrowed possibly through Middle French grammatical, and directly from Late Latin grammaticālis of a scholar, from Latin grammaticus grammatical, from Greek grammatikós skilled in grammar, from grámma something written.

Gramophone n. 1887 gramophone, American English, possibly an inversion of earlier phonogram the record or tracing made by a phonograph (1884).

grampus n. 1593; earlier graundepose (before 1529), alteration of earlier grapays (1325), and graspeys (1267); borrowed from Anglo-French grampais, alteration (influenced by grand big) of Old French graspets, from Medieval Latin craspiscis, literally, fat fish, from Latin crassus thick + piscis fish.

granary n. 1570, borrowed from Latin grānārium, from grānum grain; for suffix see -ARY.

grand adj. 1125–30, as a surname Grand, but generally found in Middle English graunt large, big (before 1399); borrowed, in part through Anglo-French graund, graunt, and directly from Old French grand, grant, from Latin grandis big, great, full-grown. — n. thousand dollars. 1921, American English, from the adjective. — grandchild n. (1587) — granddaughter n. (1611) — grandfather n. (1424) — grand jury (1495) — grandmother n. (before 1420; earlier grandame, probably about 1200) — grandson n. (1586) grandeur n. About 1500, loftiness or height; borrowed from Middle French grandeur grandness, greatness, from Old French grand great. The extended meaning of majesty, stateliness, is first recorded in 1669.

grandiloquence n. 1589, borrowed from Latin grandiloquentia, from grandiloquus using lofty speech (grandis big + -loquus speaking, from loqui speak); for suffix see -ENCE. — grandiloquent adj. 1593, probably a back formation from grandiloquence.

grandiose adj. 1840, borrowed from French grandiose impressive, from Italian grandioso, from Latin grandis big; for suffix see -OSE¹.

grange n. 1252 Grange, as a place name; later graunge small farm (1440); borrowed from Old French grange, from Gallo-Romance grānica* barn or shed in which to keep grain, etc., from Latin grānum grain. — granger n. 1173, as a surname Grangier; later graunger man in charge of a grange (1195); borrowed through Anglo-French granger, and directly from Old French grangier, from Old French grange, n.

granite n. 1646, borrowed from French granit(e), from Italian granito granite, (originally) grained, past participle of granire to granulate, from grano grain, from Latin grānum grain.

granny n. 1663, probably a clipped form of grannam, grandam, or grandmother + -y².

granola n. 1970, American English, probably formed from Italian grano grain + -ola, suffix forming nouns.

grant v. Probably about 1225, borrowed through Anglo-French graunter, Old French granter, graanter (changing c to g perhaps from garantir guarantee) or craunter, variant of creanter to promise, guarantee, confirm, authorize, from Gallo-Romance crēdentāre*, from Latin crēdentem (nominative crēdens), present participle of crēdere to trust. — n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French grant, variant of creant assurance, promise, pledge.

granulation n. 1612, formed in English from Late Latin grānul(um) + English suffix -ation (probably suggested by earlier granulous granular, before 1398; borrowed from Medieval Latin granulosus, from Late Latin grānulum, diminutive of Latin grānum grain; for suffix see -OUS). — granulate v. 1666, back formation from granulation. — granular adj. 1794, formed in English from Late Latin grānulum granule + English suffix -ar. — granule n. 1652, a back formation from granulation, or a borrowing from Late Latin grānulum, diminutive of Latin grānum grain.

grape n. Probably before 1300 grape; earlier, in win-grape bunch of grapes (about 1250); borrowed from Old French grape bunch of grapes, from graper pick grapes, from Gallo-Romance crappāre* pick grapes (possibly with a vine hook), from Frankish (compare Old High German krāpfō hook). — grapefruit n. (1814) graph¹ n. line or diagram. 1878, a shortening from graphic formula (1866; earlier graphical, as in graphical method, in a general sense of any line drawing, 1784, and implied earlier in graphically, 1771); see GRAPHIC. — v. make a graph of. 1898, from the noun. — graphic adj. Before 1637, drawn with pencil or pen; probably a shortening of graphical (1626); formed in English from Latin graphicus picturesque, from Greek graphikós of or for writing, belonging to drawing, picturesque, from graphé writing, drawing, from gráphein write + *-a*¹. The meaning of vividly descriptive, lifelike, is first recorded in 1669 (from graphical, 1644). — graphics n. pl. (1889) graph² n. letter or symbol. 1933, American English; borrowed from Greek graphé writing, related to gráphein write. — grapheme n. 1937, American English, formed from *graph*² + -eme unit of language structure (abstracted from phoneme etc.).

— graph a combining form meaning: 1 to draw, trace, or record, as in photograph. 2 machine that draws, traces, or records, as in seismograph. 3a something drawn or written, as in autograph, monograph. b drawn or written, as in lithograph. Borrowed from French -graphie, from Latin -graphus, from Greek -graphos drawn, written, from gráphein draw, write.

graphite n. 1796, borrowed from German Graphit (from Greek gráphein write + German -it *-ite*¹).

-graphy a combining form meaning: 1 process of tracing, describing, writing, or recording, as in radiography = the process of recording with X rays. 2 tracing, writing, designing, description, or recording, as in choreography = the designing or arranging of a ballet. Borrowed from Greek -graphiā, from gráphein draw, write.

grapnel n. 1373 grapenel, later grapnell (1436); diminutive formed on Old French grapin, grapil hook, from grape hook, from Frankish (compare Old High German krāpfō hook); for suffix see *-LE*¹. An earlier form grapel (1295) was borrowed from Old French grape hook, also formed in English *-le*¹.

grapple n. 1295 grapell grappling iron; borrowed from Old French grapil hook; see GRAPNEL. The meaning of the action of grappling, is first recorded in 1601, probably from the verb. —v. 1530, to seize and hold fast; from the noun, in relation to the action of a hook. The meaning of battle or struggle (with), is first recorded in 1593. —grappling iron (1538) grasp v. About 1350 graspen reach for; later, to grope, feel around (before 1382), of uncertain origin, possibly developed by metathesis of s and p from Old English græpsan* (compare East Frisian and Low German grapsen to GRAB). The sense of seize is first recorded before 1586. —n. a seizing. 1561, from the verb. —grasping adj. (before 1382) grass n. Probably about 1150 gras, found in Old English græs, gærs herb, plant, grass (about 725; earlier in græsgwēni grass green); cognate with Old Frisian gres grass, Old Saxon and modern Dutch gras, Old High German gras (modern German Gras), Old Icelandic gras herb, grass, and Gothic gras herb, from Proto-Germanic grasan*. The sense of marijuana is first recorded in 1943 in American English; earlier, often called weed. —grasshopper n. About 1350, earlier greshoppe (probably about 1200); found in Old English gærs-hoppa. —grassy adj. Probably 1440, formed from Middle English gras grass + *-y*¹.

grate¹ n. framework. 1348, a grating; borrowed from Old French grate, or from Medieval Latin grata lattice, or Italian grata grate, from Vulgar Latin crāta*, from Latin crātis wickerwork. —v. About 1450, furnish with a grate; from the noun. —grating n. 1626, framework; formed from English *grate*¹, v. or n. + *-ing*¹.

grate² v. make a grinding sound. Before 1399 graten to reduce (bread) to crumbs; borrowed from Old French grater to scrape, scratch, from Frankish krattōn* (compare Old High German chrätzōn, modern German kratzen to scratch). The sense of sound harshly is first recorded in 1596. —grater n. 1390–91, instrument for scraping; borrowed from Old French grateor, gratour (or possibly a lost form gratoir*), from grater; for suffix see *-ER*¹. —grating adj. 1563, annoying, irritating.

grateful adj. 1552, formed from obsolete grate agreeable (1523; borrowed from Latin grātus pleasing) + -ful; possibly influenced by Italian gradevole pleasing.

gratify v. Before 1400 gratyfien to favor; later, to reward or show gratitude (about 1540); borrowed from Latin grātificāri, from a lost adjective grātificus* doing a kindness (grātus pleasing + the root of facere make, DO¹ perform); for suffix see -FY. The meaning of to please is first recorded in 1568. —gratification n. 1598; borrowed through Middle French gratification, or directly from Latin grātificātiōnem (nominative grātificātiō), from grātificāri.

gratis adv. 1444, voluntary; later, free of charge (1541); borrowing of Latin grātīs, contraction of grātius (just) for thanks; (hence) without recompense, free; ablative of gratiæ thanks, plural of gratia favor. —adj. 1659, from the adverb.

gratitude n. Before 1447, good will; later, grace or favor (1500–20); borrowed through Middle French gratitude, or directly from Medieval Latin gratitudo thankfulness, from Latin grātus thankful, pleasing. The meaning of thankfulness, is first recorded in English in 1565.

gratuity n. 1523, graciousness or favor; later, money for service, tip (1540); borrowed through Middle French gratuité, or directly from Medieval Latin gratuitas gift, probably from Latin grātuitus free, freely given, voluntary, from grātus pleasing, thankful. —gratuitous adj. 1656, borrowed from Latin grātuitus free, etc.. The sense of unnecessary or uncalled-for, is first recorded in 1691.

grave¹ n. place of burial. About 1250 grave, developed from Old English (before 1000) græf grave, ditch; cognate with Old Frisian græf grave, Old Saxon and modern Dutch graf, Old High German grab (modern German Grab), Old Icelandic grof, and Gothic graba; from Proto-Germanic graban*. —grave-stone n. Before 1399, stone; earlier, stone coffin (probably about 1200).

grave² adj. weighty, momentous. 1541, borrowed from Middle French grave, learned borrowing from Latin gravis weighty, serious, heavy. —n. 1609, accent mark over vowel; from the same sense in French.

grave³ v. carve. Probably before 1200 graven carve, engrave; developed from Old English (before 1000) grafan to dig, carve; cognate with Old Frisian grēva to dig, carve, Middle Dutch grāven to dig (modern Dutch graven), Old High German graban, Middle High German and modern German graben, Old Icelandic grafa, and Gothic graban, from Proto-Germanic grabanan*. —graven adj. 1382, from the past participle of the verb.

gravel n. Probably about 1225, sand; later, pebbles and rock fragments (before 1333); borrowed from Old French gravele diminutive of grave sand or seashore, perhaps from Celtic or a pre-Latin grava* (compare Welsh gro gravel, sand, Old Cornish grow); for suffix see *-LE*¹. —v. lay or cover with gravel. Probably 1440, implied in gravelled, from the noun. —gravelly adj. Before 1382, formed from English gravel + *-ly*¹.

gravitate v. 1644, exert weight or move downward; adapted from New Latin gravitatum, past participle of gravitare gravitate, a formation based on Latin gravis weight; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The extended use of tend to move toward a certain point, is first recorded in 1673. —gravitation n. 1644, natural tendency toward some point or object, adapted from New Latin gravitationem (nominative gravitatio), from gravitatum, past participle of gravitare.

gravity n. 1509, weighty dignity, deep seriousness; borrowed through Middle French gravité, or directly from Latin gravitatem (nominative gravitas) weight, heaviness, pressure, from gravis heavy. The sense of force that causes objects to have weight, is first recorded in 1641.

gravy n. 1381, sauce or dressing for fish, fowl, etc.; probably a misreading of u for n in Old French grané sauce, stew (originally properly grained or seasoned), from Latin grānum grain, seed.

gray adj. Probably before 1200 greie, developed from Old English græg (about 725; earlier grēi in Mercian dialect about 700); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon grē gray, Middle Dutch grā (modern Dutch grauw), Old High German grāo (modern German grau), and Old Icelandic grār, from Proto-Germanic græwjaz*. —n. Probably about 1200 grei; from the adjective. —v. Before 1618, become gray; from the adjective. An isolated example is recorded about 1390. —grayling n. fish related to the trout. 1326, formed from English gray, adj. + -ling.

graze¹ v. feed. Before 1393 grasen; developed from Old English (about 1000) grasian to feed on grass, from gras-, the base of græs grass; see GRASS (compare Middle Dutch, Middle High German grasen, modern Dutch grazen and modern German grasen).

graze² v. touch. 1604, in perhaps a transferred use of *graze*¹ in the sense of crop grass close to the ground.

grease n. About 1300 grece, later gres (before 1325); borrowed through Anglo-French grece, gresse, from Old French graisse, craisse, from Vulgar Latin crassia* fat or grease, from Latin crassus thick. —v. About 1350 gresen; from the noun. —greasy adj. 1514, formed from English grease, n. + *-y*¹.

great adj. Probably before 1200 grete big in size, important, admirable, excellent; earlier, in a place name Greteleia (1130); found in Old English grēat big, coarse, stout (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian grāt large, Old Saxon grōt, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch groot, Old High German grōz (modern German gross). In modern English great has replaced earlier mickle, which has also been superseded in some uses by grand. A similar development has taken place in other Germanic languages. —Great Britain (about 1400 Grete Britaigne) —great-grandfather n. (1513) —greatly adv. (probably before 1200), —great-grandmother n. (1530) —greatness n. About 1020, Old English grētnys.

grebe n. 1766, borrowed from French grebe; of uncertain origin (possibly so called with reference to the crest of some species, found in Breton krib a comb).

greedy adj. Probably about 1175 gredi avaricious, covetous; later, gluttonous or ravenous (before 1200); developed from Old English grædig greedy, covetous (about 725, in Beowulf); green adj. About 1150 grene; found in Old English (about 1000) grēne; earlier grēni (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian grēne green, Old Saxon grōni (modern Dutch groen), Old High German gruoni (modern German grün), and Old Icelandic grœnn; related to Old English grōwan to grow through Proto-Germanic grōnja-* from the base grō-*. —n. Probably before 1200 grene the color green, about 1200, a field or grassy place; found in Old English (about 1000) grēne, from the adjective. —v. Probably about 1200 grenen; developed from Old English (before 1000) grēnian to grow or cover with green. —greenhorn n. 1455 greene horn horn of a freshly-slaughtered animal; applied to a recently enlisted soldier (1650) and extended to any inexperienced person (1682). Use of green in greenhorn corresponds to the sense of new, fresh, recent (about 1150, in freshly-cut herb). —greening n. Before 1325 grening, earlier in a plant name greningwert (before 1200).

cognate with Old Saxon grādag greedy, (modern Dutch gretig), Old High German grātag, Old Icelandic grādhugr, and Gothic grēdags hungry; possibly from Proto-Germanic grædazaz*. —greed n. excessive desire, especially for money. 1609, back formation from greedy.

greet v. 1100 greten; found in Old English grētan to attack, accost, salute, welcome (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian grēta accost, greet, Old Saxon grōtian, (modern Dutch groeten greet, salute), Old High German gruozen accost, attack (modern German grüssen greet, salute), and Old Icelandic græta cause to weep, from Proto-West-Germanic grōtjan* to resound, which is the causative form of Old Icelandic grāta weep, Old English grētan (Anglian) grētan weep, bewail, from Proto-Germanic grāetan*; still found in Scottish and northern English dialects greet to cry, weep, and probably in -gret of regret. —greeting n. About 1125, found in Old English (about 900) grēting salutation, formed from grētan greet + *-ing*¹.

gregarious adj. 1668, borrowed from Latin gregarius, from grex (genitive gregis) flock, herd; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of inclined to associate with others, sociable, is first recorded in 1789.

gremlin n. 1941, originally British Royal Air Force slang; of uncertain origin (said to have been used as early as 1923, and to have been derived from Old English gremman to anger, vex + -lin of goblin, or formed from Irish gruaimin bad-tempered little fellow, with the ending of goblin).

grenade n. 1591 small bomb; earlier, pomegranate (about 1532); borrowed from Middle French grenade pomegranate, from Old French grenate in pomegrenate; so called because the many seeds of the pomegranate are suggestive of granules of powder inside the grenade and the many small parts a grenade flies into on exploding; also from the bomb's shape. —grenadier n. 1676, (originally) soldier who threw grenades; borrowing of French grenadier, from Middle French grenade grenade; for suffix see -IER.

grenadine n. 1896, borrowed from French sirop de grenadine, from Middle French grenade pomegranate; for suffix see -INE².

greyhound n. Probably before 1200 greahunt, later greihund

(about 1220), probably alteration of Old English (about 1000) grighund, grieghund (grig-, grieg- + hund dog, HOUND). The alteration of the forms in Old English may have been influenced by a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic greyhundur, from grey bitch or coward).

grid n. 1839, shortened form of GRIDIRON.

griddle n. Probably before 1200 gridil gridiron, later, an iron plate for cooking (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old North French gredil, with later Old French grail, greil, gril a grate, grating, alteration of graille, from Latin crātīcula GRILL. —v. Before 1450 gredylen, from the noun.

gridiron n. 1349–50 griderne; later gridirne (probably before 1475), alteration of earlier gridire griddle (about 1300), variant of gridil GRIDDLE. For the spelling change to gridiron; see IRON.

grief n. Probably before 1200 gref pain or torment; later, sorrow (about 1250); borrowed from Old French grief, grieve a grieving, from grever cause pain; see GRIEVE. The spelling grief was introduced about 1390. —grievance n. Probably before 1300 grevaunce; borrowed from Old French grevaunce, from grever cause pain; for suffix see -ANCE. —grieve v. Probably before 1200 greven cause pain; later, to be very sad, lament (before 1325); borrowed from Old French grever, from Latin gravāre to cause grief, make heavy or burdensome, from gravis weighty, GRAVE². —grievous adj. About 1300 grevous, borrowed through Anglo-French grevous, Old French grevos, greveus, from gref grief; for suffix see -OUS.

griffin or griffon n. 1338 griffon; earlier, as a surname Griffin (1205); borrowed from Old French grifon, a bird of prey, and a fabulous bird of Greek mythology, from grif, learned borrowing from Latin grīphus, misspelling of grīpus, variant of grīps (genitive grīpos), from Greek gryps (genitive grīpós) curved, hook-nosed, in reference to the griffin's beak.

grill n. 1685, borrowed from French gril, from Old French greil; earlier grail, alteration of graille, from Latin crātīcula gridiron, small griddle, diminutive of crātis wickerwork. In most instances, however, grill, n. is possibly a shortened form of grille, influenced perhaps by grill, v., or is directly from the verb in English. —v. 1668, borrowed from French griller, from gril, n.

grille n. 1661, borrowed from French grille grating, from Old French greille gridiron, from Latin crātīcula gridiron.

grim adj. Old English grimm fierce, cruel (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, modern Dutch, Middle High German, and Old High German grim (modern German grimm), and Old Icelandic grimmr. The sense of dreary or gloomy is first recorded in about 1175.

grimace n. 1651, borrowing of French grimace, from Middle French grimache, replacing the unfamiliar ending -uche from Old French grimuche, possibly from Frankish (compare Old Icelandic grima face mask, Old Saxon grīma). —v. 1762, borrowed from French grimacer.

grime n. 1590, of uncertain origin; probably from grim dirt, filth (about 1300); borrowed from Middle Low German greme dirt; cognate with Flemish grijm, Middle Dutch grīme soot, mask, Old Saxon grīma mask, East Frisian grīme, Old High German grīmo, and Old Icelandic grīma mask. —v. Probably about 1475 grymen; earlier punish, make unhappy (before 1450); borrowed possibly from Middle Low German gremen*, from greme dirt, n. or from Middle Dutch grīmen*, from grīme soot, mask. This verb was replaced by begrime (before 1553). —grimy adj. 1612, formed from English grime, n. + -*y*¹.

grin v. Before 1200 grennien bare the teeth (as an indication of pain or anger), snarl; found in Old English (before 1000) grennian show the teeth, snarl; cognate with Middle Low German greneken to smile, Old High German grennen to snarl, and Old Icelandic grenja to howl; possibly related to Old English grānian to GROAN through association between the Germanic bases gran-* and grin-*, producing cognates including Old High German grīnan gnash the teeth, grimace, grin (modern German greinen); Middle High German grinnen gnash the teeth, Middle Dutch grinsen to grin (modern German grinsen), etc. The sense of bare the teeth in a broad smile, is first recorded before 1500. —n. 1635–56 grind v. Old English (about 1000) grindan; earlier, forgrindan destroy by crushing (about 725); cognate with Middle Dutch grinde thick sand (modern Dutch grind, grint gravel), Old Icelandic grandi sandbar, from Proto-Germanic grindanan*. Related to GROUND. —n. About 1175, from the verb. The sense of steady, hard work, is first recorded in 1851.

gringo n. 1849, borrowed from Mexican Spanish gringo foreigner, from Spanish gringo foreign, unintelligible talk, gibberish, of uncertain origin (perhaps ultimately from griego Greek, from Latin Graecus, from Greek Graikós).

grip n. Probably before 1200 gripe, developed from a fusion of Old English gripe grasp, clutch (about 725, in Beowulf) and Old English gripa handful, sheaf (about 1000). Old English gripe corresponds to Old Frisian gripe grasp, clutch, Old High German grif (modern German Griff), and Old Icelandic grip treasure. —v. Before 1375 gripen; found in Old English gripan (about 950) and corresponding to Middle High German gripen to grip.

gripe v. Probably about 1150 gripen seize; found in Old English gripan grasp at, lay hold (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian gripa to grasp or grip, Old Saxon gripan (modern Dutch grijpen), Old High German grīfan (modern German greifen), Old Icelandic grīpa, and Gothic greipan to grasp, from Proto-Germanic grīpanan*. The figurative sense of complain or grouse is first recorded about 1932, probably evolved from the meaning of produce griping pains in the bowels, in use before 1611. —n. About 1385, from the verb. The figurative sense of a complaint is first recorded in 1934.

grippe n. 1776, borrowed probably through French grippe influenza (originally, seizure), from gripper to grasp or hook, from Frankish (compare Old Saxon grīpan to grasp, GRİPE). The word entered European languages through German Russische Chrippe or Grippe Russian grippe, with the epidemic of influenza during the Russian occupation of Prussia in the Seven Years' War (about 1760).

grisly adj. Before 1300 grisli, developed from Late Old English grislic horrible or dreadful (gris-, related to -grisan to shudder or fear + -lic -ly²); cognate with Old Frisian grislik horrible, Middle Low German grisen, gresen to shudder, greselik frightful or horrible (modern German gruselig), Middle Dutch grisen to shudder (modern Dutch griezelen), Old High German grisenlik horrible, and probably Middle High German gris- in grigram gnashing of teeth (modern German Gries- in Griesgram peevishness, peevish person).

grist n. Old English grist action of grinding, grain to be ground (before 1000); related to grindan to GRIND.

gristle n. Old English (before 700) gristle, related to grist; of unknown origin, but found in cognates in Old Frisian gristel, grestel gristle, East Frisian grössel, grüssel, Middle Low German gristel, and Middle High German gruschel.

grit n. About 1250 gret, earlier grit- in the place name Grittona; developed from Old English grēot sand, dust, earth, gravel (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian grēt grit, Old Saxon griot, Old High German grioz (modern German Griess), and Old Icelandic grjót grit, gravel, stone, grautr groats, from Proto-Germanic griutan*. The abnormal development of the vowel into i may be from the influence of assimilation of gryt; see GRITS. The sense of spirit, pluck, is first recorded in American English in 1808. —v. make a grating sound. 1762, probably a reborrowing from the noun. The earliest occurrence of the noun appears before 1500, as a manuscript variant. —gritty adj. 1598, formed from English grit, n. + -y¹.

grits n.pl. About 1150 grutta bran, coarse meal; developed from Old English (about 700) grytt, pl. grytta, coarse meal, groats, grits; cognate with Middle Low German grütte, gorte grits, groats, Middle Dutch gorte (modern Dutch gort), Middle High German grütze, Old High German gruzzi (modern German Grütze), from Proto-Germanic grutja-*, from the same root as GRIT. This word and the preceding grit sand, have influenced each other in development.

grizzled adj. 1390 griseld, from earlier grisell gray (about 1349, also in a surname Grissel, 1319); borrowed from Old French grisel, diminutive of gris gray, from Frankish (compare Old High German chrīsil, grīs gray). Middle English grisell is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon grīs gray, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch grijs, Middle Low and Middle High German grīs old man (modern German Greis). The spelling with -zz- is first recorded about 1425. —grizzly adj. 1594, from grizzle gray + -y¹. The name grizzly bear is first recorded in 1793 (grizzled bear in 1752, with reference in 1691, that does not use the name).

groan v. Before 1250 gronen to moan, bewail; developed from Old English (probably before 800) grānian to groan, murmur; cognate with Middle Low German grīnen to twist the mouth in a grumble, growl, snarl, etc., Old High German grīnan to laugh or cry (modern German greinen to whine), and Old Icelandic grīna bare the teeth, from Proto-Germanic grain-*.

Possibly related to GRIN. —n. Before 1325 grane, later gron (about 1390); from the verb.

grocer n. 1418, wholesale dealer in wine, spices, foods, etc.; earlier, found in a surname Grocere (1255), and in the London Company of Grocers (founded about 1344); borrowed through Anglo-French grossier, in Middle French grossier wholesaler, from Medieval Latin grossarius grocer (variant grocerius grocer, literally, dealer in quantity), from Late Latin grossus coarse (of food), great, gross; see GROSS. The meaning of a merchant or his shop, selling individual items of food appeared in 1578. —grocery n. 1436, goods sold by a grocer (now groceries, 1635); earlier, in The Grocery Grocers' Hall, in London; formed from English grocer, n. + -y³.

grog n. 1770 grogg, supposedly in allusion to Old Grog, nickname of Edward Vernon (1684–1757), British Admiral who wore a cloak of grogram. The nickname was said to be applied to the drink when in 1740 Vernon ordered his sailors' rum to be diluted. —groggy adj. 1770, intoxicated; formed from English grog + -y¹.

grogram n. 1562, borrowed from Middle French gros grain coarse grain or texture.

groin n. 1592, alteration of earlier grynde groin (recorded before 1400). The new form groin was probably influenced by loin.

grommet n. 1626 grummet, borrowed from obsolete French gromette (now gourmette) curb of a bridle, from gourmer to curb; of uncertain origin. The extended sense of a metal eyelet is first recorded in 1769.

groom n. Probably before 1200 grome male child, boy, youth, servant, attendant; earlier, in the surname Grom; perhaps developed from Old English grōma*, related to grōwan GROW. The meaning of male servant who attends to horses is first recorded in 1553. As the shortened form of BRIDEGROOM, the word first appears in 1604, but that word element in bridegroom (earlier bridegome) from Old English guma man, is not to be confused with this entry groom from grome which is a different word. However, it is evident that the Middle English -gome in bridegome was influenced in its later spelling bridegroom by the sense of attendant in groom. —v. 1809, from the noun.

groove n. Probably before 1400 grofe cave, mine, pit; earlier, in a place name Grovhall (1290); probably borrowed either from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gröf pit); or from Middle Dutch groeve furrow, ditch; cognate with Old High German gruoba pit, hole, ditch, mine (modern German Grube), Old Icelandic gröf, and Gothic grōba, from Proto-Germanic grōbō*. The related Old English græf ditch survives in GRAVE¹. The sense of long, narrow channel or furrow, is first recorded in 1659. —v. make a groove in. 1686, from the noun. The slang sense of enjoy, get along, be in the groove, feel groovy, is first recorded in the late 1930's in American English. —groovy adj. 1937, American English, first-rate, excellent, from (in the) groove + -y¹.

grope v. Probably before 1200 grapen, later gropen (about 1280); developed from Old English grāpian to feel or handle (about 725, in Beowulf); related to gripan grasp at; see GRİPE.

grosbeak n. 1678, formed in English, from French gros- + English beak as a partial loan translation of French grosbec, from Old French gros large + bec beak. The coincidence of French gros and English gross preserved the French form of the first syllable.

gross adj. 1347–50 grosse large; borrowed from Old French gros big, thick, coarse, from Late Latin grossus thick or coarse (of food and mind), but not found as an adjective in Classical Latin. Both the negative sense of glaring, flagrant, monstrous (1581), and the positive sense of entire, total, whole (as in gross receipts, gross national product) developed from the earlier meaning of coarse or heavy (probably before 1425). —n. twelve dozen. 1394, borrowed probably through Anglo-French gros, from Old French gros. The sense of a total of or a profit is first recorded in 1579. —v. 1884, to earn a total of, make a profit; from the noun.

grotesque adj. 1603, originally Crotesko, in reference to the cave paintings found in Roman ruins, characterized by fanciful or odd representations of human and animal forms; later grotesque bizarre (1687); from the noun. —n. 1561, originally crotesque; later grotesque (1643) and Grotesques (1643); borrowed from Middle French crotesque, from Italian grottesco, literally, of a cave, from grotta GROTTO.

grotto n. 1617, borrowed from Italian grotta, (with substitution of a terminal o, possibly from the spelling grotto in various later foreign editions of Dante's Divine Comedy), from Vulgar Latin crūpta*, grūpta*, from Latin crypta vault, cavern, from Greek kryptē. Connection of grotto with earlier English grot (1507, borrowed from French grotte), is hard to establish, especially as both grotto and grot have existed in English for about 300 years.

grouch n. 1900, back formation from grouchy. —v. 1916, from the noun. —grouchy adj. 1895, of uncertain origin (possibly formed from grutch- in grutching, n., complaint, grumbling + -y).

ground n. About 1280 ground, developed from Old English grund bottom, foundation, ground, earth (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon grund ground (modern Dutch grond), Old High German grunt (modern German Grund), and Gothic grundu- in grunduwaddjus foundation wall, from Proto-Germanic grundūs*, and Old Icelandic grunnr from Proto-Germanic grūnthuz*. Related to GRIND. —v. put on or in the ground. 1265 grounden to fortify; earlier grundien strike to the ground; probably from the noun in Old English grund.

group n. 1695, assemblage of figures or objects in a painting or design; borrowed from French groupe cluster, group, from Italian gruppo group, knot, of uncertain origin; perhaps from Germanic (compare Old Low German cropp*, Middle Low German kropp swelling on a bird's throat; see CROP). The generalized sense of any assemblage, is first recorded in English in 1736. —v. 1718, from the noun.

grouper n. 1697 grooper, borrowed from Portuguese garupa, probably of South American Indian origin, perhaps from a Tupi word.

grouse¹ n. bird. Before 1547 grewes; earlier grows (1531); of unknown origin.

grouse² v. complain. 1887, originally British Army slang, of uncertain origin (perhaps borrowed from French dialect groucer, from Old French groucier, groucher to murmur, grumble, also the source of GRUDGE; see GROUCH, v.). —n. 1918, from the verb.

grout n. 1638, probably a technical application of coarse porridge (1587); developed from grut ground malt grain (probably before 1150), from Old English (about 835) grūta, pl. coarse meal. Corresponding to Middle Dutch grūte coarse meal, malt, yeast, and Middle High German grūz grain, sand, Old Icelandic grútr, a cognomen (Norwegian grut grounds), and is related to Old English grytta GRITS. —v. 1838, from the noun.

grove n. Probably before 1200, earlier, in the place name Holgrove (1128–35); developed from Old English (889) grāf, related to grāfa grove, thicket.

grovel v. 1593, humble oneself; back formation from earlier groveling prostrate (before 1325), from on grufe prone (with the adverbial suffix -ling); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ā grifu: ā on, and grifu, related to grífa grovel).

grow v. Probably before 1200 growen, found in Old English grōwan (of plants) to flourish, develop, grow bigger (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian grōia to grow, Middle Dutch groeyen, groyen (modern Dutch groeien), Old High German gruoen, and Old Icelandic grōa. The application to human beings and animals generally, began in the 1300's. In Old English the usual word was weaxan to WAX. —grower n. 1449, formed from Middle English grow, v. + *-er*¹. —grown-up adj. Before 1393; n. 1813. —growth n. 1557, formed from grow + -th, as in health, stealth, etc., perhaps by influence of a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic grōdhi, grōdhr growth, from grōa to grow).

growl v. Before 1667, developed from groulen (of the bowels) to rumble, growl (before 1450); earlier gnulen (before 1425), and grolling rumbling in the bowels (before 1398); probably borrowed from Old French grouler to rumble, from Frankish (compare German grollen to grumble); cognate with Middle High German grellen scream with anger. —n. 1727, from the verb.

grub v. Before 1325 gruben dig, root up; probably developed from Old English grubbian*, and earlier Germanic grubbian*; cognate with Middle Dutch grubben scrape together, earlier Dutch grubbelen to root, Low German grubbeln, Old High German grubilōn to dig, search (modern German grübeln to ponder, brood), and Old Icelandic gryfja pit, hole (Norwegian gruble, gruvle ponder, brood). Probably from earlier Germanic grub-* variant of grab-* to dig, base of Old English grafan to dig; see *GRAVE*³. The meaning of toil or drudge, is first recorded in 1735. —n. larva. Before 1415; earlier, a dwarfish fellow (probably before 1400), and as the surname Grubbe (1176); from the verb. The slang sense of food is first recorded in 1659. —grubby adj. Before 1845, dirty or slovenly; formed from English grub, n. + *-y*¹; earlier stunted, dwarfish (1611).

grudge v. Before 1382 grucgen to grumble, complain (against); variant of earlier gruchen (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French groucher to murmur or grumble; of unknown origin; related to GROUCH and GROUSE. For the spelling of grudge (1461), see DRUDGE. —n. 1459, from the verb.

gruel n. About 1330 gruel meal or flour; earlier, as a surname (1199); borrowed from Old French gruel, from Gallo-Romance grütellum*, from Frankish (compare Middle Dutch grūte coarse meal or malt, Middle High German grūz grain. —v. 1850, from gruel, n. in have or get one's gruel receive one's punishment (1797). The participial adjective grueling exhausting or punishing, is first recorded in 1891.

gruesome adj. 1570 growsome, from grow (variant of grue feel horror, shudder) + *-some*¹. The verb grue developed from Middle English gruen (before 1325), probably borrowed from Middle Dutch grūven or Middle Low German gruven, growen shudder with fear; cognate with Old High German ingrūen to shudder, Middle High German grūven (modern German grauen to fear, feel terror, Grauen terror, horror).

gruff adj. 1533, coarse or coarse-grained; borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German grof coarse, thick, large; cognate with Old High German groh, geroh gross or coarse (modern German groß), a compound of the Germanic prefix ja-* + the adjective stem Hrub-*, cognate with Old English hrēof rough, scabby. The sense of rough, surly, is first recorded in the derivative form gruffness (1690–91).

grumble v. Before 1586, borrowed possibly through Middle French grommeler mutter between the teeth, or directly from Middle Dutch grommelen murmur, mutter, grunt, from grommen to rumble; growl; cognate with Middle Low German grummen to grumble, and Old High German -grummōn in umbegrummōn to gnaw (modern German grummeln to rumble, of Low German origin). —n. 1623, from the verb.

grump n. 1727, in the obsolete phrase humps and grumps surly remarks; later the grumps a fit of ill humor (1844), and a person in an ill humor (1900); perhaps an extension of grum, morose, surly (1640); of uncertain origin (compare Danish grum cruel). —grumpy adj. 1778, Evelina; formed from English grump + *-y*¹.

grungy adj. 1965, American English slang, perhaps a blend of grubby and dingy. —grunge n. 1965, American English slang, probably a back formation from grungy.

grunion n. 1917 grunyon, borrowed from American Spanish gruñón, in Spanish gruñón grunting fish, from gruñir to grunt, from Latin grunnire, grundire to grunt, and Greek grýzein to grunt, grý a grunt.

grunt v. Before 1250 grunten; developed from Old English (about 725) grunnetan, from grunian to grunt, probably an imitative formation; possibly cognate with Old High German grunnizōn to grunt (modern German grunzen), and even Old Icelandic krytja to murmur, krutr outcry, shouting. —n. 1553, from the verb.

G-string n. 1878 gee-string, American English, loincloth worn by American Indians (originally, the string holding up such a loincloth); formed from gee (of uncertain origin) + string. The spelling with G (1891), is perhaps from some influence of a violin string, tuned to G (1831). The piece of cloth worn by stripteasers is first recorded in 1936.

guacamole n. 1920, borrowed from American Spanish (originally Mexican Spanish) guacamole, from Nahuatl ahuacamolli (ahuacatl avocado + molli sauce).

guanine n. 1850, formed from guano (from which it was originally isolated) + *-ine*².

guano n. 1604, borrowed from Spanish guano dung, especially of sea birds found on islands near Peru, from Quechua huanu dung.

guarantee n. something given as security, pledge. About 1436 garant, garrant a warranty that the title of some property is true; borrowed from Old and Middle French garant, guarant warrant, in Old North French warant, from Frankish; see WARRANT.

The later forms garanté (1679) and guarantee (1710) reflect Old French spellings. The later sense of a pledge given as security developed in the 1600's, though it did not displace the sense of the act of guaranteeing (guaranty), and the two forms are still confused. —v. About 1410 garanten to give a warranty or pledge that something is what it purports to be; borrowed from Middle and Old French garantir promise, guarantee, from Frankish; see WARRANT.

guaranty n. act or fact of guaranteeing, security, warranty. 1523 garrantye; though formed in part by influence of earlier garant guarantee, the somewhat artificial differentiation of guarantee and guaranty comes from the borrowing of guaranty through Anglo-French guarantie, from Old French garantie, guarantie, also from garant, guarant warrant, protection, corresponding to Old North French warant, from Frankish; see WARRANT.

In English guaranty and warranty are variant forms borrowed by way of Old French and Old North French from Frankish. In Old French, gu- took the place of Frankish w- in wārjand-s* and developed in Old French as guarant (later guarantie), borrowed into English as garrantie, guaranty. However, in Old North French, the original form with w- in Frankish was preserved in warantie, which was later borrowed into English as warranty. The same process is evident in guard and ward, and in guardian and warden.

guard n. About 1400 garde care, custody, protection; earlier in the surname Legard (1275); borrowed from Middle French garde guardian, warden, keeper, from garder to guard, from Old French garder, from Frankish wardōn* (compare Old High German wartēn to watch); see WARD; and for a general explanation see GUARANTY. —v. 1448 garden protect, defend; borrowed from Middle French garder to guard. —guardian n. Probably before 1400 garden one who guards or protects; later gardein (1417); borrowed through Anglo-French gardein, from Old French gardien, gardian; earlier guardenc, from Frankish warding-*, corresponding to Old North French wardein, from guarder to guard.

guava n. 1555, borrowed from Spanish guaya, variant of guayaba, from Arawakan (West Indies) guayabo guava.

gubernatorial adj. 1734, American English; borrowed from Latin gubernātor GOVERNOR + English -ial, variant of -al.

gudgeon n. Before 1425 gojune; borrowed from Middle French goujon, from Old French gojon, from Latin gōbiōnem (nominative gōbiō), alteration of gōbius, from Greek kōbiōs a kind of fish.

guerrilla n. 1809, borrowed from Spanish guerrilla a body of skirmishers, skirmishing warfare (literally, little war), diminutive of guerra war, from Germanic with substitution of gu- for u- (compare Old High German uerra strife, conflict, WAR). —adj. 1811, from the noun.

guess v. About 1303 gessen suppose, assume, think, guess, borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Middle Danish gitse, getze to guess, Middle Swedish and modern Swedish gissa, Icelandic gizka), probably from Proto-Germanic zetiskanan*, zetanan* get; also, probably influenced by Middle Dutch gessen, gissen, ghissen (modern Dutch and Frisian gissen); cognate with Middle Low German gissen to guess. The modern forms with gu- in guess (1591), is sometimes attributed to Caxton and his early experience as a printer in Bruges. —n. About 1303 gesse supposition, assumption, guess; probably from the verb. —guesstimate n. 1936, originally used by statisticians and population experts, as a blend of guess and estimate. —v. 1942, American English, from the noun.

guest n. Probably before 1200 gest, borrowed probably from Old Icelandic gestr and replacing Old English gæst, giest guest, stranger, enemy (about 725, in Beowulf); also found in Anglian gest. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian jest guest, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch gast, Old High German gast (modern German Gast), Old Icelandic gestr, and Gothic gasts, from Proto-Germanic gastiz*.

guffaw n. 1720, Scottish, possibly imitative of the sound. —v. 1721, Scottish; from the noun.

guide v. About 1380 giden to lead, direct, conduct; implied in giding guiding, guidance, borrowed from Old French guider, alteration (by influence of Old Provençal guidar) of earlier guier, from Gallo-Romance wiāre*, from Frankish wītan* show the way. —n. Before 1376 gide one who leads or guides, borrowed from Old French guide, from Old Provençal guida, from guidar to guide, from Frankish. —guidance n. 1538, formed from English guide, v. + -ance, replacing earlier guying (before 1420).

guidon n. 1548, borrowed from Middle French, from Italian guidone battle standard, from guidare to direct, guide, from Old guild n. Before 1338 gylde, earlier in the compound Chapmanegilde (probably about 1230). This Middle English form developed by influence of Old Icelandic gildi, from earlier yilde which represents a semantic fusion of Old English gild, gylt payment, tribute, compensation, and (infrequently) guild; and of Old English gegylde guild, both terms recorded before 1000 and cognate with Flemish gild guild, Middle Dutch gilde, Old Frisian geld, jeld money, Old Saxon geld payment, sacrifice, reward, Old High German gelt payment, tribute, money (modern German Geld money), Old Icelandic gjáld payment, tribute, compensation, and Gothic gild tax; related to the root of English YIELD. The meaning of tribute or payment is associated with burial and benefit societies that existed even before the Norman Conquest.

Provençal guidar; GUIDE; a replacement for earlier gitoun a military standard (1393).

The merchant guilds with their protected trading rights are represented in words occurring in Middle Low German and Middle Dutch gilde (modern Dutch gild and modern German Gilde), and Old Icelandic gildi. Such terms also refer to the trade guilds that emerged in England largely after 1200. The term guild replaced hanse (see HANSEATIC), known in English before 1135, especially in the compound hanshus guild hall. —guildhall n. 1262, developed from Old English gegylde-heall (about 1000).

guilder n. 1467 gilder; earlier gyldern, gyldren (probably 1458); usually considered a mispronunciation of Middle Dutch gulden, literally, golden, from gulden florijn golden florin; cognate with Old Frisian gelden, golden, gulden, Old Saxon and Old High German guldin, Old Icelandic gullin, and Gothic gultheins; also related to Old English gylden golden.

guile n. Probably about 1150 gile; borrowed from Old French guile, from Frankish wigila* trick or ruse (compare Old Frisian wigila sorcery, witchcraft; for spelling change in Old French see GUARANTY). —guileless adj. 1728, re-formed from English guile, n. + -less; originally gilles (1435).

guillotine n. 1793, borrowing of French guillotine, formed in allusion to Joseph Guillotin, French physician, who as a deputy to the National Assembly (1789), proposed that capital punishment be by beheading by a machine, which was built in 1791 and first used in 1792. —v. 1794, borrowed from French guillotiner, from French guillotine, n.

guilt n. Probably about 1175 gult; later gilt (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (971) gylt crime, sin, fault, fine; of unknown origin. —guilty adj. Before 1250 gulti, developed from Old English (about 1000) gyltig, from gylt guilt + -ig -y¹.

guinea n. 1664, in allusion to Guinea, a region along the coast of West Africa (so called because the coins were first minted in 1663 for British trade with Guinea and were made of gold from Guinea).

The word guinea is also used as a shortened form of guinea hen (1578) and guinea fowl (1788), domestic fowl imported from Guinea in the 1500's. The guinea pig (1664) was associated with "Guinea-men" plying between England, Guinea, and South America, to which the animal is native.

guise n. Probably before 1300 gise fashion, style, garb; borrowed from Old French guise, from Frankish (compare Old High German wisa manner, WISE²); for development of gu- in Old French spelling, see GUARANTY.

guitar n. 1621 guittara, borrowing of Spanish guittara; later, blended with gittar (1688), borrowed from French guitare, also from Spanish guitarra, from Greek kitharā cithara. Also probably associated in meaning with earlier giterne guitarlike instrument known in England by 1350.

gulch n. 1832, American English; perhaps found in obsolete or dialect English gulch or gulsh (of land) to sink in, (of water) to gush through a narrow passage, from earlier gulchen to gush forth (about 1410), and to drink greedily (before 1250), formed by metathesis of u and l from gluchen (probably before 1200).

gulf n. Probably about 1380 golf deep cavity or abyss; borrowed from Old French golfe a gulf or whirlpool, from Italian golfo a gulf or bay, from Late Latin colpus, colpus, from Greek kólpos bay or gulf (originally, bosom). The meaning of a large body of water is first recorded about 1400. — Gulf Stream (1775) gull n. Before 1450, of uncertain origin; possibly from a Brythonic Celtic source (compare Welsh gwyllan gull, Cornish guilan, and Breton goelann).

gullet n. 1305, as a surname Gullet; later golet throat (about 1390); borrowed from Old French goulet, diminutive of goule, gole throat or neck, from Latin gula throat.

gullible adj. 1793, implied in gullibility (gull to dupe + -ible); of uncertain origin; perhaps from gull to swallow (1530), from golen to act as if swallowing (about 1425), from gole, gulle throat; borrowed from Old French goule, from Latin gula throat.

gully n. 1538, gullet; later, channel made by running water (1657); possibly a variant of earlier golet a water channel (1373); see GULLET.

gulp v. 1530, to gasp or choke when drinking a large draft of liquid; borrowed probably from Flemish or Dutch gulpen to gush, pour forth, guzzle, swallow; cognate with East Frisian gulpen to gush or gulp, and Danish gulpe, gylpe to gulp; all may be ultimately of imitative origin.

Isolated uses, ygulpid gulped (before 1376) and goppyn, golping, gluping (probably about 1395); are found in Middle English. — n. act of gulping. 1568 goulpe, probably borrowed from Flemish gulpe, from gulpen to gulp.

gum¹ n. Before 1325, sticky juice of certain trees and plants. later gumme (1336); borrowed from Old French gomme, learned borrowing from Late Latin gumma, corresponding to Latin gummi, cummi, from Greek kōmmi gum. As a shortened form of chewing gum, gum is first recorded in American English, in 1842. — v. About 1325 gummen treat with gum; from the noun. — gum arabic (before 1398) — gummy adj. Before 1398, formed from Middle English gomme gum, n. + *-y*¹.

gum² n. Before 1325, flesh around the teeth; earlier gome inside of the mouth (about 1150); developed from Old English gōma palate (before 830); cognate with Old High German guomo and goumo palate, gum (modern German Gaumen), Old Icelandic gōmr gum.

gumbo n. 1805, American English, in American French (Louisiana) gumbo, gombo; probably borrowed ultimately from a Central Bantu dialect; compare Mbundu kingombo (ke-, singular prefix + ngombo okra).

gumption n. 1719, Scottish, common sense or shrewdness, of uncertain origin; possibly connected with Middle English gome attention, heed (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gaum, gaumr heed) and the ending -tion. The meaning of initiative, was an early secondary sense, recorded about 1812.

gun n. Probably before 1300 gunne an engine of war that throws rocks, arrows, or other missiles; probably a shortened form of the name Gunilda (compare Anglo-Latin Domina Gunilda Lady Gunilda, the name of a specific engine used to throw missiles), possibly derived from Old Icelandic Gunnhildr (gunnr + hildr, both with the meaning of war, battle). In relation to this term Middle English also has gonnilde, n., a cannon (before 1325). — v. Before 1622, shoot with a gun; from the noun. — gunman n. (1624) — gunner n. (1345) — gunpowder n. (1400) — gunshot n. (probably about 1421) — gunwale n. 1466, formed from gun + wale plank, formerly used to support the guns.

gung ho 1959, American English; found earlier in Gung Ho (1942, a slang term or motto of Carlson's Raiders, a guerrilla unit operating in the Pacific area in World War II); borrowed from Chinese kūng hō work together, cooperate.

gunk n. 1949, American English, sticky mess or substance, in allusion to Gunk, a trademark for a thick liquid soap patented in 1932.

gunny n. 1711, Anglo-Indian goney, coarse fabric, borrowed from Hindi gōnī, from Sanskrit gonī sack. — gunny sack 1862, earlier gunny bag, (1764). The spelling gunny is first recorded in 1727.

guppy n. 1925, in allusion to J. L. Guppy, who supplied the first recorded specimen (1866) to the British Museum.

gurgle v. Probably before 1425, implied in gurgulyng a gurgling heard in the abdomen, and found in gurgulacioun (before 1400); probably a medical term, and not in use of the sound of liquids outside the body before 1596 and not in general use before the 1700's. This phenomenon of long specialized use before becoming a part of the general vocabulary is often found in English. The immediate source may be found in Medieval Latin (the medical language of the 1400's) in gurgulationem (nominative gurgulatio) from gurgulare* to gurgle. — n. Probably before 1425, a gurgling, perhaps from an earlier verb. The meaning of bubbling sound is first recorded in 1757.

guru n. 1800 gooroo Hindu spiritual leader or guide; later guru (1876); borrowed from Hindi gurū teacher or priest, from Sanskrit gurū-s, one to be honored, teacher. The generalized sense of any influential teacher, guide, or mentor is first recorded in 1940. The sense of an expert or authority is first found in Canadian English, about 1966.

gush v. Probably before 1200 gosshien make noises in the stomach; later guschen, gosshen to rush out suddenly, pour out (probably before 1400); probably formed in English by influence of a Scandinavian form such as Old Icelandic gusa to gush, spurt. The sense of act or speak in an effusive manner is first recorded in 1873. —n. rush of water from an enclosed place. About 1682; from the verb.

gusset n. Before 1420, flexible material used to fill up space in a suit of armor; borrowed from Middle French gosset, gousset, perhaps a diminutive of gousse husk, shell, of uncertain origin (perhaps from Italian guscio husk, shell).

gussy v. 1952, American English slang, apparently from earlier Gussy, name applied to an overdressed person (1940); of uncertain origin (perhaps related to gussie an effeminate man, 1901).

gust n. 1588, possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gustr gust, Old High German gussa flood). The fact that gust appears so late in English, suggests that it was confined to dialect or specialized use, perhaps as a term among sailors. —gusty adj. 1600, formed from English gust + -y¹.

gustatory adj. 1684, formed in English possibly from Latin gustātus, past participle of gustāre to taste + English -ory.

gusto n. 1629, borrowed from Italian gusto taste, from Latin gustus (genitive gustūs) a tasting, related to gustāre to taste.

gut n. Probably before 1300 gutte intestine; developed from Old English (before 1000) guttas, pl., bowels, entrails; cognate with Middle Dutch gote gutter, drain (modern Dutch goot), Old High German guz act of pouring (modern German Gosse gutter, drain). The figurative plural use guts energy, courage, pluck, is first recorded in 1893. The adjective, as in gut issue and gut reaction is first recorded in 1963, probably as a back formation from earlier gutsy. —v. About 1390, from the noun. —gutsy adj. 1936, tough, plucky, formed from English guts courage + -y¹.

gutter n. 1280 goteris channel along the side of a street to carry off water; later, trough on eaves (guttur, 1333); borrowed from Old French gutiēre, goutiēre, from goute a drop.

guttural adj. 1594, borrowed through Middle French guttural, or perhaps directly from New Latin gutturalis, from Latin guttur throat. —n. sound formed in this way. 1696, from the adjective.

guy¹ n. rope, chain, wire. 1623 guie, developed from Middle English gye a guide (before 1375, found also in girap guy rope, 1371); borrowed from Old French guie a guide, from guier to GUIDE. —v. 1712, from the noun.

guy² n. fellow. 1847, from earlier grotesquely or poorly dressed person (1836); originally, a grotesquely dressed effigy of Guy Fawkes (1806; leader of the Gunpowder Plot to blow up the British king and Parliament in 1605).

gymnasium n. 1598, borrowed from Latin gymnasium school for gymnastics, from Greek gymnásion, from gymnázein to exercise or train, (literally, to train naked), from gymnós naked. —gymnast n. 1594, a back formation from gymnastic, though in some instances probably borrowed through Middle French gymnaste, from Greek gymnastēs trainer of athletes. —gymnastic adj. 1574, borrowed through Middle French gymnastique, from Latin gymnasticus, from Greek gymnastikós pertaining to or skilled in bodily exercise. —gymnastics n. 1652, from gymnastic + -s, on the analogy of such pairs as mathematic, mathematics.

gymnosperm n. 1830, borrowed from French gymnosperme and probably from New Latin gymnospermus having naked seeds, from Greek gymnóspermós (gymnós naked + spérma seed).

gynecology n. 1847, borrowed probably from French gynécologie, from Greek gynaiko-, combining form of gyné woman + French -logie -logy, study of.

gyp v., n. 1889, American English, probably a shortening of GYPSY.

gypsum n. Before 1384 gypsus; later gipsum (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin gypsum, from Greek gýpsos chalk.

Gypsy n. 1600 gipsy, alteration of gypcian (before 1400), shortened form of Egyptian, Middle English egyptien (before 1325); possibly from the mistaken belief that Gypsies came from Egypt. —adj. About 1630, from the noun.

gyrate v. 1830, back formation from earlier gyration; for suffix see -ATE¹. —gyration n. 1615, borrowed from French giration, but modeled on Late Latin gýrātum, past participle of gýrāre, from Latin gýrus circle, from Greek gýros, related to gýrós rounded; for suffix see -ATION.

gyrfalcon or gerfalcon n. large white falcon of the Arctic. 1209 girfaucan; later gerfauc (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French gerfauc, gerfaucan, from Germanic (possibly from Old High German gir vulture, also found in Old French gir + Latin falcō hawk; the Old Icelandic geirfalki gyrfalcon, is now thought to have been influenced by the Old French word).

gyro- a combining form meaning ring, circle, spiral, rotation, as in gyrostatistics = statistics dealing with the rotation or circling of solid bodies; or in some compounds, meaning gyroscope, as in gyrostabilizer = stabilizer of a ship controlled by a gyroscope. Borrowed from Greek gýro-, combining form of gýros ring, circle.

gyroscope n. 1856, borrowing of French gyroscope, from Greek gýros circle + skopós watcher; so called the device demonstrates that the earth rotates on its axis.

H

habeas corpus 1463 habeās Corpora writ or process requiring a sheriff to provide jurymen; also, 1465 habeās corpus writ requiring that a prisoner be brought before a judge or court (to decide whether he is being held lawfully); borrowing, especially in Anglo-French documents (1376), of Latin habeās corpus have the body, in the phrase habeās corpus ad subjiciendum produce or have the body to be subjected to (examination), which are the opening words of the writ. The phrase in Latin is made up of habeās, 2nd person singular present subjunctive of habēre have or hold, and corpus, literally, body.

haberdasher n. 1311, a dealer in small articles of trade; earlier as a surname Haperdasser (1280); probably an alteration (with formative -er) of Anglo-French hapertas small wares, of unknown origin. The meaning of a dealer in men's wear (1887 in American English), probably stems from the specialized sense of a dealer or maker of hats, caps, etc. (possibly 1491). —haberdashery n. 1419, goods sold by a haberdasher; formed from English haberdasher + *-y*³. The meaning of a shop of a haberdasher, is first recorded in 1813.

habiliment n. dress, attire. Also, habiliments, articles of clothing. 1422 ablement, ablements, also, 1436 habilement, habilements military equipment; borrowed from Middle French habillement, abillement, from abiller prepare or fit out, originally, reduce a tree by stripping off the branches (a- to + bille stick of wood).

The early forms had senses connected with able, ability. The meaning of clothing, dress (about 1450), developed by association with French habit clothing.

habit n. Probably before 1200, dress or clothing, especially of a religious order; borrowed from Old French habit, abit, from Latin habitus (genitive habitus) condition, demeanor, appearance, dress, from habi-, the stem of habēre to have, hold, possess. The extended meanings of outward form, appearance, and customary practice, which existed in Latin habitus, are first recorded in English in the 1300's. —habitual adj. About 1445, borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French habituel, from Medieval Latin habitualis, from Latin habitus behavior. —habituate v. 1530, developed from earlier habituate, adj. (before 1425); borrowed from Late Latin habituatus, past participle of habituāri be influenced by, be in a state of, possibly a passive form of habituāre* bring into a state, from Latin habitus behavior; see HABIT, which probably influenced the form and meaning English; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Middle habitat n. 1762, used as a technical term in a Latin text on plants in Great Britain; literally, it inhabits, third person singular present indicative of habitāre live in, dwell. The generalized use of a dwelling place or habitation, is first recorded in 1854. —habitable adj. Before 1393 habitable; earlier abitale (1388); borrowed from Old French habitable, abitale, from Latin habitābilis that is fit to live in, from habitāre live in; for suffix see -ABLE. —habitation n. About 1375 habitacioun act of living in a place, later, dwelling place (about 1384); borrowed through Old French habitation act of dwelling, or directly from Latin habitātiōnem (nominative habitātiō) act of dwelling, from habitāre a frequentative form of habēre possess, have, hold.

French habituē to accustom, also influenced the verb use in English. —habitué n. 1818, borrowing of French habitué, past participle of habituē accustom, from Late Latin habituārī.

hack¹ v. cut roughly. Probably before 1200 hacken, developed from Old English -haccian in tōhaccian hack to pieces; cognate with Old Frisian hakkeia to chop or hack, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch hacken (modern Dutch hakken), Old High German hacchōn (modern German hacken), of unknown origin. The sense of give a short dry cough is found in 1802. The American slang use (as in to hack it) to cope with, is first recorded in the 1950's, influenced by, the sense of get through by some effort (as in cut the mustard). —n. tool for chopping. Before 1325, from the verb. The sense of a dry cough appeared in 1885.

hack² n. vehicle. Before 1700, person hired to do routine work; shortened form of HACKNEY. The meaning of carriage for hire is first recorded in 1704. The sense of one who will do anything asked, is recorded before 1848. —adj. Before 1734, from the noun. The phrase hack writer is first recorded in 1826. —v. 1745, make commonplace; from the noun.

hackle¹ n. bird's plumage. Before 1450 hakle; later hakille (before 1475); developed from Old English hacele cloak or mantle (before 899). The sense of feathers on the neck of a rooster, pigeon, etc., is first found in 1496, but the idiom to raise one's hackles was only recently derived from with the hackles up (1881).

hackle² n. comb used in dressing flax or hemp. 1485 hakell, variant of hekele; see HECKLE.

hackney n. Probably about 1300 *hakene*y; earlier in a surname

Hakenesho, horseshoe for a hackney (1205). The meaning of hiring is first recorded in 1546, becoming obsolete in the 1700's, replaced by shortened form *hack*². The meaning of carriage used for hire (also shortened to *hack*²) is found in 1664. —v. 1570, use (a horse) as a hack, for ordinary riding; extended to "make common by everyday usage, make trite" (1596). —hackneyed adj. (1749) hadal adj. 1964, of or inhabiting the very deep part of the ocean; formed from English Hades the nether world + *-al*¹.

haddock n. 1307–08 haddock; earlier as a surname Haddock (1286); of unknown origin. The French word was borrowed from English.

Hades n. 1597, borrowed from Greek Háidēs God of the nether world; of uncertain origin.

hadron n. 1962, formed in English from Greek hadrós thick or heavy + English suffix -on elementary particle after the original coinage in Russian as adron.

hafnium n. 1923, New Latin hafnium (Hafnia, the Medieval Latin form of Copenhagen, where the element was discovered + -ium).

haft n. About 1330 haft, developed from Old English hæft handle, in the compound hæftmece hilted sword (about 725, in Beowulf); also related to hæft fetter (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon haft captured, modern Dutch heft handle, Old High German hefti handle, haft fetter (modern German Heft handle, Haft arrest), Old Icelandic hapt fetter, hepti handle (with -pt- pronounced as if -ft-), and Gothic hafis fastened, secured, related to haffan HEAVE. —v. 1440 haften furnish with a haft; from the noun.

hag n. Probably before 1200 hagge, probably a shortening of Old English hægtesse, heptes witch, fury, on the assumption that -tesse, -tes was a suffix. The Old English forms are cognate with Middle Dutch haghetisse witch (modern Dutch heks), and Old High German hagzissa, hagazussa (modern German Hexe). Hag did not become a common word in English before the 1500's, and the same development occurred about the same time with German Hexe.

haggard adj. 1580, wild, unruly, a figurative use of wild or untamed, in reference to hawks (1567); borrowed from Middle French hagard, of uncertain origin; perhaps referring to Old French faulcon hagard wild falcon, literally, falcon of the woods, from Middle High German hag hedge, copse, or woods, with the suffix -ard, possibly reinforced by Low German and German hager gaunt, haggard. The meaning of looking careworn developed through the sense of the effects of pain, fatigue, or worry on the face (1853), a generalized application of a wild or haunted expression in someone's eyes (1697).

haggle v. 1583, to advance with difficulty, but implied in earlier haggler one who haggles (1577); later, to hack, mangle, mutilate (1599); apparently a frequentative form with addition of the suffix *-le*³ to earlier haggen to chop (probably about 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hogga to hack, HEW). The meaning of dispute about a price or terms of a bargain, is first recorded in 1602 and may have developed from the earlier meaning through the notion of chopping or whittling away. —n. 1858, from the verb. —haggler n. 1577, probably from haggle, v. (unrecorded at the time) + *-er*¹.

hagiology n. 1807, literature that deals with the saints; formed in English from Greek hágios holy + English -logy.

hahnium n. 1970, in allusion to the German radiochemist Otto Hahn + -ium.

hail¹ interj. greetings! About 1200, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic heill healthy; but also compare Gothic hails, used as a salutation without a verb, and Old English hails). A shortening of hail be thou and wæs hæil, in which hail functions as an adjective meaning healthy; see WASSAIL and HALE¹. —v. Probably about 1200, earlier, to drink a toast (before 1200); from the interjection. —n. 1500, from the verb and the interjection.

hail² n. frozen rain. About 1250 hail, developed from Old English hægl (probably about 750), hagol (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian heil hail, Old Saxon and Old High German hagal, Middle Low German hagel (modern German Hagel), Middle Dutch haghel (modern Dutch hagel), and Old Icelandic hagl, from Proto-Germanic Haglaz*. —v. About 1300 hailen; developed from Old English (about 893) hagalian, from hagol, n. —hailstone n. Before 1387; developed from Old English hagol-stān.

hair n. Probably about 1150 her; later heare (about 1250, also as hair in 1200); developed from Old English hær (about 1000), hēr (about 800); cognate with Old Frisian hēr hair, Old Saxon hār, Middle Dutch haer (modern Dutch haar), Old High German hār (modern German Haar), and Old Icelandic hār, from Proto-Germanic Hæran*. The modern English spelling derives from influence of the now obsolete Middle English haire cloth made of hair (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French haire, from Frankish hārja*. —hairbreadth adj., n. (about 1450, heere-brede) —hair adj. Before 1325 hari, formed from Middle English har, her hair + -i ^{-y}¹.

hake n. 1280, of uncertain origin; perhaps found in Old English haca a hook, represented in hacad a pike (fish); or borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Norwegian hakefisk, from hake hook (compare Old Icelandic haki HOOK) + fisk fish (compare Old Icelandic fiskr FISH).

halberd n. weapon that is both a spear and a battle-ax. 1495 haubert, also halberd (1497); borrowed from Middle French hallebarde (found also in Old French alabarde, and Italian alabarda), from Middle High German halmbarde, helmbarte broad-axe with a handle (from halm, helm handle); see HELM + barte hatchet, from Old High German barta, possibly from bart BEARD.

halcyon adj. 1631 halcyon, abstracted from halcyon days fourteen days of calm weather (1601; halcyons dayes, 1545). According to legend, the winter solstice when the halcyon, a mythical bird identified as the kingfisher, bred in a nest floating on a calm sea.

The name halcyon was borrowed from Latin halcyōn, from Greek halcyōn, variant of alkyōn kingfisher (hals sea, salt, + kyōn conceiving, present participle of kyein conceive).

hale¹ adj. healthy. Before 1325 hale (in Northern dialect of England); developed from Old English (about 725) hāl healthy; see *HAIL*¹ and HEAL.

hale² v. drag, summon. Probably before 1200 halen, borrowed from Old French haler, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German halōn, holōn to fetch; cognate with Old Saxon halōn to fetch, Old Frisian halia, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch halen to fetch, draw, haul, and modern German holen); Middle English halen is probably also related to Old English -holian in geholian obtain; see HAUL, v.

half n. 1123 half; found in Old English half, halb side, part (about 700, in Mercian); later healf half (in West Saxon); cognate with Old Frisian halve side, Old Saxon halba, Middle Dutch and Middle Low German halve, Old High German halba, Middle High German halbe, Old Icelandic halfa, and Gothic halba side, half. —adj. 1137 half; found in Old English (811) healf, half; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, and Middle Low German half half, Old High German and modern German halb, Old Icelandic hálf, and Gothic halbs, from Proto-Germanic Halbás*, the source of Old English healf side. —adv. Probably before 1200 half; found in Old English (944); from the adjective. —half brother (before 1338) —half-hearted adj. (perhaps before 1425) —half hour (about 1420) —half moon (probably before 1425) —half sister (probably before 1200) —halfway adv. (about 1330) —halve v. Probably before 1200 halfen, from half, n.

halibut n. 1396 halibut (hali HOLY + butte flatfish, cognate with Low German hilligbutt, hillebutt, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch but flatfish; also found in modern German Butte and Heilbutt; perhaps also cognate with -bot in French turbot); so called from its being eaten especially on holy days. Middle English butte flatfish is cognate with Low German butt short and fat, from Proto-Germanic but-*.

halite n. 1868, borrowed from New Latin halites, from Greek hals (genitive halós) salt + New Latin -ites *-ite*¹.

halitosis n. 1874, New Latin halitosis, from Latin hālītus breath (related to hālāre to breathe) + New Latin -osis -osis.

hall n. Probably before 1200 halle, developed from Old English heall place covered by a roof, spacious roofed residence, temple, etc. (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon halla place covered by a roof, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch halle (modern Dutch hal hall), Old High German halla (modern German Halle hall), and Old Icelandic holl, from Proto-Germanic Hallō-*. —hallway n. (1876) hallelujah or halleluia interj. 1535 halleluya, borrowed from Hebrew hallālū-yāh praise Jehovah, (hallālū, plural imperative of hallēl to praise + yāh, shortened form of the name of God Yahweh); a replacement for earlier English alleluia (recorded probably before 1200). —n. 1667, from the interjection.

hallmark n. 1721, official stamp of purity in gold and silver articles (in allusion to Goldsmiths' Hall in London, + mark). The sense of a mark of quality, is first recorded in 1864. —v. 1773, from the noun.

hallow v. Before 1121 halgod (past participle); later halwen and halowen (about 1300); developed from Old English hālgian (about 725); related to hālig HOLY.

Halloween or Hallowe'en n. About 1745, Scottish, shortening of Allhallow-even; earlier All hallow eve Eve of All Saints, last night of October (1556). According to the Celtic calendar November 1 began the year and the last evening of October was old-year's night (the night of all witches), which the Christian Church transformed into the Eve of All Saints.

hallucination n. 1646, borrowed from Latin alucinātiōnem, later hallucinātiōnem (nominative hallucinātiō), from alucināri wander (in the mind), dream, probably from Greek alyein, halyein be distraught; probably related to alásthai wander about; for suffix see -TION. —hallucinate v. 1604, to deceive; 1652, to have illusions, from Latin alucinātus, later hallucinātus, past participle of alucināri; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

halo n. 1563, borrowed as Spanish halon, later borrowed as French halo, or directly as Latin accusative halō; all forms from Latin halōs, from Greek hálōs disk of the sun or moon, and disk around the sun or moon, of unknown origin. The sense of a nimbus, or disk of light surrounding the head of a divine or saintly person, is first recorded in 1646. —v. surround with a halo. 1801, from the noun.

halogen n. 1842, borrowing of Swedish halogen, from Greek hals (genitive halós) salt + -gen; so called because a salt is formed.

halt¹ n. stop. 1622, earlier alt, alto (1591–98); borrowed through French halte and earlier Italian alto, or directly from German Halt, from halten to stop or hold, from Old High German halten to HOLD. —v. 1656, from the noun.

halt² adj. lame. Probably about 1200 halt; found in Old English (about 700) -halt, in lemphalt lame, limping; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Dutch halt lame, Old High German halz, Old Icelandic haltr, and Gothic halts, from Proto-Germanic Haltaz*. —v. hesitate, waver. Before 1325 halten to limp; later, hesitate, waver (1382); found in Old English (about 830) háltian to be lame, to limp, from the adjective.

halter n. Before 1225 helfter snare, noose; later haltre, halter (about 1300); developed from Old English (before 830) hælfre, hælfier; cognate with Old Saxon haliftra halter, Middle Low German halchter, Middle Dutch halfier (modern Dutch halster), and Old High German halftira (modern German Halfter), from Proto-Germanic Halftira-*.

halve v. See HALF.

halyard n. 1611, alteration of earlier halier (1373; also found in the surname Haliere porter, carrier, 1279), from halen to haul, *HALE*². The spelling was influenced by *YARD*² long beam used to support a sail.

ham¹ n. meat of a hog's hind leg. Old English ham hollow or bend of the knee (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch hamme hollow or bend of the knee, thigh, ham (modern Dutch ham), Old High German hamma, and Old Icelandic höm, from Proto-Germanic Hamō*. The meaning of thigh of a hog, is first recorded about 1475.

ham² n. performer. 1882, American English, apparently a shortened form of hamfatter (1880), an actor of low grade, said to be from an old minstrel song "The Ham-fat Man." The idea amateurish was extended to an amateur telegraphist (1919) and an amateur radio operator (1922). —v. 1933, from the noun, especially ham it up.

hamburger n. 1889, in hamburger steak, borrowed from German Hamburger, originally, of or from the city of Hamburg; perhaps because this type of steak was associated with the port of Hamburg, through which many immigrants came to the United States.

hamlet n. Before 1338 hamlet, hamelet, borrowed from Old French hamelet, diminutive (with -et) of hamel village, itself a diminutive of ham (with -el *-le*¹); derived from Frankish haim*; see HOME.

The form ham (Old English hām home) does not appear in Old or Middle English with the meaning of town, village, except in compounds of place names, such as Birmingham and Nottingham.

hammer n. About 1125 hamer; found in Old English hamor (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon hamur hammer, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hamer, Old High German hamar (modern German Hammer), and Old Icelandic hamarr hammer, stone, crag, from Proto-Germanic Hamur*. —v. Probably about 1390, from the noun.

hammock n. 1657 hamock, alteration of hamaca (1555); borrowing of Spanish hamaca, from Arawakan language of Haiti, apparently referring to fish nets. The ending -ock was possibly influenced by -ock, as in hillock.

hamper¹ v. hinder. Before 1375 hampren to surround, imprison, confine; later, to pack in a container; of uncertain origin, possibly from *hamper*², n.

hamper² n. basket. 1316–17 hampyr container as for documents, utensils, or foodstuff; contraction of Anglo-French hanaper (1314; also Anglo-Latin hanepario, 1292). The term was borrowed from Old French hanepier case for holding a large goblet or cup, from hanap goblet, from Frankish (compare Old Saxon hnapp cup, bowl, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch nap, Old High German hnappf, modern German Napf, Old Icelandic hnappr, and Old English hnæpp).

hamster n. 1607, borrowed from German Hamster, from Middle High German hamastra hamster (possibly in Old High German hamastro but only in the sense of weevil, also in Old Saxon hamstra), probably from Old Slavic choměstorŭ hamster.

hamstring v. 1641, to disable as if by cutting the hamstrings of; from earlier noun hamstring tendon at the back of the knee (1565; from *ham*¹ bend of the knee + string).

hand n. Old English (before 830) hond; earlier hand in handful (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian hand, hond hand, Old Saxon and Dutch hand, Old High German hant (modern German Hand), Old Icelandic hond, and Gothic handus, from Proto-Germanic Handuz*. —adj. Before 1000, from the noun. —v. Probably before 1400 handen take charge of; later, seize (probably about 1400); from the noun. —handbell n. (before 1000, in Old English) —handbook n. (before 900, in Old English) —handful n. (about 830, in Old English) —handgrip n. (about 725, in Beowulf) —hand towel (about 1350) —handy adj. 1535, performed by hand, manual; formed from English hand + *-y*¹, but the form is found in the surname Handibody dexterous (1312), and hondiwer (about 1200, from Old English hand-geweorc, about 725). The meaning of conveniently accessible, is first recorded in 1650.

handicap n. Probably before 1653, from hand in cap a wagering game in which forfeit money was deposited in a cap. Reference to horse racing appeared in Handy-Cap Match (1754). The sense of encumbrance or disability, is first recorded in 1890. —v. 1649, to gain as in a wagering game; from the same source as the noun. The meaning of equalize chances of competitors, is first recorded in 1852, and that of put at a disadvantage, disable in 1864. —handicapped adj. disabled. 1915, from the verb.

handicraft n. About 1300, alteration of hændecraft (probably before 1200); found in Old English (before 975) handcraft.

handiwork n. About 1200 hand-iwer work done with hands; developed from Old English (probably about 725) handgeweorc handwork (hand + geweorc, collective form of weorc WORK).

handkerchief n. 1530, formed from English hand + kerchief and parallel in usage to handkercher (about 1532), which remained in use through the 1860's.

handle n. Old English (before 800) handle, from hand + -le in the sense of a tool as found in thimble. —v. Old English (about 1000) handlian to touch or move with the hands, manipulate; cognate with Old Frisian handelia to handle, Old High German hantalon to handle, touch (modern German handeln, and modern Dutch handelen to treat, handle), and Old Icelandic hondla lay hold of, handle; from Old English hand + -lian *-le*³. —handlebar n. (1887, two words) —handler n. (before 1398) handsome adj. Probably before 1400 handsom easy to handle, ready at hand; formed from English hand + *-some*¹. An early sense of handy, convenient, suitable (1530), was extended to of fair size, considerable (1577), and having a fine form, good-looking (1590). The meaning of generous, as in a handsome donation, is first recorded in 1660.

hang v. 1137 hongen; developed by fusion of: 1) Old English (about 1000) hōn (with past tense heng) suspend, and 2) Old English (about 1000) hangian, hongian (with past tense hangode, hongode) be suspended; also probably by influence of a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hengja suspend, and hanga be suspended, hang). Old English hangian corresponds to Old Frisian hangia be suspended or hang, Old Saxon hangōn, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hangen, Old High German hangēn (modern German hangen, hängen), and Old Icelandic hanga, from Proto-Germanic Hang-*. Old English hōn corresponds to Old Frisian hūa suspend or hang, Old Saxon hāhan, Middle Low German hān, Middle Dutch haen, Old High German and Gothic hāhan, from Proto-Germanic HanH-*.

The distinction between hanged and hung is one of historical grammar. In the 1500's speakers in northern England adopted hung as the past participle. This became standard English in the 1600's, and hanged was retained only in law and in extension of legal use, such as be hanged (in I'll be hanged if). —n. 1473–74, a sling; later, a curtain (before 1500); from the verb. The sense of the way cloth hangs, is first recorded before 1797. —hangman n. (1345; earlier in the surname Hangeman, 1253) —hangnail n. (1678, earlier agnail a corn on the foot, about 950) hangar n. 1852, a covered shed for carriages; borrowed from French hangar, from Middle French hanghart, perhaps alteration of Middle Dutch ham-gaerd* enclosure near a house; of uncertain origin. The sense of covered shed for airplanes is first recorded in 1902.

hank n. 1294–95, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hōnk, hanki, clasp, hank; cognate with Middle Low German hank handle, and Old High German henken, hengen to cause to hang, related to HANG).

hanker v. 1601, to linger with longing; borrowed probably from Flemish hankeren, related to Dutch hunkeren to hanker; of uncertain origin (perhaps an intensive form of hangen to hang, related to Middle Dutch hangen to hang).

hanky-panky n. 1841, British slang; possibly a variant of hoky-poky deception or fraud (1847); altered from HOCUS-POCUS.

Hanseatic adj. 1614, of or pertaining to the Hanseatic League (medieval association of North German towns); borrowed from Medieval Latin Hanseaticus, from hansa from Middle Low German hanse, from Old High German hansa military troop, band, company. The term hanse merchant guild is found in English before 1135 in the compound hanshus guild hall.

hansom n. 1847, in allusion to J.A. Hansom, English architect who designed such cabs.

haphazard n. 1575, implied in earlier nonce use haphazarder (1573); formed from English hap chance or luck (probably before 1200; borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic happ chance, good luck) + hazard risk, danger, peril. Old Icelandic happ is from Proto-Germanic Hapan*.

happen v. Probably about 1380 happenen to come to pass, occur; originally, occur by hap or chance in the verb happen happy adj. About 1380, fortunate or lucky; formed from English hap chance or fortune + *-y*¹. The sense of very glad, is first recorded about 1390. —happiness n. 1530, formed from English happy + -ness.

(about 1303, from hap, n., chance, fortune, luck; see HAPHAZARD; and possibly Old English hæppan). —happening n. 1551, occurrence; earlier, chance, luck (before 1450); formed from English happen + *-ing*¹.

harangue n. Before 1450, Scottish arang; borrowed from Middle French harangue, (also in Old Provençal and Italian aringare to harangue, from aringo public square, or platform), ultimately from Germanic hari-hring* army ring, circular gathering (compare Old High German hring circle of spectators, RING). —v. 1660, from French haranguer, from Middle French harangue, n.

harass v. Before 1618, to lay waste or devastate; borrowed from French harasser tire out, vex; of uncertain origin (possibly from Old French harer set a dog on, and perhaps blended with Old French harier to harry, draw, drag). The meaning of trouble by repeated attacks, is found in 1622. —harassment n. 1753, formed from English harass + -ment.

harbinger n. About 1471 herbengar one sent ahead to arrange lodgings for an army, etc., alteration of earlier herberger provider of shelter, innkeeper (before 1200), borrowed from Old French herbergeor, from herbergier provide lodging, from herberge lodging or shelter, from Frankish; compare Old High German heriberga army shelter, lodging (heri army + berga shelter, related to bergan to shelter); see HARBOR; for suffix see *-ER*¹. —v. announce beforehand. 1646, from the noun.

harbor n. About 1125 herbyrge refuge, lodgings; later herberwe harbor for ships (probably before 1200), and harber (about 1475); probably developed from Old English herebeorg (here army, host; see HARRY + beorg refuge, shelter, related to beorgan save, preserve); possibly borrowed from, or at least modeled on late Old Icelandic herbergi; also cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German heriberga (modern German Herberge), Old Frisian herberge, Middle Low German herberge, and Middle Dutch herberghe (modern Dutch herberg). —v. About 1125 herbyregen to shelter; later herbonwen (before 1200); from the noun.

hard adj. 1126 hard, developed from Old English heard not yielding or soft, solid, firm (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian herd hard, Old Saxon hard, Middle Low German hard, harde, Middle Dutch hart, hard (modern Dutch hard), Old High German and modern German hart, Old Icelandic hardhr, and Gothic hardus, from Proto-Germanic Hardús*. —adv. Probably before 1200 harde; earlier herde (about 1175); developed from Old English (about 725) hearde; from the adjective. —harden v. Probably about 1200 hardnen make hard, formed from English hard + -nen (-enen) *-en*¹. —hard-headed adj. (1583, stubborn; 1779, practical, shrewd) —hard-hearted adj. (probably before 1200) —hardly adv. (probably before 1200, found in Old English heardlice) —hardship n. (probably before 1200) hardy adj. robust. Probably before 1200, bold or daring, and in the surname Stonhardi (1194); probably influenced by English hard, adj., but essentially a borrowing of Old French hardi, from past participle of hardir to harden, be or make bold, from Frankish (compare Gothic gahardjan make hard, Old High German herten harden, modern German härten, Old Icelandic herdha, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch harden, Old Saxon herdian, Old Frisian herda, and Old English hierdan to make or become hard; from West Germanic hardjan* to make hard), found in Old English heard HARD. The meaning of strong, vigorous, robust, is first recorded before 1398.

hare n. Probably about 1200 hare, and in the place name Haredena (before 1154); found in Old English (about 700) hara hare; cognate with Old Frisian hasa hare, Middle Dutch haese (modern Dutch haas), Middle Low German hase, Old High German haso hare (modern German Hase hare), and Old Icelandic heri hare. Old High German haso developed from Proto-Germanic Hásan-*, Házán-. —harebrained adj. 1548, formed from English hare + brain + *-ed*².

Hare Krishna 1972, American English, from Hare Krishna a chant used by the sect (1968); borrowed from Hindi hare Krishna O Lord Krishna.

harem n. 1634 haram, borrowed from Arabic ḥaram women's quarters (literally, something forbidden or kept safe), from the root of ḥarama he guarded, forbade. The form harem is a borrowing of Turkish harem, from Arabic ḥarīm, a variant of ḥaram.

hark v. About 1200 harkien, harken, probably developed from Old English hercian*, heorcian (see HEARKEN); cognate with Old Frisian harkia, herkia listen, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch horken, Old High German hörechen (modern German hören); of unknown origin. —harken v. See HEARKEN harlequin n. 1590 Harlicken, borrowed from Middle French harlequin (probably equivalent to Italian arlecchino), variant of Herlequin, Hellequin, as in Old French maisnie Hellequin leader of demons who ride through the air on horses, probably corresponding to Middle English Herleking*, Old English Herla cyning king Herla, a mythical character sometimes identified with Woden. —adj. 1779, from the noun.

harlot n. Probably before 1200 hearlot vagabond or itinerant jester, later harlotte prostitute (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French herlot, arlot vagabond or tramp; of uncertain origin.

harm n. Probably before 1200 harm, and in the surname Harm (1176); found in Old English hearm hurt, evil, grief, pain, insult (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian herm insult or pain, Old Saxon harm, Old High German harm, haram (modern German Harm) grief or harm, and Old Icelandic harmr grief, from Proto-Germanic Harmaz*. —v. About 1225 harmen; found in Old English hearmian to hurt (about 1000); from hearm, n. —harmful adj. 1340, formed from Middle English harm + -ful. —harmless adj. About 1280; formed from Middle English harm + -les -less.

harmonic adj. 1570, perhaps a back formation from earlier armonical (before 1500), influenced by, and in some instances borrowed from, Middle French harmonique, from Latin harmonicus, from Greek harmonikós harmonic or musical, from harmonía HARMONY; for suffix see -ic. —n. 1 harmonics. 1709, theory of musical sounds, formed in English on the model of physics, etc. 2 overtone. 1777, shortening of harmonic tone. —harmonica n. 1873, American English, alteration of earlier armonica glass harmonica (1762; borrowing of Latin harmonica, harmonicus harmonic).

harmony n. About 1380 armonye concord of sounds, melody, borrowed from Old French armonie, harmonie, from Latin harmonia, from Greek harmonía joining, agreement, concord of sounds; related to harmós joint; see ARM¹; for suffix see *-y*³. The meaning of a combination of notes to form chords, is first recorded before 1398, and that of agreement, accord about 1385. —harmonious adj. 1549, borrowed from Middle French harmonieux, from Old French harmonie harmony; for suffix see -ous. —harmonize v. 1483, to play or sing in harmony; later, to be in harmony with (1629); borrowed from Middle French harmoniser, from Old French harmonie harmony; for suffix see -ize.

harness n. Probably before 1300 harnais, herneys harness, gear, military equipment, and as a surname Herneys (1275); borrowed from Old French harneis, perhaps from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic hernest* provisions for an army. —v. Probably before 1300 herneysen, from Old French harneschier to arm or equip, from the noun in Old French.

harp n. Probably before 1200 harpe, found in Old English (about 725) hearpe; cognate with Old Saxon harpa instrument of torture, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch harpe harp (modern Dutch harp), Old High German harpha harp (modern German Harfe), and Old Icelandic harpa harp, from Proto-Germanic Harpōn-*. —v. Probably before 1200 harpian; found in Old English hearpiān to play a harp; possibly, in part, from Old French harper, but immediately from Germanic; compare Middle and modern Dutch harpen, Middle High German harpfen (modern German harfen). The later sense of to talk too much about, as in harp on, is first recorded in 1562. —harp-sichord n. 1611, alteration of obsolete French harpechorde (harpe harp + -chorde, from Latin chorda string; see CORD).

harpoon n. 1625 harpon barbed dart or spear, and implied in harponier (1613); borrowed from French harpon (also harpin boat hook), from Old French harpon cramp iron or clamp, from harper to grapple, grasp, possibly from a Germanic source (compare Icelandic harpa to press something together, pinch), or from Latin harpa-hook, in harpagōnem grappling hook, from Greek harpagōn*, related to harpē sickle; for suffix see -oon. The harpoon traditionally used in whaling, replaced harping iron (1442). —v. 1774; from the noun.

Harpy n. About 1375 Arpie, borrowed from Latin Harpyia, from Greek Hárpyia, pl., snatchers, probably related to harpazein to snatch. The meaning of a rapacious, grasping person, spelled arpie, is first recorded about 1400.

harquebus n. 1532, arkbusse, borrowed from Middle French harquebuse, arquebuse, from Italian archibuso, arcobuso, and from Middle Dutch hakebus (hake hook + bus gun, from Late Latin buxis container, BOX¹); so called from the shape of its stock and the hook to fasten it to a support.

harrier n. 1542, developed from hayrer a small hunting dog (1408, also eier about 1410); possibly borrowed from Middle French errier wanderer.

harrow n. About 1300 harewe; later harow (1377–78); developed from Old English hearwa*. —v. Before 1325 harven, from the noun.

The participial adjective harrowing extremely distressing or painful, is first recorded in 1810, from a now archaic sense of wound, pain, distress, found in 1602.

harry v. Probably before 1200 herigan, herien, developed from Old English (about 893) hergian; cognate with Old Frisian urheria lay waste, ravage, plunder, Old Saxon and Old High German heriōn, Middle High German hergen, hern destroy by war (modern German verheeren lay waste, devastate), and Old Icelandic herja lay waste, plunder; from Proto-Germanic Harjaz* an armed force.

harsh adj. 1533 harrish bitter or astringent, probably variant of earlier harske rough, coarse, sour (implied in harskly, about 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish and Norwegian harsk rancid or rank, older Swedish hårsk, now hårskén; cognate with Middle Low German and modern German harsch harsh, related to harst a rake).

hart n. Before 1250 hert, later hart (1410); developed from Old English heort, heort (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hert stag, deer, Old Saxon hirot, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hart, Old High German hiruz, hirz (modern German Hirsch), and Old Icelandic hjort (Norwegian, Swedish and Danish hjort), from Proto-Germanic Herut-*.

hartebeest n. 1786, borrowed from Afrikaans hartebeest deer or hart (now harthees), from Dutch hartebeest, variant of hertebeest (hert hart + beest beast, from Middle Dutch beest).

harum-scarum adv. 1674–91, probably compounded from earlier hare harry, worry, harass + scare, with -um, a reduced form of them. —adj. 1751, from the adverb. —n. 1784, from the adjective.

harvest n. Before 1250 hervest time for reaping and gathering in crops; earlier herfest season of autumn (1105); developed from Old English herfest autumn (probably about 750); cognate with Old Frisian herfst autumn, Old Saxon hervist, Middle Low German hervest, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch herfst, Old High German herbist (modern German Herbst), and Old Icelandic haust, probably from Proto-Germanic Harbitás*. —v. About 1400 hervesten; from the noun.

hash¹ n. 1662–63, mixture of cooked meat, potatoes, etc., from the verb. Hash is a replacement of earlier hache (about 1330), also hachey, hachy; borrowed perhaps from Old French haché, from hacher to hack. —v. 1657, borrowed from French hacher to hack, chop, from Old French hache axe.

hash² n. 1959, American English; shortened form of hashish.

hashish n. 1598, borrowed from Arabic hashish powdered hemp (literally, dry herb), from hashsha it became dry, it dried up; see ASSASSIN.

hasp n. Before 1200 hespe fastening for a door, window, trunk, etc.; later haspe (probably before 1300); developed by alteration in a metathesis of s and p from Old English hæpse (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German hespe, haspe hasp or hinge, Middle Dutch hespe, Old High German haspa (modern German Haspe), and Old Icelandic hespa.

hassle n. 1945, American English, perhaps from Southern dialect hassle to pant, breathe noisily (1928); of unknown origin. —v. 1951, from the noun.

hassock n. 1440 hassok clump of coarse grass, earlier, possibly meaning mound or hillock, in the place name Hassok (about 1150); developed from Old English (986) hassuc clump of grass, coarse grass; of uncertain origin. The meaning of thick cushion (often stuffed with straw), is first recorded in 1516.

haste n. Probably about 1225 haste hurry or speed; borrowed from Old French haste, from Frankish (compare adjectives in Old High German heist, heisti vehement, violent, which is cognate with Old Frisian hāste violent, Old English hæste violent, vehement, impetuous, and the noun hæst violence, neither of which survived into Middle English); also related to Gothic haifsts strife, from Proto-Germanic Haifstiz*. —hasten v. 1565–73, formed from English haste + *-en*¹. —hasty adj. Probably about 1280 hasti; formed from Middle English haste, n. + -i-y¹; and borrowed from Old French hasti, hastif, from Old French haste haste + -if -ive. The native English form replaced hastif by the 1500's.

hat n. Old English (before 800) hæt hat or head covering; cognate with Frisian hat, hatt hat or hood, Old Icelandic hattir, hōtr cowl, from Proto-Germanic Hattuz* hood or cowl (earlier Hādunús*); see HOOD¹. —v. Before 1425, provide with a hat, from the noun.

hatch¹ v. develop from eggs. Before 1250 hachen, of uncertain origin (developed probably from Old English hæccan*, hec-can*); compare Middle High German and modern German hecken to hatch or breed, also Swedish håcka, Danish hække to hatch. —hatchery n. 1880, formed from English *hatch*¹, v. + -ery.

hatch² n. opening. About 1250 hacche; later hatche half door, small door, gate, wicket; developed from Old English (1015) hæc (genitive hæcce); cognate with Middle Low German heck fence, Middle Dutch hecke hatch, grating (modern Dutch hek fence), from Proto-Germanic Hak-. The meaning of plank for a ship's deck, from which the sense of opening in a ship's deck developed, is first recorded in Anglo-Latin in 1233–34, and in Middle English hacchenayl (1294–96).

hatch³ v. draw fine parallel lines on. 1389, implied in hachying drawing of parallel lines for ornament; borrowed from Old French hacher chop or hatch, from hache axe.

hatchet n. 1307 hachet; earlier as a surname (1166); borrowed from Old French hachette hatchet, diminutive of hache axe, possibly from Frankish hāppja* (compare Old High German hāppa sickle, scythe) from Proto-Germanic Hæbijō*; for suffix see -ET.

hate v. About 1175 haten, developed from Old English hatian (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian hatia to hate, Old Saxon haton, Dutch haten, Old High German hazzōn (modern German hassen), Old Icelandic hata, and Gothic hatjan, hatan, from Proto-Germanic Hatōjanan*. —n. About 1175 hate, developed with a by influence of hate, v., from Old English hete hatred, spite (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hat hatred, Old Saxon heti, Middle Dutch hate (modern Dutch haat), Old High German haz (modern German Hass), Old Icelandic hatr, and Gothic hatis hate or anger, from Proto-Germanic Hatis-*. —hateful adj. About 1380; formed from English hate, n. + -ful. —hatred n. Before 1200 hatrede, from hate, n. + -rede, from Old English ræden state or condition.

haughty adj. 1530 hawty too proud; earlier hawte, haute, noble, excellent (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French haut high, from Latin altus (with initial h- by influence of Frankish hōh; see OLD).

The form haute changed in the late 1500's to haught after words like caught, and assumed the suffix -y on the model of might, mighty.

haul v. About 1300 hauen to pull or drag, transport, carry, variant of halen (probably before 1200); see HALE² drag. The spelling with u represents a development of Middle English pronunciation that departed from halen before the 1500's and is paralleled in crawl. —n. 1670, act of hauling; from the verb. The figurative sense of something gathered or gained, is first recorded in 1776.

haunch n. Before 1250 haunche; earlier hanche (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French hanche, from Frankish hanka*; cognate with Middle Dutch hanke, henke hip, Middle High German hanke hip, shank, and Old High German hinkan to limp, from Proto-Germanic Hink-/Hank-*.

haunt v. Probably about 1200 hanten practice habitually; later haunten (before 1250), and in the sense of visit frequently (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French hanter to frequent, resort to, be familiar with (originally, of a spirit coming back to the house he had lived in); probably from Old Icelandic heimta bring home, from Proto-Germanic Haimat-janan*, from Haimaz* HOME. —n. Often, haunts. Probably before 1300, developed from the verb, and as a borrowing from Old French hant frequentation, intimacy, acquaintance.

have v. 1100 haven, developed from Old English habban to own, possess (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hebbā to have, Old Saxon hebbjan, Middle Low German hebben, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hebben, Old High German habēn (modern German haben), Old Icelandic hafa, and Gothic haban, from Proto-Germanic Haf-* (unrelated to Latin habere, in spite of the resemblance in form and sense). In Old English, this verb had in all parts of the present tense, except the second person singular hafast, hæfst, and the third person singular hafath, hæfth. In Middle English the forms of Old English in f gradually lost the medial consonant becoming hast, hath, and thence has, had and the Old English -bb- was supplanted by -v- (have), by gradual levelling, on analogy with other parts of the verb. The past participle had developed from Old English gehæfd.

haven n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English hæfen (1031); borrowed from Old Icelandic hǫfn, from Proto-Germanic Hafnaz*. The figurative sense of refuge is first recorded about 1200.

havoc n. 1419 havokey, borrowed from Anglo-French havok (in crier havok cry havoc, as a signal to soldiers to seize plunder), from Old French havot plundering or devastation, from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch havot grain measure, and perhaps plunder; also Old High German heffen to raise). The general sense of devastation, is first recorded in 1480.

haw n. About 1250 hawe, developed from Old English (before 1000) haga fruit of the hawthorn bush, hagathorn HAWTHORN; probably the same word as Old English haga enclosure, HEDGE.

hawk¹ n. bird. Probably before 1200 havek; later hawk (probably before 1300); developed from Old English hafoc (West Saxon); earlier heafuc (before 830), and -habuc, -hebec (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian havek hawk, Old Saxon habuc, Middle Dutch havic, havec (modern Dutch havik), Old High German habuh, Middle High German habech (modern German Habicht), Old Icelandic haukr (Norwegian hawk, Swedish höke, and Danish høg), from Proto-Germanic habukaz*.

hawk² v. sell. 1390, implied in hawking peddling, especially from house to house, and in hawker street peddler (1409); borrowed from Middle Low German höker, from höken to peddle, carry on the back, squat; cognate with Middle Dutch hoken, hoecken to peddle, carry on the back, squat, Middle High German hüchen to squat, crouch (modern German hocken), and Old Icelandic hūka to crouch, hoka, hokra to crawl, from Proto-Germanic Hūk-*.

hawk³ v. clear the throat noisily. 1581, possibly imitative of the sound. —n. 1604, from the verb.

hawse n. Old English hals, heals prows of a ship, neck; cognate with Old Icelandic hals hawse, (literally, neck). The form hawse is a phonetic respelling of the late 1500's, paralleling crawl, small; see also HAUL.

hawser n. 1294 ausor, large rope or cable. 1295 haucel; borrowed from Anglo-French haucier, from Old French haucier to hoist or raise; found also in Old French halcier, from Vulgar Latin altiāre*, alteration of Late Latin altāre make high, from altus high. English hawser is mistakenly associated with hawse and the hauling of boats, and thereby with the suffix *-er*¹.

hawthorn n. Probably about 1300 hawethorn; earlier, in the place name Hauthorn (about 1220); developed from Old English hagathorn (about 950), hæguthorn (about 700), a Germanic compound found in Old Dutch haginthorn, Middle hay n. Before 1200 hei; later hai (before 1325); developed from Old English, Anglian hēg grass cut or mown for fodder (before 830); later, West Saxon hieg, hig; cognate with Old Frisian hā, hē hay, Old Saxon hōi, Middle Dutch hoy (modern Dutch hooi), Old High German hewi (modern German Heu), Old Icelandic hey (Norwegian høy, høye, Danish hø, Swedish hø), and Gothic hawi, from Proto-Germanic Haujan*, adjective used as a noun, meaning that which can be mowed, from Hauw*.

Dutch hagedorn (modern Dutch haagdoorn), Middle High German hagendorn, hagedorn, and Old Icelandic hagthorn (Swedish hagtorn).

haywire adj. 1905, American English, soft wire for binding bales of hay. Reference to the springy and uncontrollable nature of haywire, was first recorded in go haywire (1929).

hazard n. About 1300 hasard game of chance played with dice; earlier as a surname Hasard (1167); borrowed from Old French hasard, possibly through Spanish azar an unfortunate card or throw at dice, from Arabic az-zahr the die (az- a form of the definite article al- by assimilation to the z of the following word). The meaning of chance of loss or harm, risk, is first recorded in 1548. —v. 1530, take a risk, venture, from the noun. —hazardous adj. 1580, venturesome; later, risky, perilous (1618); borrowed from Middle French hasardeux, from Old French hasard hazard.

haze¹ n. mist, smoke. 1706, probably a back formation from hazy misty; with antecedents found also in earlier English dialect haze to drizzle, be foggy (1674–91). The sense of slight confusion, vagueness, is first recorded before 1797. —hazy adj. 1625 hawsey, (also heysey, haizy, hazy); of uncertain origin.

haze² v. 1850, American English, harass with ridiculous tasks; extended use of an earlier nautical sense of punish by keeping at unpleasant and unnecessary hard work (1840); perhaps developed from earlier haze, hawze terrify, frighten, confound (1678); borrowed from Middle French haser irritate, annoy; of uncertain origin.

hazel n. Old English hæsl (about 700); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch hasel hazel (modern Dutch hazelaar), Old High German hasal (modern German Hasel), and Old Icelandic hasl (Norwegian, Danish, and Swedish hassel), from Proto-Germanic Hasalaz*.

he pron. Old English (about 725) hē, masculine singular pronoun of the third person representing original His*, Hiz of the demonstrative Proto-Germanic base Hi-* this, which supplied the pronoun forms him, his, her. Though Old English had both the masculine and feminine forms, during the early Middle English period the feminine forms (hāo, hīo) of he began to fall into disuse and were replaced in part by forms from other stems (see SHE, THEY). The h, aspirate, is suppressed in British English after accented syllables and this process led to it for original hit.

Old English hē is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hē, hī he, Middle Dutch hi (modern Dutch hij), Old High German hē (rare), Old Icelandic hann he, and Gothic himma (dative case), hina (accusative case) this. —n. a male. Old English (about 950) hē, from the pronoun.

head n. About 1150 hed; earlier hevod (1123); developed from Old English hēafod top of the body (about 725); chief person, leader, ruler (about 897); cognate with Old Frisian hāved, hāfd head, chief, Old Saxon hōbid, Middle Dutch hōvet (modern Dutch hoofd), Old High German houbit (modern German Haupt), Old Icelandic hofudh, and Gothic haubith. English head and German Haupt imply an original form in -au- represented by Proto-Germanic Hauþuðan*. The spelling head does not appear in the record of English before 1420, and represents an original long vowel. —adj. Probably before 1200 heved and heaved; later hed (before 1393); from the noun. —v. About 1230 heden provide with a head; later heafden; from the noun. The meanings of be at the head, lead (probably about 1200) and direct the head, face (probably before 1200), developed from Old English hēdan in the 1600's. —headache n. (about 1000, in Old English) —headlong adv. (before 1382); adj. (about 1550) —headquarters n. (1647) —headstrong adj. (before 1398) —headway n. (about 1300, main road; 1748, motion forward) —heady adj. (before 1382) heal v. Probably before 1200 healen, helen; developed from Old English hēlan make whole, sound, and well (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian hēla to heal, Old Saxon hēlian, modern Dutch heelen, Old High German heilan (modern German heilen), Old Icelandic heila, and Gothic hailjan; from Proto-Germanic Hailaz*, also the source of Old English hāl healthy, whole. —health n. Probably before 1200 helthe; later health (probably before 1425); developed from Old English (about 1000) hēlth a being whole, sound, or well, from hāl whole; for suffix see -TH. —healthy adj. 1552; formed from English health + *-y*¹.

—head suffix. See -HOOD.

heap n. Probably before 1200 hep; developed from Old English (about 725) hēap pile, great number, multitude; cognate with Old Frisian hāp heap, Old Saxon hōp, modern Dutch hoop, Old and Middle High German houf, and Old Icelandic hōpr; from Proto-Germanic Hauptaz*, related to Old English hēah HIGH. —v. Probably before 1200 heapen; later hepen (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 900) hēapian form into a heap; corresponding to Old High German houfōn to heap.

hear v. 1127 heren; developed from Old English, Anglian hēran (before 800); later West Saxon hieran, hīran; cognate with Old Frisian hēra, hōra hear, Old Saxon hōrian, modern Dutch horen, Old High German hōran (modern German hören), Old Icelandic heyra, and Gothic hausjan; from Proto-Germanic Hauz-janan*. The spelling hear (differentiated from here, etc.) began to appear occasionally even before 1200, but was not fully established until after the mid-1500's. —hearer n. (1340) —hearsay n. (probably 1438)

hearken or harken v. Probably before 1200 hercnien, hercnen, harcnen; developed from Old English (about 1000) heorcnian, itself a modification of he(o)rcian* HARK; for suffix see *-EN*¹.

hearse n. Probably before 1300 hers flat framework somewhat like a harrow for candles and decorations, hung or placed over a coffin; borrowed from Old French herce harrow, and from Medieval Latin hercia, from Latin hirpicem (nominative hirpex, in Classical Latin irpex) harrow, from Oscan hirpus wolf, in allusion to the resemblance of a harrow's teeth to those of a wolf. The meaning of a vehicle for carrying a body, is first recorded in 1650. Development of the spelling hearse parallels that of HEART.

heart n. Probably about 1175 herte, developed from Old English (about 725) heorte; cognate with Old Frisian herte, hirte heart, Old Saxon herta, Middle Dutch herte, harte (modern Dutch hart), Old High German herza (modern German Herz), Old Icelandic hjarta (Swedish hjärta, Danish and Norwegian hjerter), and Gothic hairtō; from Proto-Germanic Hertan-*. The spelling in -ea- developed in the 1500's by analogy of pronunciation with stream, heat, etc. (replacing the earlier normal development hart), but while the pronunciation changed, the spelling ea was retained. —heartache n. (about 1000, in Old English) —heartburn n. (about 1250) —hearten v. 1526, formed from English heart + *-en*¹. —heartless adj. (before 1382) —heartsick adj. (about 1390) —hearty adj. Before 1375 herty courageous or zealous; formed from hert + *-y*¹.

hearth n. About 1350 herthe; earlier, in huerthselver tax on households, literally, hearth silver (1189); developed from Old English (about 725) heorth; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon herth hearth, Middle Dutch hert (modern Dutch haard), and Old High German herd (modern German Herd), from West Germanic Herthaz*. For the spelling in -ea- see HEART.

heat n. Probably about 1175 hete; developed from Old English (about 725) hætu, hæto; cognate with Old Frisian hēte heat, Middle Dutch hēte, heete, and Old High German heizi, derived from Proto-Germanic Haitin-, formed from Haitaz, the source of Old English hāt HOT. —v. Probably before 1200 heaten make hot, inflame, inspire; developed from Old English (about 700) hētan; cognate with German and Old High German heizen to heat, and Old Icelandic heita; from Proto-Germanic Haitijanan*.

heath n. About 1330 heth open wasteland, especially such land with heather growing on it; developed from both Old English hæth tract of wasteland; earlier, heather (about 700); and from Old Icelandic heidhr field. Old English hæth is cognate with Old Saxon hētha wasteland, heather, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch heide, Middle Low German heed heather, heie heath, Middle High German heide wasteland, heather (modern German Heide), and Gothic haiþi, from Proto-Germanic Haiþijō*.

heathen adj. Before 1121 hethen not Christian or Jewish, pagan; developed from Old English (about 725) hæthen and Old Icelandic heidhinn. The Old English form is cognate with Old Frisian hēthen heathen, Old Saxon hēthin, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch heiden, Old High German heidan, adj., heidano, n. (modern German Heide, masculine, Heidin, feminine), and Gothic haiþnō Gentile or heathen woman. Historically the word has been assumed to come from Gothic as used by Ulfilas, Bishop of the Goths and translator of the Bible into Gothic, and to be a derivative of Gothic haiþi dwelling on the heath (where paganism was still practiced), but no record of this meaning exists. —n. 1128 hethen, Old English (about 725) hæthen; from the adjective.

heather n. 1725, in heather-bell, spelling alteration (influenced by heath) of earlier hathir (1335) and in the place name Faghadre (1600–35); found in Old English hæddre*.

heave v. Probably before 1200 heven; developed from Old English hebban (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon hebbian to raise, lift, Dutch heffen, Old High German heffen (modern German heben), Old Icelandic hefja, and Gothic haffan; from Proto-Germanic Haffanan*. The spelling with -ea- is a development of the 1500's. —n. Before 1571, from the verb.

heaven n. About 1150 heven; developed from Old English (about 1000) heofon the place where God dwells; earlier, the sky, firmament (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon heban sky, heaven, Middle Low German heven sky, Old Icelandic himinn sky, heaven, Gothic himins, and, perhaps by dissimilation, with an -l suffix, Old Frisian himel, himul sky, heaven, Old Saxon himil, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hemel, and Old High German himil (modern German Himmel), from Proto-Germanic Hemina-*.

heavy adj. 1124 hevi weighty, grave; developed from Old English hefig (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon hebig heavy, Middle Dutch hevich (modern Dutch hevig violent, heavy), Old High German hebig heavy, and Old Icelandic hofugr; derived from Proto-Germanic Habizās* from Haffanan*, and thereby related to Old English hebban to HEAVE; for suffix see *-y*¹. —n. About 1250 hevie something heavy, heaviness; from the adjective. The sense of greater atomic weight as in heavy hydrogen, is first recorded in 1933, and that of villain in theatrical usage in 1880.

Hebrew adj. About 1250 Ebriu; later Hebru (before 1325); borrowed from Old French Ebreu, Ebrieu, learned borrowing from Latin Hebraeus, from Greek Hebraios, from Aramaic 'ebhrāi, corresponding to Hebrew 'ibhrī an Israelite, (literally, one from the other side, in reference to the river Euphrates, from 'ebher region on the other or opposite side). —n. Probably before 1200 Ebrew the Hebrew language; later Hebrew a Jew of Biblical times, an Israelite (before 1382); borrowed from Old French Ebreu, Hebrieu, from Latin Hebraeus, adj. During the Middle Ages, it was regarded as Classical Latin Hebraeus, thereby establishing the spelling with H-. —Hebraic adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French hebraïque, and directly from Late Latin Hebraicus from Greek Hebraikós, from Hebrai-, found in Hebraios; HEBREW; for suffix see -IC.

heckle v. 1808, perhaps earlier noun (1788); both verb and noun being respectively transferred uses of hekelen to comb (flax or hemp) with a hackle (1325), and hekele a comb for flax or hemp, hackle (before 1425); borrowed from Middle Dutch hekelen comb flax or hemp with a hackle; also, to prick or irritate; and Middle Dutch hekele hackle, from Proto-Germanic Hakilō*. —heckler n. 1885, developing parallel to heckle, v., from the sense of one who dresses flax or hemp (1440).

hectare n. 1810, borrowing of French hectare, formed from Greek hekatón HUNDRED + French are ARE² measure.

hectic adj. Before 1398 etik feverish, consumptive; borrowed from Old French etique, from Late Latin hecticus, from Greek hektikós continuous, habitual, consumptive (of a disease), from héxis habit, from échein (earlier stem heche-*) have, hold, continue; for suffix see -IC. The spelling with h- (influenced by Late Latin hecticus) dates from the 1500's. The sense of feverishly exciting or full of disorganized activity, is first recorded in 1904.

hecto- a combining form meaning a hundred, as in hectoliter, hectometer. Borrowed from French hecto-, alteration of Greek hekatón a HUNDRED.

hector v. 1660 Hector to act in a bragging, bullying manner; also, intimidate by bluster, bully (1664 hector); from Hector, n. bragging, bullying person (1655). The name was originally applied to gangs of disorderly young men on the streets of London in the mid-1600's; in allusion to Hector (Greek Héktōr), Trojan hero in the Iliad, who behaved in a belligerent way challenging any Greek to combat.

hedge n. About 1250 hegge, earlier in the surname Hegge (1188); developed from Old English (785) hecg; cognate with Middle Dutch hegge hedge (modern Dutch heg), Old High German heggia, heckia, Middle High German hegge, hecke (modern German Hecke), and Old Icelandic hegg a type of cherry tree. From Proto-Germanic Hazjō*, and related to Old English haga enclosure, hedge, HAW. —v. About 1384, from the noun. The sense of dodge or evade, is first recorded in 1598, and insure oneself against loss, as on a bet, in 1672.

The spelling hedge was formed in the 1500's by analogy with edge, bridge, etc. —hedghehog n. (about 1450) —hedgerow n. (940, Old English heggeræw) hedonism n. 1856, probably formed from Greek hēdonē pleasure (related to hēdys SWEET) + English -ism; but perhaps also influenced by earlier borrowing from Greek in English hedonic of or having to do with the Cyrenaic school of philosophy that deals with the ethics of pleasure (1656). —hedonist n. 1822, formed in English from from Greek hēdonē pleasure + English -ist, but see HEDONISM for earlier influence in English.

heed v. Probably before 1200 heden; found in Old English hēdan to take care, attend (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hōda protect, guard, tend, Old Saxon hōdian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hoeden, Old High German huotan (modern German hüten), from West Germanic hōd-jan*. These forms are derivatives of the source of Old Frisian hōde, hūde protection, guard, Old High German huota (modern German Hut care, keeping, protection), and probably Old English hōd HOOD¹. —n. Probably before 1300 hede, from the verb.

heehaw n. 1815, probably imitative of the sound made by a donkey; later, a loud laugh (1843); v. 1821, perhaps from the noun, or formed independently.

heel¹ n. back part of the foot. Probably before 1200 hele, developed from Old English (about 800) hēla; cognate with Old Frisian hēla heel, Middle Dutch hiele (modern Dutch hiel), and Old Icelandic hæll; related to Old English hōh heel, HOCK. —v. 1605, from the noun. The meaning of follow at the heels of, follow closely, is first recorded about 1889. —heeled adj. 1880, American English, provided with money (usually in well-heeled); developed from furnished with a gun, armed (1866), from furnished with a heel or heel-like projection (1562); formed from English heel, n. + -ed².

heel² v. lean. About 1575, alteration of hield (1559), in Middle English helden, halden fall, bend, lean (probably before 1200); developed from Old English hyldan incline (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon heldian to incline, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch helden (modern Dutch hellen), Old High German hald inclined, helden to bow (modern German Halde slope), and Old Icelandic hallr inclined, from Proto-Germanic Helthijanan*. The form heel probably arose from the misinterpretation of -d in hield as a past tense suffix. —n. 1760, from the verb.

heel³ n. contemptible person. 1914, American English (underworld slang), an incompetent or worthless criminal (probably from *heel*¹ person that is the lowest in position).

heft n. About 1445, developed from heave, v., apparently on the analogy of pairs such as weave, weft, thieve, theft, etc., and probably further influenced by heft, obsolete variant of heaved, past participle. —v. Before 1661; from the noun. —hefty adj. 1867, formed from English heft, n. + -y¹.

hegemony n. 1567, borrowed from Greek hēgemoniā leadership, from hēgēmōn leader, from hēgēsthai to lead; for suffix see -Y². —hegemonism n. 1965, variant of hegemony in the sense of a policy of political domination, patterned on imperialism; for suffix see -ISM.

hegira n. 1757, transferred sense of earlier Hegira the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina in 622 (1590); borrowed from Medieval Latin hegira.

heifer n. Probably about 1200 heifre, developed from Old English hēahfore (about 900); of uncertain origin.

height n. About 1230 hiht the quality of being high; later heght, hight (before 1325); developed from Old English hiehthu, hēhthu highest part or point, summit (before 900); cognate with Middle Dutch hogede, hoochte height (modern Dutch hoogte), Middle Low German hogede, Old High German hōhida, Old Icelandic hædh, and Gothic hauhitha; derived from hauh- high, and the root of Old English hēah HIGH + -itha -TH. The form of the suffix has varied from height to heighth, since the 1200's, but by analogy with words such as drought, it has stabilized, dropping the terminal -h in most use since the late 1800's. The form of the vowel comes directly from the Old English, Anglian hēhthu; for the spelling with -gh- see FIGHT. —heighten v. About 1450 heightenen to honor or raise to high position; formed from English height + -en¹ + -en².

heinous adj. About 1385 heynous, borrowed from Old French haineus, from haine hatred, from hair to hate, from Frankish (compare Old Saxon hatōn to HATE); for suffix see -OUS.

heir n. Probably about 1225 heir, aire; borrowed through Anglo-French heir, aire, from Old French hoir, from Latin hērēs (genitive hērēdis) heir, heirress. —heirress n. 1659, formed from English heir + -ess, possibly by influence of Middle French hoirresse. —heirloom n. 1424–25 heyrlome; earlier ayre lome (1421); formed from heir, aire + loom implement or tool.

heist v. 1927, implied in heister shoplifter or thief, American English slang; probably a spelling alteration of hoist to lift or shoplift (in older British slang, to lift another on one's back to help him break in). The alteration in spelling may have been from a dialectal pronunciation. —n. 1930, American English slang; from the verb.

heli⁻¹ a form of helio- before vowels, as in helianthus (New Latin, sunflower).

heli⁻² a combining form abstracted from helicopter, as in heli-borne = borne or carried by helicopter (1966), heliport = airport for helicopters (1948).

helical adj. See HELIX.

helicopter n. 1887, borrowed from French hélicoptère (from Greek hélīx, genitive hélīkos spiral + pterón wing).

helio- a combining form meaning sun, as in heliocentric = having or representing the sun as its center. Borrowed from Greek hēlio-, combining form of hēlios sun.

heliotrope n. Before 1626 heliotrope, borrowed from French héliotrope, from Latin; earlier in English (about 1000 to 1600), applied to the sunflower and marigold, also borrowed from Latin hēliotropium, from Greek hēliotropion (hēlios sun + trópos turn).

helium n. 1868, New Latin; formed from Greek hēlios sun + New Latin -ium. Reference to the sun comes from observation of helium in the solar spectrum.

helix n. 1563, borrowing of Latin helix spiral, from Greek hélīx (genitive hélīkos), related to eileîn to turn, twist, roll, eilýein enfold. —helical adj. spiral. 1591 (earlier heliacall 1545), formed in English from helic-, stem of Latin helix + English suffix -al.

hell n. Before 1121 helle; found in Old English (about 725) hel, helle nether world of the dead, infernal regions, Hades; possibly borrowed, in part, from Old Icelandic Hel goddess of death and the underworld, as a transfer of a pagan concept to Christian theology and its vocabulary. Germanic cognates exist in Old Frisian helle, hille hell, Old Saxon hellja, Middle Dutch helle (modern Dutch hel), Old High German hella (modern German Hölle), and Gothic halja; from Proto-Germanic Halja* one who covers up or hides something.

hellebore n. 1373 elebyr, elebur; borrowed from Old French ellebre, ellebore, from Latin; also Middle English (about 1150) elleborum; borrowed directly from Latin elleborus, helleborus, from Greek ellēboros, hellēboros, of uncertain origin.

Hellenic adj. 1644, of the Greeks or Greece; borrowed from Greek Hellēnikós, from Hellēn a Greek; for suffix see -IC.

—Hellenism n. 1609, an idiom or expression peculiar to Greek; possibly borrowed from French hellénisme, and directly from Greek Hellēnismós imitation of the Greeks, from Hellēnizein make Greek, speak Greek, from Hellēn a Greek. The meaning of the culture and ideals of ancient Greece, is first recorded in 1865. —Hellenistic adj. 1706, of or pertaining to Greece or the Greek language or art, after Alexander; formed from English Hellenist one who affected Greek ways or language + -ic.

hellion n. 1846, American English; probably an alteration (by association with hell) of earlier Scottish and Northern English dialect hallion worthless fellow or scamp (1786); of uncertain origin.

hello interj. 1883, alteration of earlier hallo (1840), itself an alteration of holla, hollo a shout to attract attention (1588), a native English formation, perhaps from the earlier English exclamation holla! stop! cease!

helm n. Before 1338 helme, found in Old English (before 830) helma; cognate with Old High German helmo tiller, and Middle High German helm, halm, halme handle (modern German Helm tiller, axe handle), from Proto-Germanic Helman-/Halman*-. The sense of position of guidance or control, is recorded in Old English about 888 and does not appear again before 1529. —v. steer. 1603, from the noun. —helmsman n. 1622, formed from English helm + man.

helmet n. About 1450 helmet, helmete; borrowed from Middle French helmet, diminutive of helme helmet, from Frankish (compare Old High German helm helmet, modern German Helm, Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch helm, Old Icelandic hjalmr, and Gothic hilms), from Proto-Germanic Helmaz*, Old English helm never became an active term in the standard vocabulary of English.

helminth n. 1852, borrowed, probably through French helminthe, from Greek hélmins (genitive hélminthos) worm, especially an intestinal worm; related to eulē worm, and eileîn to turn, twist.

helot n. 1579, borrowed from Greek Hellōtes, plural of Hellōs, popularly associated with Hēlos, a Laconian town whose inhabitants were enslaved by Sparta, but perhaps related to Greek halōnai be captured, by popular etymology.

help v. Before 1200 helpen, found in Old English (about 725) helpan; cognate with Old Frisian helpa to help, Old Saxon helpan, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch helpen, Old High German helfan (modern German helfen), Old Icelandic hjálpa, and Gothic hilpan, from Proto-Germanic Helpanan*. —n. Old English help, helpe (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian helpe help, Old Saxon helpa, Middle Dutch and Middle Low German helpe, Old High German helfa, hilfa (modern German Hilfe), and Old Icelandic hjalp; from the stem of Old English helpan to help. —helper n. About 1340, formed from Middle English helpen + -er¹.

helter-skelter adv. 1593, apparently an expression imitative of the hurried clatter of running feet. It resembles hurry-scurry in form, and while helter has no explanation other than its suggestive sound and rhyme with skelter, the final element is probably based on skelte to hasten, scatter hurriedly. The adjective meaning of disorderly or confused, is first recorded in 1785; the noun, about 1713.

helve n. Probably about 1200 helfe, handle of an ax, hammer, etc.; developed from Old English helfe, hielfe (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon helvi helve, Middle Dutch helf, and Old High German halb; related to HALTER.

hem¹ n. edge. Old English hem a border (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian hemma to hinder, modern German hemmen, and Old Icelandic hemja hem in, curb, from Proto-Germanic Hamjanan*. —v. About 1340, implied in hemming; from the noun. The phrase hem in shut in or confine, is first recorded in 1538.

hem² interj. a sound like clearing the throat. 1526, probably from the verb. —v. Before 1470, implied in hemyng, probably imitative of the sound of clearing the throat. The expression hem and haw to hesitate, is first recorded in 1786 (haw, denoting hesitation, is first recorded in 1632).

hem- a form of hema- and hemo- before vowels, as in hemagglutination.

hema- a form of hemo-, as in hemachrome.

hematite n. Before 1398 emachite, later haematites (1543); borrowed probably from Old French hematite, from Latin haematitēs, from Greek haimatītēs bloodlike, from haīma (genitive haīmatos) blood.

hemato- (also hemat- before vowels), a combining form meaning blood, as in hematology = study of blood. Borrowed from Greek haimato-, combining form from haīma (genitive haīmatos) blood.

hemi- a prefix meaning half, as in hemisphere. Borrowed from Greek hēmi-; cognate with Latin sēmi- SEMI-.

hemipterous adj. 1816, possibly formed in English from French hémiptère, or directly from New Latin Hemiptera order of insects (from Greek hēmi- half + pterón wing) + English suffix -ous; so called with reference to the insects' wing structure.

hemisphere n. About 1385 hemysperie; later re-formed as hemispeire, emispeire, hemisphere (1532), by influence of Middle French emispeire, emisphere; all forms ultimately borrowed from Latin hēmīsp̄raerium, from Greek hēmīsp̄rairion (hēmi- half + sphaira SPHERE). —hemispheric adj. 1585, formed from English hemisphere + -ic.

hemistich n. 1575, borrowed possibly through Middle French hémistiche, from Latin hēmistichium, from Greek hēmīstichion (hēmi- half + stichos row, line of verse).

hemlock n. Before 1325 hemeloc; earlier in the place name Humbelochlaile (before 1200); developed from Old English hemlic (about 1000); earlier hymlice, hymblice (about 700); of uncertain origin.

hemo- a combining form meaning blood, as in hemoglobin = globin (globulin or protein) of the blood, hemorrhage = discharge or flow of blood. Borrowed possibly through Old French hemo-, and Latin haemo- from Greek haimo-, from haīma blood.

hemoglobin n. 1862, shortened form of earlier hematoglobulin (1845), from hemato- + globulin a protein, from Latin globulus GLOBULE + English -in ².

hemophilia n. 1854, New Latin haemophilia, from Greek haīma blood + philā affection (medically, a tendency), from philein to love, related to philos loving; see PHILO-. —hemophilic adj. 1896, formed from hemophilia + -ac, adjective suffix, from Greek -akós. —n. 1897, from the adjective. Both the adjective and noun in English may have been modeled on the earlier French hémophilique, adj. (1880), n. (1884).

hemorrhage n. Probably before 1425 emorogie; later re-formed as hemorrhage (1671), borrowed through French hémorrhagie; both the Middle English and French forms borrowed from Latin haemorrhagia, from Greek haimorrhagīa (haīma blood; see HEMO- + rhagē a breaking, from rhēgnynai to break, burst).

hemorrhoids n.pl. Before 1398 emeroides, borrowed from Old French emorroides, hemorroides, learned borrowing from Latin haemorrhoidae, from Greek haimorrhoidēs, plural of haimorrhōis, (haīma blood, + rhōos a stream, a flowing, from rhein to flow).

hemp n. About 1300 hemp, developed from Old English (before 1000) haenep; cognate with Old Saxon hanap hemp, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hennep, Old High German hanaf (modern German Hanf), and Old Icelandic hamp; all probably borrowed very early from the same source as Greek kánnabis hemp.

hen n. Old English hen (about 950); earlier, in edisc-hen quail (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian henn hen, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch henne (modern Dutch hen), and Old High German henna (modern German Henne), related to Old English hana rooster (modern German Hahn). Old English hen(n), and its Germanic cognates, are from Proto-West-Germanic Han(e)nī*.

hence adv. Probably about 1225 hennes away from here, away; formed from henne away, hence + -s adverb ending; developed from Old English heonan; cognate with Old Saxon hinan, hinana from here, away, Middle Dutch henen, hin (modern Dutch heen), Old High German hinnan, hinana, hina (modern German hinnen, hin), from Proto-West-Germanic Hin-*. Related to Old English hēr HERE. The spelling in -ce (recorded before 1460) is a device to indicate the sound denoted by earlier -s (in -es), as in twice and pence. The meaning of from this (fact or circumstance), therefore, is first recorded in 1586. —henceforth adv. (before 1375; earlier henne forth, probably about 1200)

henchman n. 1463–64 henshman; earlier hengsman high-ranking servant (originally, a groom); formed from Old English hengest horse, stallion, gelding + man man; cognate with Old Frisian hengst, hanxt horse, Middle Dutch henxt (modern Dutch hengst), Old High German hengist stallion, gelding (modern German Hengst stallion), from Proto-Germanic Hanzistās* best at springing; and Old Icelandic hestr (Swedish häst horse, Danish and Norwegian hest), from Proto-Germanic HánHistaz*.

Henchman personal attendant of a Highland chief, is first recorded about 1730, and obedient or unscrupulous follower is found in 1839.

henequen or henequin n. yellow fiber from the agave of Yucatán. 1880, American English; borrowed from Spanish henequén, jeniquén, from the Maya (Yucatán) native name.

henge n. 1932, prehistoric circular structure of stone or wood, abstracted from Stonehenge, prehistoric stone circle in southern England.

The name Stonehenge appeared about 1130 as Stanenge, later Stanhenge (1205); the element henge is probably derived from the verb hang that which hangs in the air, in reference to the horizontal stones resting on pillars at Stonehenge, and called henges in Yorkshire since at least the early 1700's.

henna n. 1600, small thorny tree from whose leaves a dye is made; later, the dye itself; borrowed from the Arabic name for the plant hinna.

hepatic adj. Before 1398 epatike; borrowed perhaps through Old French hepatique, and directly from Latin hepaticus of or belonging to the liver, from Greek hepatikós, from hepar (genitive hepatós) liver; for suffix see -IC.

hepatica n. Probably before 1425 epatica; borrowed from Medieval Latin hepatica, from feminine of Latin hepaticus HEPATIC; from the plant's liver-shaped leaves.

hepatitis n. 1727, New Latin hepatitis, from Greek hepatós (genitive of hepar liver) + New Latin -itis inflammation.

hepta- (also hept- before vowels). a combining form meaning seven, as in heptagon = figure with seven angles. Borrowed from Greek heptá seven; cognate with Latin septem SEVEN.

heptagon n. plane figure having seven angles and seven sides. 1570, borrowed probably from Middle French heptagon, from Greek heptágōnon (heptá seven + gōnía angle).

her pron., adj. Before 1225 here; developed from Old English (before 830) hire, hiere (third person singular feminine) dative and genitive forms of hēo, hīo she, feminine forms of hē HE. Old English hire, hiere are cognates of Old Frisian hiri her, and Middle Dutch hare (modern Dutch haar), paralleling Old Saxon iru her, Old High German iru, iro (modern German ihr), and Gothic izai (dative singular), izē, izō (genitive plural). —hers pron. (before 1325) herald n. Probably about 1300 heraud officer who is an expert in arms, armorial bearings, and tournaments, also as a surname Haroud (1204); later herald (before 1393); borrowed through

Anglo-French heraud, herald from Old French heraut, hiraute, herault, heralt, from Frankish hariwald* commander of an army. (apparently a compound represented in Old High German heri army and waltan to command, rule). The meaning of messenger or envoy is first recorded about 1378, from the sense of an officer of a tournament who introduced knights, etc. —v. 1380 herauden, later harrold (1605); from the noun, by influence of Middle French herauder, hirauder to herald, from heraut, hiraute, n. —heraldic adj. 1772, borrowed from French héraldique, from Medieval Latin heraldus (from Germanic); for suffix see -IC. —heraldry n. Before 1393 heraldie, later, heralds collectively (before 1500) and the art or science of arms and armorial bearings (1572); borrowed from Old French hiraudie, from hiraute, n.; for suffix see -RY, -Y³.

herb n. Probably before 1300 erbe, herbe; borrowed from Old French erbe, and from Latin herba grass, herb. —herbaceous adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin herbaceus grassy, from herba grass; for suffix see -ACEOUS.

herbivorous adj. 1661, borrowing of New Latin herbivorus herb-eating, from Latin herba herb + vorare devour, swallow; for suffix see -OUS.

herculean adj. 1593, formed from Hercules + -an.

herd n. Before 1225 hurde (in dialect of Southwestern England, and earlier in the place name Herdewich, 1185); later, in general use, herde (before 1325); developed from Old English (before 1000) heord; cognate with Old High German herta herd (and, through Low German, with modern German Herde), Old Icelandic hjórdh (Danish and Swedish hjord), and Gothic halrda; from Proto-Germanic Herdō*. —v. Probably before 1387 herdeyen, later, herden (about 1400); from the noun. —herder n. 1327, as a surname for a herdsman; formed from English herd, v. + -er. —herdsman n. Probably before 1200 herdman, found in Old English heordman, hyrdeman (about 1000). The form with s (herdsman) appeared by 1603 on the model of craftsman, kinsman.

here adv. Probably about 1200 here, earlier her (1101), found in Old English hēr in this place where one puts himself (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hīr here, Old Saxon hēr, hīr, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hier, Old High German hiar (modern German hier), Old Icelandic and Gothic hēr (Swedish här, Norwegian and Danish her); all belonging to the Proto-Germanic base Hi-*, which is the source of English HE. —n. 1605, from the adverb. —hereafter adv. Old English hērefter (about 900); —n. (1546). —hereby adv. (about 1250) —herein adv. Old English herinne (about 1000). —heretofore adv. (about 1200) —herewith adv. Late Old English hēr-with (1017–23).

heredity n. About 1540, inheritance; either a back formation from hereditary, or a borrowing through Middle French hérédité, from Latin hērēditās condition of being an heir, from hērēs (genitive hērēdis) HEIR; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of an inheritable quality or character, is first recorded in 1784; the biological meaning of inheritable traits, is found in 1863. —hereditary adj. Probably before 1425 hereditarie, borrowed from Latin hērēditārius, from hērēditās heredity.

heresy n. Probably before 1200 heresie, borrowed from Old French heresie, eresie, alteration of Latin haeresis heresy, school of thought, from Greek haíresis a taking or choosing, from haírein take, seize, from haírelsthai choose. —heretic n. 1340 heretike, borrowed from Old French heretique, eretique heretic, from Latin haereticus, from Greek hairetikós able to choose, from haírelsthai to choose; for suffix see -IC. —heretical adj. Before 1425, borrowed from Middle French heretical and Medieval Latin haereticalis, from Latin haereticus; see HERETIC; for suffix see -AL¹.

heritage n. Probably before 1200 eritage spiritual inheritance or bequest; later heritage (before 1225); borrowed from Old French eritage, heritage, from heriter inherit, from Late Latin hērēditāre, ultimately from Latin hērēs (genitive hērēdis) HEIR. —heritable adj. About 1375, borrowed from Old French heritable, from heriter; see HERITAGE; for suffix see -ABLE.

hermaphrodite n. Probably about 1408 hermofrodyte, earlier hermofrodita (before 1387); borrowed from Medieval Latin hermofroditus, from Latin hermaphroditus, from Greek Hermaphrōdītēs Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes and Aphrodite (Venus), who was united with the body of a nymph, combining male and female characteristics.

The word was known in Old French hermaphrodite in the 1200's, but the Middle English spelling would indicate the original borrowing into English was from Medieval Latin.

hermetic adj. Before 1637 hermetticke pertaining to magic or alchemy, shortening of hermetical (1605, also in the sense of airtight, in hermetically sealed or closed); borrowed from new Latin hermeticus + English -al¹. Hermeticus is an adjective adapted from Greek Hermēs, god of science and arts, who was identified by the Neoplatonists, mystics, and alchemists with the Egyptian god Thoth, who supposedly invented the process of making a glass tube airtight by using a secret seal.

hermit n. 1196 heremite religious recluse; earlier in the place name Bechermet (about 1130); borrowed from Old French heremite, hermite (influenced by Medieval Latin heremita), from Late Latin ermīta, from Greek erēmītēs, literally, person of the desert, from erēmīa desert, solitude, from erēmos uninhabited. —hermitage n. About 1300 ermitage, and in the place name Le Hermitage (about 1280); borrowed from Old French hermitage, ermitage, from heremite, hermite hermit.

hernia n. About 1390 hirnia, borrowed from Latin hernia a rupture, related to hīra intestine. The spelling with e, after the Latin, was introduced in the 1600's.

hero n. 1555 heroes, pl., men of superhuman strength, courage, or ability; borrowed from Latin hērōēs, plural of hērōs, from Greek hērōs (plural hērōēs). The sense of the chief male character in a play, poem, motion picture, story, etc., is first recorded in 1697.

The earliest English forms were the plural heroes and the singular heros, corresponding to the Latin. A variant singular heroe was replaced by hero in the 1600's. —heroic adj. 1549, shortening of earlier heroycus, adj. (1410), borrowing of Latin hērōicus; and of earlier heroical, adj. (probably before 1425), borrowed from Latin hērōicus, from Greek hērōikós, from hērōs hero; for suffix see -IC. —heroine n. Before 1659 heroína demi-goddess; borrowed through French héroïne, and directly from Latin hērōína, hērōinē, from Greek hērōinē, feminine of hērōs hero. —heroism n. 1717, borrowed from French héroïsme, from hērōs hero (from Latin hērōs); for suffix see -ISM.

heroin n. 1898, borrowed from German Heroin, a former trademark for this drug, registered in the 1890's by Friedrich Bayer and Company in Germany as a substitute for morphine. There is no evidence so far to indicate, as has been suggested, that the drug's name derives from Greek hērōs HERO, supposedly because of the euphoric feeling which the drug produces.

heron n. wading bird. 1353 heron; earlier heyrun (1302), hayroun (about 1300), and in the surname Hayrun (1124–30); borrowed from Old French hairon, heron, from Frankish (compare Old High German heigaro, reigaro heron, Middle High German heiger, reiger, modern German Reiher). The German forms correspond to Middle Dutch reigher, modern Dutch reiger, Old Icelandic hegri, and Old English hrāgra, a form which did not survive into Middle English. The two Old High German forms are dissimilated variants of hreigaro*, from Proto-Germanic Hraigrán-*.

herpes n. Before 1398 herpes skin disease; borrowing of Latin herpēs a spreading skin eruption, from Greek hērpēs the disease shingles (literally, a creeping), from hērpein to creep.

herpetology n. 1824, probably borrowed from French herpétologie, from Greek herpetón creeping thing, reptile, from hērpein to creep; see SERPENT; for suffix see -LOGY.

herring n. 1130 hareng; later heryng (before 1300); developed from Old English, hēring, Anglian about 700, hāring (West Saxon, about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian hēring herring, Old Saxon hering, Middle Low German herink, Middle Dutch herinc (modern Dutch haring), and Old High German hāring, hering (modern German Hering). The Etymology of this West Germanic word is uncertain. A possible explanation refers to the color and is thereby related to Old English hār gray, HOAR; another refers to the large schools of the fish and that from that the name is related to Old High German heri host, multitude. —herringbone n. 1652, the bone of a herring. —adj. 1659.

hesitate v. Probably before 1622, implied in hesitating slow, failing to act promptly; either a back formation from hesitation; or borrowed, perhaps by influence of French hésiter, from Latin haesitātum, past participle of haesitare stick fast, stammer in speech, be undecided, a frequentative form of haerere stick, cling; for suffix see -ATE¹. —hesitant adj. 1647, probably a back formation from earlier hesitancy. —hesitancy n. 1617, borrowed from Latin haesitantia action of stammering, from haesitantem (nominative haesitāns), present participle of haesitare; for suffix see -Y³. —hesitation n. Before 1400 hesitacyoun; borrowed from Old French hesitation, or directly from Latin haesitātiōnem (nominative haesitātiō), from haesitare; for suffix see -ATION.

hetero- a combining form meaning another, other, different, as in heterosexual = of or having to do with different sexes. Borrowed from Greek héteros one or the other of two by assimilation from earlier háteros.

heterodox adj. 1637, 1650; earlier as a noun (1619); borrowed from Greek heteródoxos (héteros the other + dóxa opinion). —heterodoxy n. 1652, borrowed from Greek heterodoxía error of opinion, from heteródoxos heterodox.

heterogeneous adj. 1624, borrowed from Medieval Latin heterogeneus, from Greek heterogēnēs (héteros different + gēnos kind, gender, race, stock); for suffix see -OUS. Heterogeneous replaced earlier heterogeneal (1605), formed from English heterogene (1541, borrowed from Greek heterogēnēs of different kinds) + -al¹.

heuristic adj. 1821, borrowed as if from Greek heuristikós* of or having to do with discovery (erroneous form of heuretikós inventive), apparently influenced by Greek heuriskein to find, discover. —n. 1860, from the adjective. The plural heuristic heuristic methods or their study is first recorded in 1959.

hew v. Probably before 1200 hewen, developed from Old English hēawan (before 900), earlier geheawan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hawa, howa to hew, Old Saxon hauwan, Middle Dutch hauwen, houwen (modern Dutch houwen), Old High German houwan (modern German hauen), Old Icelandic hogga (Swedish hugga, Norwegian hogge, Danish hugge); from Proto-Germanic Hauwanan*.

The phrase hew to hold fast to, stick to, developed from hew to the line stick to a course (literally, cut evenly with an axe), first recorded in 1891.

hex v. 1830, American English, found in Pennsylvania German hex (in German hexen to hex, related to Hexe witch). —n. 1856 (a witch), 1909 (magic spell), American English, found in Pennsylvania German hex (in German Hexe witch).

hexa- (also hex- before vowels). a combining form meaning six, as in hexagon = figure having six angles. Borrowed from Greek hexa- combining form of héx six.

hexagon n. 1570, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French hexagone, from Greek hexágōnon (héx SIX + gōniā angle). —hexagonal adj. 1571, formed from hexagon + -al¹.

hexameter adj. 1546, borrowed probably through Middle French hexamètre and directly from Latin hexameter, and from Greek hexámētros (héx SIX + mētron meter). —n. 1579, probably from the adjective.

hey interj. Probably about 1200 hei, possibly an imitative formation.

heyday n. About 1590 hayday a state of exaltation or excitement; probably alteration of earlier (1526) heyda, an exclamation of playfulness, surprise, etc. (1526); apparently an extended form of Middle English hei, hey, interj. The sense of flush, stage of greatest vigor, etc., is first recorded in 1751.

hi interj. 1862, American English, originally used to attract attention (probably before 1500), variant of Middle English hei HEY.

hiatus n. 1563, borrowing of Latin hiātus (genitive hiātūs) gap, from hiāre to gape, stand open.

hibachi n. 1863, borrowing of Japanese hibachi, (literally, fire pot), a compound of hi fire, and hachi bowl or pot, with a shift from h to b, such as is in Nippon, Nihon.

hibernate v. Before 1802, probably a back formation from hibernation, possibly by influence of French hiberner, from Latin hibernāre; see HIBERNATION. —hibernation n. 1664, borrowed from Latin hibernātiōnem (nominative hibernātiō) the action of passing the winter, from hibernāre to winter; for suffix see -ATION.

hibiscus n. 1706, borrowed from Latin hibiscum, later hibiscus marshmallow (a plant), perhaps from Gaulish.

hiccup or hiccough n. 1580 hiccup, variant of earlier hicket (1540), and hyckock (1538), words considered imitative of the sound of hiccuping, and parallel with French hoquet hiccup, Walloon (French dialect) hikete, Middle Dutch hick, Danish hikke, and Swedish hicka, among others. The modern spelling hiccup is first recorded in 1788, hiccough in 1626, by mistaken association with the word cough. —v. 1580 hiccup, probably from the noun.

hick n. 1565, awkward, unsophisticated, provincial person, from Hick; earlier Hikke (1376); a former nickname of Richard.

hickory n. 1671, American English; borrowed from Algonquian (perhaps Powhatan), a shortening of pockerchicory (about 1618), pohickery (1653), and other similar words for a species of walnut.

hidden adj. Before 1547, from a late past participle of *hide*¹. The noun hiddenesse is first recorded about 1384.

hide¹ v. conceal. About 1121 hiden, developed from Old English hȳdan (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian hēda conceal, Middle Dutch and Middle Low German hūden, from Proto-Germanic Hūdjanan*.

hide² n. skin. About 1150 hide, hid skin of an animal or human; found in Old English hȳd (891); cognate with Old Frisian hēd skin, Old Saxon hūd, Middle Dutch huut (modern Dutch huid), Old High German hūt (modern German Haut), and Old Icelandic hūdh, from Proto-Germanic Hūdts*; related to Old English hȳdan to HIDE¹. —v. beat, thrash. 1757, from the noun. —hide-and-seek n. 1672, replacing earlier All hid (1588). —hidebound adj. 1559, of cattle having skin sticking closely to the back and ribs as a result of emaciation; later, of people, attitudes, etc., that are restricted or narrow (1603). —hide-out n. (1885, in American English) hideous adj. About 1303 hydus, later hidous (before 1333); borrowed through Anglo-French hidous, from Old French hideus, hidos, (earlier) hisdos, from hide, hise horror or fear, perhaps from Germanic. The ending -eous is patterned on words such as courteous.

hie v. Probably before 1200 hihin, later hien (before 1250); developed from Old English higian strive, hasten (before 899), from Proto-Germanic Hij-*.

hierarchy n. Probably about 1343 ierarchi, ierarchie ranked division of angels; borrowed from Old French ierarchie, jerarchie, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin hierarchia, from Greek hierarchiā rule of a high priest, from hierarchēs high priest, leader of sacred rites (tā hierá the sacred rites, neuter plural of hierós sacred + árchein to lead, rule).

The sense of ranked organization of persons or things, is first recorded in 1643, and seems to have also been associated semantically with higher to explain the sense of ranks. Initial h appeared before 1450 in imitation of the Latin. —hierarchic adj. 1681, back formation from hierarchical, formed from English hierarchy + -ical, possibly by influence of Old French hierarchique on the model of Medieval Latin hierarchicus.

hieratic adj. 1669, borrowed possibly from French hiératique, from Latin hieraticus, from Greek hieratikós, from hieratēla priesthood, from hierasthai be a priest, from hierēus priest, from hierós sacred; for suffix see -IC.

hieroglyphic adj. 1585, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French hiéroglyphique, from Late Latin hieroglyphicus, from Greek hieroglyphikós (hierós sacred + glyphē carving, from glýphein carve); for suffix see -IC. —n. 1596, probably from the adjective. —hieroglyph n. 1598, a shortened form of hieroglyphic, n., possibly influenced by or, in some instances, borrowed from Middle French hiéroglyphe (1576).

higgledy-piggledy adv. adj. 1598 higledi-pigledie in confusion, probably formed in relation to pig and its various connotations of messy, disorganized, etc. and perhaps to the way pigs huddle when herded.

high adj. About 1303 hygh, later high (before 1325), and heigh (about 1375); developed from Old English, in Anglian hēh of great height, lofty, tall (about 825), in West Saxon hēah; cognate with Old Frisian hāch high, tall, Old Saxon hōh, Middle Dutch hooch (modern Dutch hoog), Old High German hōh (modern German hoch), Old Icelandic hār (Swedish hög, Norwegian høy, hog, and Danish høi), and Gothic hauhs; from Proto-Germanic HauHaz*.

The Middle English forms reflect the change of the Old English vowel to so-called long i, similar to die and eye. In the mid to late 1300's the final guttural sound, represented by gh, was dying away, though the spelling with -gh remained.

The biological meaning, as in the higher plants, the higher apes, is first recorded in 1848. The meaning of euphoric or exhilarated from the use of alcohol or a narcotic drug is found in 1932. —adv. About 1303, developed from Old English (about 1000) hēage; from hēah, hēh, adj. —n. Before 1325 high high point, top, developed from Old English hēh, hēah, adj. Various meanings developed in American English: area of high barometric pressure (1878); highest point, price, temperature, etc., record (1926); state of euphoria induced by a narcotic drug (1953). —highland n. Before 1000, Old English hēoh-lond. —highly adv. About 900, Old English hēalīce. —highness n. Before 899, Old English hēanes. —high school Before 1475, school for advanced learning, possibly in reference to the type of school founded in Edinburgh (1519) to teach the higher branches of school learning, and expanded in the mid-1800's to general public education in Scotland.

—high sea (about 1380) —high tide Before 1000, Old English hēahtide. —high time (about 1390) —highway n. (probably before 1200)

hijack v. 1923, American English, to rob (a bootlegger, smuggler, etc.) in transit; apparently a back formation and alteration of highjacker (also 1923), perhaps from high(way) + jacker one who holds up. In the 1960's usage extended hijack to mean "seize an aircraft in flight for blackmail, escape, etc." (also found in skyjack 1968); in the 1970's extended further to mean "take over any form of public transportation."

hike v. 1809, English dialect hyke, heik to walk vigorously; of uncertain origin. The sense of pull up (as in hike up one's pants), is first recorded about 1873 in American English, and the extended sense of raise (wages, prices, etc.) in 1904. —n. 1865 heik a walk; from the verb. The meaning of a raise in wages, prices, etc., is first found in 1931; from the verb. —hiker n. (1913) hilarity n. Probably 1440 hillarite, borrowed through Middle French hilarité, or directly from Latin hilaritās (genitive hilaritātis) cheerfulness, gaiety, from hilaris, hilarus cheerful, gay, from Greek hilarós, related to hilaos gracious, kindly; for suffix see -ITY. —hilarious adj. 1823, formed in from Latin hilaris cheerful, gay + English suffix -ous.

hill n. Probably about 1175 hulle, in dialect of Southwest and Midland England; later hil (probably about 1200); found in Old English hyll (about 1000), from Proto-Germanic Hulnīs*; cognate with Old Frisian holla head, Frisian hel hill, Middle Dutch hille, Low German hull hill, and Old Saxon holm, Old Icelandic holmr island (Danish holm and Swedish holme islet).

—hillock n. Before 1382 hilloc small hill; earlier, as a surname Hilloc (1205); formed from English hill + -oc, diminutive suffix. —hillside n. (before 1387) —hilltop n. (1408)

hilt n. Old English hilt (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic Heltiz*; cognate with Old Saxon hilta hilt, helta handle of an oar, Middle Dutch helt, hilt, Middle Low German hilde, Old High German helza, Middle High German helze, and Old Icelandic hjaltr.

him pron. Old English him, dative of hē HE (before 855); cognate with Gothic himma this (dative). Him originally was the dative masculine and neuter of hē, and hine was the masculine accusative form of hē. During the 1100's to the 1300's him replaced the accusative hine but the neuter dative was retained as hit, it.

hind¹ adj. back, rear. 1454 hynde; earlier in the compound hindeward (probably before 1300); a shortened form of Middle English bihenden (probably about 1175); developed from Old English behindan, adv. and prep., back, behind (about 725); and possibly also influenced by Old English hinder, adv., back, rear. These forms are probably cognate with Old High German hintana, adv., hintar, prep., hintaro, adj., hind, behind (modern German hinten, hinten, hintere), Old Frisian hindera behind, Old Icelandic hindri later, farther, hinztr latest, last, and Gothic hindana, adv., hindar, prep., behind, beyond.

hind² n. female deer. Old English (before 970) hind; cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hinde hind, Old High German hinta (modern German Hinde), and Old Icelandic hind, from Proto-Germanic Hindō*.

hinder¹ v. impede. About 1385 hyndre to impede, keep back, prevent; earlier hindren to cause harm or injury (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) hindrian; cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch hinderen to hinder, and Old High German hintarōn (modern German hindern), from Proto-Germanic Hindērōjanan*.

hinder² adj. rear. About 1300 hindore, probably from Old English hinder, adv., possibly the comparative of *HIND*¹ back. —hindermost adj. 1398 hyndermest.

hindrance n. 1436 hinderaunce; formed from hindren, hindre HINDER + -aunce -ance.

hinge n. 1356 heyngge joint on which a door or gate moves; later henge (about 1380); cognate with Middle Dutch henghe, henghene hook, handle, and Middle Low German henge hinge; related to HANG. —v. 1607 hinge to bend; later, to hang with a hinge (1758–65); from the noun. The sense of turn on, depend, is first recorded in 1719.

The spelling change from e to i is a regular shift before ng; the pronunciation, as if -dg- in edge, is a development found in the ending -ge as in singe.

hint n. 1604 hint a slight sign or indication; an occasion, opportunity, probably developed from hinten to tell, inform (before 1400); earlier, henten to catch (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 1000) hentan to seize, from Proto-Germanic Hantijanan*. —v. give a hint. 1648; from the noun.

hinterland n. 1890, borrowed from German Hinterland (hinter behind + Land land).

hip¹ n. joint. 1369 hippe, earlier in hipes-banes hipbones (about 1150); developed from Old English (before 800) hype, from Proto-Germanic Hupiz*; cognate with Middle Dutch hōpe, hēpe hip (modern Dutch heup), Old High German huf (modern German Hüfte), and Gothic hups.

hip² n. seed pod. About 1415 hipe, earlier hepe (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (about 800) hēope, hīope. Old English hēope derived from the same root as Old Saxon hiopo bramble, thornbush, Old High German hīafo, hiufa, hiefa, Middle High German hiefe, and Dutch joep hip, Norwegian hjupe, Danish hyben, from Proto-Germanic Hiup-*. The irregular shift from the so-called long e to modern English short i is possibly the result of change in stress in the numerous compounds of this word from Old and Middle English, like hip-bramble, hip-tree.

hippie n. About 1965, American English, extended use of earlier hippie (1953), a disparaging term for a hipster (1941), person who is hip or keenly aware of what is new or stylish; hip up-to-date (1904) + -ie.

hippodrome n. oval track for races. 1585, borrowed from hippopotamus n. 1563 hippopotame; later hippopotamus (1600), replacing earlier ypotame (probably before 1300); borrowed from Late Latin hippopotamus, from Greek hippopótamos riverhorse, an irregular compound of hippos horse + potámōs river. The earlier forms ypotame, ypotamus were borrowed into English through Old French ypotame, from Medieval Latin ypotamus, an alteration of Latin hippopotamus.

French hippodrome, and directly from Latin hippodromos race course, from Greek hippódromos (hippos horse + drómos course).

hire v. Probably before 1300 hiren, earlier huren (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) hýrian pay for service, employ for wages, engage, probably from Old English hýr, n., hire; cognate with Old Frisian hēra to hire, rent, Middle Low German hüren (modern German heuern hire, engage), and Middle Dutch hūren (modern Dutch huren).

—n. Probably about 1250 hire, earlier hure (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) hýr payment for service, wages; cognate with Old Frisian hēre lease, rent, wages, Old Saxon hūra, Middle Low German hūre (modern Low German hüre and German Heuer wages, pay, hire), and Middle Dutch hūre (modern Dutch huur); probably represented in Proto-Germanic Hūrja-*. —hired man About 1175, found in Old English hired-man, originally a household servant, from hired household; later associated with the past participle of hire employ for wages. —hireling n. 1459 hirlyng; found in Old English hyrlyng (about 1000); from hýr + *-ling*¹.

hirsute adj. hairy. 1621, borrowed from Latin hirsūtus rough, shaggy, originally, having bristles, formed from a lost noun hirsus* bristle, related to hirtus shaggy, and possibly to horrere to bristle with fear.

his pron., adj. Old English (before 725) his, genitive of hē HE, from Proto-Germanic Hisa*.

Hispanic adj. 1889, American English; probably shortened from earlier Hispanical of Spain or its people (1584, formed in English from Latin Hispānicus Spanish, from Hispānia Spain + English suffix -ical). —n. 1972, American English; from the adjective.

Hispano- a combining form meaning Spanish, as in Hispano-American. Borrowed from Spanish Hispano Spanish, from Latin Hispānus.

hiss v. About 1382 hissen, implied in hissyng; of imitative origin. —n. 1513, from the verb.

histo- (also hist- before vowels). a combining form meaning tissue, as in histology = study of tissue. Borrowed from Greek histo- combining form of histós loom, web, originally a STAND, formed from histasthai to take a stand.

histology n. 1847, borrowed from French histologie, from Greek histós web, formed from histasthai to STAND; for suffix see -LOGY.

history n. Before 1393 histoire story, legend, biography; borrowed from Old French histoire, estoire, estorie; and borrowed from Latin historia narrative, account, tale, story, from Greek historiā a learning or knowing by inquiry, history, record, narrative, from historeîn inquire, from histōr wise man, judge; related to ideîn to see, eidēnai to know; for suffix see -Y³. The meaning of a record of past events is probably first recorded about 1451, and the spelling historie (about 1425). —historian n. Probably before 1439, borrowed from Middle French historien, from Latin historia; for suffix see -IAN, -AN. —historic adj. 1669, probably a back formation from historical, possibly influenced by French historique. —historical adj. Probably before 1425 historicalle, formed in English from Latin historicus, Greek historikós + English suffix -al¹ or -ical.

histrionic adj. 1648 histrionick theatrical, deceitful; either formed from English histrion actor (about 1566) + -ic, or borrowed from Late Latin histrionicus, from Latin histrīō (genitive histrīōnis) actor, for suffix see -IC. —n. histrionics pl. theatrics, pretense. 1864, from histrionic.

hit v. Probably before 1200 hitten to strike, knock; developed from Late Old English (before 1075) hyttan come upon, meet with; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hit to light upon, meet with, Swedish hit to find, Norwegian and Danish hitte to hit, find), from Proto-Germanic Hitjanan*. —n. 1598, a blow, stroke; found earlier in the figurative sense of a rebuke (before 1475); from the verb. The meaning of a success, especially in reference to a play, song, person, etc., is first recorded in 1811.

hitch v. 1440 hytchen move with a jerk; earlier hetchyn (before 1400), probably developed from ichen to move, stir (about 1200); uncertain, especially because of a notable lack of cognates in related languages. The meaning of become fastened by a hook, is first recorded in 1578, and that of get a free ride, 1931. —n. 1664, a limp or hobble; 1674, abrupt movement; from the verb. The meaning of obstruction is first recorded in 1748. —hitchhike v. 1923, from hitch, v., n., the hitching of a sled to a moving vehicle, 1880 + hike, v.

hither adv. Before 1382 hyther, earlier hider (1100); found in Old English hider (about 725); from Proto-Germanic Hideran*; cognate with Old Icelandic hedhra here or hither, and Gothic hidrē. The phrase hither and thither is recorded in Old English (about 725). The change of spelling from d to th, is parallel to that in FATHER. —hitherto adv. Before 1382 hytherto, earlier hiderto (probably before 1200; formed from hider, + to).

hive n. 1127 hive, developed from Old English hȳf (about 725), from Proto-Germanic Hūfiz*; probably cognate with Old Icelandic húfr ship's hull. —v. Before 1400; from the noun.

hives n. About 1500 hyvis, itchy condition of the skin; of uncertain origin.

hoagie n. 1945, American English, large sandwich made from a long roll split in half; hero sandwich; originally known in Philadelphia, alteration of earlier hoggie, hoggy (about 1936); from hog + -ie, -y, diminutive suffix; of uncertain origin.

hoard n. About 1125 hord things saved and stored; developed from Old English hord valuable stock or store (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon hord treasure, hidden or inmost place, Old High German hort (modern German Hort), Old Icelandic hodd, and Gothic huzd, from Proto-Germanic Huzdan*. —v. Probably about 1200 horden to save and store away; developed from Old English (about 1000) hordian; from hord, n.

hoarse adj. sounding rough and deep. 1369 hors; earlier hos (about 1250), developed from Old English (about 1000) hās; cognate with Old Frisian hās, Old Saxon and Middle Low German hēs, modern Dutch heesch, Old High German heis, from Proto-Germanic Haisa-, coexisting, with Proto-Germanic Haisra-, which in metathesized Hairsa-*, produced Middle English hors.

hoary adj. 1530 hoory, formed from English hoar, adj., gray with age; grayish-white + -y¹. Probably before 1300 hōre; developed from Old English hār gray, venerable, old (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German hēr old (modern German hehr august, stately), and Old Icelandic hār gray, from Proto-Germanic Hairaz*. —hoarfrost n. (about 1300 hore-forst) hoax v. 1796, probably an alteration of hocus conjurer, juggler (1640), or hocus to hoax (1675), a phonetic shortening of hocus-pocus. —n. 1808; from the verb.

hob n. 1674 hob shelf at the back or side of a fireplace; alteration of earlier hub (1600), hubbe (1511); of unknown origin. The meaning of rounded peg or pin, as in hobnail, is first recorded in 1589; it may also be a different word.

hobble v. Probably before 1300 hoblen to rock in a boat, to bob; later hobelen to limp (before 1376); probably cognate with Dutch hobbelen to rock back and forth, toss up and down. The transitive meaning of tie the legs of an animal is first recorded in 1831, probably an alteration of earlier hopple (1586), and probably cognate with Flemish hoppelen to rock, jump, related to Dutch hobbelen. The sense of hamper, hinder, is first recorded in 1870. —n. 1727, from the verb. The meaning of something that hobbles, a fetter (hobbles, pl.), is first recorded in 1831, probably an alteration of earlier hopple (before 1825); from the verb.

hobby n. Before 1420 hoby small horse, pony; earlier hobyn (1298); of uncertain origin. Hobby horse a toy or mock horse is first recorded in 1557, and the transferred sense of favorite pastime or avocation, in 1676.

hobgoblin n. 1530 hobgoblyng, a compound of hob elf (about 1460, from hobbe, 1307, and the surname Hobbe, 1230; a variant of Rob for Robin in reference to Robin Goodfellow, elf in Germanic folklore) + goblin.

hobnob v. 1831, extended sense of earlier hob-nob drink together (1828), and in the adverb phrase, hob and nob to toast each other by turns (1756). The phrase hob nob give or take, is found in 1601, and developed from hab nab, have or have not (about 1550).

hobo n. 1889, American English, of uncertain origin. Compare dialectal English haubuck clumsy fellow, lout, country bumpkin (1805) and hawbaw (1857), which may be forerunners of hobo.

hock¹ n. joint. About 1410 hokke; earlier in the compound hokschyne ankle or back of the knee (probably about 1395), apparently altered from Old English hōh-sinu Achilles' tendon, and possibly a variant of houghe (about 1350), ho (about 1300); developed from Old English hōh heel, from Proto-Germanic HanHa-*. Old English hōh-sinu is cognate with Old Frisian hōsene, Achilles' tendon, Old Icelandic hāsin, and Old High German hahsa hock.

hock² n. wine. Before 1625, shortened form of Hockamore (1673), alteration of German Hochheimer, from Hochheim, town in Germany, where this wine is made.

hock³ n. pawn, debt. 1859, American English, in hock in pawn, in debt; possibly borrowed from Dutch hok jail, pen, doghouse. —v. 1878, American English, to pawn; from the noun.

hockey n. 1527, of uncertain origin (perhaps originally connected with Middle French hoquet shepherd's staff, crook, diminutive of Old French hoc hook).

hocus-pocus n. 1632, earlier Hocas Pocas, name of any magician or juggler (1624); perhaps originally sham Latin used by magicians in performing their tricks; very likely a perversion of the phrase from the Mass Hoc est corpus meum This is my body. The extended meaning of trickery or deception is first recorded in 1774.

hod n. 1573, perhaps an alteration (influenced by Middle Dutch hodde basket) of Middle English hot, hott pannier, (before 1300); basket, borrowed from Old French hotte, apparently from Frankish (compare dialectal German Hotte basket, Middle High German hotze cradle).

hodgepodge n. About 1390 hochepot disorderly mixture or jumble; earlier kind of stew, haphazard mixture (1381) and as a legal term in Anglo-French meaning the collecting of property in a common pot (about 1290); borrowing of Old French hochepot stew or soup hocher to shake, from Germanic; compare Middle High German hotzen shake + pot pot, also from Germanic; (compare Middle Low German pot).

hoe n. 1375 howis tool used to loosen soil and cut weeds; earlier houwe a mattock or pickax (1363); borrowed from Old French houe, from Frankish (compare Old High German houwa hoe, modern German Hau; related to houwan to HEW). —v. 1450 houwen, probably from the noun, though perhaps in some instances borrowed from Middle French houer, from houe, n.

hog n. Probably before 1300 hog, earlier, in the surname Hog (1174–80); found in Late Old English hogg young pig, also applied to young sheep and horses after passing their first year. It is doubtful that the word came from Celtic. The sense of a gluttonous, coarse, self-indulgent person, is first recorded about 1400. —v. 1884, from the noun.

hogan n. dwelling used by the Navaho Indians. 1871, American English; borrowed from Athapaskan (Navaho) hōghan dwelling, house.

hoi polloi the masses. 1837 oi polloi, borrowed from Greek hoi polloi, pl., the many (people). Dryden used the phrase in 1668 but wrote the words in Greek, as did Byron in 1821–22; both, curiously preceded the phrase with the, though hoi means the, and both writers had some familiarity with Greek.

hoist v. 1548 hoihst, alteration of earlier hoise (1509), perhaps a variant of Middle English hyss, a nautical term (1490), probably borrowed from Middle Dutch hyssen to hoist, related to Low German hissen, and Old Icelandic hissa upp raise. —n. 1654 hoyst; from the verb.

hoity-toity adj. 1690 hoightly toightly frolicsome, flighty; possibly an alteration and reduplication of earlier dialectal hoiting acting the hoyden, romping (1594); perhaps a further alteration of, or related to, HOYDEN. An earlier noun use is recorded in 1668. The sense of haughty is recorded in the late 1800's.

hokum n. 1917, originally theatrical slang, probably formed after bunkum, possibly by influence of hocus-pocus. —hoke v. Often, hoke up. 1935, originally theatrical slang with the meaning of make melodramatic by exaggerated acting; probably a shortened form of HOKUM. —hokey adj. 1945, formed from hoke + *-y*¹.

hol- a form of holo- before vowels, as in holistic.

hold¹ v. take and keep. Probably about 1175 holden; developed from Old English, in Anglian haldan (before 855), and in West Saxon healdan; cognate with Old Frisian halda to hold, Old Saxon haldan, Middle Low German halden (modern Dutch houden), Old High German haltan (modern German halten), Old Icelandic halda, and Gothic haldan to keep, tend, watch over (cattle), which is considered to be the original sense in the Germanic languages, later developing the sense of "have," from Proto-Germanic Haldanan*.

The Old English past tense heold yielded held, while the Middle English and early modern English past participle holden gave way to the new form in the 1500's. —n. About 1330 hold; earlier hald (before 1325), and hold a place of refuge, haven (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (1042) hald, heald that which holds or is held, from the verbs. —holdup n. 1 a stoppage. 1837, in American English. 2 the act of stopping by force and robbing. 1878, in American English.

hold² n. space for cargo below the deck of a ship. 1591 hold, alteration of earlier hole (1440, by influence of *hold*¹, n. and holl, 1333–52), both with the meaning of hold of a ship, and developed in part from Old English hol HOLE. Middle English holl hold of a ship, was probably also influenced by Middle Dutch hol hold of a ship, and probably replaced, by differentiation of meaning, earlier Middle English hul, which had meant both the hold and the hull of a ship (before 1400), developed from Old English hulu shell, husk.

hole n. Probably before 1200 hole, developed from Old English (about 700) hol hole, hollow place; cognate with Old holiday n. 1500's holiday, replacing earlier haliday (recorded probably before 1200); developed from Old English hāligdæg (about 950, a compound of hālig HOLY + dæg DAY).

Frisian and Old Saxon hol hollow, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hol, Old High German hol (modern German hohl), and Old Icelandic holr, from Proto-Germanic Hulaz*. —v. Probably before 1300 hollen, earlier holien (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) holian, from hol, n.

-holic variant form of -AHOLIC, as in carboholic (carbohydrate + -holic), chocoholic (chocolate + -holic), colaholic, etc.

Old English had a concurrent open compound hālig dæg, found later in Middle English holý day which became modern English holiday, meaning both a religious festival and a day of recreation. This eventually replaced the earlier form haliday leaving two forms holiday and holý day.

holiness n. Probably before 1200 holinesse, variant (influenced by holi holy) of halinesse (also probably before 1200); developed from Old English hālignis (before 830), from hālig HOLY + -nes -ness.

holistic adj. 1926, from holism theory that in nature produces whole organisms from small units; on the analogy of such pairs of words as optimism, optimistic. The terms holism and holistic were coined from Greek hólos whole + English suffix -ism.

holler v. 1699, American English, variant spelling and pronunciation of hollo (1542), from or related to the earlier holla, interj. (1523); see HELLO. —n. 1896, American English, from earlier dialectal English hollar (1825), holler (1886) a cry to attract attention, variant of holla (1592), from holla, interj.

hollow adj. About 1330 holwe; earlier holeh (before 1300); developed from the Old English noun holh hollow place, hole, obscurely related to hol HOLE. Adjective use in Middle English of the Old English noun developed through influence of Old English hol hollow, adj.; see HOLE. —n. About 1550; also, low land, valley, basin (1553); from the adjective in modern English, but found in Old English (about 897) holh. The noun is not recorded in Middle English. —v. Before 1400 holowen, from the adjective. The spelling hollow begins to appear in Middle English in the late 1300's in early forms holoug, holowe, holowh.

holly n. 1440 holý, earlier holin (before 1200); developed from Old English Holegn (about 958, in the place name), hollen (about 1000); cognate with Old Saxon hulis holly, Middle Dutch huls, Dutch hulst, Old High German huls (modern German Hulst), from Proto-Germanic Huli-*.

hollyhock n. Before 1300 holihoc (holi HOLY + hokke mallow, Old English hoca, before 800).

holmium n. 1879, New Latin, from (Stock)holm, Sweden, where it was first found + -ium (suffix of chemical elements).

holo- a combining form meaning whole, entire, totally, as in holocaust, hologram. Borrowed through French and Latin, from Greek holo- combining form of hólos whole, entire, complete.

holocaust n. 1671 holocaust massacre or destruction; earlier, burnt offering or sacrifice (about 1250); borrowed, through Old French holocauste, from Latin holocaustum, from Greek holókauston, neuter of holókaustos burned whole (hólos whole + kaustós, verbal adjective of kaiein to burn). The phrase the Holocaust, the Nazi destruction of European Jewry in World War II, is first recorded in 1965.

hologram n. 1949, formed from Greek hólos whole (three-dimensional) + English combining form -gram. —holography n. 1964, from hologram, on the analogy of telegraphy, telegram, etc.

holograph n. 1623, borrowed from Late Latin holographus written wholly in one's own hand, from Greek hológraphos (hólos whole + -graphos written).

holster n. 1663, possibly found in hulster place of concealment, retreat (1310); developed from Old English heolster, earlier helustr concealment, hiding place; compare later Dutch holster or Swedish hölster, Danish and Norwegian hylster case, sheath; cognate with Icelandic hulstr sheath, Middle High German hulst cover, Old High German hulsa pod or hull (modern German Hülse pod), from Proto-Germanic Helus-, Hulis-.

holy adj. Probably before 1200 holi, hali; developed from Old English (about 725) hālig holy; cognate with Old Frisian hēlich holy, Old Saxon hēlag, Middle Dutch hēlich (modern Dutch heilig), Old High German heilag (modern German heilig), Old Icelandic heilagr, and Gothic hailags, from Proto-Germanic Hailazás*. The primary meaning may have been "that must be preserved whole or intact, that cannot be transgressed or violated," which would support its relationship to Old English hāl whole; see WHOLE.

hom- a form of homo- before vowels, as in homorganic = produced by the same vocal organ.

homage n. Probably before 1300 homage allegiance or respect for one's feudal lord; earlier, a body of vassals owing allegiance (probably about 1225); borrowed from Old French homage, probably formed in Old French from homme, earlier omne, + Old French -age; for suffix see -AGE. The often-quoted source of Old French homage is Medieval Latin hominaticum state of being a vassal, the Medieval Latin form was probably borrowed from Old French.

home n. Probably before 1200 hom dwelling, house, village; developed from Old English (about 725) hām dwelling, house, estate or village; cognate with Old Frisian hām home or village, Old Saxon hēm, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch heem home, Old High German heim (modern German Heim), Old Icelandic heimr residence, world (Swedish hem, Norwegian heim, and Danish hjem), and Gothic haims village, from Proto-Germanic Haim-*. —adv. Probably about 1225 hom; earlier ham (1100); developed from Old English hām, accusative form of hām, n. —adj. 1552; from the noun. —v. 1765, go home; from the noun. —homecoming n. (about 1385) —home-made adj. (before 1659) —homestead n. 972, Old English hamstede. —v. 1872, American English. —homeward adj. About 1250 homward, from Old English hām weard (855). —adv. (before 1200).

homely adj. Probably about 1378 homely of or belonging to home or household, domestic; earlier implied in hamlynness (before 1340); from hom home + -li *-ly*². The meaning of plain, unadorned, simple (about 1380) probably developed from association of home with plain practices of everyday living. Extension of this meaning to that of having a plain, or commonplace, appearance, evolved before 1400.

homeopathy n. 1826, borrowed from German Homöopathie, in Late Latin homoeopathia, from Greek homoioπάθεια, formed from hómoios like + -pátheia effect, from páthos suffering.

homicide¹ n. killing. About 1230, borrowed from Old French homicide, learned borrowing from Latin homicidium (homō man + -cidium act of killing).

homicide² n. person who kills. About 1375 homycide, borrowed from Old French homicide, learned borrowing from Latin homicida (homō man + -cida killer).

homiletic adj. 1644 homilitick; of or having to do with sermons or the art of preaching; borrowed from Late Latin homilēticus, from Greek homilētikós of conversation, affable, from homilēin associate with, from hómilos a crowd. —n. Also, homiletics. 1830; from the adjective.

homily n. Before 1387 omelye, borrowed from Old French omēlie, learned borrowing from Late Latin homilia a homily, sermon, from Greek homilía conversation, discourse (in New Testament Greek, a homily, sermon), from hómilos a crowd; for suffix see *-y*³. The spelling with h appeared in English in the 1500's through the influence of Late Latin.

hominid n. 1889, borrowed from New Latin Hominidae the family name, from Latin homō (genitive hominis) man; for suffix see *-id*¹. —adj. 1916, from the noun.

hominy n. 1629, American English, probably abstracted from rockahominy, borrowed from Algonquian (Powhatan) rokēhāmēn parched corn.

homo- a combining form meaning same, as in homonym, homosexual. Borrowed from Greek homo-, combining form of homós SAME.

homogeneous adj. 1641, borrowed from Medieval Latin homogeneus, from Greek homogenēs of the same kind (homós + génos kind, gender, race, stock); for suffix see -ous. Homogeneous gradually replaced earlier homogeneal (1603), formed from homogene (1607, borrowed perhaps through Middle French homogène, from Greek homogenēs) + *-al*¹. —homogeneity n. 1625, probably formed from English homogene + -ity. —homogenize v. 1886, make similar; formed from English homogeneous + -ize. The meaning of render (milk) uniform in consistency appeared in 1904.

homograph n. 1810, method of signaling; later, word having the same spelling as another, but a different origin and meaning (1873); probably formed from English homo- + -graph, modeled on Greek or borrowed from French homographe, from Greek homógraphos (homós + graphḗ writing, from gráphein write).

homologous adj. 1660, corresponding in position, value, etc.; borrowed, possibly by influence of French homologue, from Greek homólogos (homós + lógos relation, reasoning, computation, related to légein reckon, select, speak); for suffix see -ous.

homonym n. 1697, word having the same pronunciation as another, but a different meaning; borrowed perhaps through French homonyme, and directly from Latin homonymum, from Greek homónymon, from neuter of homónymos having the same name (homós + ónyma, dialectal form of ónoma NAME).

homophone n. 1843, letter or symbol representing the same sound as another, probably formed from English homo- + -phone, modeled on Greek or borrowed from French homophone, from Greek homóphōnon, from neuter of homóphōnos having the same sound (homós same + phōnḗ sound). —homophony n. 1776, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French homophonie, from Greek homophōnía unison, from homóphōnos; for suffix see *-y*³.

homopterous adj. 1826, borrowed from Greek homópteros (homós same + pterón wing).

Homo sapiens man, human being. 1802, New Latin, from Latin homō sapiēns, literally, man or human being having wisdom (homō man, and sapiēns, present participle of sapere be wise).

homosexual adj. 1892, formed from English homo- + sexual. —n. 1912, from the adjective, possibly by influence of earlier noun use in French (1907).

homunculus n. 1656, borrowed from Latin homunculus, diminutive of homō (genitive hominis) man or human being + diminutive ending -culus, source of English -cle.

honcho n. 1955, American English, officer in charge, originally U.S. Army use in Japan and Korea (1947–53); borrowed from Japanese hanchō group leader (han corps, squad + chō head, chief).

hone n. 1440 hoone whetstone; earlier, in the place name Sutton atte hone in reference to a stone used as a boundary marker (1240); developed from Old English (939) hān stone or rock; cognate with Old Icelandic hein whetstone (Danish hen), from Proto-Germanic Hainō*. —v. sharpen. 1826 (implied in honer), from the noun.

honest adj. Probably before 1300 honest respectable or honorable; borrowed from Old French honeste, learned borrowing from Latin honestus honorable, respected, from honōs HONOR. The meaning of truthful, fair, is first recorded before 1325. —honesty n. Before 1338 honeste honor; later, honorable character or behavior (about 1386); borrowed from Old French honesté, from Latin honestātem (nominative honestās) honor or honesty, shortened form of earlier honestitās*, from honestus.

honey n. Probably about 1200 honi; earlier huni (about 1150); developed from Old English hunig (before 830); earlier in hunisige honeysuckle (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian hunig honey, Old Saxon honey, Middle Dutch honich (modern Dutch honig), Middle Low German honnich, Low German honnig, Old High German honag (modern German Honig), and Old Icelandic hunang (Swedish honung, Danish and Norwegian honning), from Proto-Germanic Hunazǵ-*. —v. sweeten with or as with honey. Probably about 1350, implied in the past participle honied; from the noun. —honeycomb n. Before 1050, Old English hunigcamb (hunig honey + camb comb). —honeymoon n. 1546 hony moone. The sense of a period of good relations, is first found about 1580.

honk n. 1854, American English, of imitative origin. —v. 1854, The sense of sound a horn, especially an automobile horn, is first recorded in 1895, in American English.

honor n. Probably before 1300 honour, earlier onur (probably before 1200); borrowed through Anglo-French honour, onour, Old French honor, onor, from Latin honōrem (nominative honōs, later honor). The form honor was adopted in the U.S. through the influence of Noah Webster. —v. About 1250 honuren; borrowed from Old French honorer, from Latin honōrāre, from Latin honor, n. —honorable adj. Before 1338 honorable, earlier, in the surname Honorable (1256); borrowed from Old French honorable, from Latin honōrābilis, from honōrāre to honor; for suffix see -ABLE. —honorary adj. 1610, perhaps formed from English honor + -ary after Latin honōrārius. Possibly also influenced by French honoraire.

hood¹ n. covering. Probably before 1200 hod, earlier in the surname Hode (1181); developed from Old English (about 700) hōd; cognate with Old Frisian hōd hood, hōde protection, Old Saxon hōd hood, Middle Dutch hoet (modern Dutch hoed hat), Old High German huot hat, huota protection (modern German Hut hat, protection), Old Icelandic hōtr, hatr hat, hood, from Proto-Germanic Hōdaz*. The modern spelling with oo from the early 1400's represents a so-called long vowel, no longer associated with this spelling. —v. Probably before 1200 hoden, from the noun. —hooded adj. About 1440 hodyd, from hood, v. —hoodwink v. 1562, blindfold; formed from English *hood*¹ + wink, v. The meaning of mislead, deceive, is first recorded in 1610, from conceal (before 1600).

hood² n. gangster. 1930, American English, shortened form of HOODLUM, related to *hood*¹ by folk etymology.

-hood a suffix meaning state or condition of being, as in boyhood, likelihood; character of, as in sainthood; group of, as in priesthood; instance of, as in falsehood. Middle English -hode, -hade; developed from Old English -hād, from hād condition, position; cognate with suffixes in Old Frisian and Old Saxon -hēd -hood, Old High German and modern German -heit, and with words in Old Saxon hēd condition, dignity, Old High German heit rank, condition, Old Icelandic heidhr honor, dignity, and Gothic haidus manner, way, from Proto-Germanic Haidūs*. As a suffix -hood has generally replaced the earlier English -head (from Old English -hād) except in godhead and maidenhead.

hoodlum n. 1871, American English, a young street rowdy or loafer; later, a young delinquent or criminal, gangster (1877); of uncertain origin. The word originated in San Francisco in hoof n. Before 1200 hof; developed from Old English (about 1000) hōf; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hōf hoof, Old High German huof (modern German Huf), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hoef, and Old Icelandic hōfr (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian hov), from Proto-Germanic Hōfaz*. For the shift in spelling see HOOF¹. —v. to walk, especially in to hoof it. 1641, to walk; from the noun. The meaning of dance, originated in American English about 1923 (implied in hoofbeat). —hoofbeat n. 1847, American English.

1871 and by about 1877 had spread elsewhere in the United States. The commonest etymology advanced is that hoodlum was borrowed from dialectal German (Bavarian) Huddellump ragamuffin.

hook n. Probably about 1200 hok; earlier, in the surname Hoc (1166) and Hoke (1167); developed from Old English (before 700) -hōc, in wēodhōc weed hook; corresponding to Old Frisian hōk corner, edge, Middle Low German hōk, Middle Dutch hoec (modern Dutch hoek); and perhaps related to Old English haca bolt, Old Saxon haco hook, Middle Dutch hake (modern Dutch haak), Old High German hāko (modern German Haken), and Old Icelandic haka chin, from Proto-Germanic Hōkaz*, Hakan-*, Hēkan-. The modern spelling is first recorded about 1440, and parallels HOOF. —v. Before 1300 hoken to furnish with a hook, and hoked, past participle, curved like a hook, crooked (probably about 1150); developed from Old English (about 1000), past participle hōced crooked. The meaning of to attach as with a hook is first recorded in 1597. —hooked adj. addicted. 1925, from the verb. —hooker n. 1567, thief or pickpocket; later, prostitute (1845); formed from hook, v. + *-er*¹.

hooky or hookey n. play hooky. 1848, American English, probably from hook it to make off, run away, originally depart, proceed (before 1400).

hooligan n. 1898, of uncertain origin, first appearing in British newspaper police-court reports; suggested as coming from the Irish surname Hooligan, possibly in allusion to a music-hall song of the 1890's about the doings of a rowdy family in which the name Hooligan figures. The word was adopted in Russian as khuligan and gained wide currency as a general term of opprobrium for scofflaws, criminals, political dissenters, etc. —hooliganism n. 1898, formed from hooligan + -ism.

hoop n. About 1175 hop; probably developed from Old English hōp*, which would be cognate with Old Frisian hōp ring, hoop, and Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hoep, from Proto-Germanic Hōpa-*. —v. 1440 hoopen, from the noun.

hoopla n. 1877 hoop la, in American English; earlier houp-la exclamation accompanying a quick movement (1870); of uncertain origin (perhaps borrowed from French houp-là upsy-daisy).

hoosier n. 1826, American English, of uncertain origin; perhaps related to the dialectal English (Cumberland) word hoosier, meaning anything unusually large.

hoot v. 1611 hoot to call out or shout in disapproval or scorn; an alteration of houten to shout, call out (before 1325), hūten to call by shouting, shout at in derision (probably about 1200); perhaps of imitative origin. The first recorded use of hoot to represent the cry of some birds, especially the owl, is probably about 1450. —n. Before 1450 houte a shout; later, a shout of disapproval (1612); from the verb.

hop¹ v. spring on one foot. Probably about 1200 hoppen; developed from Old English (about 1000) hoppian to spring, dance, corresponding to Old Icelandic hoppa, modern Dutch hoppen, and Middle High German hopen, from Proto-Germanic Hupnōjanan*; cognate also with Middle Low German huppen to hop, modern Dutch huppelen, Middle High German and modern German hüpfen, this last from Hupjanan*. —n. 1508, from the verb.

hop² n. vine. About 1440 hoppe ripened cones of hop plant used to flavor malt drinks (usually hops); borrowing of Middle Dutch hoppe; cognate with Old Saxon hoppo in feldhoppo hop, Middle Low German hoppe, Old High German hopfo (modern German Hopfen), from Proto-Germanic Hup-nán-*.

hope v. Probably before 1200 hopen, developed from Old English (971) hopian wish and expect, look forward to something; cognate with Old Frisian hopia to hope, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch hopen, Middle High German and modern German hoffen; of unknown origin. —n. Probably before 1200 hope; found in Old English (about 1000) hopa expectation, trust, hope; cognate with Old Frisian, Middle Low German, and Middle Dutch hope (modern Dutch hoop), and Middle High German hoffe. —hopeful adj. Probably before 1200, formed from Middle English hope, n. + -ful. —hopeless adj. 1566, formed from English hope, n. + -less.

hopper n. 1 container having a narrow opening at the bottom. 1277 hoper hopper of a mill. 2 person or animal that hops. About 1250 oppere, earlier, as a surname, perhaps of a dancer (1203); possibly developed from Old English hoppere* a dancer (as found in the feminine hoppestre); also probably influenced by -hoppe in gærs-hoppe (Middle English gras-hoppe). Exactly how the two senses are related is not known, though the juggling of grain in a mill hopper is suggestive of hopping.

hopscotch n. 1801, earlier hop-scot (1789); formed from English *hop*¹ + scotch score, from the scoring of lines in the dirt to make the boxes for the game.

horde n. 1555 horda tribe of Tartar or Asiatic nomads, probably borrowed (or introduced) from Spanish, and possibly from Polish horda (the original spelling in English); also from French horde (the modern English spelling). These languages, including modern German with Horde (earlier Horda) borrowed the word from Western Turkic (compare Tartar urda horde, Turkish ordu camp, army). The h is a spelling device arbitrarily added in the European languages. —v. 1821, gather in a horde, from the noun.

horehound n. 1373 horehound; earlier horhune (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) hār hūne (hār HOAR + hūne name of a plant). The original Middle English spelling was probably altered to horehound by association with “hound” as in the earlier plant name hound’s tongue (Old English hundes tunge).

horizon n. About 1385 orisonte, also orisoun (probably before 1387); borrowed from Old French orizante, orizon, learned borrowing from Latin horizontem (nominative horizōn), from Greek horizōn kýklos bounding circle. In the 1600’s the spelling with h was adopted in imitation of the Latin. —horizontal adj. 1555, relating to or near the horizon; later, parallel to the horizon (1638); borrowed from French horizontal, from Latin horizontem horizon; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

hormone n. 1905, formed in English from Greek hormōn setting in motion, with the assimilation of the chemical suffix -one into the Greek verbal ending -ōn. Greek hormōn is the present participle of hormān impel.

horn n. Old English horn wind instrument (about 830), horn of an animal (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon horn, modern Dutch hoorn, Old High German horn (modern German Horn), Old Icelandic horn, and Gothic haiurn; from Proto-Germanic Hurna-*. —hornpipe n. About 1400 hornepype musical instrument; later, a dance associated with sailors (about 1485); formed from home + pype pipe.

hornet n. Before 1398 harnet large wasp; earlier, a beetle (1387); developed from Old English hyrnet, hymnetu; earlier hirnit, hurnitu (before 800); cognate with Old Saxon hornut hornet, Middle Dutch horsel (modern Dutch horzel), and Old High German hornaz (modern German Hornisse); probably from the base Hurz-*. The spelling hornet appeared about 1500, probably by association with horn, and by the assumption of -et as a suffix.

horology n. 1819, probably formed from Greek hōrā hour + English -logy, but also perhaps, in part, modeled on earlier English horology a clock or clock dial (1509; borrowed from Latin hōrologium device for telling the hour). Also possibly influenced by horologe clock, sundial, hourglass, etc., found as early as 1266, learned borrowing from Latin hōrologium, from Greek hōrológion, from a lost adjective hōrológos* hour-counting, from hōrā HOUR + légein to count.

The English spelling is an imitation of the Latin.

horoscope n. 1568, borrowed from Middle French horoscope, learned borrowing from Latin hōroscopus, from Greek hōroskōpos (hōrā HOUR + -skōpos watching).

Earlier use of horoscope is in the Latin form horoscopus (about 1050), or as a variant spelling with a Latin inflectional ending, oruscupum (about 1400).

horrendous adj. 1659, borrowed from Latin horrendus to be shuddered at, from horrēre to bristle with fear, shudder; Middle English horrend is found without the English suffix -ous (probably 1440).

horrible adj. Probably before 1300 orible, later horrible (about 1375); borrowed from Old French horrible, learned borrowing from Latin horribilis, from horrēre to bristle with fear, shudder; for suffix see -IBLE.

horrid adj. 1590 horrid bristling; later, terrible or dreadful (1601); developed from horred bristling (1410, past participle of horren to bristle, tremble, quake); borrowed from Latin horrere to bristle with fear, shudder. The later spelling horrid may have been influenced by Latin horridus bristling, terrible, from horre.

The weakened sense of unpleasant or offensive (as in horrid weather), is first recorded in 1666, though parallel adverbial use is recorded as early as 1615, with the Middle English spelling horred.

horror n. Before 1325 horer; later orrou (before 1382); borrowed from Old French orror, horreur, and directly from Latin horror, from horre to bristle with fear. The spelling with h is a replacement in imitation of the Latin form.

hors d'oeuvre 1742, earlier, used as an adverb (1714); borrowing of French hors d'œuvre, literally, apart from the main work, annex (hors outside, from Latin foris outside; de from; œuvre work, from Latin opera work).

horse n. About 1200 horse; earlier hors (before 1121); developed from Old English hors (about 725, in Beowulf); earlier in horsthegn horse servant or groom (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian hors horse, Old Saxon hros, Middle Low German ros, ors, Middle Dutch ors (modern Dutch ros steed), Old High German hros horse (modern German, in literary use, Ross horse, steed), and Old Icelandic hross horse, from Proto-Germanic Húrsa-*. —v. provide with a horse or horses. About 1330 horsen, developed from Old English (1013) horsian, from hors, n. The sense of make fun of, play jokes on, is first recorded in 1901. —horseback n. (especially on horseback; before 1393) —horsefly n. (before 1382) —horsehide n. (before 1325 hors hide) —horseman n. (probably before 1200 horsman) —horseshoe n. (before 1387; as a proper name, 1221)

hortatory adj. 1586, giving advice, exhorting; borrowed, possibly through Middle French hortatoire, and directly from Late Latin hortātorius encouraging, cheering, from hortātus, past participle of Latin hortārī exhort, encourage, an intensive form of horārī urge; for suffix see -ORY.

horticulture n. 1678, formed from Latin hortus garden + English culture; probably patterned on agriculture. —horticulturist n. 1818, formed from English horticulture + -ist.

hosanna interj. Before 1325, shout of praise to the Lord; developed from Old English osanna (before 1050); borrowed from Medieval Latin osanna, from Late Latin hōsanna, from Greek hōsanná, from Hebrew hōsha 'nā, probably a shortened form of hōshī 'āh-nā save, we pray. —n. a shout of "hosanna." 1641, from the interjection. The spelling with the initial h was adopted in the 1500's in imitation of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew.

hose n. Probably before 1200 hose, developed from Late Old English (before 1100) hosa covering for the leg; cognate with Old Saxon, Old High German, and Old Icelandic hosa leg covering (modern German Hose trousers), and Middle Dutch hose leggings, waterspout, from Proto-Germanic Húsan-*.

The meaning of a flexible rubber tube to carry liquid is first recorded in 1339 (too early to be influenced by Dutch hoos water pipe or spout, about 1600). —v. Before 1300, furnish with stockings, from hosen, n. The meaning of water with a hose is first recorded in 1889. —hosier n. 1381 hosiery; earlier, in the surname Hosier (1195); formed from English hose, n. + -ier. —hosiery n. 1789, business of a hosier; 1790, stockings; formed from English hosier + -y³.

hospice n. 1818, a rest house for travelers; borrowed from French hospice, learned borrowing from Latin hospitium guest house, hospitality, from hospes (genitive hospitis) guest, host.

In the 1890's the meaning was extended to a home for the destitute or the sick, and to an institution for the care of the terminally ill, in the 1970's.

hospitable adj. 1570, borrowed from Middle French hospitable, with a change of suffix from older hospital hospitable, as if from Medieval Latin hospitabilis*, from Latin hospitārī be a guest, from hospes (genitive hospitis) guest; see HOST¹; for suffix see -ABLE.

hospital n. About 1300 hospital, guest house and shelter for the needy; earlier, in the place name Ospitol (1242–43); borrowed from Old French hospital hostel, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin hospitale guesthouse, inn, neuter form of Latin hospitālis of a guest or host, hospitable, from hospes (genitive hospitis) guest, host¹; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of an institution for sick people is found in 1549. —hospitalize v. 1901, formed from English hospital + -ize, possibly after earlier French hospitaliser.

hospitality n. friendly treatment of guests or strangers. About 1384 hospitalite, earlier, in Scottish, hospitalyte (about 1375); borrowed from Old French hospitalité, learned borrowing from Latin hospitālītātē (nominative hospitālītās) friendliness to guests, from hospes (genitive hospitis) guest, HOST¹.

host¹ n. person who receives another as a guest. About 1250 oste; also, in the surname Host (1254); borrowed from Old French oste, hoste guest, host, from Latin hospitem (nominative hospes), guest, host. —v. Probably 1421 osten; later hosten (about 1450); from the noun.

host² n. multitude. 1265 host multitude of armed men; borrowed from Old French ost, host, from Medieval Latin hostis army, warlike expedition, from Latin hostis enemy, stranger. The generalized meaning of a large number is first recorded in 1613.

Host n. bread or wafer regarded as the body of Christ. About 1303 oste, later hoste (about 1340); borrowed directly from Latin hostia sacrifice, the animal sacrificed.

hostage n. About 1300 hostage, earlier ostage; borrowed from Old French ostage, hostage person given as security or hostage (apparently originally, a lodger held by a landlord as security), from oste, hoste guest, host; for suffix see -AGE. The modern sense of a person seized by a political group, criminal, etc., to obtain money, safe passage, or achieve a political goal, is first recorded in the 1970's.

hostel n. About 1250 hostel, ostel; earlier, in the surname Ostel (1232); borrowed from Old French hostel, from Medieval Latin hospitale inn, large house; see HOSPITAL. —hostelry n. Before 1387–95 hostelrye inn, guesthouse; earlier, in the surname Ostelrye (1315); borrowed from Old French hostelerie, from hostel hostel; for suffix see -RY.

hostile adj. 1594, borrowed through Middle French hostile of or belonging to an enemy, or directly from Latin hostilis, from hostis enemy. —hostility n. Probably before 1425 hostilite; borrowed through Middle French hostilité enmity, or directly from Late Latin hostilitatem (nominative hostilitās) enmity, from hostilis hostile; for suffix see -ITY.

hostler n. Before 1376 hostiler, person who cares for horses at an inn or stable; earlier, innkeeper (1350); borrowed through Anglo-French hostiler, Old French hostelier (from Old French hostel inn + -ier -ier), and from Medieval Latin hostilarius, hostellarius the monk who entertained guests at a monastery, specialized form of hospitalarius one who entertains guests, from hospitale inn; see HOSPITAL.

hot adj. Probably before 1200 hote; earlier hate (about 1150); developed from Old English (971) hāt hot, fervent, fierce; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hēt hot, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch heet, Old High German heiz (modern German heiss), Old Icelandic heitr (Swedish and Norwegian het, Danish hed), Gothic heito fever; related to HEAT. The so-called short o in hot began to appear in the 1550's, possibly by influence of that sound in the comparative hotter in Middle English. The sense of exciting, remarkable, very good, is found in 1895, and that of something stolen, obtained illegally, in 1925. —hotbed n. 1626, bed of earth for forcing growing plants; 1768, place where anything develops rapidly. —hot dog (1900, in American English) —hot rod (1945, in American English). —hot water trouble (1537).

hotel n. 1765, earlier, a student residence at a university (1748); borrowed from French hôtel, from Old French hostel a lodging, from Medieval Latin hospitale inn; see HOSTEL. Doublet of HOSPITAL. —hotelier n. 1905, borrowing of French hôtelier, hotelkeeper, from Old French hostelier, from hostel inn; for suffix see -IER.

hound n. About 1250 hound; earlier hund (1127); developed from Old English hund dog (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hund dog, modern Dutch hond, Old High German hunt (modern German Hund), Old Icelandic hundr, and Gothic hunds; from Proto-Germanic Hundās*.

The original meaning of hound was narrowed in Middle English, before 1127, to refer to a dog used for hunting. —v. 1528, to hunt with hounds; from the noun. The sense of urge on, incite, is first recorded in 1570, and pursue unrelentingly in 1605.

hour n. Before 1338 houre, earlier our (before 1300), ure (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French hore, ore, ure, from Latin hōra hour, time, season, from Greek hōrā. The h is purely a spelling convention and has not represented a sound in this form since Roman times.

house n. About 1250 house; earlier huse (before 1121); developed from Old English hūs dwelling, shelter, house (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hūs house, Middle Dutch huus (modern Dutch huis), Old High German hūs (modern German Haus), Old Icelandic hūs, and Gothic -hūs in gudhūs temple, from Proto-Germanic Hūsan*. —v. About 1300 housen give shelter; earlier husen (about 1125); developed from Old English (about 1000) hūsan, from hūs, n. —household n., adj. (probably about 1380) —House of Commons (1621, from earlier commons the people, about 1330) —House of Representatives (1692, American English, in reference to the legislature of the Colony of Massachusetts).

housing¹ n. About 1350 housinge buildings or houses collectively, shelter, lodging; earlier husing (before 1325); developed from Middle English huse, hous + -ing¹.

housing² n. 1782, ornamental covering for a horse, American English; from earlier housings, pl., a covering or trappings, especially of cloth; derived from Middle English houce (1312–13), house (about 1475) a covering for the back and flanks of a horse; borrowed from Old French houce (modern French housse), from Medieval Latin hultia (earlier hulftia*), from Frankish Hulfti* (compare Middle Dutch hulftie pocket for bow and arrow, and Middle High German hulft covering). The sense of any case or enclosure for a machine or part is first recorded in 1882; perhaps the same word as *housing*¹ in later senses.

hovel n. 1358 hovel roofed passage or vent for smoke; later, a little cottage, hut (1440), and a shed for animals (1425); of uncertain origin. —v. lodge in a hovel. 1583, from the noun.

hover v. About 1400 hoveren, a frequentative form of earlier hoven hover, tarry, linger (1250); of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ER⁴. —n. act of hovering. 1513 hovir; from the verb.

how adv. Probably before 1200 hou as an adverb; later how in what way (probably before 1300); developed from Old English hū (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian hū, hō how, Old Saxon huuo, hwō, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch hoe, and Old High German huuo, from Proto-Germanic Hwō-*. A parallel formation is represented by Middle Dutch hū how, Old High German huio (modern German wie), and Gothic hwaiwa. All forms are related to Old English hwā WHO. —however conj., adv. 1392 how euere no matter how, to what extent; and how ever in whatever manner (before 1400); later, in any case (1591); formed from Middle English hou, adv. + ever, adv.

howitzer n. 1695 hauwitzer; also howitz (1687); borrowed from Dutch houwitzer, and from German Haubitze; earlier Haubnitze from early modern German haufnütz a catapult, from Czech houfnice; introduced during the Hussite wars.

howl v. Probably before 1300 houlen, earlier hulen (before 1250); probably of imitative origin, and parallel with Middle Dutch hūlen to howl (modern Dutch huilen), and Middle High German hiulen, hiuweln to howl, hoot like an owl (modern German heulen), possibly connected with Old High German hūwila owl. —n. 1599, from the verb. —howler n. 1840, animal that howls; formed from English howl, v. + *-er*¹. The sense of a severe storm with much wind is first recorded in 1872, and that of a glaring blunder, ridiculous mistake, in 1890.

hoyden n. 1593, rude, boorish fellow; perhaps borrowed from Dutch heiden rustic, uncultivated man, from Middle Dutch heiden HEATHEN. The meaning of a rude, boisterous female, is first recorded in 1676.

hub n. 1649, probably a word earlier confined to wheelwrights' vocabulary and perhaps developing from hubbe the hob of a fireplace (1511), originally, mass, lump; or from the sense of peg or pin (1589); of unknown origin. Until the 1800's the record shows hub as a dialectal word, becoming generally known in connection with bicycles. The meaning of any center of interest, activity, importance, etc., is first recorded in 1858.

hubbub n. 1555 whobub confused noise, hue and cry; of uncertain origin (sometimes referred to as an Irish outcry, suggesting an interjection of Celtic origin such as Gaelic ub! ub! ubub! an expression of aversion or contempt).

hubris n. 1884, insolent pride, arrogance; possibly a back formation from earlier hubristic, or a borrowing from Greek hybris wanton violence, insolence, outrage; of unknown origin. —hubristic adj. 1831, borrowed from Greek hybristikós insolent, wanton, from hybrizein to insult, act outrageously, from hybris.

huckleberry n. 1670 huckelberry, probably an alteration of Middle English hurtleberry whortleberry (1452–54, hurtle-, probably diminutive of Old English horte whortleberry + bery berry).

huckster n. Probably about 1200 huster peddler, petty merchant; probably developed from hukken to sell or peddle (1181 in personal name); and later from hucking (probably before 1300), cognate with and perhaps influenced by Middle Dutch hokester peddler, from hoken to peddle, *HAWK*² sell. The derogatory sense of a person willing to profit in a petty way is first recorded in 1553, and the sense in American English of a person in the advertising industry, in 1946. —v. peddle, haggle. 1592, from the noun.

huddle v. 1579, crowd close; earlier, as an adverb hudle confusedly (1564); probably related to hoderen heap together or huddle (about 1300), and cognate with Low German huden to cover or shelter, Middle Low German huden to cover up, *HIDE*¹. —n. 1586, crowded mass or heap; apparently from the verb. An earlier sense of a miserly, old person is recorded in 1579, but may be a different word.

hue¹ n. color. Probably before 1200 hewe; later heu (about 1250); developed from Old English hiw color, form, appearance, beauty (before 899); earlier hiow, hēow (before 830), hio (before 800), and hēo (about 750). The Old English forms are cognate with Old Icelandic hy down or complexion (Swedish and Norwegian dialect hy complexion), and Gothic hiwi form or appearance, from Proto-Germanic Hiwjan*.

hue² n. a shouting. Probably before 1200 hiue outcry, clamor; later hue (probably about 1380); borrowed from Old French hue, hu outcry, noise, war or hunting cry; probably of imitative origin.

The phrase hue and cry appeared in 1246 as an Anglo-French legal term with the meaning of outcry calling for the pursuit of a felon, and was extended to the general sense of cry of alarm or outcry by 1584.

huff v. 1583, to puff or blow; earlier, as an interjection huf (about 1450); apparently a word imitative of the sound of blowing or of a blast of air. The extended sense of to puff or swell with indignation, to storm, bluster, is first recorded in 1598. —n. 1599, a gust or sudden swell of anger or arrogance; from the verb. —huffy adj. 1677, blustering; 1680, arrogant, ready to take offense; from huff, n. + *-y*¹.

hug v. 1567 hugge to embrace; of uncertain origin (perhaps from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic hugga to comfort). —n. 1617, a hold in wrestling; from the verb.

huge adj. Probably about 1150 huge extremely large; borrowed apparently as a shortened form of Old French ahuge extremely large; of unknown origin.

Huguenot n. 1565, borrowed from Middle French huguenot, name in the early 1520's for the Genevan partisans who opposed the Duke of Savoy. Huguenot, earlier eiguenot, was probably an alteration of Swiss German Eidgenoss confederate (modern German Eidgenosse), from Middle High German eigenōze (eit OATH + genōze comrade). Middle French Huguenot was re-formed from eiguenot probably by association with the name Hugues Besançon, leader of the Genevan partisans.

hula or hula-hula n. About 1835, borrowed from Hawaiian hula or hulahula, a reduplication of hula. —v. 1952, American English; from the noun.

hulk n. 1338 hulk a trading ship, warship; developed from Old English (about 1050) hulc light, fast ship; probably borrowed from Old Dutch hulke and from Medieval Latin hulcus, from Greek holkás merchant ship. The meaning of a big, clumsy person, is found before 1400, and probably earlier as a surname Hulkebon, 1316. The meaning of body of an old or worn-out ship appears in 1671. —v. About 1793, to lounge about; later, loom bulkily (1880); from the noun. —hulking adj. big, clumsy. 1698, formed from English hulk, n. + *-ing*¹.

hull¹ n. seed covering. Before 1398 hulle, earlier hoyle (1373); developed from Old English (about 1000) hulu; from Proto-Germanic Hulús*, yielding Old High German hulla covering (modern German Hülle covering, hull), and Old High German hulsa husk, pod (modern German Hülse) and Dutch huls hull. —v. Probably before 1425 hullen; earlier holen (before 1338); from the noun.

hull² n. body or frame of a ship. 1571, of uncertain origin (perhaps an extended use of *hull*¹) or the same as Middle English hoole a ship's keel or hull, about 1440, probably from the same source as *HOLD*² (interior of a ship).

hullabaloo n. 1762 hollo-ballo uproar, appearing at first chiefly in Scottish and Northern English sources; possibly a rhyming reduplication of hollo, holla HELLO.

hum v. About 1385 hommen make a murmuring sound to cover up embarrassment, later hummen to buzz, drone (probably 1440); probably of imitative origin and parallel to Middle High German hummen and Dutch hommel to hum.

The meaning of sing with closed lips, is first recorded in 1640, and that of be busy and active in 1884. —n. 1469, from the verb.

human adj. Probably about 1450 humaigne, humayne of or belonging to man; borrowed from Middle French humain, learned borrowing from Latin hūmānus, probably related to homō (genitive hominis) man, human being; cognate with Old English guma man (which did not survive into Middle English except in the form bridegome bridegroom, from Old English brȳdguma), Old High German gomo, Old Icelandic gumi, and Gothic guma, from Proto-Germanic guman-*. —n. human being. Before 1533, from the adjective. For about 250 years human and humane shared the meaning “of or belonging to man,” but in the 1700’s the meanings differentiated in spelling and pronunciation so that human with its stress on the first syllable, retained the original sense and humane with its stress on the last syllable, became restricted to the sense of merciful, kind. The process of a differentiation of meaning, however, was gradual, beginning about 1500.

humane adj. kind, merciful. Probably about 1450 humaigne, humayne of or belonging to man; later, having qualities befitting human beings, gentle, friendly, courteous (about 1500); variant of HUMAN.

In the early 1700’s, this word became restricted in use to the meaning kind, merciful. See the note under HUMAN.

humanism n. 1812, the belief in the mere humanity of Christ, possibly borrowed from French humanisme (1763). However, humanism has been used in association with several systems of philosophical thought. In the sense of the Renaissance revival of interest in the classics, humanism appeared in 1832, patterned on the earlier (1589) humanist a classical scholar; borrowed from Middle French humaniste, from Latin hūmānus HUMAN. Humanism, as a pragmatic system of thought, was introduced in 1903 by C.S. Schiller, who wrote in 1907, “Humanism. . . is merely the perception that the philosophic problem concerns human beings striving to comprehend a world of human experience by the resources of human minds.” —humanistic adj. (1845).

humanity n. About 1384 humanite kindness, graciousness; borrowed from Old French humanité, from Latin hūmānitātem (nominative hūmānitās) human nature, humanity, from hūmānus HUMAN; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of mankind or the human race, is first recorded as humanite (about 1450). —humanitarian n. 1819, one who affirms the humanity of Christ; formed from English humanity + -arian, as in unitarian, trinitarian. The meaning of one devoted to human welfare, a philanthropist, is first recorded in 1844 and was originally disparaging, connoting one who goes to excess in humane principles.

humble adj. About 1275 umble modest, not proud; later humble (about 1375); borrowed from Old French umble, humble, earlier humele, learned borrowing from Latin humilis lowly, humble, from humus earth. The introduction of b in Old French is typical of the vowel loss between m and l in a borrowed word such as humble or semblance. —v. About 1380; from the adjective.

The expression eat humble pie (1830), derived from humble pie (recorded before 1648), variant of umble pie a pie made from the umbles or edible inner parts of an animal, considered a food of inferiors. Hence the expression arose as a fusion of umble pie and humble, adj. The word umbles (about 1450) variant of numbles (1333–34), and noubles (probably before 1300), was borrowed from Old French nombres, numbles loin or fillet.

humblebee n. Before 1475 humbulbe bumblebee, a compound of humbul- (cognate with Middle Low German humelbe humblebee, and Middle Dutch hommelbij, related to Dutch hommel to HUM) + bee. The formation in Middle English was probably influenced by humblen to hum or buzz (before 1384).

humbug n. 1751, a slang word among students meaning a hoax, jest, trick, or deception; of unknown origin. —v. to trick. 1751, from the noun.

humdinger n. 1905, American English slang; possibly from hum a murmur of approbation + ding, American English dialect or slang, something superlative (1809, from ding to beat, surpass, excel, 1724; from Middle English dingen to beat + -er).

humdrum adj. 1553, monotonous; dull, varied reduplication of HUM, v., to make a continuous sound, possibly with the second element influenced by drum.

humerus n. 1706, originally, shoulder (1392); borrowed from Latin umerus (misspelled humerus) shoulder.

humid adj. Before 1400 humide, borrowed through Old French humide, umide, or directly from Latin ūmidus (with variant hūmidus, by influence of humus earth), from ūmere be moist. —humidity n. 1392 humidite; borrowed from Old French humidité, from Latin hūmiditatem (nominative hūmiditās), from hūmidus humid; for suffix see -ITY.

humiliate v. 1533–34, probably a back formation from humiliation, after Latin humiliāre, to humble, from humilis HUMBLE; for suffix see -ATE. —humiliation n. About 1390 humyliaoun, borrowed from Old French humiliation, from Late Latin humiliatiōnem (nominative humiliatiō), from Latin humiliāre; for suffix see -ATION. —humility n. Probably before 1300 humilite; borrowed from Old French humilité, umilité, from Latin humilitatem (nominative humilitās), from humilis humble; for suffix see -ITY.

hummock n. 1608; earlier hoommocke (1555); originally a nautical term for a conical hillock on the seacoast. The first element is of uncertain origin; the second element -ock is a diminutive suffix. humongous adj. 1976, American English, apparently a fanciful coinage from huge and monstrous to reinforce tremendous.

humor n. 1340 humour moisture, body fluid; borrowed from Old French humor, umor, learned borrowing from Latin umor (also humor by fancied connection with humus earth) body fluid, related to umēre be wet, moist, and ūvēscere become wet.

In Middle English, humor referred to any liquid or moisture, and specifically to one of the four body fluids (blood, phlegm, choler, and melancholy or black bile), the relative proportions of which were thought to determine mental disposition. The meaning of mood, state of mind, which developed from this is first recorded in 1525. The sense of a funny or amusing quality, jocularly, is found in 1682, and developed probably by way of whim, caprice, recorded in 1565 (a meaning that was ridiculed by Shakespeare and Ben Jonson). —v. give in to the whims of (a person); indulge. 1588, from the noun. —humorist n. 1596, a whimsical person; 1599, a comical person or wag; probably formed from English humor + -ist, after Middle French humoriste. —humorous adj. Probably before 1425, relating to the body humors; borrowed from Middle French humoreux damp, from Old French humor, umor body fluid. The meaning of funny (formed from English humor, n. + -ous) is first recorded in 1705.

hump n. 1681, in humpbacked; taking the place of earlier crump (in Old English before 800) and corresponding to Dutch homp lump, Middle Low German hump bump, Norwegian hump bump, hump, lump, from Proto-Germanic Hump-*. —v. 1835, exert (oneself) in great effort; from the noun. The meaning of raise into a hump is first recorded in 1840.

humus n. 1796, borrowed probably from French humus and directly from Latin humus earth, soil (very likely a back formation from humī on the ground).

hunch v. Probably before 1500, to push, thrust; of unknown origin.

The meaning of raise or bend into a hump, arch (one's back), is first recorded in 1678; the same meaning, however, is found in hunchbacked as early as 1598. —n. 1630, a push, thrust; from the verb. The meaning of a hump, protuberance, is found in 1804. The literal meaning of push or thrust, gave rise to the figurative sense of a hint or tip (1849), followed by premonition or presentiment (1904). —hunchback n. person with a hunched back. 1712, back formation from hunchbacked (1598).

hundred n. In Old English (about 950) hundred the count of 100 (hund 100 + -red count, reckoning), corresponding to Old Frisian hundred, hunderd, Old Saxon hunderod, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch honderd, Old High German hundert, modern German Hundert, (from Proto-West-Germanic Hūndrad*), and Old Icelandic hundrað one hundred twenty, equivalent to English great hundred.

Cognates of hund, the common Old English word for 100, are found throughout the Indo-European languages: in Old Saxon hund; all basically meaning "ten times ten" or "ten tens," see TEN and CENT. Cognates of Old English -red appear in Old Icelandic -ræðhr (in ni-ræðhr 90) and Gothic -rathjan to count or reckon; see REASON. —hundredth adj. Before hunger n. Old English hungor pain caused by lack of food, hunger (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian hunger hunger, Old Saxon hungar (modern Dutch honger), Old High German hungar (modern German Hunger), Old Icelandic hungri, from Proto-Germanic Hungris*, and Gothic hūhnus (with loss of ng before h), from Proto-Germanic HúnHruz*. —v. About 1250 hungren; earlier hungeren (probably before 1200); replacing Old English (recorded before 830) hyngrian, hyngrian; cognate with Old Frisian hungera to hunger, Old Saxon gihungrian, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch hungeren (modern Dutch honger), Old High German hungaren (modern German hungern), Old Icelandic hungra, and Gothic huggrian (in which gg represents ng). —hungry adj. About 1150 hungri, developed from Old English (about 950) hungrig (hunger hunger + -ig -y¹).

1325, formed from Middle English hundred + -th, possibly by influence of Old Icelandic hundraðhr in confusion with Old English variants hundrath, hundreth hundred.

hunk n. Before 1813, possibly borrowed from Flemish hunke, which is perhaps related to Dutch homp lump, HUMP.

hunker v. 1720, Scottish, possibly from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hūka to crouch, hoka, hokra to crawl). The phrase hunker down was originally a southwestern U.S. dialectal use popularized about 1965. —n. hunkers, pl. haunches. 1785, derived from hunker.

hunky-dory adj. 1866, American English, all right, fine; perhaps an irregular reduplication of hunkey all right, satisfactory (1861), from earlier hunk in a safe position, all right (1847), adjective use of dialectal (New York) noun hunk goal or home (in children's games). Hunk was borrowed from Dutch honk goal or home, from Middle Dutch honc place of refuge or hiding place, probably originally Frisian (compare West Frisian honcke, honck house, place of refuge, East Frisian hunk corner, nook; also home, in a game).

hunt v. 1127 hunten; developed from Old English (about 1000) huntian chase game; related to hentan to seize. —n. Before 1131, one who hunts; later, act of hunting (about 1375); from the verb. —hunter n. About 1250 huntere; earlier, in the place name Huntercumba (about 1183); formed from English hunt, v. + *-er*¹. Hunter replaced earlier hunte (1127), developed from Old English (before 900) hunta.

hurdle n. Probably before 1300 hirdle frame or lattice; later hurdle (1356); developed from Old English (about 725) hyrdel frame of intertwined twigs (used as a temporary barrier), diminutive of hyrd door; cognate with Old Saxon hurth plaiting or netting (modern Dutch horde wickerwork), Old High German hurd (modern German Hürde hurdle), Old Icelandic hurdh door, and Gothic haurds, from Proto-Germanic Hurdís*. The meaning of a barrier to jump over in a race is first recorded in 1833, and the figurative sense of an obstacle, difficulty, in 1924. —v. 1598, to construct like a hurdle; from the noun. The meaning of jump over is first recorded in 1896.

hurdy-gurdy n. 1749, instrument played by cranking a handle; perhaps imitative of its sound and influenced by earlier hirdy-girdy uproar, confusion (about 1500).

hurl v. Probably before 1200 hurlen to rush violently; later, to knock or throw forcibly (about 1300); of uncertain origin, but similar in form to Low German hurreln to throw or dash, and East Frisian hurreln to roar or bluster. —n. 1530 hurtle forcible throw; from the verb; first recorded in about 1380 in the sense of rushing water.

hurly-burly n. 1539, alteration of hurling and burling (about 1530), a varied reduplication of hurling commotion, tumult (about 1387).

hurrah n. 1686 hurra; later hurray (1694); hurrah (1841); alteration of (and substitute for) HUZZA. The forms hurrah, hurray are parallel to modern German Hurra, Danish and Swedish hurra, modern Dutch hoera, and similar shouts. —interj. 1716 whurra; later hurree (1773; hurray 1855; hurrah 1845). —v. 1798 hurray; later hurrah (1868); from the noun and interjection.

hurricane n. 1555 furacane violent tropical cyclone; borrowed from Spanish huracán, from Arawakan (West Indies) huracán. The earliest forms, such as furacane, haurachana, and uracan, are alterations of Spanish huracán and of Portuguese furacão. The present spelling was established by 1688.

hurry v. 1590, to move or act quickly; probably associated with hurren to vibrate rapidly, buzz (before 1398), Middle High German hurren to whirl, move fast, Icelandic hurra to hum, and Norwegian hurra to whirl, from Proto-Germanic Hurzā*-. —n. 1600, commotion, agitation; possibly from the verb. The meaning of quick movement or action is first recorded in 1692.

hurt v. Probably before 1200 hurten; probably borrowed from Old French hurter to ram, strike, collide, perhaps from Frankish (compare Middle High German hurten run at, collide). —n. Probably before 1200 hurt wound, malady; probably from the verb.

hurtle v. Before 1338 hurtlen; earlier, as the gerund hurtlinge (about 1225); probably a frequentative form of hurten, HURT; for suffix see -LE³.

husband n. Probably before 1200 husbonde, later housbonde master of the house, married man; developed from Old English (before 1050) hūsbonða; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic húsbōndi master of the house, a compound of hūs HOUSE and bōndi householder, dweller). —v. manage thriftily. Probably before 1430 housbonden; later husbonden (1440); from husbonde, housbonde husband, n.

hush v. 1546, probably a back formation from huscht, adj., quiet, silent (about 1405); earlier huisht (about 1385), and hust (about 1380); probably of imitative origin. —interj. 1604, probably a back formation from whist, whisht be quiet! silence! (about 1382); earlier hust (about 1390); either of imitative origin or possibly from the verb. —n. 1689, from the verb. —hush-hush adj. 1916, reduplication of hush, interj.

husk n. About 1400 husk; earlier huske the foreskin (1392); perhaps borrowed from Middle Dutch huuskyn little house, core of a fruit, case, diminutive of huus HOUSE. —v. 1562, from the noun.

husky¹ adj. 1 hoarse. 1552, of, like, or having husks; formed from English husk + -y¹. The meaning of dry in the throat or hoarse is recorded before 1722, from dry as a husk, without natural moisture (1599). 2 tough and strong, stout, sturdy (like a corn husk). 1869, American English. A noun with the meaning of a strong or stout person is recorded in 1864.

husky² n. Eskimo dog. 1830 Hoskey an Eskimo, Canadian English, shortened variant of Eskimo, as in Ehuskemay (1743). Husky Eskimo dog, appeared as huski (1852), and huskie (1872).

hussar n. 1532, borrowed perhaps through German husar, from Hungarian huszár light horseman, (originally, free-booter); from Old Serbian husar, variant of kursar pirate, from Italian corsaro CORSAIR.

hussy n. 1530, mistress of a household, housewife; alteration (by shortening of the vowel and loss of w) of Middle English housewif; earlier husewif (probably before 1200), a compound of huse, HOUSE and wif WIFE; however, perhaps hussy is a clipping with shortening of the vowel in huse-, and an addition of the diminutive suffix -y². In some areas the meaning changed to any woman or girl, and by 1650 applied to a woman or girl who shows casual or improper behavior (as in bold hussy); by the 1800's hussy acquired a generally derogatory meaning.

hustings n.pl. or sing. Probably before 1200 husting a council or an assembly; developed from Old English hūsting meeting, court, tribunal, 1012; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hūsting council, a compound of hūs house and thing assembly); so called as such a meeting was held among the members of a group or "household" of a nobleman or other leader. The shift from th to t represents a weakening of the stress on -thing that took place before the word was borrowed into Old English.

The plural form hustings (1463) gradually became the usual form of the word. The meaning of a temporary platform from which speeches are made in a political campaign, is first recorded in 1719.

hustle v. 1684, to shake to and fro; borrowed from Dutch hutselen or husseln to shake, a frequentative form of hutsen, variant of hutsen to shake; for suffix see -LE³. The meaning of push roughly, shove, is first recorded in 1751. The sense of hurry or move quickly is found in 1812, and that of to obtain in a hurried, rough, or illegal manner, developed in American English (1840). Also developed from the earlier notion of pushing and hurrying, is the sense of sell goods aggressively (1887). —n. 1715, a shaking together; later, a jostling (1803); from the verb. The meaning of illegal business activity, racket, swindle, is first recorded in 1963, in American English. —hustler n. (1825) hut n. 1658, borrowed from French hutte cottage, from Old French, from either Middle High German hütte cottage or hut, or from Old High German hutta roughly built temporary dwelling, from Proto-Germanic Hudjan*-.

hutch n. About 1200 hucche chest or coffer; borrowed from Old French huche, (also) huge, from Medieval Latin hutica chest, of uncertain origin. The meaning of a pen for animals, is found before 1398 and that of a hut or small cabin, in 1607. The later sense of a cupboard for food or dishes, is first recorded in 1671.

hyacinth n. 1553, precious stone of a blue color, later, flowering plant (1578, replacing earlier iactinct, jacinct jacinth, recorded probably about 1200); borrowed from Latin hyacinthus, from Greek hyákynthos a purple or deep-red flower.

hybrid n. 1601, borrowed originally from Latin hybrida, variant of ibrida mongrel, (specifically) offspring of a tame sow and a wild boar, of uncertain origin, but probably from Greek hybrída*, accusative of a lost noun hybrís* mongrel. English hybrid was also borrowed in some instances from French hybride, also from Latin hybrida. —adj. Before 1716; from the noun. —hybridize v. 1845, formed from English hybrid + -ize. —hybridization n. 1851, formed from English hybridize + -ation.

hydr- a form of hydro- before vowels, as in hydrate, hydraulic.

hydra n. 1835–36, New Latin Hydra, the genus name of a freshwater polyp which can regenerate parts of its body, from Latin Hydra, hydra mythical many-headed water serpent whose heads grew back as fast as they were cut off, from Greek Hýdrā, from hýdōr (genitive hýdatos) WATER.

The mythical water serpent, hydra is first recorded in English as idre (about 1380); this form was borrowed through Old French hydre. The figurative meaning of a many-sided problem, hindrance, etc., is first recorded in 1494.

hydrangea n. 1753, New Latin Hydrangea a compound of Greek hydr-, stem coexisting with hýdōr (genitive hýdatos) WATER and angēon vessel or capsule, from ángos vessel; so called from the shrub's vessel-shaped seed capsule.

hydrant n. 1806; formed in American English from Greek hydr-, stem coexisting with hýdōr water + English -ant, as if from the present participle of a Latin verb.

hydrate n. 1802, borrowed from French hydrate, from Greek hydr-, stem coexisting with hýdōr (genitive hýdatos) WATER. —v. 1 combine with water to form a hydrate. 1850, from the noun. 2 to combine with water to restore moisture to (a food product, etc). 1947, an extension of def. 1.

hydraulic adj. 1606, borrowed, probably by influence of Middle French hydraulique, from Latin hydraulicus, from Greek hydraulikós, from hýdraulis water organ (hydr-, stem coexisting with hýdōr, genitive hýdatos, WATER + aulós musical instrument, hollow tube). Hydraulic is first recorded referring to a hydraulic organ using water pressure to compress the air, in 1626. —hydraulics n. 1671, formed from English hydraulic + -s on analogy with mathematics, etc.

hydro- a combining form meaning: 1 water, as in hydrometer, hydroplane. 2 containing hydrogen, as in hydrocarbon, containing hydrogen and carbon. Borrowed from Greek hydro-, combining form of hýdōr WATER.

hydrocarbon n. 1826, formed from English hydro- + carbon.

hydroelectric adj. 1827, formed from English hydro + electric.

hydrofoil n. 1920, formed from English hydro + foil.

hydrogen n. 1791, borrowed from French hydrogène, from Greek hydr-, stem coexisting with hýdōr (genitive hýdatos) WATER + French -gène -gen. The compound was formed in allusion to the combining of hydrogen with oxygen to produce water. —hydrogenate v. 1809, formed from English hydrogen + *-ate*¹.

hydrolysis n. 1880, chemical decomposition by water; earlier, implied in hydrolytic (1875); formed from English hydro- + Greek lýsis a loosening or dissolution, from lýein to loosen, dissolve.

hydrophobia n. 1392 ydroforbia, erroneous spelling in the borrowing from Late Latin hydrophobia, from Greek hydrophobía, from hydrophóbos dreading water (hydr-, stem coexisting with hýdōr water + phóbos dread; fear).

hydroplane n. 1904, American English, motorboat that glides on the surface of water; formed from English hydro- + -plane, as in airplane. —v. to travel in a hydroplane. 1909, from the noun. The verb meaning of automobile tires riding on a plane or a thin layer of water, is first recorded in 1962.

hydroponics n. 1937, formed from English hydro- + -ponics (from Greek ponēin to labor, toil, from pónos labor) + English -ics. This horticultural method was developed in 1929.

hydrozoan n. 1869, formed from New Latin Hydrozoa + English suffix -an. The class name Hydrozoa (coined in 1843), is from Greek hydr-, stem coexisting with hýdōr (genitive hýdatos) WATER and zōion animal, related to zōē life.

hyena n. 1340 hyane; later hiena (before 1398); borrowed from Old French hiene, hyene, and directly from Latin hyaena, from Greek hýaina, from hýs pig.

hygiene n. 1671, borrowed from French hygiène, from New Latin ars hygieina the healthful art, translation of Greek hygieinē téchnē, from hygieia health, from hygiēs healthy (literally, living well). —hygienic adj. 1833, probably borrowed from French hygiénique, from hygiène.

hygro- a combining form meaning wet, moist, moisture, as in hygrometer, hygroscope. Borrowed from Greek hygro-, combining form of hygrós wet, moist, fluid.

hymeneal adj. 1600 hymniall, formed in English from Latin hymenaeus, from Greek hyménaios belonging to wedding; wedding, wedding song (from Hymén, Greek god of marriage) + English suffix *-al*¹. —hymen n. 1543, borrowed from French hymen, and directly from Late Latin hymén, from Greek hymén (genitive hyménos) virginal membrane.

hymenopterous adj. 1813, New Latin hymenopterus, from Greek hymenópteros (hymén, genitive hyménos, membrane + pterón wing); for suffix see -OUS. The word is descriptive of the transparent, membranous wings of these insects.

hymn n. 1613, a song of praise to God, an alteration in spelling (by influence of Latin hymnus) of Middle English ymne (probably before 1200). These forms were in part borrowed from Old French ymne (from Medieval Latin ymnus, from Latin hymnus), and also developed from Old English ymen, hymen (before 830); borrowed from Latin hymnus song of praise, from Greek hýmnos song or ode in praise of gods or heroes; earlier wedding hymn; possibly formed on Hymén Greek god of marriage). —hymnal n. Probably before 1500 hymnale, borrowed from Medieval Latin hymnale, imnale, from ymnus hymn; for suffix see -AL¹. —hymnbook n. About 900 ymenbec, later hymn-book (1779); re-formed from modern English hymn + book.

hyp- a form of the prefix hypo- before vowels, as in hypabyssal (below the abyssal plain, in geology).

hype¹ n. excessive or misleading publicity or advertising. 1967, American English, probably in part developed from hyperbole by back formation; and in part from underworld slang, a swindle by overcharging or short-changing (1926; apparently a back formation from hyper a short-change confidence man, 1914, probably from hyper- over, to excess; see HYPER-). —v. 1967, American English, to use hype; publicize, promote, or advertise excessively or deceptively; earlier, to deceive, trick, or con (about 1945); and in underworld slang, to swindle by overcharging or short-changing (1926); from the noun.

hype² v. Usually, hype up, stimulate, stir up, excite. 1938, American English (drug addicts' slang), stimulate or excite by or as if by the injection of a narcotic drug; from earlier hype a hypodermic injection or needle (1920's; a drug addict), short for HYPODERMIC.

hyper- a prefix meaning over, above, beyond, exceedingly, to excess, as in hyperacidity, hypersensitive, hypertension. Borrowed from Greek hyper-, from hypér, adv. and prep., beyond, over, OVER.

hyperbola n. 1668, New Latin hyperbola, from Greek hyperbolē extravagance (hyper- beyond + bol-, nominal stem of ballein to throw); so called from a geometric function of a cone such that any cross section of the cone from the base is at an angle greater than the angle of the sloping sides of the cone.

hyperbole n. Probably before 1425 iperbole, later hyperbole (1579); borrowing of Latin hyperbolē (possibly by influence of Middle French hyperbole), from Greek hyperbolē exaggeration or extravagance; see HYPERBOLA. —hyperbolic adj. 1646, formed from English hyperbole + -ic, influenced by French hyperbolique from Late Latin hyperbolicus, from Greek hyperbolikós, from hyperbolē hyperbole.

hyperglycemia n. New Latin hyperglycemia (hyper- over + glycemia presence or level of sugar in the blood, from Greek glykys sweet + New Latin -aemia, from Greek haima, genitive haimatos, blood).

hyperon n. 1953, formed from hyper- over + -on elementary particle, as in proton, neutron.

hyphen n. About 1620, borrowing of Late Latin hyphen, from Greek hyphén hyphen (mark joining two syllables or words and probably indicating that two notes were to be held or blended together in music, similar to the tie). Greek hyphén is formed from hyp' (reduced form of hypó) under, and hén, neuter of heís one. —v. 1814, from the noun. —hyphenation n. 1886, formed from English hyphen, v. + -ation. —hyphenate v. 1892, possibly a back formation from hyphenation and a formation of English hyphen, n. + -ate.

hypno- (also hypn- before vowels). a combining form meaning sleep, as in hypnology; or hypnotism, as in hypnotherapy. Borrowed from Greek hypno- combining form of hypnos sleep.

hypnosis n. 1882; earlier, inducement of sleep (1876); New Latin hypnosis, formed from Greek hypnos sleep + -ōsis condition.

hypnotic adj. 1625, inducing sleep, borrowed from French hypnotique inclined to sleep, soporific, learned borrowing from Late Latin hypnōticus, from Greek hypnōtikós inclined to sleep, putting to sleep, sleepy, adjective to hypnōsis* a putting to sleep, from hypnoín put to sleep; from hypnos sleep. The meaning "of hypnosis or hypnotism" is first recorded in English in 1843. —n. 1681; from the adjective. —hypnotism n. 1843, from English hypnotic + -ism; earlier in neuro-hypnotism (1842). —hypnotist n. 1843, formed from English hypnotism + -ist. —hypnotize v. 1843, formed from English hypnotic + -ize.

hypo- a prefix meaning: 1 under, beneath, below, less than, slightly, or somewhat, as in hypodermic, hyposensitive, hypotension. 2 Chemistry. indicating amount of oxidation less than that of a compound without the prefix, as in hypochlorous acid, which is less oxidized than chlorous acid. Borrowed from Greek hypo-, from hypó, prep. and adv., under.

hypochondria n. 1839, illness without a specific cause; earlier, depression or melancholy without a real cause (1668); used as a singular form of the earlier plural hypochondria (1563; earlier ypocandria, 1373) upper region of the abdomen; borrowed from Late Latin hypochondria the abdomen, from Greek (neuter plural) hypochōndria (hypo- under + chōndros cartilage of the breastbone). The plural sense arose from the belief that the viscera of the hypochondria were the seat of melancholy. Formation of hypochondria with the meaning of an imaginary illness, was also influenced by hypochondriasis, of the same meaning (1766). —hypochondriac n. 1639, person affected with melancholy; probably a shortened form of earlier hypochondriacal (1611), and in some instances borrowed from French hypochondriaque, originally as an adjective with the sense of affected with melancholy, from Greek hypochondriakós of the abdomen, from hypochōndria. The meaning of a person suffering from imaginary illness is first recorded in 1888.

hypocrisy n. Probably before 1200 ypocresie false appearance of virtue; pretense, in religious matters; borrowed from Old French ypocrisie, learned borrowing from Late Latin hypocrisis, from Greek hypókrisis acting on the stage, pretense, from hypokrínesthai play a part (hypo- under + krínein to sift, decide). The spelling with h was adopted in English (as in French) in the 1500's. —hypocrite n. Probably before 1200 ypocrite a person who pretends to virtue, religious belief; borrowed from Old French ypocrite, learned borrowing from Late (Ecclesiastical) Latin hypocrita hypocrite, from Greek hypokritēs actor on the stage, pretender, from hypokrinesthai; see HYPOCRISY. —hypocritical adj. 1561, formed from English hypocrite + -ical.

hypodermic adj. 1863, formed in English from New Latin hypoderma (hypo- under + Greek dérma skin) + English suffix -ic. —n. 1875, hypodermic treatment; later, hypodermic syringe or injection (1893); from the adjective.

hypoglycemia n. New Latin hypoglycemia (hypo- under + glycemia presence or level of sugar in the blood, from Greek glykys sweet + New Latin -aemia, from Greek haíma, genitive haímato, blood).

hypotenuse n. 1571 hypothenus, a long-popular but erroneous spelling borrowed possibly from Middle French hypothénuse, ypothénuse, from Late Latin hypotēnūsa, from Greek hypotēnōsa stretching under, subtending (the right angle), feminine present participle of hypotēnein (hypo- under + teinēin to stretch). The spelling hypotenuse is not recorded before 1834.

hypothalamus n. 1896, New Latin, from hypo- under + thalamus part of the brain where a nerve emerges.

hypothesis n. 1596, particular case of a general thesis; borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French hypothese, from

Late Latin hypothesis, from Greek hypóthesis, base, basis of an argument, supposition (hypo- under + thesis a placing, proposition). The meaning of a theory, especially in the sciences, is not recorded before 1646. —hypothesize v. 1738; formed from English hypothesis + -ize. —hypothetical adj. 1615; formed in English from Greek hypothetikós supposed + English suffix -ical.

hyssop n. Before 1300 ysope; earlier in Biblical use, a plant of Palestine (about 1200); developed (by influence of Latin hyssopus, hyssōpum) from Old English ysōpe (before 830); learned borrowing from Irish Latin hyssopus, from Greek hýssōpos, hýssōpon, from a Semitic source (compare Hebrew ʿēzōbh).

hysterectomy n. 1886, formed in English from Greek hystērā uterus + English -ectomy.

hysteria n. 1801, New Latin, formed as an abstract noun to English hysterical, adj., of or characterized by hysteria (1657); borrowed from Middle French hystérique, from Latin hystericus of the womb, from Greek hysterikós, from hystērā womb; originally associated with disturbance of the uterus and its functions. —hysterical adj. 1615, characteristic of hysteria; formed in English from Latin hystericus of the womb + English suffix -al. —hysterics n. pl. 1727, formed from English hysterical, adj. + -s, plural suffix.

I

I pron. 1137 i; later I (about 1250); developed from the unstressed form of Old English (about 725) ic singular pronoun of the first person (nominative case). Modern and Middle English I developed from earlier i in the stressed position. I came to be written with a capital letter thereby making it a distinct word and avoiding misreading of handwritten manuscripts. In the northern and midland dialects of England the capitalized form I appeared about 1250. In the south of England, where Old English ic early shifted in pronunciation to ich, the form I did not become established until the 1700's (although it appears sporadically before that time).

Old English ic corresponds to Old Frisian, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch ik, Old High German ih (modern German ich), Old Icelandic ek (Danish jeg, Norwegian eg/jeg, Swedish jag), and Gothic ik, from Proto-Germanic ekan*.

-ial a variant form of the suffix -al, as in adverbial, exponential, microbial, residential.

iambic adj. 1581, borrowed from Latin iambicus, from Greek iambikós, from iambos a metrical foot of an unaccented and an accented syllable, lampoon (so called perhaps because it was first used in satiric verse).

-ian a variant form of the suffix -an, as in comedian, egalitarian, Bostonian; borrowed from Latin in which it was attached to the root of nouns and developed into -ian (Latin -iānus) with a word having a vocalic stem ending in -i-, as in Aemili- + -ānus = Aemiliānus. In Middle English the form is more frequently -ien, in words borrowed from Old French.

-iana a variant form of the suffix -ana, as in Jacksoniana. See also -ANA.

ibex n. 1607, borrowing of Latin ibex (genitive ibicis), from a pre-Latin Alpine language (compare CHAMOIS).

ibid. 1663, abbreviation of Latin ibidem in the same place (ibi there + demonstrative suffix -dem).

ibis n. 1382 ybyn (singular), later ibes (plural, about 1400); borrowed from Latin ibis, from Greek ibis (genitive ibios), from Egyptian hab a sacred bird of Egypt.

-ible a suffix forming adjectives from verbs, and meaning "that can be _____ed, able to be _____ed," as in collectible, reducible, perfectible. Middle English, borrowed from Old French -ible and directly from Latin -ibilis, -ibilis, variants of the suffix -ibilis forming adjectives from verbs with infinitives in -ere, -ere, and -ire; see -ABLE for a discussion of these suffixes.

-ic a suffix forming adjectives from nouns, and meaning: 1 of or having to do with, as in atmospheric, Icelandic. 2 having the nature of, as in heroic. 3 constituting or being, as in bombastic. 4 containing or made up of, as in metallic. 5 made by or caused by, as in volcanic. 6 like, like that of, characteristic of, as in meteoric. 7 an art or system of thought, as in stoic, logic, music. 8 in chemical terms -ic indicates the presence of an element in a compound or ion that is of a higher valence than indicated by the suffix -ous, as in boric or ferric. Many words ending in -ic have two or more of the meanings in definitions 1 to 6, as bombastic = constituting or being bombastic, and containing or made up of bombastic, or metallic which has the meaning of almost all the definitions given above. Middle English, borrowed through French -ique, and directly from Latin -icus, from Greek -ikós.

-ical a suffix forming adjectives meaning roughly the same thing as -ic in most instances. 1 -ic, as in historical, grammatical, cosmological. 2 -ic, specialized or differentiated in meaning, as in economical. 3 sometimes with the sense of *-al*¹ added to nouns ending in -ic or -ics, as in musical = music, n. + *-al*¹, or statistical = statistic(s), n. + *-al*¹. Middle English, borrowed from Late Latin -icālis (Latin -icus -ic + -ālis *-al*¹).

-ically a suffix forming adverbs from adjectives in -ical by simple addition of the suffix *-ly*¹, and from adjectives in -ic by addition of -ally, as in historically and poetically which are adverbs corresponding to either historic or historical, and to either poetic or poetical. Though sometimes heard as artistically and alphabetically, in writing English uses the forms artistically and alphabetically. The sole exception is publicly.

ice n. Before 1225 is; later yce (about 1395); found in Old English ī ice (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, and Old High German īs ice (modern German Eis), Dutch ijs, and Old Icelandic īss, from Proto-Germanic īsa-*. —v. Probably before 1400 ysen to cover with ice; from the noun. —ice-cold adj. (before 1000, in Old English is-calde) —ice cream (1744, earlier iced cream, 1688) —ice skate 1662 skeates, and earlier schates (1648). —ice-skate v. (1696) Though ice skate was used as a noun and verb in the latter part of the 1600's, skate, n. and v. was the usual term until the invention of roller skates in 1760 made differentiation necessary, and even more so with the spreading popularity of an improved roller skate in the U.S. after 1863 (though the effect of Rollerblades and blades, blading may make differentiation once more irrelevant). —icing n. 1769, confection put on pastry. —icy adj. About 1500; formed from English ice, n. + *-y*¹. This adjective is found as Old English īsig (about 725, in Beowulf), but was formed anew in Middle English. The figurative sense of without warm feeling is first recorded in 1594.

iceberg n. 1774, borrowed as a partial loan translation from Dutch ijsberg, literally, ice mountain (ijs ICE + berg mountain).

The figurative sense of anything that is only partly visible or known, is first recorded in 1957; the phrase tip of the iceberg, in the sense of a small or superficial part of something, is found in 1963.

ichneumon n. small, weasel-like animal of Egypt. 1572, borrowed from Latin ichneumon, from Greek ichneumon, literally, searcher, perhaps as for crocodile's eggs, from ichneúein hunt after or track, from ichnos a track; of uncertain origin. The word has been also applied since 1658 to a parasitic insect commonly called ichneumon fly.

ichthyology n. 1646, formed from Greek ichthys fish + English -ology.

ichthyosaur n. 1830, borrowed from New Latin ichthyosaurus (from Greek ichthys fish + saitros lizard).

icicle n. Before 1325 hyssykil; later isykle (is ice + ikel icicle); developed from Old English (before 1000) gicel (compare Old English cylegicel cold icicle, probably about 750), from Proto-Germanic jekilaz*, and cognate with Old High German ihilla icicle, Old Icelandic jökull icicle, glacier, jaki piece of ice.

icky adj. 1935, American English, overly sweet, cloying, sickening, (originally among jazz musicians) but found earlier in icky-boo sickly, nauseated, (1920, in general slang); of unknown origin. The sense of nasty, unpleasant, disgusting, is first recorded about 1938.

icon or ikon n. 1550, borrowed from Late Latin īcōn, from Greek eikōn (genitive eikōnos), Cypriote accusative weikōna, likeness, image, portrait, related to eikénai be like, look like.

iconoclast n. 1641, earlier in a Scottish variant Jconoclaste (1596, where J stands for I) person who breaks or destroys religious figurines and images, in reference to those in the Eastern Church of the 700's and 800's whose followers raged in mobs destroying such religious objects. Also applied to Protestants of the 1500's and 1600's in the Netherlands, who similarly destroyed much of value. The term was borrowed through French iconoclaste, and directly from Medieval Latin iconoclastes, from Late Greek eikonoklastēs (eikōn, genitive eikōnos image + klas-, a past tense stem of klán to break).

The extended sense of one who attacks cherished beliefs and institutions appeared in 1842. —iconoclasm n. 1797, formed from iconoclast, on the pattern of enthusiasm, enthusiasm. The sense of an attack on cherished beliefs or institutions, is first recorded in 1858. —iconoclastic adj. 1640; formed from English iconoclast + -ic.

-ics a suffix meaning: facts, principles, science, as in optics, aesthetics, metaphysics, genetics; or method, practice, art, as in athletics, gymnastics, politics, ceramics. Originally -ics was the plural of nouns ending in -ic (as arithmetic), formed from Latin -ica, feminine singular or neuter plural suffix, from Greek -iká, neuter plural suffix meaning matters relating to or having to do with something.

id n. 1924, borrowed from Latin id it, as a translation of German es IT, used to denote impersonal or instinctual forces in nature. Compare EGO.

-id¹ a suffix mostly identifying members of a group or class, in scientific terminology: 1a in botany, a member of an order with the New Latin name in -idaceae, as in amaryllid. b in zoology, a member of a class with New Latin name -ida, as in arachnid (Arachnida), or of a family, New Latin name -idae, as in araneid (Araneidae). c a complex structure in biology, as in capsid, plasmid. 2 in astronomy, the naming of meteor showers, as in Leonid, Perseid, and variable stars, as in Cepheid. 3 the naming of dynastic lines, as in Achaemenid, Seleucid.

English -id was borrowed, sometimes through French -ide, and directly from Latin -idēs, a masculine patronymic suffix borrowed from Greek -idēs, or from Latin -is (genitive -idis), borrowed from -is (genitive -idos) a feminine patronymic suffix.

-id² a variant of the suffix -ide, now little used and virtually replaced by -ide.

-ide a suffix used to form names of simple compounds of an element with another element or radical, as in amide, chloride, sulfide. Abstracted as -ide from oxide, the first compound classified in this way.

idea n. Before 1398 ydea general or ideal form, or type, borrowed from Latin idea idea, archetype, from Greek idéā look, form, ideal prototype, from ideîn to see (earlier idéēin, idéēn). While the form in Middle English was borrowed from Latin, the Middle and Old French word idee was probably an influence in the borrowing.

The meaning of something imagined or fancied is first recorded in 1588, and the sense of any result of mental activity or understanding, about 1645.

ideal adj. 1410 ydeall pertaining to type or model of a thing; later, imaginary (1611); perfect (1613); borrowed from Late Latin ideālis existing in idea, from Latin idea IDEA. —n. 1796, a standard of perfection; from the adjective, probably by influence of French idéel, n. —idealism n. 1796, belief that reality is made up of ideas only; formed from English ideal + -ism, after French idéisme. The meaning of representing things in an ideal form is first recorded in 1829. —idealist n. 1701, formed from English ideal + -ist, after French idéaliste. —idealistic adj. 1829, formed from English idealist + -ic. —idealize v. 1786, probably formed from English ideal, adj. + -ize.

identical adj. 1620, expressing an identity (in logic); borrowed from Medieval Latin identicus the same, from Late Latin identitās IDENTITY. The sense of being the same or very similar, is first recorded before 1633.

The form in Modern English replaced earlier idemptical same, identical (recorded about 1475); borrowed from Medieval Latin idemptitas identity, from Latin idem the same.

identify v. 1644, regard as the same; borrowed from French identifier, from identité identity; for suffix see -FY. The meaning of recognize as being a particular person or thing, is first recorded in 1769. —identification n. 1644, borrowed from identity n. 1603, sameness or oneness; borrowed from Middle French identité, learned borrowing from Late Latin identitatem (nominative identitās) sameness, from ident-, combining form of Latin idem (neuter) same (related to id it), extracted from the adverb identidem over and over again, from idem et idem; for suffix see -TY. Identity in modern English replaced the form idemptitie (1570), from earlier Medieval Latin idemptitas.

French identification, probably from identifier, on the pattern of such pairs as ratifier to ratify, ratification; for suffix see -ATION.

ideology n. 1796, the science of ideas; later, unpractical theorizing, visionary speculation (1813); borrowed from French idéologie the study or science of ideas, from idéo- of ideas, from Greek idéā IDEA; for suffix see -LOGY. The meaning of set of ideas, doctrines, or beliefs, is first recorded in English in 1909.

ides n. pl. in the ancient Roman calendar, the 15th day of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th day of the other months. Before 1338, earlier in the Latin form idus (1124); borrowed from Old French ides, and directly from Latin idūs (plural).

idiom n. 1588, form of speech of a people or country, own language or tongue; borrowed through Middle French idiome, and directly from Late Latin idiōma a peculiarity in language, from Greek idíōma peculiarity or peculiar phraseology, ultimately from idios one's own. The meaning of a phrase or expression peculiar to a language, was introduced in 1628.

—idiomatic adj. 1712, characteristic of a particular language; borrowed from Late Greek idiōmatikós peculiar or characteristic, from Greek idíōma.

idiosyncrasy n. 1604, peculiarity of physical constitution; 1665, personal peculiarity; borrowed, probably from French idiosyncrasie, and, from Greek idiosynkrāsia (idios one's own + synkrāsis temperament). —idiosyncratic adj. Before 1779, formed from English idiosyncrasy (-crasy taking the formative -crat) + -ic, modeled on Greek synkrātikós.

idiot n. Before 1325 idiot feeble-minded person, fool, later a simple, uneducated person (about 1378); borrowed from Old French idiote uneducated or ignorant person, from Latin idiōta ordinary person, layman, (in Late Latin, uneducated or ignorant person), from Greek idíōtēs layman, ignoramus, person without professional skill or knowledge, from idios one's own, earlier. —idiocy n. Before 1529, formed from idiot, on the model of Greek idíōtēs, and the pattern of pairs of words such as prophet, prophecy. —idiotic adj. 1713, borrowed from Latin idiōticus of an ordinary person (in Late Latin, uneducated, ignorant), from Greek idíōtikós unprofessional, unskilled, from idíōtēs.

idle adj. Old English idel empty, void, useless, (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian idel empty, worthless, vain, Old Saxon idal, Old High German ital (modern German eitel bare, mere, pure, vain), Middle Dutch idel (modern Dutch ijdel) vain, of unknown origin. —v. Before 1460, make vain or worthless; from the adjective. The meaning of spend or waste (time) is first found in 1652. Reference to a motor, running slowly and evenly, is first recorded in 1916. —idly adv. (about 830, in Old English idellice) idol n. About 1250 idele, later ydol (about 1340); borrowed from Old French idole, (earlier) idele, learned borrowing from Late Latin idolum image or form, from Greek eidōlon image, phantom, from eidōs form. The figurative sense of anything that is idolized is first recorded in 1562. —idolize v. 1598, formed from English idol + -ize.

idolatry n. About 1250 ydolatry; borrowed from Old French idolatrie, learned borrowing with contraction in the form from Late Latin idōlōlatrīa, from Greek eidōlōlatreīā (eidōlon image + latreīā worship, service); for suffix see -TRY. —idolater n. About 1415 ydolatre; earlier ydolatrēr (about 1384); borrowed from Old French idolatre, learned borrowing with contraction in the form from Late Latin idōlōlatrēs, from Greek eidōlōlatrēs (eidōlon image + -latrēs, worshiper); for suffix see *-ER*¹. —idolatrōus adj. 1550, formed from English idolater + -ous.

idyl or idyll n. 1601, picturesque pastoral poem; borrowed from Latin īdyllium, from Greek eidyllion short descriptive poem, diminutive of eidōs form. The word was probably also borrowed into English from Middle French idylle. —idyllic adj. 1856, formed in American English from idyll + -ic.

-ie a suffix meaning little, as in dearie; also used to show kind feeling or intimacy, as in auntie; variant of *-y*². The suffix is found in Middle English -ie and -i.

-ier a suffix meaning person occupied or concerned with, as in financier, cashier, hosier. Middle English, in part borrowed from Old French -ier.

The suffix varies with -yer. Most older formations from Old French became -er in Anglo-French, as in butler and draper; other formations such as lawyer and clothier have early coexisting forms, lawer and clother. Some words, such as carrier, courtier, and quarrier are actually formations in -er, the -i- belonging to the English or French verb stem.

In later words with -ier, some words have taken the place of earlier forms in -er; others occur with the spelling -eer producing words such as auctioneer.

if conj. Before 1250 if, developed from Old English gif (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian jef, jof if, Middle Low German jof, Old Saxon of, Old High German oba (modern German ob) if, whether, Old Danish of, and Gothic ibái if, probably coming down from Proto-Germanic ja-ba*. Collaterally with these early Germanic conjunctions there were also Old High German ibu whether, Old Frisian ef, Old Saxon ef, Old Icelandic ef, the Gothic interrogative particle ibái, and Gothic ibái (iba) lest, in order that...not, probably coming from Proto-Germanic e-ba*. —n. 1513, from the conjunction. —iffy adj. 1937, American English; formed from if + *-y*¹.

igloo n. 1824, Canadian English; borrowing of an Eskimo word for "house or dwelling"; compare Greenlandic igdlu house.

igneous adj. 1664, fiery; 1665, produced by fire; borrowed from Latin igneus, from ignis fire; for suffix see -OUS.

ignite v. 1666, in part, developed from ignite, adj., intensely heated (probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin ignitus); and, in part, borrowed directly from Latin ignitus, past participle of ignire set afire. —ignition n. 1612, act of heating; borrowed from French ignition, from Medieval or New Latin ignitionem (nominative ignitio) from Latin ignire; for suffix see -TION.

ignoble adj. 1447 ynoble of low birth; borrowed from Middle French ignoble, learned borrowing from Latin ignobilis (i-, variant of *in*¹ not + Classical Latin nobilis noble, influenced by Old Latin gnobilis).

ignominy n. 1540, back formation from ignominious, probably influenced by Middle French ignominie, and Latin ignominia. —ignominious adj. Probably before 1425 ignominiose, borrowed through Middle French ignominieux, or directly from Latin ignōminiōsus, from ignōminia loss of (good) name (i-, variant of *in*¹ not + nōmen, genitive nōminis name, influenced by Old Latin gnōscere come to know).

ignoramus n. Before 1616, from earlier (before 1577) ignoramus, a legal term borrowed from New Latin, from Latin ignōrāmus we do not know, first person plural present indicative of ignōrāre not to know; see IGNORE.

As a legal term it referred to a grand jury that considered evidence insufficient. The meaning "ignorant person" comes from the title of a play (1615) intended to expose the ignorance of lawyers.

ignore v. 1801, pay no attention to; earlier, be ignorant of (1611); probably a dictionary word borrowed from French ignorer, but influenced by earlier English ignorance and ignorant. French ignorer was borrowed from Latin ignōrāre not to know, disregard, from ignārus not knowing, unaware (i- not, variant of *in*¹ + Old Latin gnārus aware, acquainted with; related to gnōscere, Classical Latin nōscere come to know); the form of the Latin verb was influenced by ignōtus unknown. —ignorance n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French ignorance, from Latin ignōrantia, from ignōrantem (nominative ignōrāns), present participle of ignōrāre; for suffix see -ANCE. —ignorant adj. About 1380 ignoraunt, borrowed from Old French ignorant, from Latin ignōrantem (nominative ignōrāns), present participle of ignōrāre; for suffix see -ANT.

iguana n. 1555, borrowing of Spanish iguana, from Arawakan iguana or iwana.

ikon n. See ICON.

il¹ a form of the prefix *in*¹ not, opposite of; found before l, as in illegal, illegitimate, illegible, illiterate. In words from Latin the form developed from the assimilation of n to the following consonant (l).

il² a form of the prefix *in*² in, within; found before l, as in illuminate. In words from Latin the form developed from the assimilation of n to the following consonant (l). The prefix is also less frequently found in borrowings from Old French with il-.

ileum n. Anatomy. lowest part of the small intestine. 1682, New Latin, from Latin īlia groin, flank. The modern English borrowing replaced Middle English ylioun (1392), borrowed from Medieval Latin ileon, from Greek eileōn, a form of eileōs intestinal obstruction; erroneously blended with Latin ilia. —ileitis 1855, formed from English ileum + -itis.

ilium n. Anatomy. upper portion of the hipbone. 1706, New Latin, from Latin ilia groin, flank; probably influenced by earlier English iliac. —iliac adj. 1541, probably formed from Latin ilia + -acus, adjective suffix. The modern English borrowing replaced Middle English ylia of the ilium (recorded before 1398), found in ylia passioun, from Late Latin passio ilia.

ilk n. 1117 ylce (pronoun used as a noun); later ilke (probably before 1200); developed from Old English ilca same (n., about 725, in Beowulf); also same, identical, aforementioned (adj., about 750). The Old English ilca was probably formed from the particle ī + -lic, root of Old English gelic LIKE¹.

The meanings of the Old English word survive in the phrase of that ilk of the same place or name and of the same kind or sort.

ill adj. Probably about 1150 ille morally evil, malicious; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ill ill, bad). The meaning of sick or diseased is found before 1460. —adv. Probably about 1150 ille harshly or bitterly; from the adjective. —n. About 1250, evil or wicked people; from the adjective.

illegal adj. 1626, borrowed through French illégal, or directly from Medieval Latin illegalis (Latin il-¹ not + lēgālis LEGAL).

illegitimate adj. 1536, formed from English il-¹ + legitimate, adj., modeled on Latin illegitimus not legitimate, and replacing earlier illegitime.

illicit adj. Before 1506, borrowed from French illicite, learned borrowing from Latin illicitus (il-¹ not + licitus lawful, LICIT).

illiterate adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin illiterātus, illiterātus unlettered (il-¹ not + litterātus, litterātus furnished with letters); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —n. 1628; from the adjective.

illuminate v. Probably before 1425 illuminaten, probably a back formation from illumination; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

This later Middle English form replaced enlumen enlighten (1370) and became the usual spelling for decorate (a letter, etc.) with gold, silver, and brilliant colors (recorded probably before 1439). While illuminate is ultimately a Latinate form, Middle English enlumen was borrowed from Old French enluminer, from Late Latin inlūmināre, variant of Latin illūmināre. —illumination n. Before 1396 illumination enlightenment; borrowed through Old French illumination, and directly from Latin illūminātiōnem (nominative illūminātiō), from illūmināre (il-² in + lūmen, genitive lūminis light); for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of lighting up, is first recorded in 1563. —illumine v. Probably 1348 illumynen enlighten spiritually, borrowed from Old French illuminer, learned borrowing from Latin illūmināre illuminate.

illusion n. About 1350 illusioun mockery; later, deceptive appearance (about 1380); borrowed from Old French illusion a mocking, learned borrowing from Latin illūsio (nominative illūsio) a mocking, jesting, irony, from illudere mock at (il-² at + ludere to play); for suffix see -ION. —illusive adj. 1679; formed from English illus (ion) + -ive. —illusory adj. Before 1631, borrowed perhaps through French illusoire, or directly from Late Latin illūsorius of a mocking character, ironical, from Latin illudere; for suffix see -ORY.

illustrate v. 1526, light up, shed light on; back formation from illustration; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The meaning of make clear by examples, is first recorded in 1612, and that of provide with pictures that explain or decorate, in 1638. —illustration n. About 1375, borrowed through Old French illustration, and directly from Latin illūstrātiōnem (nominative illūstrātiō) vivid representation (in writing), from illūstrāre light up, embellish, distinguish (il-² in + lūstrāre make bright, illuminate); for suffix see -ATION. —illustrative adj. 1643; formed from English illustrate + -ive. —illustrator n. 1598, formed by influence of Middle French illustrateur, from English illustrate + *-or*², modeled on Late Latin illūstrātor one who enlightens. The sense of one who draws pictures, is first recorded in 1689.

illustrious adj. About 1566, borrowed from Latin illūstris bright, distinguished, famous, from illūstrāre embellish, distinguish, make famous; for suffix see -OUS. The modern English form replaced illustre (recorded before 1460); borrowed from Middle French illustre illustrious, from Latin illūstris illustrious.

im-¹ a form of the prefix in-¹ not, opposite of, before b, m, and p, as in imbalance, immoral, impossible. Borrowed in many words from French and Latin, and formed in Latin by assimilation of n to a following consonant.

im-² a form of the prefix in-² in, within, before b, m, and p, as in imbibe, immure, impart. Borrowed in many words from French and Latin, and formed in Latin by assimilation of n to a following consonant.

image n. Probably about 1200 ymage statue, effigy; borrowing of Old French image, from Latin imāgō (genitive imāginis) copy, statue, picture, idea, appearance, related to imitārī copy, IMITATE.

Various meanings in Latin began to appear gradually in English, especially that of a mental picture or impression, idea, (about 1380), and from that the later meaning of an impression that a person, institution, product, etc., presents to the public, as in the phrase public image (1908). —imagery n. About 1350 ymagerie carved figures; borrowing of Old French imagerie, from image image, from Latin imāgō; for suffix see -ERY. The meaning of ornate description, as in poetry, is first recorded in 1589.

imagine v. About 1340 ymagynen form an image of, picture in one's mind; borrowed from Old French imaginer, learned borrowing from Latin imāginārī to picture oneself, imagine (also in Latin imāgināre to form an image of, represent), from imāgō (genitive imāginis) IMAGE. The meaning of suppose, fancy, is first recorded about 1380. —imaginable adj. About 1380 ymaginable, borrowed probably from Old French imaginable, and directly from Late Latin imāginābilis, from Latin imāginārī imagine. —imaginary adj. About 1395 ymaginaire, borrowed from Latin imāginārius, from imāginārī imagine; for suffix see imbecile n. 1802, feeble-minded person, developed from earlier adjective imbecille weak or feeble, especially in reference to the body (1549); borrowed from Middle French imbecile, imbécille, learned borrowing from Latin imbēcillus weak or feeble; of unknown origin. —imbecility n. Probably before 1425 imbecillite physical weakness; borrowing of Middle French imbēcillité, and borrowed directly from Latin imbēcillitatem (nominative imbēcillitās) weakness, feebleness, from imbēcillus; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of mental weakness is not recorded in English before 1624.

—ARY. —imagination n. 1340 ymaginacion; borrowed from Old French imagination, learned borrowing from Latin imāginātiōnem (nominative imāginātiō) imagination, probably from imāginārī imagine; for suffix see -ATION. —imaginative adj. About 1380 ymaginatyf, borrowed from Old French imaginatif, and directly from Medieval Latin imaginativus, from Latin imāginārī; for suffix see -ATIVE.

imbibe v. About 1395 embiben absorb (fluid), borrowed from Old French embiber to soak into, and directly from Latin imbibere absorb, drink in, inhale (*im-*² + bibere to drink, related to pōtāre to drink).

imbrication n. 1650, borrowing of French imbrication, as if from Latin imbricatiōnem* (nominative imbricatiō*), from imbricare to cover with tiles, from imbrex (genitive imbris) curved roof tile used to lead off rain, from imber (genitive imbris) rain.

imbroglio n. 1750, confused heap; 1818, complicated or difficult situation; borrowing of Italian imbroglio, from imbrogliare confuse or tangle (*im-*² + brogliare embroil, probably from Middle French brouiller confuse); see BROIL turmoil.

imbue v. Probably before 1425, as a past participle of imbute, enbeued initiated in, absorbed in; probably, in part, borrowed from Middle French imbu, imbue steeped in, full of, a form remade, under the influence of Latin imbūtus (past participle of imbuiere moisten, stain), from earlier embu, past participle of emboire, from Latin imbibere drink in, soak in. Also as a verb in English with the meaning of fill, inspire (1555), borrowed in part from Latin imbuiere moisten, tinge, stain, taint.

imitate v. 1534, back formation from imitation or imitator; for suffix see -ATE¹. —imitation n. Before 1400 ymytacyoun; borrowed from Old French imitacion, from Latin imitatiōnem (nominative imitatiō) imitation, from imitārī to copy, portray, imitate; related to imāgō IMAGE. —imitative adj. 1584, probably formed from English imitate + -ive, perhaps modeled on Middle French imitatif. —imitator n. 1523; probably a back formation from imitation; for suffix see -OR².

immaculate adj. 1441, borrowed from Latin immaculātus (*im-*¹ + maculātus spotted, defiled, past participle of maculāre to spot, from macula spot, blemish; for suffix see -ATE¹). The term Immaculate Conception is first recorded in 1687, borrowed from Middle French immaculée conception, (earlier) conception immaculée (1497).

immaterial adj. 1410 inmaterial not material, spiritual;

learned borrowing from Medieval Latin immaterialis, from Late Latin immāteriālis (*im-*¹ + Late Latin māteriālis MATERIAL).

The sense of unimportant, of no consequence, is first recorded in 1698, but fifty years later Johnson was commenting, "This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected," not realizing perhaps that material in the sense of important, had been in use at least since 1529.

immature adj. 1548, untimely, premature, usually in reference to death; borrowed from Latin immātūrus untimely or unripe (*im-*¹ + mātūrus MATURE). The meaning of unripe, in reference to fruit, is first recorded in 1599, and that of not full-grown or developed, in 1641. —immaturity n. About 1540, untimeliness; borrowed from Latin immātūritatem (nominative immātūritās) unripeness, from immātūrus unripe; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of lack of maturity, is first recorded in 1606.

immediate adj. 1392 immediat intervening, interposed; later immediate absolute, conclusive (1410), and existing with nothing between, direct (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French immediat, and Medieval Latin immediatus, from Late Latin immediātus (*im-*¹ + mediātus, past participle of mediāre to halve; later, be in the middle, from Latin medius middle; see MID); for suffix see -ATE¹.

With reference to time, the meaning of coming at once, done without delay, is found in 1568 and in an earlier adverbial form in 1420; the sense of current, is first recorded in 1605.

—immediacy n. 1605, formed from English immediate + -cy. —immediately adv. Before 1400, from immediate, adj.

immemorial adj. 1602, probably borrowed from French immémorial old beyond memory or record (*im-*¹ + French mémorial of memory, MEMORIAL).

immense adj. About 1426 immens, borrowed from Middle French immense, learned borrowing from Latin immēnsus immeasurable, boundless (*im-*¹ + mēnsus, past participle of mētīrī to MEASURE).

immerse v. 1605, earlier found in the participial form immersed stuck, imbedded (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin immersus, past participle of immergere to plunge in, dip into (*im-*² + mergere to plunge, dip; see MERGE). —immersion n. Before 1500 immersionne, borrowed from French immersion and directly from Late Latin immersiōnem, immersiōnem (nominative immersiō, immersiō), from Latin immergere; for suffix see -SION.

immigrate v. 1623, borrowed from Latin immigrātum, past participle of immigrāre to remove, go into, move in (*im-*² + migrāre to move, MIGRATE); for suffix see -ATE¹. —immigrant n. 1792, borrowed probably from French immigrant, from Latin immigrantem (nominative immigrāns), present participle of immigrāre immigrate; for suffix see -ANT. —immigration n. 1658, formed from English immigrate + -ion.

imminent adj. 1436 ymynent; borrowed from Middle French imminent, and directly from Latin imminentem (nominative imminēns), present participle of imminēre to overhang, impend, be near (im-² + minēre* to hang, jut; related to mōns, genitive montis, hill, MOUNT²); for suffix see -ENT. —imminence n. 1606, probably formed from English immin (ent) + -ence; also influenced by Late Latin imminentia, from Latin imminentem (nominative imminēns), present participle of imminēre.

immobile adj. Before 1349 immoill not moving, motionless; borrowed from Old French immobile, learned borrowing from Latin immobilis (im-¹ + mobilis MOBILE). —immobilize v. 1871, formed from English immobile + -ize, possibly by influence of French immobiliser, from Old French immobile immo- bile.

immoderate adj. Before 1398; borrowed from Latin immoderātus unrestrained, excessive (im-¹ + moderātus restrained, MOD-ERATE); for suffix see -ATE¹.

immolate v. 1548, developed from immolate sacrificed, past participle used as an adjective (1534); borrowed from Latin immolātus, past participle of immolāre to sacrifice, originally, to sprinkle with sacrificial meal (im-² upon + mola sacrificial meal; related to molere to grind); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also, immolate may be a back formation from immolation. —immolation n. Probably about 1425 immolacion, borrowed, perhaps from Middle French immolation, or directly from Latin immolatiōnem (nominative immolatiō), from immolāre.

immorality n. About 1566; formed from English im-¹ + mortality. —immoral adj. 1660, back formation from immorality.

immortal adj. About 1380, borrowed, probably by influence of Old French immortel, from Latin immortālis living forever, deathless (im-¹ + mortālis MORTAL); for suffix see -AL¹. —immortality n. About 1340 immortalite, borrowed from Old French immortalité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin immortalitatem (nominative immortalitās) deathlessness, from immortālis immortal; for suffix see -ITY. —immortalize v. About 1566, formed from English immortal + -ize, perhaps by influence of Middle French immortaliser.

immovable adj. About 1385 immovable; 1380 inmoecueable; formed from Middle English im-¹ + moevable, mevable; for suffix see -ABLE.

immunity n. About 1384 ynmunite exemption from taxation, service, laws, etc., freedom from prosecution; borrowed from Old French immunité, and directly from Latin immunitatem (nominative immunitās) exemption from performing public service or charges, from immūnis exempt, free (im-¹ + mūnis performing services); for suffix see -ITY. The medical sense of protection from disease (1879), was borrowed from French immunité. —immune adj. Probably 1440, free, exempt; back formation from immunity; also borrowed from Latin immūnis having immunity. —immunization n. 1893, formed from English immunize + -ation. —immunize v. 1892; formed from English immune + -ize.

immuno- a combining form made from immune, and meaning immunity or immunization, as in immunobiology, immunogenic.

immure v. 1583; borrowed possibly through Middle French emmurer, and directly from Medieval Latin immurare (Latin im-² + mūrus wall). The meaning of imprison, is first recorded in 1588.

immutable adj. Probably before 1422, borrowed from Old French immutable, and directly from Latin immūtabilis unchangeable (im-¹ + mūtabilis changeable; see MUTABLE).

imp n. Probably before 1200 impe seedling; developed from Old English impa young shoot, graft (before 899), from impian to graft; borrowed from a Germanic source (compare Old High German impfōn to graft), from Vulgar Latin imputus*, variant of Late Latin impotus implanted, from Greek ēmphtōs, verbal adjective of ēmphtēin implant (em-² + phēin to plant).

The meaning of a child or offspring is found in 1377.

impact v. 1601, to press closely into something (usually in the form impacted); developed from earlier impact, past participle and adjective (1563), borrowed from Latin impāctus, past participle of impingere to push into, strike against; see IMPINGE. The meaning of strike against something with force, is first recorded in 1916, and the figurative sense of have a forceful effect on, in 1935. —n. 1781, collision; from the verb. The figurative sense of forceful impression, was introduced in 1817.

impair v. About 1380 empeyren; 1390 empeyren; borrowed from Old French empeirier, empeirer, from Vulgar Latin impejōrāre* make worse (Latin im-² + Late Latin pejōrāre make worse). —impairment n. 1340 emparement, borrowed from Old French empeirement, from empeirier, empeirer impair; for suffix see -MENT. The modern spelling is first recorded in 1611 modeled on the Latin form.

impala n. 1875, borrowed from Zulu im-pala, related to Setswana phala and Swahili p'aa gazelle.

impale v. 1530, enclose with pales or stakes, fence in, borrowed from Medieval Latin impalare (Latin im-² + pālus stake, POLE¹). The variant empale (1553) was borrowed from Middle French empaler (em-² + pal, learned borrowing from Latin pālus stake). The meaning of pierce with a pointed stake, is first recorded in 1613.

impart v. Probably before 1430 inparten; later imparten (about 1471); borrowed from Middle French impartir, learned borrowing from Late Latin impartire, from Latin impartire share in or divide with (im-² + partire to divide, PART).

impartial adj. 1593, formed from English im-¹, + partial.

impasse n. 1851, borrowing of French impasse impassable road, blind alley, impasse (im-¹ + Middle French passe a passing, from passer to PASS¹).

impassion v. 1591 empassion, 1593 impassion, borrowed from Italian impassionare (im-² + passione passion, from Latin passiōnem, nominative passiō PASSION); for suffix see -SION.

—impassioned adj. 1603, from the verb. —impassive adj. 1605, formed from im⁻² + passive.

impatience n. Probably before 1200 impatience, also impacience (1340); borrowed from Old French impacience, and directly from Latin impatientia (im⁻¹ + patientia; see PATIENCE). —impatient adj. About 1378 impacient, borrowed from Old French impacient, impatient, from Latin impatientem (im⁻¹ + patientem, nominative patiēns suffering; see PATIENT).

impeach v. Probably 1383 empechen accuse or hinder, borrowed through Anglo-French empecher, from Old French empechier hinder, from Late Latin impedicāre to fetter (Latin im⁻² + pedica shackle, from pēs, genitive pedis, FOOT). The specific meaning of accuse a public officer of misconduct, is first recorded in 1568. —impeachment n. Before 1387 enpechement accusation or charge; borrowed from Old French empechement, from empechier hinder.

impeccable adj. 1531, not capable of sin; later, faultless (1620); borrowed probably through Middle French impeccable, from Latin impeccābilis (im⁻¹ + peccāre to sin; of uncertain origin).

impecunious adj. 1596, formed from English im⁻¹ + Latin pecūniōsus rich, from pecūnia money, property; for suffix see -OUS.

impede v. 1605, probably a back formation from impediment, influenced by Latin impedire to impede, and in some instances probably borrowed from the Latin. —impediment n. Before 1400 impedyment something which hinders or prevents, obstacle, difficulty; borrowed from Latin impedimentum hindrance, from impedire impede, literally, to shackle the feet (im⁻² + pēs, genitive pedis, FOOT).

impel v. Probably before 1425 impellen, borrowed from Latin impellere (im⁻² + pellere to push, drive). —impeller n. 1685, formed from English impel + *-er*¹.

impend v. 1599, hang threateningly, be about to fall or happen; either a back formation from impending (before 1592), or a borrowing from Latin impendēre (im⁻² + pendēre hang).

impenetrable adj. 1447, borrowed through Middle French impénétrable, from Latin impenetrābilis (im⁻¹ + penetrābilis PENE-TRABLE).

imperative n. About 1450 imperatyf the imperative mood in grammar; later, something imperative (1606); borrowed from Old French imperatif, and from Late Latin imperātīvus commanded, found in Latin imperāt-, past participle stem of imperāre to command, to requisition (grain, for example), from im⁻² + parāre to get, prepare, related to parere beget, bear; for suffix see -IVE. —adj. 1530, expressing a command or request; from the noun. The sense of not to be avoided, urgent, is first recorded in 1823.

imperfect adj. About 1378 imparfit, borrowed from Old French imparfait, from Latin imperfectus unfinished, incomplete (im⁻¹ + perfectus PERFECT). By the mid-1500's the Old French form was replaced by one modeled on Latin and influenced by the spelling of imperfect in English. —imperfect n. 1390 imperfecioun, borrowed from Old French imperfect, and directly from Late Latin imperfectiōnem (nominative imperfectiō), from imperfectus, see IMPERFECT); for suffix see -TION.

imperial adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French imperial, emperial, learned borrowings of Latin imperialis of the empire or emperor, from imperium EMPIRE; for suffix see -AL¹. —imperialism n. 1858, rule by an emperor; formed from English imperial + -ism, modeled on French impérialisme (1836). The meaning of policy of extending the rule of one country over another is first recorded before 1878. —imperialist n. 1603, adherent of the Emperor; later, advocate of imperialism (1899); formed from English imperial + -ist, modeled on French impérialiste (1525). —imperialistic adj. 1879, formed from English imperialist + -ic.

imperious adj. 1541, implied in earlier imperiously; borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French imperieux (feminine imperieuse), from Latin imperiosus commanding, from imperium empire.

impersonal adj. 1520, formed from English im⁻¹ + personal, modeled on Late Latin impersonālis.

impersonate v. 1624, to represent in bodily form, personify, formed from English im⁻² + person + *-ate*¹. The meaning of act the part of, is first recorded in 1715, probably influenced by personate (1613), with the same meaning; formed from English person + *-ate*¹. —impersonation n. 1800, personification; 1825, an acting the part of a character; formed from English impersonate + -ion.

impertinent adj. About 1395 inpartinent irrelevant, later impertinent (before 1422); borrowed through Old French impertinent, or directly from Late Latin impertinentem (nominative impertinēns) not belonging (from Latin im⁻¹ + pertinēns PERTINENT). The meaning of inappropriate, is first recorded before 1415, and that of rudely bold, in 1681, probably from French (used by Molière in the sense of presumptuous). —impertinence n. 1603, something inappropriate, borrowing of French impertinence, from Medieval Latin impertinentia, from Late Latin impertinentem not belonging; see IMPERTINENT. The meaning of rude boldness, is first recorded in 1712.

imperturbable adj. Before 1500, borrowed through Middle French imperturbable, and Medieval Latin imperturbabilis that cannot be disturbed (from Latin im⁻¹ + perturbābilis* PERTUR-BABLE).

impervious adj. 1650, not penetrable or permeable; borrowed from Latin impervius (im⁻¹ + pervius letting things through, PERVIOUS); for suffix see -OUS.

impetigo n. Before 1398; borrowing of Latin impetigō skin eruption, from impetere to attack; see IMPETUS.

impetus n. 1641 impetus driving force; momentum; earlier impetous rapid movement (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin impetus, related to impetere to attack (im⁻² + petere aim for, rush at). —impetuous adj. Before 1398 impetuous, later impetuous (probably before 1425); borrowed from Late impinge v. 1535, to thrust upon or fasten forcibly; borrowed from Latin impingere drive into, strike against (im-² + pangere to fix, fasten). The meaning of infringe or encroach upon, is first recorded about 1738.

Latin impetuōsus, from Latin impetus impetus; for suffix see -OUS.

implacable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from French implacable, from Latin implacābilis unappeasable (im-¹ + placābilis PLACABLE).

implant v. Probably before 1425, found in implanted; formed from English im-² + planted; patterned on Medieval Latin implantatus, past participle of implantare to install or invest, literally to insert or graft to (im-², + plantare to PLANT).

implausible adj. 1602, formed from English im-¹ + plausible.

implement n. 1445, supplementary payment; borrowed, probably by influence of Old French emplement act of filling, from Late Latin implēmentum a filling up, as with provisions, from Latin implēre to fill (im-² + plēre to fill). The meaning of tool, instrument, utensil (1538) derived from things which serve to supplement or complete some kind of work (1505). —v. 1806, to fulfill, complete, carry out; originally chiefly of Scottish use; from the noun in Scottish law with the sense of fulfillment (1754). —implementation n. 1926, formed from English implement, v. + -ation.

implicate v. 1600, involve as a consequence or inference; developed from earlier implicate, adj., involved as a complicating factor, connected (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin implicātus, past participle of implicāre involve, entangle, connect closely (im-² + plīcare to fold, earlier plecare* see *PLY*² fold); for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of involve (in a charge or crime), is first recorded in 1797. —implication n. Probably before 1425 implicacion complication, action of entangling; later, something implied (about 1555); borrowed from Latin implicātiōnem (nominative implicātiō) entwining or entangling, from implicāre; for suffix see -ATION.

implicit adj. 1599, borrowed through Middle French implicite, and directly from Latin implicītus, variant of implicātus, past participle of implicāre IMPLICATE.

implore v. 1500–20, borrowed through Middle French implorer, or directly from Latin implōrāre call for help, beseech, originally, invoke with weeping (im-² + plōrāre to weep, cry out).

imply v. About 1380 emplier to enfold, involve, entangle, later implien (about 1400); borrowed from Old French emplier, from Latin implicāre involve, IMPLICATE. The meaning of involve as a consequence or inference (as in friendship implies trust), is first recorded about 1400 and that of express indirectly, hint at, in 1581.

impolite adj. 1612, borrowed from Latin impolītus unpolished, rough, unrefined (im-¹ + polītus polished, POLITE).

import v. Probably before 1425 importen convey information, express; borrowed from Latin importāre bring in, convey (im-² + portāre carry). The meaning of bring in from an external source, is first recorded in 1508. The meaning of imply, signify, mean, is first recorded in 1529, and was probably borrowed from Medieval Latin importare, with the same meaning. —n. 1588, importance or consequence, from the verb in the archaic sense of be of consequence or importance, a usage borrowed from Middle French importer. The meaning of a commodity imported from abroad, is first recorded in 1690.

important adj. 1444 importante, borrowed from Medieval Latin importantem (nominative importantis), present participle of importare be significant in, from Latin importāre bring in, IM-PORT; for suffix see -ANT. —importance n. 1508, borrowing of Middle French importance, probably learned borrowing from Medieval Latin importantia, from importantem, present participle of importare.

importune v. 1530, perhaps a back formation from importunity, or developed from importune, adj. (probably before 1400); and borrowed from Middle French importuner, from importun persistent, learned borrowing from Latin importūnus unfit; see IMPORTUNITY. —importunate adj. 1529, persistent, probably formed in English by influence of Latin importūnus unfit; for suffix see -ATE¹. —importunity n. About 1425 importunyte persistence; later importunitie (before 1500); borrowed from Middle French importunité, from Latin importūnitatem (nominative importūnitās) unsuitableness, from importūnus unfit, troublesome, originally having no harbor (im-¹ + portus harbor, PORT¹); for suffix see -ITY.

impose v. About 1380 imposen put an obligation on, borrowed from Old French imposer (im-² + poser put, place; see POSE¹). The meaning of lay (a tax or other burden) on, inflict, is first recorded in 1581, from the early meaning of English imposition. —imposing adj. 1651, exacting; 1786, impressive because of appearance or manner; formed from English impose, v. + -ing, after French imposant. —imposition n. About 1380 imposicioun tax or duty; borrowed through Old French imposition, from Latin impositiōnem (nominative impositiō), from impōnere to place upon; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of an act or instance of imposing on someone, is first recorded in 1632.

impossible adj. Before 1325 impossibile unbelievable; borrowed from Old French impossible, from Latin impossibilis not possible (im-¹ + possibilis POSSIBLE). —impossibility n. About 1385, formed from English impossible + -ity, after Old French impossibilitē.

impost n. 1568, borrowed from Middle French impost, from Medieval Latin impostum, from neuter of Latin impositus, contracted from impositus, past participle of impōnere to place upon, impose upon (im-² + pōnere to place, set; see POSE¹). —v. 1884, American English; from the noun.

impostor n. 1586 impostur deceiver or swindler; later impostor person who assumes a false name or character, 1624; developed from English imposture by confusion with Middle French imposteur, learned borrowing from Latin impostor, from impositus, contracted from impositus, past participle of impōnere place upon, impose. —imposture n. 1537, deception or fraud; borrowed from Middle French imposture, from Latin impostūra, from impostus.

impotent adj. Before 1393, physically weak; borrowed from Old French impotent powerless, learned borrowing from Latin impotentem lacking control, powerless (im⁻¹ + potentem, nominative potēs POTENT). The meaning of sexually powerless, is first recorded before 1444. —impotence n. About 1412 impotence physical weakness; earlier, poverty (probably 1406); borrowed from Middle French impotence, learned borrowing from Latin impotentia lack of control or power, from impotentem (nominative impotēns); for suffix see -ENCE.

impound v. 1434 inpounden to shut up in a pen or pound; formed from English im⁻² in + *pound*³ enclosed place. The meaning of put in custody of the law, seize or hold by legal means, is first recorded in 1651.

impoverish v. Before 1420 empoverischen make poor; borrowed from Old French empoveriss-, stem of empoverir (em⁻¹ + povre POOR); for suffix see -ISH².

impracticable adj. 1653, impassable, as of a road; later, not practicable (before 1677); formed from English im⁻¹ + practicable.

impractical adj. 1865, formed from English im⁻¹ not + practical.

imprecation n. 1448, a curse, action of invoking evil; borrowed through Middle French imprecation, or directly from Latin imprecātiōnem (genitive imprecātiō), from imprecārī invoke, pray for (im⁻² + precārī to PRAY); for suffix see -ATION. —imprecate v. 1613 imprecate call down (curses, evil, etc.), probably a back formation from imprecation.

imprecise adj. 1805, formed from English im⁻¹ + precise. —imprecision n. 1803, formed from English im⁻¹ + precision.

impregnable adj. 1440 impregnable, alteration of earlier imprenable (before 1439); borrowed from Middle French imprenable (Old French im⁻¹ not, + prenable assailable, vulnerable, from the stem of prendre to take or grasp); for suffix see -ABLE.

impregnate v. 1646 impregnate make pregnant, fertilize; earlier, to fill, inspire (1605); back formation from impregnation; and, in some instances, probably developed from impregnate, adj.; borrowed from Late Latin impraegnātus, past participle of impraegnāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. The form impregnate is a replacement of impregnēn (recorded before 1425); borrowed from Late Latin impraegnāre. —impregnation n. Before 1398 impregnacioun the action of making or becoming pregnant; borrowed through Old French impregnation, and directly from Late Latin impraegnātiōnem (nominative impraegnātiō) fertilization, inspiration, from impraegnāre (im⁻² + praegnāre make pregnant); for suffix see -TION.

impresario n. 1746, organizer or manager of entertainment; borrowed from Italian impresario, from impresa undertaking, from feminine of impreso, past participle of imprendere undertake, from Vulgar Latin imprēndere (Latin im⁻² + prehendere to grasp).

impress¹ v. Probably about 1370 enpressen make a permanent image in something; later impressen have a strong effect on, fix in the mind or heart (about 1385); borrowed from Latin impressus, past participle of imprimere press into or upon, stamp (im⁻² + primere to PRESS¹). —n. impression, mark, stamp. 1590, from the verb. —impression n. About 1380, image produced on the mind, imprint; borrowed from Old French impression a pressing, crushing, or having a strong effect on the mind, learned borrowing from Latin impressiōnem (nominative impressiō) assault, emphasis, mental impression, from imprimere; see IMPRESS¹. —impressionable adj. 1836, formed from English impression + -able, probably after French impressionable, from impressioner. —impressionism n. 1839, formed from English *impress*¹ + -ion + -ism; later, theory or style of painting developed in France (1882); re-formed in English by influence of earlier impressionist (1876). —impressionist n. 1876, painter in the style of impressionism; borrowed from French impressioniste, coined in 1874 from impression impression + -iste -ist by Louis Leroy, a French critic, with reference to a painting by Claude Monet entitled Impression, Soleil Levant. —impressive adj. 1573, capable of being impressed, later, making a deep impression (1775); formed from English *impress*¹ + -ive.

impress² v. 1596, force (men) to serve in the armed forces, formed from English im⁻² + *press*² force; probably influenced by earlier imprest lend or advance a soldier's pay (1565); borrowed from Italian imprestare (im⁻² in, + prestare to lend).

imprimatur n. 1640, New Latin imprimatur let it be printed (3rd person singular present subjunctive passive of imprimere to print), from Latin imprimere to mark or engrave, IMPRESS¹. The sense of sanction or approval, is first recorded in 1672.

imprint v. About 1380 emprienten, enprienten to impress on or fix in the mind, memory, etc.; borrowed from Old French empreinter to stamp or engrave, from empreint, past participle of empreindre to press on, impress, imprint, from Latin imprimere to mark, IMPRESS¹. The original spelling with em- was altered to im- (by 1448) to conform to the Latin spelling. —n. Before 1449 enprent something imprinted; borrowed from Old French empreinte, from the feminine past participle of empreindre to print.

imprison v. About 1300 enprisonen; borrowed from Old French emprisoner imprison (em-, en- in + prison PRISON). —imprisonment n. 1386 emprisonement; probably borrowed from Old French emprisonnement (1433), from emprisoner + -ment.

improbable adj. 1598, probably formed from English im⁻¹ + probable, perhaps after Italian improbabile.

impromptu adv., adj. without previous thought or preparation. 1669 adv.; 1764 adj.; borrowing of French impromptu, from the Latin in prōmptū in readiness; prōmptū, ablative of prōmptus readiness, from prōmere to bring out.

improper adj. Before 1393, implied in impropelich, adv., improperly; later impropir unsuitable, incorrect; borrowed from improve v. 1473 improwen to turn to profit, cultivate and make more valuable; borrowed in part through Anglo-French emprouwer, emprover turn to profit (from Old French em-¹ + prou profit, from Late Latin prōde profitable; see PROUD). The word also came through Anglo-Latin improviāre, and the spelling with v is very rare before the 1600's when it displaced the forms with w. The general sense of make better, is found in 1617. —improvement n. 1449 enprovement management of something for profit; later, good or profitable use (about 1611); borrowed from Anglo-French emprovement, from emprouwer turn to profit. The meaning of betterment or amelioration, is first recorded in 1647.

Old French impropre, from Latin improprius (im-¹ + proprius one's own, particular, PROPER).

improvise v. 1826, back formation from improvisation, and probably borrowed from French improviser. —improvisation n. 1786, borrowed from French improvisation, from improviser compose or say extemporaneously, from Italian improvvisare, from improvviso unforeseen or unprepared, learned borrowing from Latin imprōvisus (im-¹ + prōvisus foreseen, past participle of prōvidēre foresee, PROVIDE); for suffix see -ATION.

impudent adj. About 1390, lacking modesty, shameless, borrowed from Latin impudentis, nominative impudēns (im-¹ + pudēns, nominative pudēns, present participle of pudēre to cause shame). —impudence n. About 1390, shamelessness, borrowed from Latin impudentia, from impudentis (nominative impudēns).

impugn v. About 1378 inpugnen; 1382 impugnen; borrowed from Old French impugner, from Latin impugnāre to assault or attack (im-² + pugnāre to fight).

impulse n. 1647, probably a back formation from impulsive, modeled on Latin impulsus, from past participle of impellere IMPEL. —impulsive adj. Probably before 1425 impulsif of medicine that has the effect of reducing swelling or humors; later, impelling, driving to action (about 1555); borrowed probably from Middle French impulsif, and Medieval Latin impulsivus, from Latin impulsus, past participle of impellere IMPEL. The meaning of acting on impulse, easily moved, is first recorded in 1847.

impunity n. 1532, borrowed through Middle French impunité, and directly from Latin impūnitātem (nominative impūnitās) omission of punishment, from impūnis unpunished (im-¹ + poena punishment); for suffix see -ITY.

impure adj. Probably 1440, probably borrowed from Middle French impur, impure, from Latin impūrus (im-¹ + pūrus pure); and also formed from Middle English im-¹ not + pure. —impurity n. Before 1500, formed from Middle English impure + -ity, perhaps after Middle French impurité.

impute v. About 1375 inputen blame; later imputen (probably before 1425); borrowed through Old French imputer, and directly from Latin imputāre (im-² + putāre reckon, think). —imputation n. 1545, formed in English from impute + -ation, on the model of Middle French imputation and Late in prep. Old English (before 700) in in. The Old English forms in in, and inne in, within, merged in later Middle English under the simple form in, and a similar development took place in the adverbial use of in and inne.

Latin imputātiōnem (nominative imputātiō), from Latin imputāre impute.

Cognates with Old English are found in Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and modern Dutch in in, Old High German and modern German in, Old Icelandic ī, and Gothic in.

In Old English and early Middle English the prepositional use of in was often interchangeable with on, which was used generally in Old English where in now appears; in later Middle English a distinction was restored. —adv. Old English in (about 725, in Beowulf); from the preposition. —adj. 1599, that is in, internal; from the adverb. The meaning of having power or influence (as in the in party) is first recorded in 1817; the sense of exclusive (as in the in group) in 1907 (see IN-⁵), and the extended sense of in style, fashionable, chic (as in the in thing) about 1960. —n. Before 1670, ins and outs turns and twists; from the adverb. The meaning of influence with or introduction to someone with power (as in have an in with) is first recorded in 1929 in American English.

in-¹ a prefix meaning not, opposite of, without, the absence of, as in inaccessible, inexpensive, inability, inattention. Also found in the form il- before words beginning with l; im- before words beginning with b, m, p; ir- before words beginning with r. Borrowed from Latin in- not; cognate with Greek a- not, and Old English un- not; see UN-¹.

in-² a prefix meaning in, into, on, upon, as in incase = (put) into a case, and intrust = (give) in trust. Borrowed from Latin in-, related to in, prep.; see IN. Also found in the form il- before words beginning with l; im- before words beginning with b, m, p; ir- before words beginning with r.

English words having the prefix in-² come from two sources. Some were borrowed directly from Latin in-, others were borrowed from Old French en- (regular phonetic development from Latin in-), but were later made over to conform to the Latin. Of this latter group, some English words retained the original en-; see EN-¹.

In also has the function of strengthening the meaning of a base form, as in inweave = weave together, also of changing an intransitive verb to transitive, generally with little alteration of meaning, as in inearth, v.t., to bury, and earth, v.i., hide; indwell, v.t., to inhabit, and dwell, v.i., to inhabit.

in-³ a prefix meaning in, within, into, toward, as in indoors, inland. Found in Middle English in- and Old English in-; from the adverb in.

in-⁴ a combining form meaning within (something), as in in-house (with the specialized meaning of house company or organization). Forms with in- developed from corresponding prepositional phrases, such as in-depth interview = interview in depth.

in-⁵ a combining form meaning exclusive, as in the in-crowd, in-joke. This form is an extended use of in, adj. and is also related to in-⁴.

-in¹ a combining form of the adverb in, formed from a verb + -in meaning: 1 a public protest or demonstration, as in sit-in (1960). The early form sit-in was probably influenced by sit-down, as in sit-down strike. 2 any kind of gathering, especially for socializing, as in sing-in.

-in² a chemical suffix usually denoting: 1 neutral substances such as fats and proteins, as in olein, casein. 2 an antibiotic substance, as in penicillin, streptomycin. 3 a vitamin, as in niacin. 4 a hormone, as in insulin. Variant form of -ine².

inadvertence n. About 1440, borrowed from Middle French inadvertence. —inadvertent adj. 1653, formed from English inadvertence, with substitution of suffix -ent.

inane adj. 1662, empty or void; probably a back formation from inanity, modeled on Latin inānis empty, of unknown origin. The meaning of empty-headed or silly, is first recorded in 1819. —inanity n. 1603, emptiness, hollowness; later, silliness (1753); borrowed through French inanité, or directly from Latin inānitatem (nominative inānitās) emptiness, from inānis empty; for suffix see -ity.

A similar development is found in vain and vanity where the noun is recorded earlier than the adjective.

inanimate adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin inanimātus lifeless, from Latin in- not + animātus ANIMATE.

inaugurate v. 1606, a back formation from inauguration, and probably developed from earlier inaugurate, participial adjective (1600); borrowed from Latin inaugurātus, past participle of inaugurāre take omens from the flight of birds, consecrate or install when such omens or auguries are favorable (in- on, in + augurāre to act as an augur, predict, from augur fortuneteller, AUGUR); for suffix see -ATE¹. —inauguration n. 1569, borrowed through French inauguration installation, consecration, and directly from Latin inaugurātiōnem (nominative inaugurātiō) consecration or installment under good omens, from inaugurāre; for suffix see -ATION. —inaugural adj. 1689, possibly a back formation from inaugurate + -al¹, or borrowed from French inaugural, from inaugurer to inaugurate (learned borrowing from Latin inaugurāre); for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1832, American English, from the adjective.

inborn adj. Probably before 1350, found in Old English inboren native to a place, from in- within + boren brought forth; see BORN.

incandescent adj. 1794, glowing with heat; borrowed through French incandescent, or directly from Latin incandescens (nominative incandescens), present participle of incandescere become warm, glow, kindle (in- within + candescere begin to glow, become white; see CANDESCENT); for suffix see -ENT.

incantation n. Before 1393 incantacioun, borrowed from Old French incantation, learned borrowing from Latin incantātiōnem (nominative incantātiō) art of enchanting, from incantāre bewitch or charm (literally, chant a magic formula against), see ENCHANT; for suffix see -ATION.

incapable adj. 1594, borrowing of Middle French incapable, from Medieval Latin incapabilis (in- not + capabilis CAPABLE).

incapacitate v. 1657, formed from English incapacity (1611, borrowed from French incapacité) + -ATE¹.

incarcerate v. 1560, probably a back formation from earlier incarceration, and developed from incarcerate, adj. 1528, imprisoned; borrowed from Medieval Latin incarceratus, past participle of incarcerare imprison (Latin in- in + carcer prison; of uncertain origin); for suffix see -ATE¹. —incarceration n. 1536, borrowed from Old French incarceration, from Medieval Latin incarcerationem (nominative incarceratio), from incarcerare; for suffix see -ATION.

incarnate adj. 1395; borrowed from Late Latin incarnātus, past participle of incarnāre to make flesh (Latin in- in + carō, genitive carnis flesh; see CARNAL); for suffix see -ATE¹. —v. 1533, probably developed from the adjective, except in instances where it may be a back formation from incarnation. —incarnation n. About 1300 incarnation embodiment of God in the person of Christ; borrowing of Old French incarnation, learned borrowing from Late Latin incarnātiōnem (nominative incarnātiō), from incarnāre.

incendiary adj. Before 1460, probably from the noun. —n. 1402, borrowed from Latin incendiārius, n., from incendium fire, from incendere set on fire (in- in + candere* to light; see CANDLE).

incense¹ n. sweet smelling substance. About 1280 encens; borrowed from Old French encens, from Late Latin incēnsus (genitive incēnsūs) burnt incense, from Latin incendere set on fire (in- in + candere* to light; see CANDLE).

incense² v. make angry. About 1410 encensen set afire; later, to enrage (1494); borrowed from Middle French incenser, from Late Latin incēnsāre, a frequentative form of Latin incendere set on fire; see INCENSE¹.

incentive n. Probably before 1425 incentiue; borrowed from Late Latin incentivum, noun use of the neuter of Latin adjective incentivus setting the tune (in Late Latin, inciting), from incen-, stem of incinere strike up (in- in, into + canere sing; see CHANT); for suffix see -IVE.

inception n. Probably before 1425 inception; borrowed, perhaps through Middle French inception, and directly from Latin inceptionem (nominative inceptiō), from incept-, stem of incipere begin, take in hand (in- in, on + -cipere, combining form of capere take, seize; see CAPTIVE); for suffix see -TION.

incessant adj. 1461, borrowed from Old French incessant, from Late Latin incessantem (nominative incessans), from Latin in- not + cessantem (nominative cessans), present participle of cessare CEASE; for suffix see -ANT.

incest n. Probably before 1200, borrowed, perhaps from Old French inceste, and directly from Latin incestum unchastity, lewdness, incest, noun use of neuter adjective, from incestus unchaste or impure (in- not + castus pure; see CASTE). —incestuous adj. 1532, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French incestueux, from Late Latin incestuōsus, from incestus (genitive incestūs) incest; for suffix see -OUS.

inch n. Probably before 1200 unche, 1/2 of a foot; later inch (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) ynce; borrowed from Latin uncia, originally, a twelfth part, from pre-Latin oinicia*, from the root of unus ONE. —v. move little by little. 1599, from the noun.

inchoate adj. 1534, possibly a back formation from inchoation commencement (1530); borrowed from Middle French inchoation (and earlier in Middle English, elements or elementary knowledge), probably before 1400; borrowed directly from Late Latin inchoātiōnem, nominative inchoātiō, from Latin inchoāre, wrongly altered from incohāre to begin; originally, to hitch up, from in- on + cohūm strap fastened to the oxen's yoke. In some instances, inchoate was probably borrowed directly from Latin inchoātus, past participle of inchoāre to begin; for suffix see -ATE¹.

incident n. Before 1420 incydent, borrowed from Middle French incident, from Old French incident, adj., and directly from Latin incidentem (nominative incidēns), present participle of incidere happen or befall (in- on + -cidere, combining form of cadere to fall); for suffix see -ENT. —adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French incident, adj., from Old French incident, and directly from Latin incidentem, present participle of incidere. —incidence n. Probably before 1437, borrowed from Middle French incidence, from incident, see INCIDENT; for suffix see -ENCE. —incidental adj. 1616, formed from English incident, n. + *-al*¹, and probably also borrowed from French incidental. The meaning of casual or occasional, is first recorded in Milton's Of Education (1644); n. 1707, occasional circumstances, events, expenses; from the adjective.

incinerate v. 1555, developed from incinerate, adj., reduced to ashes; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French incinérer, from Medieval Latin incineratus, past participle of incinerare (Latin in- into + cinis, genitive cineris ashes); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also possibly in some instances, a back formation from incineration. —incineration n. Before 1529, borrowed from Middle French incineration, from Medieval Latin incinerationem (nominative incineratio), from incinerare; for suffix see -ATION. —incinerator n. 1883, device for burning substances to ashes; formed from English incinerate + *-or*².

incipient adj. 1669, possibly developed from earlier incipient, n. (1589); borrowed from Latin incipientem (nominative incipiēns), present participle of incipere begin, take up (in- on + -cipere, combining form of capere take); for suffix see -ENT.

incision n. 1392 inciscioun, formed in Middle English from a blend of Old French incision or Latin incisiōnem (nominative incisiō) a cutting into, and Latin scissiōnem (nominative scissiō) a cutting, tearing, from scindere to split, tear. Also recorded as incision (probably before 1422), re-borrowed from Middle French incision or Latin incisiōnem (nominative incisiō), from incidere to cut into (in- into + -cidere, combining form of caedere to cut); for suffix see -SION.

Recorded use of incision suggests that as an early technical term in medicine the spelling inciscioun was confused with Latin scissiōnem and blended with Old French incision, but when the word was later adopted into common vocabulary, the French incision was adopted. —incisive adj. Probably before 1425 incisive cutting, piercing; probably formed in Middle English on the model or earlier inciscioun + -ive after Middle French incisif (feminine incisive); also recorded as incisive (1528), re-borrowed from Middle French incisif and probably from Medieval Latin incisivus, from Latin incidere; for suffix see -IVE. The figurative sense of mentally acute, keen, is first recorded in 1850 as a French word in an English text. —incise v. 1541, back formation, probably from incised, adj. (re-formed by influence of the modern spellings incision, incisive) from earlier incised, adj., cut, slit (before 1425, formed in English with *-ed*² on a borrowing of Latin incisus, past participle of incidere, influenced by Latin scissus, past participle of scindere to divide, cut, tear). —incisor n. 1672, New Latin incisor cutter, from Latin incidere; for suffix see -OR².

incite v. 1447 encyten; borrowed from Middle French enciter, from Latin incitare (in- on + citare move, excite; see CITE).

inclement adj. 1667, either a back formation from inclemency (1559, borrowed from Middle French inclemence, from Latin inclementia, from inclemēns); or borrowed from French inclement and directly from Latin inclementem (nominative inclemēns) harsh, unmerciful (in- not + clémentem mild, placid); for suffix see -ENT.

incline v. Before 1325 enclinen be favorable, be willing; later, to slope, slant (about 1380); borrowed from Old French encliner, from Latin inclīnāre (in- in + clīnāre to bend). The spelling incline was influenced by the Latin form. —n. 1600, mental tendency; later, slant or slope (1846); from the verb. The noun is recorded in Middle English in an isolated instance (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French enclin a bow. —inclined adj. About 1384, formed from English incline + *-ed*¹. —inclination n. About 1395 inclinacioun natural disposition; borrowed from Old French inclination, and directly from Latin inclīnātiōnem (nominative inclīnātiō) leaning, bending, from inclīnāre to incline.

include v. 1402 includen to conceal or hide; later, to comprise or contain (before 1420); borrowed from Latin inclūdere (in- in + claudere to shut, CLOSE¹). —inclusion n. 1600, probably formed from English include + -sion, on the model of Latin inclūsiōnem (nominative inclūsiō) a shutting up, from inclūdere include. It is also possible that inclusion was borrowed from French inclusion. —inclusive adj. 1594, probably re-formed from English include + -ive, on the model of Medieval Latin inclusivus, from Latin inclūdere. Inclusive is recorded earlier as an adverb meaning inclusively (1443); borrowed from Medieval Latin inclusivus.

incognito adj., adv. 1649, both adj. and adv.; probably borrowed through French incognito (by virtue of the pronunciation of g, not heard in Italian) from Italian incognito, from Latin incognitus unknown (in- not + cognitus, past participle of cognoscere to get to know; see COGNIZANCE).

incoherence n. 1611, lack of consistency in thought or language; later, lack of connection of subjects (1665); formed from English in- + coherence, after Italian incoerenza. —incoherent adj. 1626, formed from English in- + coherent, after earlier incoherence.

income n. Before 1325, advent, arrival; earlier incomen come in, enter (about 1125); developed from Old English incuman (before 971) and incuma (about 950), from in, adv. + cuman COME. The meaning of that which comes in through business, labor, etc., is first recorded in 1601. An income tax on such proceeds was first enacted in Great Britain in 1799.

incommunicado adj. 1844, American English; borrowing of Spanish incomunicado, from past participle of incomunicar deprive of communication (in- not + comunicar communicate, from Latin commūnicāre to share, impart, from commūnis COMMON).

incorporate v. Before 1398 incorporaten combine into one body, include; borrowed from Late Latin incorporātus, past participle of incorporāre unite into one body (Latin in- into + corpus [genitive corporis] body); for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of establish a legal corporation is first recorded in the Rolls of Parliament (1461). —incorporation n. 1398, borrowed from Late Latin incorporātiōnem (nominative incorporātiō) uniting, from incorporāre to incorporate.

incorrect adj. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Latin incorectus uncorrected, unimproved (in- not + correctus CORRECT).

increase v. Before 1333 encressen make greater in size or numbers; borrowed through Anglo-French encress-, variant of Old French encreiss-, stem of encreistre, from Latin incrēscere to increase (in- in + crēscere grow). —n. About 1380, from the verb in Middle English.

increment n. About 1425, borrowed from Latin incrēmentum growth, increase, from incrē-, stem of incrēscere to INCREASE; for suffix see -MENT.

incriminate v. 1730–36, either a back formation from incrimination; or borrowed from Late Latin incrīmīnātus, past participle of incrīmīnāre (Latin in- against + crīmen, genitive crīmīnis verdict, offense; see CRIME); for suffix see -ATE¹. —incrimination n. 1651, formed in English from Late Latin incrīmīnāt-, past participle stem of incrīmīnāre + English -ion.

incubate v. 1641, brood upon; later, to sit on eggs to hatch them (1721); borrowed from Latin incubātus, past participle of incubāre to lie on, hatch (in- on + cubāre lie); for suffix see -ATE¹. —incubation n. 1614, borrowed from Latin incubātiōnem (nominative incubātiō), from incubāre; for suffix see -ATION. —incubator n. 1857, formed from English incubate + -OR².

inculcate v. 1550, borrowed from Latin incolcātus, past participle of incolcāre force upon, stamp in (in- in + calcāre to tread, press in); for suffix see -ATE¹. —inculcation n. 1553, borrowed from Latin incolcātiōnem (nominative incolcātiō), from incolcāre.

incumbent n. About 1410, person holding a church position; borrowed from Medieval Latin incumbentem (nominative incumbēns) hold a church position, present participle of incumbere to obtain or possess, from Latin incumbere recline on, apply oneself to (in- on + -cumbere lie down, related to cubāre lie); for suffix see -ENT. —adj. 1548, busy; probably from the noun; perhaps also borrowed from Latin incumbentem (nominative incumbēns).

incunabula n.pl. 1824, borrowing of Latin incūnābula, neuter plural, swaddling clothes, cradle, (hence) childhood, origin (in- in + cūnābula cradle, from cūnae cradle). The meaning of books printed before 1500 appeared in 1861, referring to Incunabula Typographiae, the first list of books printed before 1500, published 1688.

incur v. Probably about 1400 incurren; borrowed from Middle French encourir (also found in Anglo-French encurir), from Latin incurrere run into or against (in- upon + currere to run). —incursion n. Probably before 1425 incursion; borrowed through Middle French incursion, or directly from Latin incursiōnem (nominative incursiō) a running against, from incurrere INCUR.

indecent adj. 1563–87, borrowed through Middle French indécet, or directly from Latin indecentem (nominative indecēns), from in- not + decentem, decēns fitting or seemly, DECENT; for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of offensive, obscene, is first recorded in 1613. —indecency n. 1589, borrowed perhaps by influence of Middle French indécence, from Latin indecentia, from indecentem (nominative indecēns) unseemly; for suffix see -ENCY.

indeed adv. Before 1338 in dede in fact, in truth (in + dede deed, probably about 1175; developed from Old English dæd DEED). —interj. 1598, “really? is that so?”; later, as an expression of surprise, contempt, etc. (1834).

indefinite adj. Probably about 1425, implied in indefinitely, formed from Middle English *in-*¹ not + definite, modeled on Latin indefīnītē, indefīnītus.

indelible adj. 1529, borrowed from Latin indēlēbilis (in- not + dēlēbilis able to be destroyed, from dēlēre destroy, blot out; see DELETE); for suffix see -IBLE.

indemnity n. 1444 indempnite payment for loss; borrowed from Middle French indempnité, indemnité, learned borrowing from Late Latin indemnitatē (nominative indemnitas) security for damage, from Latin indemnitas unhurt, undamaged (in- not + damnum damage); for suffix see -ITY. —indemnify v. 1611 indamnifie, probably formed in English from French indemniser + English -fy.

indent v. Probably before 1400 endenten to notch or dent; later indenten (about 1400–25); borrowed from Old French endenter, from Late Latin indentāre to crunch (Latin in- in + dēns, genitive dentis TOOTH). —n. 1596, deep recess or notch; earlier, written agreement or indenture (1451); from the verb. —indentation n. Before 1728, formed from English indent, v. + -ation. —indenture n. Probably before 1335 endenture contract for services, formal agreement; later indenture (1440); borrowed through Anglo-French endenture, from Old French endenteure indentation, from endenter to notch; see INDENT. Also probably borrowed from Anglo-Latin indentura, perhaps from the Old French; for suffix see -URE. An indenture was written in identical versions on a single sheet, then cut apart along a zigzag or notched line. By matching the notched edges it was possible to prove the genuineness of a document. —v. 1658, to contract; later, bind by contract (1676); from the noun in English.

independent adj. 1611, formed from English in-¹ not + dependent, probably by influence of Italian indipendente and French independant; for suffix see -ENT. —independence n. 1640, formed from English independ(ent) + -ence; or as a back formation from independency (1611 independencie); for suffix see -ENCY. Also, in part borrowed from French independance (1630).

index n. Before 1398 index forefinger (used for pointing); borrowed from Latin index (genitive indicis) forefinger, pointer, sign, list, literally, anything which points out, from indicāre point out, INDICATE.

The meaning of a list of the contents of a book (1580), is a borrowing from such Latin phrases as Index Nominum Index of Names, Index Verborum Index of Words.

During the 1800's index was first used in science in the sense of an indicator, a number, or formula; for example refractive index in optics (1871). In economics, price index appeared in 1886, cost-of-living index in 1913. —v. 1720, from the noun. The meaning of adjust income, interest rates, etc., to changes in the value, is found in 1972 (probably from indexation). —indexation n. 1960, formed from English index, n. + -ation.

Indian n. Probably before 1300 Indien person born or living in India, or the East Indies; borrowed from Old French Indien, from Medieval Latin Indianus, from Latin India, from Greek Indiā the region of the Indus river; later, the region beyond the Indus river, from Indós the Indus river, from Old Persian Hindu Indian province of Sind; for suffix see -AN. The name India, Indea was also known in Old English (before 899); borrowed directly from Latin. In Modern English Indian has been used at least since 1602 in reference to the original inhabitants of the European colonists and explorers found in America. —adj. About 1566 Indian of or having to do with India or the East Indies; from the noun. In modern English Indian, adj., has been recorded since 1608 (Indian town) and was also used by DeSoto (found in a translation, 1544) to refer to the American Indian.

indication n. Probably before 1425 indicacion a sign, suggestion; borrowed from Latin indicatiōnem (nominative indicatiō) valuation, from indicāre point out, show (in- in + dicāre proclaim); for suffix see -ATION. —indicative adj., n. About 1450 indicatyf a verb form in grammar; borrowed from Old French indicatif (feminine indicative), from Late Latin indicativus, from Latin indicāre; for suffix see -IVE. —indicate v. 1651, back formation from indication, n. —indicator n. 1666; formed from English indicate + *-or*², modeled on Late Latin indicātor, from Latin indicāre.

indict v. Before 1626 indict charge with an offense or crime; earlier indyten (about 1440); endytten (about 1303); borrowed through Anglo-French enditer indict, from Old French enditer, enditier to dictate or inform; see INDITE.

The alteration of spelling in indict reflects the influence of Medieval Latin indictare to indict. —indictment n. 1594 indictment; a spelling alteration by influence of Medieval Latin indictare, or earlier indytemment (1440); endyttemment (about 1303); borrowed through Anglo-French enditement, from enditer INDICT.

indifferent adj. 1380 (implied in indifferently), unbiased, impartial, neutral; borrowed through Old French indifferent, or directly from Latin indifferentem (nominative indifferēns) not differing, not particular (in- not + differentem, differēns, present participle of differre set apart, DIFFER); for suffix see -ENT.

The extended meaning of unmoved, apathetic, is first recorded in 1519 and of neither good nor bad (1532) and later not particularly good, as in an indifferent writer (1638). —indifference n. About 1445, impartiality; perhaps a learned borrowing from Middle French indifférence, or directly from Latin indifferentia lack of difference, from indifferentem making no difference; see INDIFFERENT. Also possibly formed from English indifferent + -ence.

indigenous adj. 1646; formed in English from Latin indigena, adj. and n., (one) born in a country, native (indu in, within + gen-, root of gignere beget) + English suffix -ous.

indigent adj. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French indigent, learned borrowing from Latin indigentem (nominative indigēns), present participle of indigēre to need (indu in, within + egēre be in need, want); for suffix see -ENT. —indigence n. About 1385 indigence lack, lack of; borrowed from Old French indigence, learned borrowing from Latin indigentia, from indigentem; see INDIGENT.

indignation n. Probably before 1200 indignatio disdain, contempt; later indignacioun anger at something unworthy or wrongful (about 1350); borrowed through Old French indignation, or directly borrowed from Latin indignatiōnem (nominative indignatiō), from indignārī regard as unworthy, be angry or displeased at, from indignus unworthy (in- not + dignus worthy; see INDIGNITY); for suffix see -ATION. —indignant adj. 1590, probably a back formation from indignation with suffix -ant, modeled on Latin indignantem (nominative indignāns), present participle of indignārī be angry or displeased at. The sense of anger at something unworthy or wrongful, is first recorded about 1350, in the form indignacioun, borrowed from Old French indignation, from Latin indignatiōnem; see above. —indignity n. 1584 indignitie; probably borrowed from Middle French indignité, from Latin indignitatem (nominative indignitās), from indignus unworthy (in- not + dignus worthy; see DIGNITY). Also possibly formed from English in-¹ + dignity.

indigo n. 1555 endego; later indigo (1598) and indico (before 1599). The variety of forms is attributable to the variety of immediate sources: indico from Spanish; endego from Portuguese; indigo from Dutch by influence of Portuguese, and also directly from Portuguese, all borrowed from Latin indi- cum, from Greek indikón, literally, Indian substance, from neuter of indikós Indian, from Indós Indus river; see INDIAN.

Indigo (and variants) replaced Middle English ynde indigo pigment (1296), borrowed from Old French inde, from Latin indicum. —adj. 1856, from the noun.

indirect adj. Probably before 1387, probably borrowed from Old French indirect, from Late Latin indirectus not direct (Latin in- not + directus direct).

indiscretion n. About 1340, imprudence; probably borrowed from Old French indiscretion, learned borrowing from Latin indiscretiōnem (nominative indiscretiō), from in- not + discretiōnem, discretiō DISCRETION, also possibly formed from English in- not + discretion.

indisposed adj. Before 1400, formed from English in- not + disposed.

indite v. About 1303 endytten, borrowed from Old French enditer dictate, inform, compose, from Vulgar Latin indictāre* (formed from Latin in- in + dictāre declare or compose in words, DICTATE). Indite and indict came into English with the same spelling, but indite retained a Latin prefix and French root, while indict became a thoroughly Latinized form.

indium n. 1864, New Latin, an alteration of Latin indicum INDIGO with -ium, chemical suffix; so called from the blue lines in its spectrum.

individual adj. 1605 individuall peculiar to one person; borrowed probably from Middle French individual, and directly from Medieval Latin individualis, from Latin individuus indivisible (in- not + dividuus divisible, from dividere DIVIDE); for suffix see *-AL*¹. An isolated example appeared about 1425. —n. 1605, from the adjective. —individualism n. 1827, formed from English individual + -ism; also borrowed from French individualisme, in a translation of De Tocqueville's Democracy in America; the French word is from Medieval Latin individualis individual. —individualist n. 1840, formed from English individual + -ist; also possibly borrowed from French individualiste, from Medieval Latin individualis individual. —individuality n. 1614, individual character, formed from English individual + -ity.

indivisible adj. Before 1425, borrowed from Middle French indivisible, and directly from Late Latin indivisibilis (in- not + divisibilis DIVISIBLE).

Indo- a combining form meaning India or Indian, as in Indo-Aryan; also meaning India and —, or Indian and —, as in Indo-European. Borrowed from Indo-, combining form of Greek Indós Indian.

indoctrinate v. 1626, teach or instruct; probably reformed to the pattern of English verbs in -ate from earlier indoctrin teach or instruct (1509), found in Middle English endoctrinen (probably about 1450); borrowed from Middle French endoctriner (Old French en- put in + doctrine DOCTRINE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —indoctrination n. 1646, formed from English indoctrinate + -ion.

Indo-European adj. 1814, referring to a particular group of languages spoken in India, Western Asia, and Europe (compare an earlier name Aryan). The term as used by early scholars, such as Klaproth, Meyer, and Bopp is borrowed probably from German indoeuropäisch, translated as Indo-European in English.

indolent adj. 1710, borrowed from French indolent, from Middle French, insensitive, from Late Latin indolentem (nominative indolens) insensitive to pain (Latin in- not + dolentem, nominative dolens grieving, present participle of dolere suffer pain); for suffix see -ENT. Latin indolentem was coined by Jerome to render Greek apēlgēkós (found in Ephesians).

An earlier use of indolent, in the medical sense of causing no pain, painless, is first recorded in 1663; borrowed directly from Late Latin indolentem. —indolence n. 1710, borrowed from French indolence, from Middle French, ease of living, from Latin indolentia insensibility (in- not + dolentem, present participle); for suffix see -ENCE.

indomitable adj. 1634, that cannot be tamed; borrowed from Late Latin indomitābilis untameable, from in- not + domitābilis* tameable, from Latin domitāre to tame, frequentative form of domāre to tame). Indomitable replaced earlier form indomable untamable (before 1500); borrowed probably from Old French indomable, and directly from Latin indomābilis (in- not + domābilis tameable, from domāre to tame); for suffix see -ABLE.

indoors adv. 1799, in Washington's writings, used as an adjective, from the earlier phrase within doors (1581).

indubitable adj. 1624, implied in indubitably; borrowed from French indubitable, or directly from Latin indubitābilis (in- not + dubitābilis doubtful, from dubitāre hesitate, DOUBT); for suffix see -ABLE. An isolated example of indubitabyll (about 1461) is also borrowed from Latin indubitābilis.

induce v. About 1385 enducen lead on, persuade; later inducen (1402, possibly influenced by Middle French inducer); borrowed from Latin inducere lead into, persuade (in- in + ducere to lead; see *TOW*¹ pull). —inducement n. 1594, formed from English induce + -ment.

induct v. Probably about 1378 inducten introduce into a church office; borrowed from Latin inductus, past participle of inducere lead into; see INDUCE. The meaning of introduce to knowledge, initiate, is found in 1603, and bring into military service, in American English (1934). —induction n. Before 1398 induccioun introduction to the grace of God; borrowed through Old French induction introduction, induction, or directly from Latin inductiōnem (nominative inductiō) introduction, from induc-, stem of inducere lead into; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a conclusion in logic is recorded probably before 1425. The scientific meaning related to magnetic or electrical properties in a nearby object is first recorded in 1801. —inductive adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Old French inductif (feminine inductive) inducing, or directly from Late Latin inductivus relating to an assumption, from Latin induc-, stem of inducere; for suffix see -IVE.

indulge v. 1623, probably a back formation from indulgent, indulgence; and, in part, borrowed from Latin indulgere be kind, yield; of uncertain origin. —indulgence n. Before 1376 indulgence a freeing from temporal punishment for sin; later, mercy or leniency (before 1382); borrowed through Old French indulgence, or directly from Latin indulgentia complaisance, fondness, remission, from indulgentem (nominative indulgens), present participle of indulgere indulge; for suffix see -ENCE. —indulgent adj. 1509, probably a back formation from indulgence, and borrowed from Latin indulgentem (nominative indulgens), present participle of indulgere; for suffix see -ENT.

industry n. About 1477 industrie cleverness, skill, later, diligence, industriousness, effort (1531); borrowed from Old French industrie, learned borrowing from Latin industria diligence, earlier industria*, formed from early Latin indostruus diligent (indu in, within + the stem of struere to build); for suffix see -Y³.

The meaning of a trade or manufacture, is first recorded about 1566, and that of systematic work in 1611. —industrial adj. 1590 industriall resulting from labor; formed in English from Latin industria diligence + English -al¹. No recorded use appears after the 1600's, until the word was probably reintroduced (1774) from French industriel (industrie industry, from Latin industria diligence + -el -al¹). —industrialize v. 1882, formed in English from industrial + -ize, on the model of French industrialiser (1842). —industrious adj. 1523, implied in earlier industriously skillful, clever; borrowed possibly through Middle French industrieux, and directly from Late Latin industriōsus diligent, from Latin industria; see INDUSTRY.

-ine¹ a suffix forming adjectives from nouns, and meaning of, like, being, as in crystalline, elephantine. Borrowed through French -ine, feminine form of -in, or directly from Latin -inus, -inus of, like. Related to -EN².

-ine² a suffix forming nouns, and used in the names of chemical elements, as in chlorine, fluorine, and in the names of basic substances, as in cocaine, amine. Borrowed from French -ine (from Latin -ina), or directly from Latin -ina, feminine suffix of abstract nouns.

inebriate v. 1497, developed from earlier inebriate, adj., drunk (1447); borrowed from Latin inebriatus, past participle of inebriare (in- + ēbriare make drunk, from ēbrius drunk, of uncertain origin); for suffix see -ATE¹.

ineffable adj. Before 1398 ineffabile unexpressible, borrowed through Old French ineffable unspeakable, or directly from Latin ineffabilis unutterable (in- not + effabilis speakable, from effari utter, ef- out, variant of ex- before f + fari speak); see FATE; for suffix see -ABLE.

inept adj. 1603, without aptitude; 1604, absurd, foolish; borrowed from French inepte, from Latin ineptus (in- not + aptus APT). —ineptitude n. 1615, borrowed from now obsolete French ineptitude, from Latin ineptitūdō, from ineptus unsuitable, absurd; or formed from English inept + connective i + -tude, on the model of plenitude, etc.

inequality n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Old

French inequalité, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin, and directly from Medieval Latin inaequalitas, from Latin inaequalis unequal (in- not + aequalis EQUAL).

inert adj. 1647 inert inactive, borrowed from French inerte, and directly from Latin inertem (nominative iners) unskilled, inactive, (in- without + ars, genitive artis skill, ART).

inertia n. 1713, New Latin, a specialized use of Latin inertia unskillfulness or inactivity, from iners (genitive inertis) unskilled or inactive. The term as a form in New Latin was introduced into physics by the German astronomer Kepler; it is also recorded in Newton's Principia (1687). Early examples show inertia used as Latin inertia, or as vis inertiae until the early 1700's. The meaning of inactivity, apathy, is first recorded in 1822.

inestimable adj. About 1380 inestimable that cannot be computed; borrowed through Old French inestimable, or directly from Latin inaestimabilis (in- not + aestimabilis ESTIMABLE).

inevitable adj. About 1443, borrowed from Latin inevitabilis unavoidable; from in- not + evitabilis avoidable, from evitare to avoid, from ē- out, variant of ex- + vitare shun (originally, go out of the way).

inexorable adj. 1553, borrowed from Middle French inexorable, and directly from Latin inexorabilis (in- not + exorabilis easily entreated, from exorare to prevail upon, from ex- out + orare pray); for suffix see -ABLE.

infallible adj. Before 1420, borrowed from Medieval Latin infallibilis (in- not + fallibilis FALLIBLE).

infamous adj. About 1378 infamis wicked, notorious; borrowed possibly by influence of Old French infameux, from Medieval Latin infamosus, with the meaning influenced by Latin infamis of ill fame (in- not, without + fama reputation); for suffix see -OUS. The Medieval Latin infamosus was formed on Latin in- not + famosus celebrated. —infamy n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French infamie, learned borrowing from Latin, and directly from Latin infamia, from infamis of ill fame.

infant n. About 1384 infant baby or young child; borrowed from Old French enfant, or directly from Latin infantem (nominative infans), noun use of adjective with the meaning of not able to speak, young (in- not + fantem, fans, present participle of fari speak); for suffix see -ANT. —adj. About 1586, from the noun. —infancy n. Before 1398 infancia infancy; later enfance (probably before 1400), and infancy (probably before 1425); borrowed through Anglo-French enfance, and directly from Latin infantia babyhood, inability to speak, from infantem (nominative infans) infant; for suffix see -CY. —infantile adj. 1443, borrowed from Latin infantilis, from infantem (nominative infans) infant.

infantry n. 1579, borrowed from French infanterie, from older Italian and Spanish infanteria foot soldiers, from infante foot soldier, originally, a youth, from Latin infantem INFANT.

infatuate v. 1533, to make foolish; later, to inspire with a foolish passion (1567); developed from earlier infatuate, adj. (1471); borrowed from Latin infatuatus, past participle of infatuare make a fool of or infatuate (in- in + fatuus foolish); for suffix see -ATE¹. —infatuation n. 1649, formed from English infatuate + -ion, and borrowed from French infatuation, from Late Latin infatuatiōnem (nominative infatuatiō), from Latin infatuare; for suffix see -TION.

infect v. A blend of two words, both with the meaning contaminate, afflict with disease: infecten, probably about 1378; borrowed from Latin infectus, past participle of infectere to spoil, stain, literally, put in (in- in + facere perform); and enfecten, about 1380; borrowed from Old French enfait, infaict, past participle forms of infaire, from Latin in- in + facere perform. —infection n. 1392 infectioun borrowed through Old French infection, and directly from Late Latin infectiōnem (nominative infectiō), from Latin infect-, stem of infectere; for suffix see -TION. —infectious adj. 1542, formed from English infection + -ous.

infer v. 1526 enferre bring in, bring forward; borrowed, perhaps in part by influence of Middle French inferer, from Latin inferre bring into, cause (in- in + ferre carry, BEAR²). The meaning of draw as a conclusion, is first recorded in 1529. —inference n. 1594, borrowed from Medieval Latin inferentia, from Latin inferentem (nominative inferens), present participle of inferre infer; for suffix see -ENCE.

inferior adj. Probably before 1425, situated below; later, lower in rank or importance (1531); borrowed from Latin inferior lower, a comparative form of inferus, adj., that is below or beneath. —n. Before 1425, from the adjective. —inferiority n. 1599 inferioritie, borrowed probably through Middle French infériorité, and directly from Medieval Latin inferioritatem (nominative inferioritas), from Latin inferior; for suffix see -ITY.

infernal adj. About 1385 infernal of hell; borrowed from Old French infernal, from Late Latin infernalis of the lower regions, from infernus hell; literally, the lower world, noun use of Latin infernus situated below, lower, related to infernus below.

infest v. Probably before 1425 infesten give pain, distress, hurt; later, harass, annoy, trouble (1533); borrowed from Middle French infester, learned borrowing from Latin infestare to attack, from infestus hostile, dangerous; originally, inexorable.

The meaning of visit in large numbers, especially for destruction, is first recorded in 1602. —infestation n. Probably before 1425 infestation; borrowed from Old French infestation, from Late Latin infestatiōnem (nominative infestatiō) a molesting, from Latin infestare to attack; for suffix see -ATION.

infidel n. 1470–85, a non-Christian; later, a person who does not believe in religion (1526); borrowed from Middle French infidèle, learned borrowing from Latin infidelis unfaithful; later, unbelieving (in- not + fidēlis faithful; see FIDELITY). —adj. Before 1470 infidel unbelieving, heathen; borrowed from Middle French infidèle, adj. and n. —infidelity n. Before 1400 infidelite lack of faith; borrowed from Middle French infidélité, from Latin infidelitatem (nominative infidelitās) unfaithfulness, from infidelis unfaithful.

infinite adj. About 1380 infinif, borrowed probably from Old French infinif, learned borrowing from Latin, also borrowed directly from Latin infinitus (in- not + finitus bounded, FINITE). —n. 1563, from the adjective. —infinity n. About 1378 infinite something unlimited, infinite time; about 1380, boundlessness, infinite quality; borrowed from Old French infinité, from Latin infinitatem (nominative infinitās) boundlessness, from in- not + finis end.

infinitesimal adj. 1710, infinitely small; possibly developed from the noun (1655); or formed in English from New Latin infinitesimus an infinitely small part or quantity (originally, adjective nth in rank, from Latin infinitus INFINITE + -esimus, as in centēsimus hundredth, CENTESIMAL) + English -al.

infinitive n. 1530, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French infinitif, from Late Latin infinitivus unlimited, indefinite; also, the infinitive form of a verb, from Latin infinitus INFINITE; for suffix see -IVE. —adj. 1450 infinitif, borrowed through Middle French infinitif, or directly from Late Latin infinitivus unlimited, indefinite.

infirm adj. About 1380 infirm (of things) not firm or strong, weak; borrowed through Old French infirm, and directly from Latin infirmus (in- not + firmus FIRM¹). —infirmity n. Probably about 1350 enfermete an instance of disease; later infirmite inability or weakness (before 1382); borrowed from Old French enfermeté and directly from Latin infirmi-tatem (nominative infirmi-tās), from infirmus infirm; for suffix see -ITY.

infirmary n. 1451 infirmarie; borrowed from Medieval Latin infirmarium, infirmaria an infirmary or hospital, from Latin infirmus INFIRM; for suffix see -ARY.

inflame v. About 1340 enflaumen kindle, make ardent, set on fire; later inflamen (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French enflamer, from Latin inflammare (in- in + flamma FLAME).

inflammation n. Probably before 1425 inflammacioun; borrowed through Middle French inflammation, and directly from Latin inflammatiōnem (nominative inflammatiō), from inflammare INFLAME; for suffix see -ATION. —inflammable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French inflammable, and directly from Medieval Latin inflammabilis, from Latin inflammare inflame; for suffix see -ABLE.

inflate v. Probably before 1425 inflaten cause to swell; developed from inflate, adj. (probably about 1350); borrowed from Latin inflatus, past participle of inflare blow into, puff up (in- into + flare to BLOW²); for suffix see -ATE¹. Inflate is also a back formation from inflation. The sense of increase (prices or currency), is first recorded in 1844. —inflation n. About 1340 inflacioun, borrowed from Latin inflatiōnem (nominative inflatiō) a blowing into, from inflare INFLATE. The meaning of increase in prices or currency is first recorded in 1838. —inflationary adj. 1920, of or involving monetary inflation; formed from English inflation + -ary.

inflect v. About 1425 inflecten bend downward, curve; borrowed from Latin inflectere to bend in, change (in- in + flectere to bend). The meaning of vary a word's form to show grammatical relationship is found in 1668; and that of modulate the voice, in 1828 in American English, as a back formation from the earlier inflection. —inflection n. Probably before 1425 inflexion action of bending; later inflection (1597); borrowed, through Middle French inflexion, and directly from Latin inflexiōnem, nominative inflexiō (in Late Latin inflexiōnem, nominative inflexiō), from inflexere inflect. The meaning of modulation of the voice, appears before 1600, and the grammatical meaning of variation in the form in 1668.

inflexible adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French inflexible, and directly from Latin inflexibilis (in- not + flexibilis FLEXIBLE).

inflict v. 1566, developed from inflict, adj. (1526); borrowed from Latin infectus, past participle of infigere (in- on, against + figere to dash, strike; see CONFLICT); and as a back formation from infliction. —infliction n. 1534, borrowed from Late Latin infectiōnem (nominative infectiō) a striking against, from Latin infigere; for suffix see -TION.

inflorescence n. 1760, arrangement of flowers on a plant; later, flowering process (1800); borrowed from New Latin inflorescentia (coined by Linnaeus), from Late Latin infrōrescentem (nominative infrōrescens) flowering, present participle of infrōrescere come into flower; see FLORESCENCE; for suffix see -ENCE.

influence n. About 1385, a flowing from the stars that acts upon the character and destiny of people; borrowed from Old French influence emanation from the stars, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin influentia a flowing in, from Latin influentem (nominative influens), present participle of influer to flow into (in- in + fluere to flow); for suffix see -ENCE. The original astrological meaning gradually evolved into the meaning of power of persons to act on others (1588). —v. 1658, from the noun. —influential adj. 1570, having astral influence; later, having power, effective (1655); formed in English from Medieval Latin influentia influence + English -al; or from Middle English influent (probably before 1439, flowing; 1449, abundant, influential; borrowed from Middle French influent, from Latin influentem, influens flowing) + English -ial.

influenza n. 1743, borrowed during an outbreak of this disease that spread over Europe at the time; from Italian influenza influenza or epidemic; originally, visitation, influence (of the stars); learned borrowing from Medieval Latin influentia; see INFLUENCE. The use in Italian for flulike diseases, such as scarlet fever (influenza di febbre scarlattina) is known as early as 1504.

influx n. 1626, formed from English in- in + Latin fluxus a flowing, FLUX.

inform v. Probably before 1425 informen, learned borrowing from Latin informare to shape, form, train, instruct, educate (in- into + forma FORM), replacing earlier Middle English enformen, enfourmen to mold, train, educate, or instruct (recorded probably before 1325); borrowed from Old French enformer, enfourmer from Latin informare. The meaning of provide with facts or news, to report, tell, is first recorded in 1384. —informant n. 1693, borrowed from Latin informantem (nominative informans), present participle of informare to instruct; for suffix see -ANT. —information n. Before 1387 informacioun instruction, direction, teaching, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin informationem, from Latin informatiōnem (nominative informatiō) outline, concept, form of an idea, from informare replacing Middle English enformacioun (about 1380); borrowed from Old French enformacion, from Medieval Latin informationem; for suffix see -ATION. —informative adj. Before 1398 informative, borrowed from Medieval Latin informativus, from Latin informāt-, past participle stem of informare; for suffix see -IVE. —informer n. Probably before 1425, reformed in English from inform, v. -er¹, and replacing earlier Middle English enfourmer (about 1385); from the verb in English + -er¹, and borrowed from Old French enformer, from the verb in Old French; for suffix see -ER¹.

informal adj. Before 1460, formed from English in- not + formal.

infra- a prefix meaning below, beneath, beyond, as in infrastructure, infrared, infrasonic. Borrowed from Medieval Latin infra-, from Latin infra below, UNDER.

infraction n. 1461, a breaking of a law, obligation, right, etc., violation, borrowed from Middle French infraction, and directly from Latin infractiōnem (nominative infractiō) a breaking, from infrag-, stem of infringere INFRINGE.

infringe v. About 1467 enfrangen violate a law; formed in English from en-, variant of in- + Latin frangere. The later form infringe (1553) was influenced by, or borrowed from Latin infringere to damage, break (in- in + frangere to BREAK). The meaning of encroach upon, is first recorded in English in 1760–72. —infringement n. 1593, contradiction or refutation; later, violation (1628), and encroachment or intrusion (1673); formed from English infringe + -ment.

infuriate v. 1667, borrowed from Medieval Latin infuriatus, past participle of infuriare (Latin in- into + furia FURY); for suffix see -ATE¹.

infuse v. Probably before 1425, pour (a liquid) into something; borrowed through Middle French infuser, or directly from Latin infusus, past participle of infundere (in- in + fundere pour, spread). The sense of instill, inspire, is first recorded in 1526. —infusion n. Before 1400, something poured in; later, the steeping of a substance in water (1573); borrowed through Middle French, or directly from Latin infusiōnem (nominative infusiō), from infūd-, stem of infundere; for suffix see -SION.

-ing¹ a suffix meaning action, result, product, materials, etc., of verbs, as in thinking, painting. Middle English -ing, earlier -ung; developed from Old English -ing, -ung; cognate with Old Frisian -inge, -unge, Old Saxon -unga, Middle Low German -inge (modern Dutch -ing), Old High German -unga (modern German -ung), and Old Icelandic -ing, -ung. The earliest function of this suffix in Old English was to form nouns from corresponding verbs, as in asking, feeding, and to denote completed action or habit, as in blessing, occasionally with a plural, as in later tidings; there were also concrete nouns such as bedding, offering. Later, words ending in -ing were formed from nouns without a corresponding verb, as in railing, evening, morning.

The form also developed a particular noun use with verbal functions that are qualified by adverbs rather than adjectives, as in practicing regularly, and that govern objects as a verb does, as in writing letters. Other functions that are productive in English include -ing as the ending of a second element in a compound, such as on-going, far-reaching, childbearing, uprising, handwriting, or with an adjective function in carving knife, laughingstock, meetinghouse.

-ing² a suffix forming the present participle of verbs, as in walking, seeing, loving. Middle English, alteration of -ind, -end; developed from Old English -ende.

ingenious adj. Probably before 1425, intelligent or talented; borrowed from Middle French ingénieux and replacing earlier Middle English enginous (recorded before 1393; borrowed from Old French engignos), learned borrowing from Latin ingeniosus, from ingenium inborn qualities or talent; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of clever at contriving things, is first recorded in 1548. — ingenuity n. 1599, intelligence or talent; borrowed possibly from Middle French ingénuité, and directly from Latin ingenuitatem (nominative ingenuitās) frankness, from ingenuus of noble character, originally, freeborn; see INGENUOUS; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of skill in contriving or inventing, is first recorded in 1649.

ingenuous adj. 1598 (implied in ingenuously), frank or candid; borrowed from Latin ingenuus with the virtues of freeborn people, of noble character, frank; originally, native, freeborn (in- in + gen-, root of gignere beget, produce); for suffix see -OUS. The sense of artless, guileless, is first recorded in 1673.

ingest v. 1620, take (food, etc.) into the body; also, to put in, push in (1617); borrowed from Latin ingestus, past participle of ingerere put or push in, carry in (*in*² + gerere carry). — ingestion n. 1620, borrowed from Late Latin ingestio (nominative ingestio) a pouring in, from Latin inges-, stem of ingerere; for suffix see -TION.

ingot n. About 1395, mold in which metal is cast; probably formed from *in*² in + Old English goten, past participle of gēotan to pour. Ingot reappeared in 1583 in the sense of mass of cast metal.

ingrati v. 1622, possibly borrowed through Italian ingratiare, ingraziare, developed from in grazia into favor, from Latin in grātiā, from grātus pleasing, thankful; see GRACE; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

ingredient n. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Latin ingredientem (nominative ingrediens), present participle of ingredi go in, enter (*in*² in + gradī to step, go); for suffix see -ENT.

ingress n. Probably 1440, means of going in, entrance; borrowed from Latin ingressus entrance, from ingred-, stem of ingredi enter; see INGREDIENT.

inhabit v. About 1350 inhabiten, enhabiten; borrowed from Old French enhabiter dwell in, learned borrowing from Latin inhabitāre dwell in (*in*² + habitāre dwell, a frequentative form of habēre hold, have).

inhale v. 1725, probably a back formation from inhalation, after Latin inhālāre breathe upon (*in*² + hālāre breathe). The meaning in English developed from the contrasting verb exhale. — inhalation n. 1623, formed from Latin inhālāre + English -ation, on the analogy of exhalation.

inherent adj. 1578, fixed or situated in; 1588, intrinsic or essential; borrowed probably from Middle French inhérent, and directly from Latin inhaerentem (nominative inhaerēns), present participle of inhaerere be closely connected with, adhere to (*in*² + haerere to stick); for suffix see -ENT.

inherit v. About 1350 inheriten, enheriten receive as an heir, make (someone) heir; borrowed from Old French enheriter make heir, appoint as an heir, from Late Latin inhērēditāre (*in*² + hērēditāre, from Latin hērēs, genitive hērēdis, HEIR). — inheritance n. Before 1393 inheritance, enheritaunce, borrowed from Old French enheritaunce, from enheriter to inherit. — inheritor n. Probably before 1430 inheriter, enheritour; probably formed in English or Anglo-French after Middle French (enheritier, from en- + heriter).

inhibit v. Probably before 1425, to forbid; later, to hinder or restrain (1535); apparently a back formation from inhibition, and also borrowed from Latin inhibitus, past participle of inhibere. — inhibition n. Before 1387 inhibicioun formal prohibition; borrowed from Old French inibicion, learned borrowing from Latin inhibitionem (nominative inhibitio), from inhibi-, stem of inhibere hold in, restrain, hinder (*in*² + habere hold; see HABIT); for suffix see -TION. The specific sense of idea, emotion, or other inner force holding back one's impulses, is not found until 1916.

inimical adj. 1643, borrowed from Late Latin inimicālis, from Latin inimicus unfriendly, ENEMY (*in*¹ + amicus friendly, friend); for suffix see *-AL*¹.

iniquity n. Probably before 1300 inequite; borrowed from Old French iniquité, learned borrowing from Latin iniquitatem (nominative iniquitās) unequalness, injustice, from iniquus unjust, unequal (*in*¹ + aequus just, EQUAL); for suffix see -ITY.

initial adj. 1526, borrowed from Latin initialis, from initium beginning, from a lost noun ines* (genitive initis) an entrant, from inire go into, begin (*in*² + ire go); for suffix see *-AL*¹. — n. 1627, from the adjective. — v. 1864, in American English; from the noun.

initiate v. 1603, introduce into some knowledge or practice, induct; 1604, begin, set going; borrowed from Latin initiātus, past participle of initiāre begin, originate, from initium beginning, see INITIAL; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. In some instances initiate is a back formation from initiation. — n. 1811, from the verb. An earlier meaning of something initiated, is recorded in 1603. — initiation n. 1583, borrowed probably from Middle French initiation, and directly from Latin initiatiōnem (nominative initiatio) participation in secret rites, from initiāre; for suffix see -ATION. —initiative n. 1793, borrowed from French initiative, formed from initier + -ive.

inject v. 1601, borrowed from Latin injectus, past participle of inicare throw in or on (*in-*² + -icere, -jicare, combining forms of jacere to throw). Also probably a back formation from injection. —injection n. Probably before 1425 injection borrowed probably from Middle French injection, and directly from Latin injectionem (nominative injectionē) a throwing in, from injec-, stem of inicare; for suffix see -TION.

injunction n. Probably about 1425 injunction, borrowed from Late Latin injunctionem (nominative injunctionē) a command, from Latin injūnc-, stem of inungere impose, ENJOIN; for suffix see -TION. Formation of injunction in English was probably also influenced by Middle French injonction.

injury n. About 1384 injurie, borrowed through Anglo-French injurie, from Latin injūria wrong, hurt, noun use of the feminine of injūrius, injūrus wrongful, injurious (*in-*¹ + jūs, genitive jūris right, law); for suffix see -Y³. —injure v. About 1450 injurere to treat unjustly; borrowed from Middle French injurier, injurier to harm, offend, from Latin injūriāre, from injūria. Also a back formation from injury. —injurious adj. About 1425 injuryos abusive, borrowed from Middle French injūrios, and directly from Latin injūriōsus, from injūria hurt, injury; for suffix see -OUS.

ink n. About 1250 enke; later inke (before 1349); borrowed from Old French enque, from Late Latin encautum, from Greek énkauston* (used alongside énkauston) reddish-blue ink used by the Roman emperors; originally a neuter adjective, burnt in, from the stem of enkalein to burn in (*en-*² + kalein to burn). —v. 1562, from the noun, possibly after Middle French encreur to ink.

inkling n. 1513, apparently from gerund of inclen utter in an undertone (about 1350), related to Old English inca doubt, suspicion.

in-law n. 1894, abstracted from father-in-law, mother-in-law, etc. The earliest such phrase is brother-in-law (probably before 1300), indicating a relationship in Canon Law, and a degree of affinity within which marriage is prohibited.

inlet n. 1570–76, entrance, that which lets in (in-, adv. + let, v., corresponding to let in); earlier inlate permission to enter (about 1300), from inlaten, variant of inleten to let in (probably about 1250).

inmate n. 1589, person living with others, especially as a lodger (in, adj., that is inside + *mate*¹ companion). The sense of someone confined in a public institution appears in 1834.

inn n. 1123 inne temporary dwelling or lodging; developed from Old English inn lodging, dwelling, house (about 1000), probably from inne, adv., inside, within. The form in Old English is cognate with Old Icelandic inni dwelling. In Middle English, probably before 1200, the term is recorded with the meaning of a public house.

innards n.pl. 1825, dialectal variant of inwards, found in in- wardes organs or inner parts of the body (before 1398), and inward (probably before 1300), from inward, adj.; for suffix see -WARD.

innate adj. About 1412, borrowed from Latin innātus (in- + nātus, past participle of nāscī be born, Old Latin gnāscī); for suffix see -ATE¹.

inner adj. Probably before 1200 inre, developed from Old English innera, inra (before 900); comparative forms of inne, adv., inside, within; and cognate with Old Frisian inra inner, Old High German innaro, innere (modern German innere, innerer), Old Icelandic innri, idhri (Swedish inre, Norwegian and Danish indre); for suffix see -ER².

inning n. Probably 1407 ynnyng act of getting or taking in; developed from Old English innung a taking in or a putting in (before 899), gerund of innian get within, put or bring in, from in, inn, adv., IN; for suffix see -ING¹. The meaning of a turn of a team in a game, is first recorded in 1738. The extended sense of an opportunity to do something in 1836.

innocent adj. 1340, not guilty; later, simple, naive (about 1385); borrowed from Old French innocent, learned borrowing from Latin innocentem (nominative innocēns) not guilty, harmless, blameless (*in-*¹ + nocentem, nominative nocēns, present participle of nocēre to harm); for suffix see -ENT. —n. About 1200, guiltless person; later, simple or naive person (about 1230); borrowed from Old French innocent, n. —innocence n. 1340 innocence guiltlessness, later, simplicity or lack of cunning (about 1385); borrowed from Old French innocence, learned borrowing from Latin innocentia harmlessness, blamelessness, from innocentem; for suffix see -ENCE.

innocuous adj. 1598, harmless, formed from Latin innocuus (*in-*¹ + nocuus hurtful, from nocēre to harm) + English -ous.

innovate v. 1548, introduce as new; borrowed probably from Middle French innover, and directly from Latin innovātus, past participle of innovāre to renew or change (*in-*² + novus NEW); for suffix see -ATE¹. —innovation n. 1548, new way of doing things; earlier innovacyon renewal (1440); borrowed probably from Middle French innovation, and directly from Latin innovātiōnem (nominative innovātiō) a renewing, from innovāre; for suffix see -ATION.

innuendo n. 1678, borrowed from Latin innuendō by intimating, meaning, pointing to (literally, by giving a nod to), ablative case of the gerund of innuere to mean, signify, nod to (*in-*³ + nuere to nod); originally in English (1564) in legal documents to introduce a parenthetical clarification and meaning “namely, that is to say;” later referring to the clarification itself, hence, “any indirect reference or suggestion.”

innumerable adj. About 1350 innumerable very great, numerous; borrowed from Latin innumerābilis (*in-*¹ + numerābilis capable of being counted, from numerāre to count, from numerus NUMBER); for suffix see -ABLE.

inoculate v. Probably 1440 inoculate insert a bud into (a plant); borrowed from Latin inoculātus, past participle of inoculāre graft in, implant (*in-*² + oculus bud, EYE); for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of implant the germs of a disease to produce immunity, is first recorded in English in 1722, as a back formation of inoculation. —inoculation n. Probably 1440 inoculacioun insertion of a plant bud into another plant, grafting by budding; borrowed from Latin inoculatiōnem (nominative inoculatiō) a grafting in, from inoculāre; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of a process of inoculating to prevent disease, is first recorded in English in 1714.

inordinate adj. Probably 1348, not kept within orderly limits, excessive; borrowed from Latin inordinātus disordered (in-¹ + ordinātus, past participle of ordināre to set in order); for suffix see -ATE¹.

inquest n. About 1300 enqueste, anqueste formal inquiry into a matter; borrowed from Old French enqueste inquiry, from Vulgar Latin inquaesita* thing inquired into, alteration (influenced by inquaere* inquire) of Latin inquisita, feminine past participle of inquirere INQUIRE.

inquire v. About 1300 enqueren; later inqueren (before 1398) and enquiren (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French enquerre, from Vulgar Latin inquaerere*, alteration (influenced by Latin quaerere ask) of Latin inquirere (in-³ + quaerere ask, seek). The spelling inquire was a replacement from the Latin form. —inquiry n. 1426 enquere, enqueri, enquery, from enqueren inquire + -y -y³.

inquisition n. 1384 inquisicioun interrogation, questioning; borrowed from Old French inquisition, inquisicion, from Latin inquisitiōnem (nominative inquisitiō) a searching into, legal examination, from inquirere INQUIRE; for suffix see -TION.

Reference to The Inquisition, ecclesiastical court appointed by the Roman Catholic Church in the 1200's to suppress heresy, is not found in English before 1502 referring to the Spanish Inquisition, 1478–83. —inquisitive adj. About 1390 inquisitif; borrowed from Old French inquisitif, from Late Latin inquisitivus, from Latin inquisitus, past participle of inquirere; for suffix see -IVE. —inquisitor n. 1402 inquisitour, borrowed from Latin inquisitor searcher, examiner, from inquisitus, past participle of inquirere; for suffix see -OR².

insane adj. 1560, borrowed from Latin insānus (in-¹ + sānus healthy, sound in body or in mind, SANE). —insanity n. 1590, possibly formed in English from insane + -ity, modeled on Latin insānitās unsoundness, unhealthiness, disease (in-¹ + sānitās health, soundness of body or of mind).

insatiable adj. About 1412 insaciable, borrowing of Old French insaciable, from Latin insatiābilis (in-¹ + satiāre SATIATE); for suffix see -ABLE.

inscription n. Before 1382 inscripcioun introductory statement of a book, heading, title, borrowed from Latin inscriptiōnem (nominative inscriptiō), from inscribere inscribe; for suffix see -TION. —inscribe v. 1552, replacement of earlier inscriven (1382, borrowed from Old French inscrire and from Latin). The form in modern English was borrowed from Latin inscribere (in-² + scribere write).

inscrutable adj. Before 1500, borrowed, perhaps through insect n. 1601, borrowed, possibly by influence of French insecte, from Latin insectum animal with a notched or divided body (literally, cut into), from neuter past participle of insecare cut into, cut up (in-² + secare to cut). The reference to notched or divided in the Latin word is to the segmented division of an insect's body; it is a loan translation of Greek éntomon insect. —insecticide n. 1865 (attributive use), formed from English insect + *-cide*².

Middle French inscrutable, from Late Latin inscrūtābilis (Latin in-¹ + scrūtārī examine, ransack); for suffix see -ABLE.

inseminate v. 1623, to sow or implant; borrowed from Latin insēminātus, past participle of insēmināre (in-² + sēmināre to plant, propagate, beget, from sēmen, genitive sēminis seed, SEMEN); for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning impregnate with semen, is first recorded in 1923, as a back formation from insemination, in the context of animal breeding. —insemination n. 1658, action of sowing or implanting of seed; formed from English inseminate + -ion. The meaning of introduction of semen, is first recorded in 1860.

insensible adj. About 1380, that cannot be perceived by bodily senses; borrowed from Old French insensible, and directly from Latin insēnsibilis (in- not + sēnsibilis SENSIBLE). The application to mental processes appeared about 1475.

insert v. 1529, developed from insert (recorded before 1400), past participle of inseren; borrowed from Latin inserere put in (in-² + serere join together). —n. 1893, from the verb. —insertion n. 1578, place or manner of attachment of an organ, muscle, etc.; borrowed, probably through Middle French insertion, from Late Latin insertiōnem (nominative insertiō), from Latin inserere. The act of putting in is first recorded in 1598.

inside n. 1392 ynneside interior of the body; later, inner side (1504); originally in Middle English, a compound of inne, adv., and side. —adj. 1611, from the noun. —prep. 1791, from the noun. —adv. 1803, from the noun. The phrase inside out is first recorded before 1600. —insider n. 1846, American English, a book carried in an inside coat pocket; 1848, someone who is a member of a group; formed from English inside + *-er*¹.

insidious adj. 1545, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French insidieux, from Latin insidiōsus deceitful, from insidiae, pl., plot, snare, from insidēre sit on, occupy (in-² + sedēre SIT); for suffix see -OUS.

insight n. Probably before 1200 insiht inner sight, understanding (in, adv. and siht SIGHT).

insignia n.pl. 1648, borrowing of Latin insignia, neuter plural of insigne badge, mark (in-² + signum mark, SIGN). The earlier form ensigne (probably before 1400) became differentiated in meaning after insignia was introduced and today ensign usually has the sense of a flag or pennant. The singular form insigne appeared in English in 1774, at the same time as insignia began to be used as a singular, with insignias as its plural.

insinuate v. 1529, introduce, convey, or instill (an idea) indirectly; borrowed from Latin insinuātus, past participle of insinuāre bring in by windings and curvings, wind one's way into (in-² + sinus, genitive sinūs, a curve, winding); for suffix see -ATE¹. —insinuation n. 1526, borrowed, possibly through Middle French insinuation, from Latin insinuātiōnem (nominative insinuātiō) an insinuating one's way into, from insinuāre; for suffix see -ATION.

insipid adj. 1620, without taste; borrowed, probably through French insipide, from Late Latin insipidus (Latin in-¹ + sapidus tasty, from sapere have a taste, be wise). The sense of uninteresting or dull, is first recorded in 1649, probably borrowed from Medieval Latin insipidus dull, from Late Latin insipidus tasteless.

insist v. 1586, persevere, persist in a course of action; probably a back formation from insistence, modeled on Latin insistere persist, dwell upon, stand upon (in-² + sistere take a stand, from stāre to STAND). —insistence n. 1436, formed in Middle English from Middle French insister, and from Latin insistere + English suffix -ence.

insolent adj. About 1390, borrowed from Latin insolentem (nominative insolēns) arrogant, immoderate, unusual (in-¹ + solentem, present participle of solēre be accustomed, possibly related to sodālis close companion, and suāscere become used to); for suffix see -ENT. —insolence n. About 1390, borrowed from Latin insolentia arrogance, excess, unusualness, from insolentem; for suffix see -ENCE.

insoluble adj. About 1384 insoluble that cannot be dissolved; probably before 1387, that cannot be solved; borrowed from Latin insolūbilis that cannot be loosened (in-¹ + solūbilis SOLUBLE).

insomnia n. 1758, borrowing of Latin insomnia (in-¹ + somnus sleep). An Anglicized form insomnie appeared in Cockeram's Dictionary (1623), probably borrowed from French insomnie (1555). —insomniac n. 1908; formed from English insomnia + -ac, as in maniac.

inspect v. 1623, borrowed from Latin inspectus, past participle of inspicere; see INSPECTION. —inspection n. Before 1393 inspeccioun, inspeccioun close examination; borrowed from Old French inspection, from Latin inspectiōnem (nominative inspectiō), from inspec-, stem of inspicere look into, inspect, examine (in-² + specere to look); for suffix see -TION. —inspector n. 1602, formed perhaps on the model of French inspecteur, and borrowed from Latin inspector (inspec-, stem of inspicere + -tor).

inspire v. About 1340 inspiren, enspiren possibly a back formation from inspiration; also a borrowing through Old French inspirer, inspirer, and directly from Latin inspirāre inspire, inflame, blow into (in-² in + spirāre breathe; see SPIRIT). —inspiration n. About 1303 inspiracioun, enspiracioun, borrowed through Old French inspiration, and directly from Late Latin inspiratiōnem (nominative inspiratiō), from Latin inspirāre inspire; for suffix see -ATION.

install v. About 1422, to place in office (originally, by seating in an official stall); borrowed from Middle French installer, or directly from Medieval Latin installare (Latin in-² in + Medieval Latin stallum stall, from Germanic; compare Old High German stal standing place, STALL¹). —installation n. 1464 installacion; borrowed from Middle French installation, and directly from Medieval Latin installatiōnem (nominative installatiō), from installare install; for suffix see -ATION. Also in later uses, formed from English install + -ation.

installment¹ n. act of installing, establishment. 1589, formed from English install + -ment.

installment² n. part of a sum of money. 1732, alteration of earlier (1577–87) estallment; probably formed in English from Old French estaler to fix, place + English -ment. The alteration in spelling to installment is found in the verb install to pay by installments (1679).

instance n. About 1380, the present time or circumstances; later, example or case (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French instance eagerness, anxiety, solicitation, from Medieval Latin instantia presence, urgency, objection, from Latin instantia presence, earnestness, urgency, from instāntem (nominative instāns) urgent, see INSTANT; for suffix see -ANCE.

instant n. Before 1398, particular moment; borrowed probably from Old French instant, and directly from Medieval Latin instantem (nominative instans), from Latin instāntem present, pressing, urgent, present participle of instāre to urge, stand near (in-² in + stāre to STAND); for suffix see -ANT. —adj. About 1443, developed from the noun in English, and probably, in part borrowed from Old French instant imminent, learned borrowing from Latin instāntem (nominative instāns). —instantaneous adj. 1644, implied in instantaneously; formed in English as if from Latin instantāneus*, modeled on Latin mōmentāneus momentary; for suffix see -OUS.

instead adv. Probably before 1200 i stude, early dialect form; later (about 1300) found in in stede (of) in place (of), in lieu (of), a phrasal combination with stede STEAD.

The solid compound instede is first recorded before 1387, but it did not become the established form until about 1640.

instep n. About 1450 instep; of uncertain origin, perhaps from in- in + step mistakenly substituted for obsolete stepe steep, a declivity or slope.

instigate v. 1542, probably a back formation from instigation; also, borrowed from Latin instigātus, past participle of instigare; for suffix see -ATE¹. —instigation n. Before 1410 instigacioun, borrowed through Middle French instigation, and directly from Latin instigatiōnem (nominative instigatiō) an urging or incitement, from instigare urge on, incite; for suffix see -ATION.

instill or instil v. Probably before 1425 instillen, borrowed from Latin insillāre put in by drops (in-² + stilla a drop; see DISTILL).

instinct n. Before 1420, incitement or impulse, later, natural impulse, intuitive knowledge (about 1454); borrowed from Latin instinctus, from past participle of instinguere incite or impel; related to instigare INSTIGATE. —adj. 1538, innate; from the noun, and borrowed from Latin instinctus, past participle; see noun. A misunderstanding of the use impelled or excited (1667) led to the meaning of filled or charged with, appearing in 1797–1803. —instinctive adj. 1610, implied in instinctively; formed from English instinct, n. + -ive.

institute v. About 1330, establish in office, appoint; later, set up, start, found (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin institūtus, past participle of instituere set up (*in-*² in + statuere establish). —n. Before 1520, purpose, design; later, something instituted (1546); borrowed and through Middle French institut, from Latin institutum design or precept, noun use of the neuter past participle of instituere establish. The meaning of organization or society is first recorded in 1829; borrowed from French institut. —institution n. Before 1400 institucioun act of establishing; 1410, a set of established laws; borrowed from Old French institution, from Latin institutiōnem (nominative institutiō) custom, from instituere. The meaning of an organization instituted for a social purpose, is first recorded in 1707.

instruct v. Probably before 1425 instruere tell, inform; probably in some instances a back formation from instruction, and a borrowing of Latin instructus, past participle of instruere arrange, inform, teach (*in-*² on + struere to pile, build). —instruction n. Probably about 1400 instrucioun information, lesson, teaching; borrowed from Old French instruction, from Latin instructiōnem (nominative instructiō), from instruere; for suffix see -TION. —instructive adj. 1611, probably formed from English instruct + -ive, after French instructif instructive. —instructor n. Before 1464 instruicour, borrowed through Old French instruicteur and directly from Latin instructor preparer, from instructus, past participle of instruere; for suffix see *-OR*².

instrument n. About 1300, musical instrument; later, device or implement (probably before 1325); borrowed from Old French instrument, and from Latin instrumentum a tool, apparatus, furniture, dress, document, from instruere arrange, furnish, INSTRUCT. —instrumental adj. Before 1398, serving as a means to an end; borrowed from Old French instrumental, from instrument instrument, from Latin instrumentum; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

insular adj. 1611, of an island; borrowed by influence of French insulaire, from Late Latin insulāris, from Latin insula island; for suffix see -AR; replacement of earlier insulan living on an island (before 1444); borrowed from Latin insulānus, from insula. The figurative sense of isolated, narrow, prejudiced, is first recorded in 1775, probably as a back formation of insularity (1755).

insulate v. isolate. 1538, make into an island; formed from Latin insula island + English *-ate*¹; later, stand detached, isolate (1785); developed from insulated isolated (1727) and insulate, adj., detached, isolated (1712, borrowed from Latin insulātus made like an island, from insulāre* make like an island; for suffix see *-ATE*¹). The meaning of keep from losing or transferring electricity, sound, heat, etc., is first recorded in 1742. —insulation n. 1767, formed from English insulate + -ion. —insulator n. 1801, formed from English insulate + *-or*².

insulin n. 1922, formed in English from Latin insula island +

English *-in*²; so called because this hormone is secreted by the islets of Langerhans in the pancreas.

insult v. 1570–76, to exult or brag insolently or scornfully; probably borrowed from Middle French insulter, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin insultāre to assail or insult, a frequentative form of insilire leap at or upon (*in-*² on, at + salire to leap; see SALLY). The sense of treat with scorn, offend, is first recorded in 1620. —n. 1603, assault or attack; later, insulting behavior (1671); borrowed through French insulte, and directly from Late Latin insultus (genitive insultūs) a scoffing, insult, from insul-, stem of Latin insilire leap at (*in-*² on, at + salire to leap).

insuperable adj. Before 1349, invincible; borrowed from Latin insuperābilis (in- not + superābilis that may be overcome, from superāre overcome, from superus one that is above, from super OVER). The meaning of insurmountable, is first recorded in 1657.

insure v. About 1412 insuren to give or exact a pledge, to assure, variant of ensure; see ENSURE. Insure was formerly used in all the senses of ensure; the specific meaning of make safe against loss by payment of premiums, is first recorded in 1635. —insurance n. 1651, system of insuring life or property; formed from English insure + -ance.

insurgent n. 1765, borrowed from Latin insurgentem (nominative insurgēs), present participle of insurgere rise up (*in-*³ against + surgere to rise); for suffix see -ENT. —adj. 1814, from the noun.

insurrection n. Probably before 1425 insurreccion, borrowed from Middle French insurrection, learned borrowing from Late Latin insurrectiōnem (nominative insurrectiō) a rising up, from Latin insurreg-, stem of insurgere to rise up; for suffix see -TION.

intact adj. Before 1500, unimpaired, whole, untouched; borrowed possibly through Middle French intact, and directly from Latin intactus (in- not + tactus, past participle of tangere to touch).

intangible adj. 1640, borrowed probably from French intangible, from Medieval Latin intangibilis (*in-*¹ not + tangibilis TANGIBLE).

integer n. 1571, borrowed from Latin integer whole (earlier entagros*); literally, intact or untouched (*in-*¹ not + tag-, the root of tangere to touch).

integral adj. 1471, implied in integrallie, adv., necessary to make complete; borrowed probably through Middle French intégral, from Medieval Latin integralis forming a whole, from Latin integer whole; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The sense of not fractional, is first recorded in 1658. —n. 1620, something undivided; from the adjective.

integrate v. 1638, make complete; developed from integrate, adj., intact (about 1450); borrowed from Latin integrātus, past participle of integrāre make whole, from integer whole; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The meaning of combine into a whole, is first recorded in 1802. The sense of desegregate, is first recorded in integrity n. Before 1400 integrité soundness; borrowed from Old French intégrité, learned borrowing from Latin integritatem (nominative integritas) soundness, wholeness, from integer whole; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of uprightness is first recorded in 1548.

1948. —integration n. 1620, borrowed probably from French intégration, and directly from Latin integratiōnem (nominative integratiō) restoration of the whole, from integrare. The meaning of desegregation, is first recorded in 1940.

intellect n. About 1380, understanding; borrowed from Old French intellecte, and directly from Latin intellēctus (genitive intellēctūs) discernment or understanding, from intelle- (by assimilation of g to c before t), stem of intelligere to understand, discern. —intellectual adj. Before 1398, of the intellect; borrowed from Old French intellectuel, and directly from Late Latin intellēctualis pertaining to the understanding, from Latin intellēctus intellect. The meaning of inclined to pursuits which exercise the mind, is first found in 1819. —n. 1599, the mind; later, intellectual person (1652); from the adjective.

intelligent adj. 1509, probably a back formation from intelligence modeled on Latin intelligentem; for suffix see -ENT. —intelligence n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French intelligence, from Latin intelligentia understanding, from intelligentem (nominative intelligens) discerning, present participle of intelligere; earlier intellegerē understand, discern (inter- between + legere choose, pick out, read); for suffix see -ENCE. The sense of information or news, is first recorded before 1475. —intelligible adj. Before 1382, able to understand; borrowed from Old French intelligible, and directly from Latin intelligibilis, from intelligere. The sense of capable of being understood, is first recorded in 1509.

intend v. About 1300 entenden direct one's attention to; later intenden (about 1425); borrowed from Old French intendre, entendre, from Latin intendere turn one's attention, strain (*in-*³ toward + tendere to stretch). The meaning of have as a purpose, plan, is first recorded about 1385.

intense adj. Probably before 1425, very strong or acute; borrowed from Middle French intense, learned borrowing from Latin intēnsus stretched, strained, tight, intense; originally, past participle of intendere to stretch out, strain; see INTEND. —intensify v. 1817, make intense; formed from English intense + -ify, variant of -fy. —intensity n. 1665, extreme strength, force or energy; formed from English intense + -ity. The sense of extreme depth of feeling is first recorded in 1830. —intensive adj. About 1450, intense, vehement; probably borrowed from Middle French intensif, intensive, from Medieval Latin intensivus, from Latin intēnsus forceful; for suffix see -IVE. —n. something that intensifies, as a word or prefix. 1813, from the adjective.

intent¹ n. purpose. Probably before 1200 entent, entente; formed in English from a fusion of Old French entent application, and entente thought, desire, purpose; both forms being learned borrowings from Latin: entent from Late Latin intentus attention; and entente from Vulgar Latin intenta*, n., a stretching out, a straining; both forms from the past participle intentus intent² adj. very attentive. 1606, earnestly engaged, eager; 1610, very attentive; borrowed from Latin intentus attentive, eager, strained, past participle of intendere to strain, stretch; see INTEND.

(feminine intenta) of intendere stretch out, lean toward, strain; see INTEND. —intention n. About 1380 entencion desire or feeling; later, purpose, aim (about 1390); borrowed from Old French entention, intention, from Latin intentiōnem (nominative intentiō) purpose, effort, straining, from intendere; for suffix see -TION.

inter v. 1303 interen, enteren; borrowed from Old French enterer, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin intererare put in the earth, bury (Latin in- in + terra earth). —interment n. Probably before 1300 interment, enterement; borrowed from Old French enterement, from enterer inter.

inter- a prefix meaning: together, one with the other, as in intercommunicate, intermixture; between, among, as in interpose.

Though abstracted from compounds in which it entered English inter- (from Latin inter, prep., adv., among, between, during), was not considered a living prefix in English until the 1400's. After that many words borrowed in entre-, enter- were respelled with Latin inter- (though vestiges of the older French borrowings are found in entertain and enterprise).

intercede v. 1578, intervene, come between; later, plead in another's behalf (1606); a back formation from intercession, and in part borrowed directly from Latin intercedere intervene, go between (inter- between + cēdere go). —intercession n. Probably before 1430 intercession the act of interceding; borrowed from Latin intercessiōnem (nominative intercessiō) intervention; from intercedere intervene; for suffix see -SION.

intercept v. 1391 intercepten to cut off or mark off (a segment of a line), later, take or seize on the way between two points (about 1540); borrowed from Latin interceptus, past participle of intercipere take or seize between, intercept (inter- between + -cipere, combining form of capere to catch, take). —interception n. Probably before 1425 interceptioun interruption of the flow of body fluids; later, act of intercepting (1599); borrowed from Latin interceptiōnem (nominative interceptiō) a taking away, from intercep-, stem of intercipere; for suffix see -TION.

intercourse n. 1449 entercourse trade or traffic in goods, commercial dealings, later, social communication between individuals (1547–64); borrowed from Middle French entrecours, from Old French, learned borrowing from Latin intercurus a running between or intervention, from the stem of the past participle of intercurrere to run between (inter- between + currere to run). The meaning of sexual relations is first recorded in 1798.

interdict v. Probably before 1425 entrediten to prohibit or forbid, earlier entrediten to cut off from the Church (about 1300); borrowed from Old French entredit, past participle of entredire forbid by decree, from Latin interdicere interpose by speech, prohibit (inter- between + dicere speak). —n. Before 1464 interdict; earlier entredit a decree of exclusion from the Church (about 1300); borrowed from Old French entredit, from Latin interdictum prohibition; noun use of neuter past participle of interdicere. —interdiction n. 1464 enterdicioun; borrowed from Latin interdictiōnem (nominative interdictiō), from interdic-, stem of interdicere prohibit; for suffix see -TION. The military sense of interrupt by aerial bombing is first recorded in 1944.

interest n. Probably about 1425 interest concern, right, claim; borrowed from Latin interest it is of importance, it makes a difference, it concerns or matters, form of the third person singular present of interesse to concern, be of importance (inter- between + esse be).

Interest is a replacement of interesse, intresse concern, interest in anything (about 1390); borrowed from Anglo-French interesse, from Medieval Latin interesse compensation for loss, interest in money lent; noun use of Latin interesse to concern, be of importance.

The earliest occurrences of interest were in reference to legal and financial uses. The meaning of money paid for the use of money appeared in 1545. —v. 1608, from the noun, replacing earlier interesse (1570), also from the noun. —interesting adj. 1711, important; later, of interest (1768); from interest, v. + *-ing*².

interfere v. 1440 entyferyn to intermingle or mix; 1449 enterferen to meddle, mix in the affairs of others; borrowed from Middle French enterferer, enterferir to strike each other (entre- between + ferir to strike, from Latin ferire to knock, strike). The Latinate spelling interfere is first recorded in 1451. —interference n. 1783, act or fact of interfering; formed from English interfere + -ence.

interferon n. 1957, formed from English interfere, v. + -on chemical suffix; so called because it inhibits or interferes with replication of viruses.

interim n. 1548, borrowing of Latin interim, adv., in the meantime; originally, in the midst of that (inter between, INTER- + im, ancient adverb from the stem of the pronoun is this, that). —adj. 1604, from the noun in English and a borrowing of Latin interim, adv.

interior adj. 1490, borrowed through Middle French intérieur, and directly from Latin interior inner, a contrastive adjective of inter within; see INTER-. —n. 1796, from the adjective.

interject v. 1578, come between; probably a back formation from interjection, modeled on Latin intericere to throw or cast between. —interjection n. Probably before 1430 interjeccioun exclamation or outcry; borrowed from Middle French interjection, from Latin interjectionem (nominative interjectiō) a throwing or placing between, from interjec-, stem of intericere (inter- between + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw); for suffix see -TION.

interlard v. Probably before 1425 enterlarden mix with alternate layers of fat; borrowed from Middle French entrelerarder (entre- between + larder to lard, from Old French lard bacon fat); for spelling see INTER-. The figurative sense of diversify with something intermixed, is first recorded in 1563–87 and the Latinized spelling in 1555.

interlinear adj. About 1378 enterlinarie; borrowed from Medieval Latin interlinearis (inter- between + linea LINE); for suffix see -AR.

interlocutor n. 1514, person who takes part in a conversation or dialogue; formed in English as if from Latin interlocūtōr*, from interlocū-, stem of interloquī interrupt + -tor; for suffix see -OR².

interloper n. About 1590 enterloper an unauthorized trader; later interloper (1603–27), probably formed in English from inter-, enter- between + -loper, as in landloper a vagabond, adventurer; borrowed from Middle Dutch landlōper (land land + lōper runner, rover, from lōpen to run). The general meaning of intruder, is first recorded in 1632.

interlude n. About 1303 enterlude a short, humorous play introduced between parts of a long medieval mystery play; later interlude (1375, in Scottish); borrowed from Medieval Latin interludium (from Latin inter- between + lūdus a play). The meaning of an interval in the course of an action or event, is first recorded in 1751.

intermediate adj. Probably before 1425 intermediate intervening; borrowed through French intermédiate, or directly from Medieval Latin intermediatus, from Late Latin intermedium place coming between (from Latin inter- between + medius in the middle); for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1650, from the adjective.

intermission n. Before 1415 intermissioun a stopping for a time, interruption; borrowed from Latin intermissiōnem (nominative intermissiō) interruption, from intermittere to leave off; see INTERMITTENT; for suffix see -SION.

intermittent adj. 1603, possibly formed in English from intermit (1563–87; borrowed from Latin intermittere) + -ent, modeled on Latin intermittentem; or borrowed directly from Latin intermittentem (nominative intermittēns), present participle of intermittere to leave off (inter- between + mittere let go, send); for suffix see -ENT.

intern¹ v. 1866, confine within a place; borrowed from French interner send to the interior, confine, from Middle French interne inner or internal, learned borrowing from Latin internus within, INTERNAL. —internment n. 1870, formed from English intern¹ + -ment, probably on the model of French internement.

intern² or interne n. doctor training in a hospital. 1879, American English; borrowed from French interne assistant doctor; literally, resident within a school, etc., from Middle French interne internal; see INTERN¹.

internal adj. Probably before 1425 internalle (of a sea) extending toward the interior of a continent; later, pertaining to the mind or soul (1509); borrowed from Middle French internal, or directly from Medieval Latin internalis, from Latin internus within, expanded from pre-Latin interos*, from inter, see INTER-; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of on the inside, inner, is first recorded in English in 1590. —internalize v. 1884, in American English; formed from English internal + -ize.

internecine adj. destructive to both sides. 1663, deadly, destructive; borrowed from Latin internecinus, variant of internecivus murderous or destructive, from internecare kill or destroy (inter- each other, as in inter se + ne- kill; see NOXIOUS); for suffix see *-INE*¹. Considered as misinterpreted in Johnson's Dictionary (1755, defined as "mutually destructive," attributed to an association of inter- mutual).

interpolate v. 1612, to alter by adding new matter; re-borrowed from Latin interpolatus, past participle of interpolare alter, freshen up, falsify (inter- up + -polare, related to polire to smoothe, POLISH); for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

Also found in Middle English medical terminology interpōlen to interrupt (probably before 1425); borrowed from Medieval Latin and Latin interpolare, but disappearing from the record of English probably before 1449.

interpose v. 1599, borrowed from Middle French interposer, which supplanted Latin interpōnere; see *POSE*¹. —interposition n. 1392; borrowed from Old French interposicion, and directly from Latin interpositiōnem (nominative interpositiō), formed on the stem of interpositus, past participle of Latin interpōnere put between; for suffix see -TION.

interpret v. About 1384 interpretēn; possibly a back formation from interpretation, and a borrowing through Old French interpréter, and directly from Latin interpretārī explain, expound, understand. —interpretation n. Probably about 1350 interpretacioun; borrowed through Old French interpretation, and directly from Latin interpretatiōnem (nominative interpretatiō), from interpretārī interpret, from interpretēn (nominative interpretēs) interpreter, translator, agent, mediator; for suffix see -ATION. —interpreter n. About 1384 interpretour, borrowed through Old French interpreteur, entrepeteur, from Late Latin interpretātor, from Latin interpretārī.

interrogate v. 1483, probably a back formation of interrogation, and borrowed from Latin interrogātus, past participle of interrogāre; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —interrogation n. About 1390 interrogacion a question; later, act of interrogating (1551); borrowed through Old French interrogation, or directly from Latin interrogatiōnem (nominative interrogatiō) a question or questioning, from interrogāre (inter- between + rogāre ask, question); for suffix see -ATION. —interrogative adj. Before 1500, (in grammar) used in asking a question; borrowed from Late Latin interrogātīvus of or pertaining to a question, from Latin interrogātus, past participle of interrogāre; for suffix see -IVE.

interrupt v. Probably before 1400, interfere with rights; later, break into a speech or tale (about 1412); probably borrowed from Latin interruptus, past participle of interrumpere break apart, break off (inter- between + rumpere to break, RUPTURE). —n. interruption of a computer program. 1957, from the verb. —interruption n. Before 1393 interruption a break; borrowed, possibly through Old French interruption, and directly from Latin interruptionem (nominative interruptionē), from interrump-, stem of interrumpere; for suffix see -TION.

intersect v. 1615, cut or divide by passing through or crossing; probably a back formation from intersection, after Latin inter- sectus, past participle of intersecāre intersect. —intersection n. 1559, an intersecting or crossing, place where things intersect or cross; borrowed, probably through Middle French intersection, and directly from Latin intersectionem (nominative intersectionē), from intersec-, stem of intersecāre intersect, cut asunder (inter- between + secāre to cut); for suffix see -TION.

intersperse v. 1566, vary with things scattered or mingled at intervals; borrowed from Latin interspersus scattered, past participle of interspergere (inter- between + spargere to scatter).

interstice n. Probably before 1425 interstice intervening space (between stars); later, narrow intervening space (1603); borrowed from French interstice, from Latin interstitium, as if from the past participle stem of intersistere to pause (inter- between + sistere come to stand).

interval n. Before 1325, intervalle, enterwal; borrowed from Old French intervalle, entreval, from Latin intervallum, originally, space between palisades or ramparts (inter- between + vallum rampart).

intervene v. 1588, come between; a back formation from intervention, modeled on Latin intervenire (inter- between + venire COME). —intervention n. About 1425 intervencioun intercession, especially by prayer; borrowed, perhaps through Middle French intervention, or directly from Late Latin interventiōnem (nominative interventiō) an interposing, from Latin interven-, stem of intervenire; for suffix see -TION.

interview n. 1514 enterview meeting of persons face to face; borrowed from Middle French entrevue, from s'entrevoir to see each other (entre- between + Old French voir to see); for spelling see INTER-. —v. 1869, from the noun.

intestate adj. About 1378, not having made a will; borrowed, perhaps through Old French intestat, and directly from Latin intestātus (in- not + testātus, past participle of testārī make a will, bear witness); for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

intestine n. Probably before 1425 intestine; borrowed through Middle French intestin, or directly from Latin intestina, neuter plural of intestinus, adj., internal, probably altered (by influence of clandestinus hidden) from earlier entosfinos*, from intus within. —intestinal adj. Probably before 1425 intestinale of the intestines; borrowed from Medieval Latin intestinalis, from Latin intestinum, neuter of intestinus, adj.

intimate¹ adj. very familiar. 1632, deep-seated, most inward; borrowed from Late Latin intimatus, past participle of intimare make known, announce, impress, from Latin intimus inmost; (as noun) close friend, superlative of in IN; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The meaning of closely acquainted, is first recorded in English in 1635, from the Latin sense. —n. person with whom one is intimate. 1659, from the adjective. —intimacy n. 1641, from intimate + -acy.

intimate² v. suggest indirectly, hint. 1538, to communicate or notify; later, suggest indirectly (1590); probably a back formation from intimation, modeled on Late Latin intimatus, past participle of intimare make known, announce, impress; see INTIMATE¹; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —intimation n. 1442–43

(Scottish) intimacion act of making known; later, suggestion or hint (1531); borrowed from Middle French intimation, from Late Latin intimatiōnem (nominative intimatiō) an announcement, from intimāre; for suffix see -ATION.

intimidate v. 1646, frighten; borrowed from Medieval Latin intimidatus, past participle of intimidare (Latin in- in + timidus fearful, TIMID); for suffix see -ATE¹. —intimidation n. 1658, probably formed from English intimidate + -ion, on the model of French intimidation.

into prep. Old English intō, before 900, originally the two words in, adv. and tō to, prep., as in the similar collocations out to, up to, off to. The collocation be into be very involved or interested in (as in He is into astrology), is first recorded about 1969 in American English.

intone v. 1385 entunen; later entonen (before 1446); borrowed from Old French entoner sing, chant, from Medieval Latin intonare sing according to tone, from Latin in- in + tonus TONE. —intonation n. 1620, opening phrase of a plainsong melody; formed from English intone, v. + -ation, and probably borrowed through French intonation, from Medieval Latin intonationem (nominative intonatio) sounding, intoning, from intonare; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of modulation of the voice, is first recorded in 1791.

intoxicate v. About 1450 intoxicate to poison; later, make drunk (1598); developed from intoxicat, adj., filled with poison; borrowed from Medieval Latin intoxicatus, past participle of intoxicare; for suffix see -ATE¹. Also probably a back formation from intoxication. —intoxication n. Probably about 1408 intoxicacion poisoning; later, drunkenness (1646); borrowed from Medieval Latin intoxicacionem (nominative intoxicatio) poisoning, from intoxicare to poison (Latin in- in + toxicum poison); for suffix see -ATION.

intra- a prefix meaning within, inside, on the inside, as in intravenous = inside of or within a vein or veins, intradisciplinary = within a certain discipline, of a particular field of study. Borrowed from Late Latin intrā-, from Latin intrā, adv., prep., inside of or within, related to inter between; see INTER-.

intractable adj. Before 1500, rough, stormy; later, not manageable, not easily treated or dealt with (1545); borrowed from Latin intractābilis (*in-*¹ not + tractābilis TRACTABLE).

intransigent adj. 1881, borrowed from French intransigeant, from Spanish los intransigentes, a name for various extreme political parties (*in-*¹ not + transigente compromising, from Latin transigentem, nominative transigēns, present participle of transigere come to an agreement, accomplish, TRANSACT); for suffix see -ENT.

intransitive adj. 1612, borrowed from Late Latin intransitivus not passing over (Latin in- not + transire to pass over).

intravenous adj. 1847–49, formed in English from intra- + Latin venōsus, from vena VEIN; for suffix see -OUS.

intrepid adj. 1697, borrowed through French intrépide, and directly from Latin intrepidus (*in-*¹ not + trepidus alarmed).

intricate adj. Probably before 1425 intricate entangled, complicated; borrowed from Latin intricatus, past participle of intricare entangle (*in-*² in + trīcae, pl., perplexities, hindrances; of unknown origin); for suffix see -ATE¹.

intrigue n. 1647, secret scheming or plotting; probably from the verb. —v. 1612, deceive or perplex; later, carry on plots (before 1714); borrowed from French intriguer to puzzle, plot, from Italian intrigare to plot or meddle, from Latin intricare entangle; see INTRICATE. The form intrigue in modern English replaced earlier entriken (recorded before 1393). The extended meaning of arouse interest, is first recorded in 1894.

intrinsic adj. 1490 intrinsique inner, later, essential (1642); borrowed from Middle French intrinsèque inner, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin intrinsecus interior or internal, from Latin intrinsecus, adv., inwardly; for suffix see -IC.

intro- a prefix meaning inward, internally, within, as in introduce, introvert. Borrowed from Latin intrō-, from intrō inward, within, into, in.

introduce v. Probably before 1425 introducen bring into being; possibly a back formation from introduction, modeled on Latin intrōducere originate, institute, bring in (intrō- inward + ducere to lead). The meaning of bring into notice, is first recorded in 1559, and bring into personal acquaintance, in 1659. —introduction n. About 1395 introduccioun a preliminary action or step; borrowed from Old French introduction, and directly from Latin intrōductiōnem (nominative intrōductiō) a leading in, from intrōduc-, stem of intrōducere; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a preliminary statement is first recorded (probably before 1439). —introductory adj. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French introductoire, and directly from Late Latin intrōductōrius, from intrōductor, from intrōducere; for suffix see -ORY.

introspection n. Before 1677, borrowed from Latin intrōspectus, past participle of intrōspicere look into, observe closely (intrō- inward + specere to look at; see SPY); for suffix see -ION. —introspective adj. given to introspection. 1820, formed from Latin intrōspectus; for suffix see -IVE.

introvert v. 1669, formed as if from Latin intrōvertere* (intrō- inward + vertere to turn). —n. 1918, borrowed from German Introvert, from Latin intro- inward + Latin vertere to turn. —introverted adj. 1781, directed inwards; later (1915) in psychology from German introvertiert; from intro- inward + -vertiert turned, from Latin vertere to turn; for suffix see -ED².

intrude v. About 1422, thrust oneself in; come unasked and unwanted; back formation from intrusion, modeled on Latin, and, in some instances, a borrowing from Latin intrudere (*in-*² in + trudere to thrust, push). —intrusion n. About 1385 intrusioun usurpation or trespass; borrowed from Old French intrusion, from Medieval Latin intrusionem (nominative intrusio) a thrusting in, from Latin intrūs-, stem of intrudere intrude; for suffix see -ION.

intuition n. About 1450 intuicioun spiritual perception, insight; borrowed through Middle French intuition, from Late Latin intuitiōnem (nominative intuitiō) a looking at, consideration, from Latin intuērī look at, consider (in- at, on + tuērī to look, watch over); for suffix -ition see -ATION. —intuitive adj. 1594, perceived immediately, borrowed, possibly through Middle French intuitif, intuitive, from Medieval Latin intuitivus, from Latin intuitus, past participle of intuēre; for suffix see -IVE. Also possibly formed from English intuition + -ive.

inundate v. 1623, back formation from inundation, perhaps after Latin inundāre; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —inundation n. Probably before 1425 inundacioun flood; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French inondation, from Latin inundātiōnem (nominative inundātiō) an overflowing, from inundāre to overflow (in-² onto + undāre to flow, from unda wave); for suffix see -ATION.

inure v. About 1489 enuren to accustom by use or practice; formed from Middle English en-¹ + earlier ure work, practice, exercise, use (about 1420); probably borrowed from Old French uevre, œuvre work, from Latin opera. Also influenced by inure, adj., customary (about 1450), developed from the phrase in ure in or according to work or practice.

invade v. 1491, borrowed from Middle French invader to invade, and directly from Latin invādere go into, fall upon, attack, invade (in-² in + vādere go, walk). —invasion n. Probably before 1439 invasioun assault or attack; borrowed from Middle French invasion, learned borrowing from Late Latin invāsiōnem (nominative invāsiō) an attack, invasion, from Latin invāsus, past participle of invādere INVADE.

invalid¹ adj. not valid. 1635, borrowed from Latin invalidus not strong, infirm, weak, inadequate (in-¹ not + validus strong). —invalidate v. 1649, formed from English invalid + *-ate*¹, probably by influence of French invalider.

invalid² n. sick person. 1707, disabled soldier; 1709, sickly person; noun uses of the earlier adjective with the meaning of weak or disabled from illness or injury (1642); see *INVALID*¹.

invective n. 1523, developed from invectif, adj., abusive (probably before 1439); borrowed through Middle French invectif, invective, and directly from Late Latin invectivus abusive, from Latin invectus, past participle of invehī to attack with words; for suffix see -IVE.

inveigh v. 1529, borrowed from Latin invehī to attack with words; originally, to carry oneself against, invehere bring in, carry in (in-² against + vehere carry). An earlier meaning of introduce, carry in, is recorded in 1486.

inveigle v. 1494, deceive, alteration of Middle French aveugler delude, make blind, from aveugle blind, from Vulgar Latin aboculus* without sight, blind (Latin ab- without + oculus EYE); for suffix see *-LE*³.

invent v. About 1475, to find, discover; probably a back formation from invention, after Latin inventus, past participle of invenire; see INVENTION. The meaning of make up or think up, is first recorded in 1535, and that of create or produce by original thought, in 1538. —invention n. About 1400 inven-cioun scheme or plan; borrowed from Middle French invention, learned borrowing from Latin inventiōnem (nominative inventiō) a finding, discovery, from inven-, stem of invenire devise, discover, find (in-² in, on + venire COME); for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a made-up story, is first recorded in 1500–20, and that of an original device or method, in 1531. —inventive adj. Before 1420 inventif, borrowed from Middle French inventif, inventive, from Latin inventus, past participle of invenire; for suffix see -IVE.

inventory n. 1415 inventari a detailed list of goods; borrowed from Middle French inventaire, from Late Latin inventārium list of what is found, inventory, from Latin inventus, past participle of invenire find; for suffix see -ARY, -ORY. The spelling with -ory is first recorded before 1425 and is a separate borrowing from Medieval Latin inventorium.

inverse adj. Probably 1440, inverted; borrowed from Latin inversus, past participle of invertere INVERT. The mathematical use of opposite in nature or effect, is first recorded in 1660. —n. inverted condition. 1681; from the adjective. —inversion n. 1551, borrowed through Middle French inversion, from Latin inversiōnem (nominative inversiō), from invertere; for suffix see -SION.

invert v. 1533, borrowed by influence of Middle French invertir, from Latin invertere turn upside down, turn about (in-² in, on + vertere to turn; see VERTEX).

invertebrate adj., n. 1826, formed from New Latin invertebratus (from Latin in-¹ not + vertebra joint) + English suffix *-ate*¹.

invest v. 1533–34, to clothe in the insignia of an office, install in an office; borrowed from Latin investire to clothe, cover, surround (in-² in, into + vestire to dress, clothe), and probably influenced by earlier investiture.

The meaning of use (money) to produce profit or income, was originally found in letters and journals (1613–16) dealing with the East Indian trade and apparently borrowed from Italian investire, probably with the idea of giving one's capital a new form, from which it came into general use in English during the 1700's. —investiture n. Before 1387, borrowed from Medieval Latin investitura, from Latin investire to clothe + -tura -ture; for suffix see -URE. —investment n. 1597, formed from English invest, v. + -ment. The meaning of the investing of money or capital is first recorded in 1615. —investor n. 1586, formed from English invest + *-or*².

investigate v. About 1510, probably a back formation from investigation, after Latin investigātus, past participle of investigāre search into, investigate (in-² in, on + vestigāre to track, trace, from vestigium footstep, track, VESTIGE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

—investigation n. Apparently before 1425 investigacioun; borrowed from Middle French investigation, from Latin investigātiōnem (nominative investigātiō) a searching into, from investigāre; for suffix see -ATION. —investigator n. 1552, formed, probably by influence of Middle French investigateur, from English investigate + *-or*², after Latin investigātor.

inveterate adj. 1392 inveterat (of a disease) chronic; borrowed from Latin inveterātus of long standing, chronic, from past participle of inveterāre become old (in-² in, into + vetus, genitive veteris old); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of a practice or habit, is first found in 1593.

invidious adj. 1606, borrowed from Latin invidiosus envious, from invidia ill will, ENVY; for suffix see -OUS.

invigorate v. 1646, probably an extended form of English invigor to encourage, invigorate (1611, envigor) with the suffix -ate¹. The earlier English envigor was borrowed from French envigorer, from Old French envigourer (en- in + vigueur VIGOR).

invincible adj. Before 1420, borrowed, possibly through Middle French invincible, from Latin invincibilis (in- not + vincibilis conquerable, VINCIBLE).

invisible adj. About 1340, borrowed from Old French invisible not visible, from Latin invisibilis (in- not + visibilis VISIBLE); for suffix see -IBLE.

invite v. 1533, probably a back formation from invitation, and borrowed from Middle French inviter, learned borrowing from Latin invitare invite, treat, entertain; originally, be pleasant toward (in- toward + a lost adjective vītus* pleasant). —invitation n. About 1445 ynvytioun; borrowed from Latin invitātiōnem (nominative invitātiō), from invitare invite; for suffix see -ATION.

invoice n. 1560, spelling alteration of Middle French envois (in Old French also a nominative singular of envoi), plural of envoi sending, dispatch of goods, from envoyer to send. —v. 1698, from the noun.

invoke v. Before 1449 envoken to summon; borrowed from Middle French envoquer, invoker, learned borrowing from Latin invocāre call upon, implore (in- upon + vocāre to call, related to vōx, genitive vōcis VOICE). —invocation n. About 1380 invocacion, borrowed from Old French invocation, invocacion, learned borrowing from Latin invocātiōnem (nominative invocātiō), from invocāre.

involve v. Before 1382, envelop, surround; borrowed from Latin involvere entangle, envelop, roll into (in- in + volvere to roll). The meaning of take in or include, is first recorded in 1605.

inward adj. Probably about 1200 in-ward; developed from Old English innanweard, inneweard (about 725, in Beowulf); innan within, inne in + -weard -ward. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Icelandic innanverdr, adj., inward, Old High German inwart, and Middle Dutch inwaert, inwert. —adv. Probably about 1200; developed from Old English inneard within, in, towards the inside (about 950; in in + -weard -ward). The Old English form is cognate with Old High German inwert, adv., and Middle Dutch inwaert, inwert, adv.

iodine n. 1814, formed in English from French iode iodine + English -ine², and patterned after chlorine and fluorine. French iode was coined from Greek ioeidēs violet-colored (a compound of ion violet and eidōs appearance), from the violet color of the vapor given off when the iodine crystals are heated.

ion n. 1834, borrowing of Greek ión, neuter present participle of íēnai go; so called because ions move toward the electrode of opposite charge. —ionize v. 1898, formed from English ion + -ize.

-ion a suffix forming nouns and meaning: 1 act or state of —ing, as in attraction. 2 condition or state of being —ed, as in adoption. 3 result of —ing, as in abbreviation. 4 thing that —s, as in connection. English -ion was borrowed from Latin -ionem (nominative -io) a suffix forming nouns of condition and action, as in communio, from Latin communiōnem (nominative communiō) sharing in common. See also -ATION.

Often -ion is a replacement of Middle English -ioun, borrowed from Old French -iun, -ion, from Latin -ionem, and forms words modeled on Latin and French (rebel, rebellion), but for some there is no underlying verb (onion, union).

ionosphere n. 1926, formed from English ion + connective -o- + -sphere, as in stratosphere.

iota n. 1636, bit, jot, a later, figurative use of iota ninth and smallest letter of the Greek alphabet (1607); borrowed from Latin iōta, from Greek iōta; see JOT.

-ious a suffix formed of -i- + -ous, meaning characterized by, or full of, and representing French -ieux, Latin -iosus; see -OUS. The suffix -ious is found in English odious from Latin odiosus; it is also found in adjectives ending in -io, -ion- such as English ambitious from Latin ambitiōsus and stem endings in -i- (vari- + -ous, confused with -ious); also confused with -itious in Latin -icius (advent- + -icius) forming English adventitious. In English pairs have been freely extended to infectious, infection; rebellious, rebellion; cautious, caution.

ipacac n. 1710, American English, shortening of ipacacuanha (1682); borrowed from Portuguese, from Tupi (Brazil) ipacacua a medicinal plant.

ir-1 a form of the prefix *in-*1, meaning not, opposite of, before r, as in irrational, irregular.

ir-2 a form of the prefix *in-*2, meaning in, within, before r, as in irradiate, irrigate.

irascible adj. Before 1398, part of the soul dealing with irrational nature, such as hate (noun use of the adjective); later, easily made angry, irritable (1530); borrowed from Middle French irascible, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin irascibilis, from irasci grow angry, from ira anger, IRE; for suffix see -IBLE.

irate adj. 1838, borrowed from Latin irātus, past participle of irasci grow angry, from ira anger, IRE; for suffix see -ATE¹.

ire n. Probably before 1300 ire anger, wrath; borrowed from Old French ire, yre, from Latin ira anger, wrath, rage.

irenology n. 1974, the study of peace, formed from iren(ic) from Greek eirēnikós, from eirēnē peace + English -ology.

iridescent adj. 1796, formed from Latin iris (genitive iridis) rainbow, IRIS + English suffix -escent. —iridescence n. 1804, probably formed from English iridescent by replacement of the suffix -escent with -escence.

iridium n. 1804, New Latin, from Latin īris (genitive īridis) IRIS + New Latin -ium; so called from the iridescence of the element in solution.

iris n. 1373, brightly colored flower; later, colored part of the eye (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin īris iris of the eye, iris plant, rainbow; from Greek īris (genitive īridos) a lily, iris of the eye; originally, messenger of the gods appearing as a rainbow.

Irish adj., n. About 1205 Irisce, developed from Ir-, stem of Old English īras inhabitants of Ireland + -isc -ish. The Old English form was borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic īrar, from Old Irish Eriu Erin). Also by influence of Old French īrais, īrois Irish.

irk v. About 1330 irken be weary of, disgusted with; of uncertain origin. —irksome adj. Probably about 1425 irksome formed from Middle English irken irk + -som *-some*¹.

iron n. 1137 īren, found in Old English īren the metal, (also) any iron weapon (before 830); earlier īsaern (about 700); borrowed from the same source as Old Frisian īsern iron, Old Saxon īsam, Middle Low German īsern, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch ijzer, Old High German īsam (modern German Eisen), Old Icelandic īsam, jarn, Gothic eisarn, from Proto-Germanic īsarman*. —v. Before 1400 īrenen to make of iron; later, to furnish, cover, or arm with iron (1408); from the noun īren iron. The meaning of press or smooth cloth with an iron is first recorded before 1680, from earlier noun use (1613). —adj. Before 1200 īrene, found in Old English īren and īsern (about 725, in Beowulf).

irony n. 1502, borrowed probably through Middle French ironie, and directly from Latin īrōnīa, from Greek eīrōnelā, from eīrōn dissembler, perhaps related to eīrein speak (as if saying it without meaning it). —ironic adj. 1630, feigning ignorance; as a shortened form of ironical (1576); developed by influence of Middle French ironique, from Late Latin īrōnicus, from Greek eīrōnikós, from eīrōnelā dissimulation.

irradiate v. 1603, to direct rays of light upon; developed from irradiate, adj., illuminated (before 1475); borrowed from Latin irradiātus, past participle of irradiāre shine forth (ir⁻² in, on + radiāre to shine, RADIATE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The meaning of subject to the action of radiation, is first recorded in 1901.

irrational adj. Before 1398 irracional quantity in mathematics that cannot be expressed as an integer; borrowed from Latin irratiōnālis not rational (ir⁻¹ not + ratiōnālis RATIONAL). The sense of unreasonable, absurd, is first recorded in 1641.

irregular adj. About 1390 irreguler not conforming to the rule of the church; borrowed from Old French irreguler, from Late Latin irregulāris (from Latin ir⁻¹ not + regulāris pertaining to rules, REGULAR).

irrigate v. 1615, to wet; developed from irrigat, adj., watered, flooded (before 1449); borrowed from Latin irrigātus, past participle of irrigāre lead water to, refresh (ir⁻² in, + rigāre to water or moisten, of uncertain origin); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The meaning of supply (land) with water is first recorded in 1623.

—irrigation n. 1612, possibly formed from English irrigat + -ion; or borrowed through Middle French irrigation, from Latin irrigātiōnem (nominative irrigātiō) a watering, from irrigāre. The reference to supplying water to land is first found in 1626.

irritate v. 1531, stimulate to action, rouse, incite; probably borrowed from Latin irritātus, past participle of irritāre excite, provoke. The meaning of annoy, make impatient or angry, is first recorded in 1598. —irritable adj. 1662, borrowed, perhaps through French irritable, and directly from Latin irritābilis, from irritāre irritate. —irritation n. 1425 irritacion stimulation of a sore to excessive sensitivity; later, excitement to activity, stimulation (1589); borrowed through Middle French irritation, irritacion, or directly from Latin irritātiōnem (nominative irritātiō), from irritāre. The meaning of annoyance or vexation is first recorded in 1703.

irruption n. 1577, borrowed probably through Middle French irruption, or directly from Latin irruptiōnem (nominative irruptiō), from irrup-, stem of irrumper break in (ir⁻² in + rumper to break, RUPTURE); for suffix see -TION.

is v. the third person singular present form of the verb be; found in Old English (before 725) is; developed from an earlier Germanic stem es-, whose form existed only in the present tense in Old English. Until the 1500's is rhymed with sis thereby retaining its association with the earlier Germanic stem through which it is cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Dutch is, Old High German and German ist, Old Icelandic es, (later) er, and Gothic ist. Compare AM, ARE, BE.

-ish¹ a suffix forming adjectives from other adjectives and from nouns, and meaning: 1 somewhat —, as in oldish, sweetish. 2 like a —, as in childish. 3 like that of a —, as in girlish. 4 of or having to do with —, as in English. 5a tending to —, as in bookish. b inclined to be a —, as in thievish. 6 near, but usually somewhat past —, as in fortyish. Middle English -ish, -iss, -isch, developed from Old English -isē; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon -isc, Dutch -isch, Old High German -isc, German -isch, Old Icelandic -iskr, and Gothic -isks, from Proto-Germanic -iskaz*.

-ish² Though not a living suffix in of modern English, -ish occurs in many verbs today: abolish, banish, finish, nourish, polish, tarnish, etc., coming from Middle and Old French verbs ending in -ir (e.g. Old French banir English banish) and originally written -is, -iss, -ise, -isse with the Middle English verb ending -en (paralleling the Old French stem ending -iss- of verbs ending in -ir). The ending -iss- originated in Latin -isc- as a part of verbs ending in -ire and -ere and during the 1400's, the Middle English endings were modified to -isshe, and then to -ish, in the latter 1500's and 1600's.

A few verbs in English did not complete this final spelling change and remain close to the Middle English form: advertise, chastise, amortize, rejoice. Another group looks as if it follows the process described above, but without the forms in Old French was simply influenced in their formation by those words: admonish, diminish, lavish, publish, etc.

Islam n. 1818, religion of the Muslims, earlier, an orthodox Muslim (1613); borrowed from Arabic islām, literally, resignation, surrender, submission (to the will of God), from the root of aslama he resigned or surrendered, related to salima he was safe, and salām peace, SALAAM. — Islamic adj. 1791, formed from English Islam + -ic, after French islamique.

island n. 1598, alteration of earlier isle land (1546), ile land (1494), yland (apparently before 1300); developed from Old English īgland island (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian eiland island, and Old Icelandic eyland, and formed from īeg, īg island + land LAND. Old English īg is cognate with Old Frisian ey island, Old High German ouwa island, damp meadow (German Aue), and Old Icelandic ey island, from Proto-Germanic aujō*, earlier ąwǫjō*, built on ąHwō* water. By association with the nearly synonymous but etymologically unrelated isle, the spelling yland, iland was modified until island became established by the late 1600's.

isle n. Probably about 1225 ile island; borrowed from Old French ile, earlier isle, from Latin insula, of uncertain origin. The spelling with s, is first recorded in 1470, but is rare in English until the late 1500's, influenced by Middle French restoration of the Old French spelling with s.

-ism a suffix forming nouns and meaning: 1 act or practice of —, as in baptism. 2 quality or condition of being a —, as in heroism. 3 illustration or instance of being —, as in witticism. 4 an unhealthy condition caused by —, as in alcoholism. 5 doctrine, theory, system, or practice of —, as in Darwinism. Borrowed through French -isme or directly from Latin -ismus, -isma, from Greek -ismós, -isma, a suffix forming nouns of action from verbs in -izein — ize.

iso- a combining form meaning equal, alike, as in isometric, isotope, isosceles. Borrowed from Greek iso-, from isos equal.

isobar n. 1864, borrowed from Greek isobarēs of equal weight (isos equal + báros weight, from barýs heavy).

isolate v. 1807, to place apart, separate from others; back formation from earlier isolated placed apart, solitary (1763), formed in English from French isolé isolated + English suffix -ate (-ated). French isolé was derived from Italian isolato, from Latin insulatus made into an island, from insula island. — isolation n. 1833, probably in part formed from English isolate, v. + -ion and borrowed from French isolation, from isoler to isolate, from isolé isolated; for suffix see -ATION.

isomer n. 1866, back formation, probably by influence of French isomère, from isomeric (1838; formed in English from Greek isomerēs, from isos equal + méros part or share, + English suffix -ic). English isomeric was patterned after German isomerisch isomeric, from Greek isomerēs + German -isch — ic.

isometric adj. 1840, a method of using perspective in drawing to obtain equal inclination of the principal axes; formed in English from Greek isómetros of equal measure (isos equal + métron MEASURE) + English suffix -ic. Later use in physiology with the meaning of denoting muscular tension produced against resistance, has been recorded in English since 1891 as a borrowing of German isometrisch. — isometrics n. pl. 1962, isosceles adj. 1551 Isosceles, used as a rendering of Greek isoskeles with equal sides (isos equal + skélos leg). Also found in Late Latin isoscelēs which was probably the model for first uses in English.

American English, formed from isometric + -s, on the analogy of gymnastic, gymnastics.

isotope n. 1913, formed in English from iso- same or equal + Greek tópos place; so called because the various forms of a particular chemical element occupy the same position in the periodic table.

issue n. Probably before 1300 issue exit, a place of exit, a going or flowing out; borrowed from Old French issue, earlier eissue (from Gallo-Romance exūta*), from feminine past participle of issir, earlier eissir to go out, from Latin exire (ex- out + ire go).

The meaning of offspring, progeny, is first recorded (about 1378) and was probably adopted from Old French; that of outcome, result, appeared about 1380, and the meaning of a matter or point to be decided, is recorded before 1439. — v. Before 1338 issuen to come or go out; borrowed from Old French issu, past participle of issir to go out.

-ist a suffix forming nouns and meaning: 1 person who does or makes, as in theorist, tourist. 2 an expert in an art or science, as in botanist. 3 person who plays a musical instrument, as in organist. 4 person connected with, as in artist. Borrowed through French -iste, or directly from Latin -ista, from Greek -istēs, noun suffix for verbs in -izein — ize. Its extension became so wide that its use, if not its meaning, approaches the suffix -er for agent nouns.

isthmus n. 1555, borrowed from Latin isthmus, from Greek isthmós isthmus, strip of land, narrow passage.

it pron. 1128 it; earlier hit (1104); developed from Old English hit (about 725, in Beowulf), neuter nominative and accusative of the third person singular (originally used as the substitute for any neuter noun). It was this relatively unspecialized use in Old English that gave rise to a Middle English use of it, with the meaning of a thing or animal spoken about (before 1325).

The h in Old English hit and in its cognates, Old Frisian and Middle Dutch hit (modern Dutch het), was probably due to the influence of the Proto-Germanic demonstrative base Hi-* this, represented by Old English and Old Frisian hē HE. Other cognates of it are Old Saxon and Middle Low German it, Low German et, Gothic is he, (neuter) ita it, Old High German ēr he, it, ēz it (modern German er he, es it), and Old Icelandic es this.

italic adj. 1571, italic handwriting; later, italic type (1612); borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French Italique, Ytalique, from Latin Italicus Italian, of Italy, from Greek Italikós, from Italiā Italy, originally a region of southwest Italy. The slanting style is so called because it was introduced in 1501 by an Italian printer of Venice. — n. 1676 italics italic letters; from the adjective. — italicize v. print in italics. 1795, formed from English italic + -ize.

Italo- a combining form made from Italy or Italian and meaning of Italy or the Italians, as in Italophile, and sometimes meaning Italian and —, as in Italo-American.

itch n. Before 1400 iche, yiche; developed from Old English (before 800) gicce, from gican to itch; cognate with Middle Dutch joken to itch (modern Dutch jeuken) and Old High German jucchen (modern German jucken). The sense of a restless desire, is first recorded in 1532. —v. 1440 ichen; earlier ichen, yichen (about 1390); developed from Old English (about 1000) gican.

-ite¹ a suffix meaning: 1 person or thing associated with, inhabitant of —, as in Canaanite, Jerseyite, laborite. 2 follower of —, as in Trotskyite. 3 mineral or fossil, as in hematite, trilobite. 4 organic chemical compound, explosive, or commercial product, as in dynamite, cordite, lucite. 5 segment of a body, as in dendrite. Borrowed through French -ite, or directly from Latin -ita, -itēs, from Greek -itēs, -itis pertaining to, connected with, member of.

-ite² a suffix meaning salt of, as in phosphite, sulfite, nitrite. Borrowed from French -ite, deliberate alteration of *-ate*² from Latin -ātus —*ATE*².

item n. 1578, separate thing or article; earlier, statement, suggestion, hint (1561); developed from item, adv., moreover, in addition (before 1398); borrowed, probably by influence of Old French item, from Latin item likewise, just so, probably related to ita thus, and id IT.

The Middle English adverb item was used before each article in a list, such as an inventory or bill and to introduce a new statement or fact, which later gave rise to the noun use with the meanings of a separate thing, individual article or a statement. —itemize v. 1864, formed from English item + -ize, replacing the earlier verb item (1601).

iterate v. 1533, repeat; developed from iterate, adj., done repeatedly (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin iterātus, past participle of iterāre to do again, repeat, from iterum again; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Also possibly a back formation from iteration (before 1425). —iterative adj. 1490, involving repetition; borrowed from Middle French itératif, itérative, from Late Latin iterātīvus serving to repeat, from Latin iterāre; for suffix see -IVE.

itinerant adj. 1570–76, traveling on a circuit (as a judge or preacher); borrowed from Late Latin itinerantem, present participle of itinerārī to travel, from Latin iter (genitive itineris) journey, from īre go; see EXIT; for suffix see -ANT. —n. 1641, from the adjective. —itinerary n. Probably before 1425, course of travel, route; borrowed, perhaps through Middle French itinaire, from Late Latin itinerārium account of a journey, from noun use of neuter of itinerārius, adj., of a journey, from Latin (genitive) itineris; for suffix see -ARY.

-itious a suffix meaning of, or having the nature of, and occurring in adjectives borrowed (directly or through French) from Latin, where they were formed by addition of a compound suffix -icius (-īc + -ius) to a participial stem, as seen in English adventitious, fictitious, surreptitious, or to a noun stem, as in cementitious.

In another group of words in -itious, such as ambitious and superstitious, the -it- is part of the verbal stem and -ious is from Latin -iōsus; see -IOUS.

-itis a suffix meaning inflammation of; inflammatory disease of, as in appendicitis, bronchitis, bursitis. Borrowed from New Latin -itis, from Greek -itis, feminine of the adjective suffix -itēs of or pertaining to, used to qualify the feminine noun nōsos disease, as in arthritīs nōsos disease of the joints. Some words with -itis, such as arthritis, are among the original group of borrowings from which -itis was abstracted in English.

-ity a suffix forming nouns from adjectives and meaning condition or quality of being —, as in absurdity, brutality, cordiality, activity, hostility, sincerity. Middle English -ite, borrowed through Old French -ité, or directly from Latin -itatem (nominative -itās, formed from -i-, as a connective vowel + -tās —*TY*²).

-ium a suffix of chemical elements or radicals, as in ammonium, curium, sodium. Borrowed from New Latin, from Latin -ium, a neuter suffix.

-ive a suffix forming adjectives from verbs and meaning: 1 of or pertaining to, as in interrogative, inductive. 2 tending to, likely to, as in active, appreciative. Middle English, borrowed occasionally through Old French -if, -ive but usually directly from Latin -ivus.

The majority of English words incorporating this suffix end in -sive, -tive, and -ative (see -ATIVE). A few add -ive directly to the verb stem, especially where the stem ends in s, c, or t, as in abusive, conductive, adaptive. Another small group also adds this suffix to nouns, as in massive. There is also a special group in which the Old French ending -if was lost in borrowing or by development in Middle English, resulting in -y, as in hasty and tardy.

ivory n. 1263, earlier, as a surname (1181); borrowed through Anglo-French ivorie, from Old North French ivurie, from Latin eboreus of ivory, from ebur (genitive eboris) ivory. —adj. About 1330; from the noun.

ivy n. Probably about 1200 ivi; developed from Old English (about 700) īfig, īfegn; probably related to Middle Low German iflōf ivy, and Old High German ebahewi, ebah (modern German Efeu), of unknown origin.

-ization a suffix meaning the act of —izing or the condition of being —ized, as in naturalization, Americanization; formed from -ize + -ation. See also -IZE.

-ize a suffix added to adjectives and nouns to form verbs and meaning: 1 make —, as in legalize, apologize. 2 become —, as in crystallize. 3 engage in or use —, as in —, as in crystallize. 3 engage in or use —, as in criticize. 4 treat or combine with —, as in oxidize. 5 other meanings, as in memorize, colonize. Borrowed through French -iser, or directly from Latin -izāre, or from Greek -tzein.

J

jab v. 1825–80, Scottish variant of job to strike, pierce, thrust; found in Middle English jobben to jab, thrust, peck (before 1500); of uncertain origin. —n. 1825–80; from the verb.

jabber v. About 1405 jablen; later javeren (about 1440), jaberen (1499); of imitative origin. The spelling jabber is first recorded in 1655. —n. 1727, from the verb.

jack n. 1391 jakke a mechanical device; developed from earlier Jacke, Jakke a surname (1285); later, as a first name; also, any common fellow (about 1390); probably from Jacque, Jacques, borrowed from Old French Jaques, from Late Latin Jacobus, from Latin Jacobus, from Greek Iakōb, from Hebrew Ya'akōbh. —v. 1873, in the phrase jack up abandon, give up; later, hoist with a jack (1885), and in American English, to increase prices, etc. (1904); all from the noun.

jackal n. 1603, borrowed from Turkish çakal, from Persian shaghāl, from Sanskrit śṛgālā-s. The j in English is probably in part a phonetic misinterpretation of the initial sound in Turkish and Arabic (approximating the sound of ch in chain).

jacket n. 1451 jaket, borrowed from Middle French jaquet, diminutive of Old French jaque kind of tunic, possibly associated with jaque (de mailles) short tight-fitting coat; originally, coat of mail, from Spanish jaco, from Arabic šakk breastplate; for suffix see -ET. —v. 1861; from the noun.

jade¹ n. gemstone. 1721–41, earlier iada (1598); borrowed from French le jade; earlier l'ejade, from Spanish piedra de (la) ijada stone of colic, pain in the side (because jade was thought to cure this), from Vulgar Latin īliāta*, from Latin īlia, pl., flanks, groin.

jade² n. inferior or worn-out horse. About 1390 iade cart horse, hack, perhaps a variant of yaid, yald whore; literally, mare; borrowed through Anglo-French jaud*, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic jalda mare, borrowed from a Finno-Ugric word represented by Mordvin äl'd'ä mare). —v. to weary, tire, make or become dull, languid, etc. 1606, from the noun.

jag¹ v. cut or tear unevenly. 1373 jaggid jagged, from jaggen to notch or nick; of uncertain origin. —n. Before 1400, a slash or tear in a garment, of uncertain origin.

jag² n. 1597, a load, as of hay or wood; of unknown origin.

The meaning of a period of unrestrained activity (as in a crying jag) appeared first in American English, in 1913.

jaguar n. 1604, borrowed from Portuguese jaguar, from Tupi (Brazil) jaguara and Guarani yaguará.

jail n. Developed from two concurrent forms in Middle English: 1) gaiol, gaole (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old North French and Anglo-French gaiole, gayolle, gaole; and 2) jaiole, jaile (before 1325); borrowed from Old French jaiole, jaole, geole. All French forms had the meaning of cage or prison and were borrowed from Vulgar Latin gaviōla*, from Latin cavēola*, diminutive of cavea coop, CAGE. —v. 1604, from the noun.

jealousie n. 1766, borrowed from French jealousie, from Middle French, wooden latticework; literally, jealousy, from Old French; see JEALOUSY.

jam¹ v. press tightly. 1706, to stick or catch, become wedged; of unknown origin, perhaps imitative, but how it is imitative and of what, is uncertain. The meaning of press tightly or squeeze, as between two surfaces, is first recorded in 1719. —n. 1806–07, from the verb. The sense of a difficulty or tight spot, is first recorded in 1914 in American English.

The term jam session an improvised performance by a jazz group, (1933) is American English, from earlier use of jam a short, freely improvised jazz passage performed by the whole band (1929).

jam² n. fruit preserve. 1730–36, probably a special use of *jam*¹, in the sense of crush (fruit) by pressure.

jamb n. 1334 jaumbe, borrowed from Old French jambe joint for a window or doorway; originally, leg, from Late Latin gamba, camba leg or (horse's) hock; see GAMBOL.

jambalaya n. dish of rice cooked together with shrimp, ham, turkey, etc. 1872, American English, borrowed from Louisiana French jambalaya, from Provençal jambalaia stew composed of rice and fowl.

jamboree n. 1868, American English, a noisy party or spree; perhaps coined from *jam*¹, on the pattern of shivaree.

jangle v. About 1300, to chatter or gossip; borrowed from Old French jangler to chatter, perhaps from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch jangelen to whine, modern Dutch jengelen, and dialectal German jangeln speak with a whine).

The meaning of make a harsh or discordant noise, is first recorded in 1494. Also possibly from the noun. —n. harsh sound. About 1280, gossip or idle talk; borrowed from Old French jangle, from jangler to chatter. The meaning of discordant sound is first recorded in 1795.

janitor n. 1584, an usher; later, doorkeeper (about 1630); borrowed from Latin jānitor doorkeeper, from jānuā door, from jānus arched passageway; for suffix see -OR². The meaning of caretaker of a building is first recorded in 1708.

January n. 1391 Januarie, a Latinization of earlier Jenever (about 1300) and Genever (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old North French Jenever, Genever, from Latin Jānuārius first month of the ancient Roman year (dedicated to Janus, Roman god of gates and doors, and of beginnings and endings, from jānus arched passageway).

jar¹ n. container. 1421 (possibly) jarre liquid measure smaller than a barrel; borrowed probably from Middle French jarre, from Provençal jarra, and also Spanish jarra and Medieval Latin jarra, from Arabic jarrah earthen water vessel.

jar² v. to shake. 1526, make a harsh, grating sound; later, cause to vibrate or shake (1568); probably in some way imitative but not necessarily a part of its origin. The meaning of have a harsh or unpleasant effect on is first recorded in 1538. —n. 1546, discord, dissension; later, a harsh, grating sound (1553); probably from the verb.

jargon n. About 1350 jargoun unintelligible talk or chattering; borrowed from Old French jargon, probably of imitative origin like the French gargoter make noise with the throat, and probably related to Latin garrere to chatter, babble. The meaning of terminology of a special group, appeared in 1651.

jasmine or jasmin n. 1578, borrowed from French jasmin, in Middle French jassemín, jessemín, from Arabic yāsāmīn, from Persian yāsmīn.

jasper n. Probably about 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French jaspre, from Old French jaspe, from Latin iaspidem (nominative iaspis), from Greek iaspis jasper.

jaundice n. About 1303 jaunes, later jandis (1373), and jaundys (before 1387); borrowed from Old French jaunisse, jaunice yellowness, from jaune; earlier jalne yellow, from Latin galbinus greenish-yellow; of uncertain origin. The meaning of feeling in which views are colored or judgment is distorted is first recorded in 1629. —v. 1791 (figurative use); from the noun.

jaunt n. 1678, extended sense of the earlier meaning of a fatiguing or tiresome journey (1592). —v. 1647, extended sense of the earlier meaning of trot or trudge about (1575), and tire a horse by riding it back and forth (1570); of unknown origin.

jaunty adj. 1662, stylish or elegant; later, carefree (1672); borrowed from French gentil nice or pleasing, from Old French gentil noble. The form jaunty (earlier janty, jantie) represents a reborrowing from French, reflecting the French pronunciation of gentil (zhāNtē').

javelin n. About 1475 gavelong; borrowed from Middle French javeline, diminutive of Old French javelot, from Old Provençal javelina, possibly from a Celtic source (compare Old Irish gabul fork, and Welsh gaflach feathered lance). An earlier form javelot (about 1440), was borrowed directly from Middle French javelot, from Old French.

jaw n. About 1380 joue, ioue; before 1387 jawe; perhaps borrowed from Old French joue cheek. The Old French joue probably derives from pre-Latin (perhaps Gaulish) gauta* cheek. —v. 1748, to gossip; later, to scold (1810); from the noun. An earlier meaning "use the jaws" is recorded in 1612. —jawbone n. (about 1489) jay n. Probably before 1300 jai, borrowed from Old French jay, in Old North French gai, gay, perhaps from Late Latin gāius, from Latin Gāius, a proper name, following the practice of giving birds proper names (as robin, martin, etc.). Also applied to the American blue jay, found in blew jawe (1709).

The term jaywalker is first recorded in American English in 1917, from an earlier use of jay a bold, impudent, or stupid person. The verb jaywalk is a back formation of jaywalker (1919) in American English.

jazz n. 1913, American English, a kind of ragtime dance, perhaps related to earlier jasm energy, drive (1860); apparently of African origin (compare Tshiluba jaja cause to dance, Mandingo jasi and Wolof yees step out of character, Temne yas be extremely lively or energetic). The source of jazz in English is not known, and the connection with jasm cannot be fully demonstrated, but the form, sense, and chronology suggest a relationship may exist. The sense of meaningless talk, nonsense, rubbish, appeared in 1918. —v. 1917, speed or liven up; 1918, play jazz; probably from the noun.

jealous adj. Before 1200 gelus distrustful of the faithfulness of a spouse or lover; later jelus (before 1325); borrowed from Old French jelous, gelos from Old Provençal gelos, from Vulgar Latin zēlōsus*, from Latin zēlus jealousy, ZEAL; for suffix see -OUS. —jealousy n. Before 1200 gelusie, borrowed from Old French jelousie, jalousie, from the adjective in Old French; for suffix see -Y³.

jeans n.pl. 1843, from the singular jean strong twilled cotton cloth (1567), from the earlier adjective jene Genoese (1436); borrowed from Middle French Genes Genoa, city in Italy where such cloth was made.

jeep n. 1941, American English, probably coined from the initials G.P. (General Purpose), the U.S. Army designation for this type of car; perhaps also influenced by the name of a cartoon character and his cry of "Jeep," a term also used briefly as the name of a commercial motor vehicle in 1937. Sometimes claimed to be a reduction of "Jeepers creepers!" the exclamation of a U.S. Army officer on the occasion of his first ride in the prototype of the vehicle in 1939.

jeepers interj. exclamation of surprise or mild oath. 1929, American English, euphemism for Jesus; perhaps an altered or extended form of earlier Gee, Geez, Geeze, also spelled Jeez, Jeeze (1923).

jeer v. 1553 gyr (implied in gyrer); 1577–87 geer call out in derision, mock or scoff; of uncertain origin, perhaps, by alteration of pronunciation from Dutch gieren to cry or roar, from Middle Dutch ghieren to cry or grunt. —n. 1625, from the verb.

Jehovah n. 1530 Iehoua, borrowing of New Latin, an erroneous transliteration of the Hebrew divine name YHWH (the “tetragrammaton”) using the vowel points of Hebrew adhōnāi my lord, often represented as Yahweh.

jeune adj. 1615, dull insipid (implied in jejunely); borrowed from Latin jejunus unproductive or meager; literally, hungry, fasting.

jell v. 1869, American English; probably a back formation from jelly. The figurative sense of crystallize, take definite shape, is first recorded in 1908.

Earlier gelen to congeal (before 1398); borrowed from Old French geler, disappeared in English by the 1500’s.

jelly n. 1381 gelee, gely, borrowed from Old French gelée jelly or frost, from the feminine past participle of geler to congeal, from Latin gelāre to freeze, from gelū frost. —v. 1601, from the noun.

jeopardy n. Probably before 1300 juperti a trick, stratagem; later jeopardy a chess problem (1369); borrowed from Old French jeu parti an even or divided game (jeu game, and parti, past participle of partir to divide, PART). The meaning of danger or risk is first recorded in 1385. —jeopardize v. 1646, formed from English jeopardy + -ize.

jerboa n. 1662 jerbuah, probably a phonetic transcription of Arabic yarbū’; later, replaced by gerbo, perhaps borrowed through French gerbo, or directly from New Latin jerboa, from Arabic yarbū’.

jerk¹ v. pull. 1550, to lash, strike with a whip; of uncertain origin, possibly imitative or otherwise suggestive of the sound or action of the blow. The meaning of pull or twist suddenly is first recorded in 1589. —n. 1555, a stroke with a whip; later, sudden sharp pull or twist (1575); of uncertain origin.

jerk² v. preserve. 1707, American English; borrowed from American Spanish charquear, from charquí jerked meat, from Quechua (Peru) ch’arki. —n. 1799, American English; from the verb. —jerky n. jerked meat. 1850, American English; borrowed from American Spanish charquí.

jerk³ n. stupid person. 1935, American English slang; perhaps from earlier jerk, adj., insignificant, inferior (1890’s, as in a jerk town, short for jerkwater, in reference to a steam train or branch line that serves small towns where a locomotive had to jerk water from a water tower to fill its tender).

jerkin n. 1519, of unknown origin; perhaps related to Dutch jurk a frock, through Dutch j = English y.

jerry-built adj. 1869, English dialectal use, from jerry bad, defective, a pejorative application of Jerry, nickname.

jersey n. 1836–48, extended sense of the earlier reference to knitted cloth or worsted from the isle of Jersey (1583). The breed of cattle also was in allusion to the Channel isle of Jersey, and is first recorded in 1842.

jest n. Probably about 1225, geste entertainment or amusement; borrowed from Old French geste action, exploit; learned borrowing from Latin gesta deeds, from neuter plural of gestus, past participle of gerere to carry, behave, act, perform. The sense of joke or witticism is found in 1551. —v. 1526, to taunt or jeer; later, to joke (1553); developed from Middle English gesten recite a tale (about 1390); from geste, n. —jester n. About 1510, developed from Middle English gestour a minstrel (before 1338); from gesten recite a tale + -er.

jet¹ n. stream sent with force. 1696, borrowed from French jet, from Old French jet, from jeter to throw, thrust, from Late Latin jectāre, abstracted from dējectāre, prōjectāre, etc., for Latin jactāre toss about, a frequentative form of jacere to throw, cast. Jet is first recorded as an airplane driven by jet propulsion in 1944. —v. 1692, borrowed from Middle French jeter to throw or thrust, from Old French; see noun.

jet² n. mineral. 1351 gete; later jeet (about 1390); borrowed from Anglo-French geet, corresponding to Old French jaiet, from Latin gagātēs, from Greek gagātēs lithos stone of Gagai, a town and river in Lycia, in southwest Asia Minor. —adj. 1444, attributive use of the noun.

jetsam n. 1570 jottsome; later jetson (1591) and jetsam (1678); developed by alteration (most notably in loss of the medial vowel) from Middle English jetteson the act of throwing of goods overboard to lighten a ship (1425); see JETTISON.

jettison v. 1848, developed from jetteson the act of throwing goods overboard to lighten a ship (1425); borrowed through Anglo-French getteson, from Old French getaison, from Vulgar Latin jectatiōnem* (nominative jectatiō*) act of throwing, from Late Latin jectāre toss about. The modern spelling of the verb was deliberately respelled as jettison in the noun to avoid the former confusion with jetsam through earlier jetteson.

jetty n. 1418 juteye projecting part; later getti a breakwater (before 1420), and jettie (1432); borrowed from Old French jetee, geté a jetty, from feminine past participle of jeter to throw; see JET¹ stream.

Jew n. Probably before 1200 giw, later Jeu (1241, as a surname); borrowed through Anglo-French geu, jwe, and from Old French giu, juu; from Latin Jūdaeum (nominative Jūdaeus), from Greek Ioudaíos, from Aramaic yēhūdāi, corresponding to Hebrew yēhūdāi, from yēhūdāh Judah, name of the fourth son of Jacob and the tribe descended from him.

The Old English equivalent was Iudēas the Jews, an early borrowing from Latin Jūdaeus. —Jewish adj. Before 1546, formed from English Jew + -ish. The Old English equivalent was Iudēis, from Iudēas Jews + -is -ish. —Jewry n. Probably before 1200 giwerie the Jewish people or their religion; borrowed through Anglo-French jeuerie, gyuerie, from Old French juerie, earlier jueu Jew + -erie -ery.

jewel n. Probably before 1300 jeuel valuable object or treasure; later juel precious stone (before 1325); borrowed, probably through Anglo-French juel, jeual, and from Old French juel, joel ornament or jewel, from Medieval Latin jocale, from Latin jocus pastime or sport, see JOKE. — jeweler n. 1340 Jueler, as a surname; borrowed through Anglo-French juellour, from Old French joelier, juelier, from juel jewel. — jewelry n. Probably about 1380 juelrye precious ornaments; borrowed from Old French juelerie, from juel jewel.

jib n. 1661 gibb, of uncertain origin (perhaps related to gibbet, with reference to the sail's suspension from the masthead).

jibe¹ v. shift (a sail or boom). 1693 gybe, borrowed from Dutch gijben, gijpen, apparently related to gijk, giek boom or spar of a sailship. The later form jibe (1856) was probably influenced in its spelling by jib.

jibe² v. agree, fit. 1813 gibe, of uncertain origin; perhaps originally a figurative use of *jibe*¹.

jibe³ n. See GIBE (jeer).

jiffy adj. 1785, a very short space of time; of unknown origin.

jig¹ v. dance a jig. 1588, possibly borrowed from Middle French giguer to dance, and respelled in English by influence of earlier jig, n. — n. About 1560, of uncertain origin.

jig² n. 1858, device used to lure fishes; of uncertain origin, perhaps from *jig*¹, v., move up and down.

jigger n. 1781, alteration of CHIGGER.

jiggle v. 1836, formed from *jig*¹, v., with the frequentative suffix -le. — n. 1888, from the verb.

jihad n. 1869, holy war; borrowing of Arabic jihād, literally, struggle, contest, effort. The sense of any war or crusade for or against some doctrine, etc., is first recorded in 1880.

jilt v. 1673, be false or faithless, jilt or discard for another; apparently developed from jilt, n., a loose, unchaste woman, harlot (1672). Perhaps a contraction of earlier jelot (about 1550), gillot (1557) of the same meaning, and a diminutive form of gille a familiar or contemptuous term for a woman or girl (before 1425), originally a shortened form of the female name Gillian.

Jim Crow 1842, American English, in Jim Crow car segregated railroad car for blacks, from earlier Jim Crow, a derogatory name for a black man (1838). Originally Jim Crow (1835) was the name of a black minstrel character in a popular song and dance act. The song on which the performance was based appeared in 1828 with the title Jim Crow. The word crow was used earlier (1823) as a derogatory term for a black man.

jimmy n. 1848 jimmy, dialectal variant of jemmy crowbar much used by burglars (1811), apparently a special use of Jimmy or Jemmy, familiar forms of the proper name James. — v. 1893, from the noun.

jimson or Jimson weed 1812, American English, shortening and alteration of earlier Jamestown-weed (1687), from Jamestown, Virginia, where it was first found.

jingle v. About 1387–95 ginglen, of imitative origin. — n. 1599, from the verb.

jingo¹ interj. 1694 by jingo, apparently a euphemism for by Jesus, influenced by earlier jingo a magician's call for the appearance of something (1670, contrasting with presto), in the phrase high jingo or hey jingo; of uncertain origin.

jingo² n. chauvinist. 1897, from the earlier nickname Jingo (1878), in reference to a supporter of Disraeli's policy of sending a British fleet into Turkish waters to resist the advance of Russia in 1878; developed from the refrain by Jingo in a nationalistic music hall song which became the "theme song" of those ready to fight Russia; see JINGO¹.

jinn n. pl. 1822 ginns, misunderstood as a plural of ginn; earlier dgen (1684, borrowed from obsolete French dgen, from Arabic jinn spirits, plural of jinnī).

jinx n. 1911, American English, from earlier jyng a charm or spell (before 1643; originally a bird, the wryneck, used in witchcraft); borrowed from Latin inyx the wryneck, from Greek inyx (genitive inygos). — v. 1917, American English; from the noun.

jitney n. 1914, American English, from earlier jitney a nickel (spelled gitney in 1903), of uncertain origin; perhaps because the jitney buses charged a fare of five cents (a gitney).

jitterbug n. 1939, American English; probably developed from earlier jitterbug a swing music enthusiast (1937), from Jitter bug, title of a song (1934). — v. 1938, American English, from the same source as the noun.

jitters n. pl. 1929, American English, perhaps developed as an alteration of dialectal English chitter, v. and n., tremble or shiver, from Middle English chiteren to twitter, chatter (probably before 1200). — jittery adj. 1931, American English, formed from jitter(s) + *-y*¹.

jive v. 1928, American English, deceive, fool; originally Black English use, probably of African origin (compare Wolof jeu, jeu talk about someone absent, especially in a disparaging manner). — n. 1928, American English, misleading or deceptive talk; from the same source as the verb.

By the late 1930's jive was also the name of a type of fast, lively jazz music and dance, as well as the name of the slang used by blacks in New York City, especially black jazz musicians.

job n. 1557 jobbe of worke piece of work or task; perhaps a variant form of gobbe GOB¹ a mass or lump (about 1382).

Before 1627, job itself had come to mean a piece of work, and this meaning was extended to work done for pay or profit (1660).

jock n. 1963, American English, athlete, short for jockstrap athletic male, slang use of jockstrap a supporter of the male genital organs, used in sports (jock, genital organs 1790, of uncertain origin, + strap).

jockey n. Before 1529, boy or fellow, originally, a Scottish proper name, diminutive of Jock, Scottish variant of Jack. The meaning of a person who rides horses in races appeared in 1670. — v. 1708, trick, outwit; from the noun in the sense of crafty bargainer or horse trader (1683). The meaning of ride (a horse) in a race appeared in 1767.

jocose adj. 1673; earlier in jocosity (1646); borrowed from Latin jocōsus full of jesting, joking, from jocus pastime, sport, JOKE.

jocular adj. 1626, borrowed from Latin joculāris funny, comic, from joculus, diminutive of jocus JOKE.

jocund adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French jocond, learned borrowing from Latin jōcundus, later variant (influenced by Latin jocus JOKE) of jūcundus pleasant; originally, helpful, from juvāre to please, benefit, help.

jodhpurs n.pl. 1913 Jodpores, abstracted from earlier Jodhpur riding-breeches (1899), in allusion to Jodhpur, a former state in northwestern India.

jog v. 1548, shake or move with a jerk; later, stir up by hint or reminder (1601); perhaps alteration of Middle English shoggen to shake, jolt, move with a jerk (about 1395); of uncertain origin (perhaps cognate with Middle Dutch schocken to shake; see SHOCK¹ jolt). The meaning of walk or ride with a jolting pace, to trot, is first recorded in 1565, and was later extended to running (1866). —n. 1611, act of jogging; later, a shake, push (1635); from the verb. —jogger n. Before 1700; formed from English jog, v. + *-er*¹.

jog n. part that sticks out. 1845, American English, variant of *jag*¹ a sharp or pointed projection (1519, earlier in Middle English jagge ornamental points on the edge of a garment, probably 1409).

joggle v. 1513, shake to and fro; probably formed from *jog*¹ + *-le*³ (*jog*¹ appears later than joggle, which suggests connection by alteration with Middle English goglen to shake, probably about 1400). —n. 1727, from the verb.

join v. Probably before 1300 joinen (earlier, implied in the surname Joinur, 1195–1215); borrowed from Old French joindre, joindre (also found in the stem forms joign-, join-), from Latin jungere to join, YOKE. —joiner n. About 1195–1215, in the surname Joinur; borrowed from Old French joigneor, through the stem joign-, from joindre.

joint n. About 1300, place where bones come together; borrowed from Old French joint (past participle of joindre JOIN), from Latin jūctus, past participle of jungere JOIN.

The slang meaning of any place, building, or establishment, is first recorded in 1877, originally as a place where swindlers and burglars congregated. The meaning of jail or prison is first found in 1953, but is probably much older. —adj. 1424, borrowed from Middle French joint (past participle of joindre join).

joist n. Before 1325 giste; borrowed from Old French giste beam, noun use of the feminine past participle of gesir to lie, from Latin jacere to lie, rest; related to jacere to throw.

joke n. 1670, borrowed from Latin jocus joke, sport, pastime. —v. make a joke. 1670, borrowed from Latin jocārī to jest, joke, from jocus joke. —joker n. 1729, one who jokes; later, the odd face card in a pack of playing cards (1885); formed from English joke + *-er*¹.

jolly adj. Probably before 1300 jolif merry, about 1303 joly amorous; borrowed from Old French joli, jolif festive, merry, amorous, pretty; perhaps from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic jól a winter feast, YULE). The early loss of f in jolif is analogous to that in tardy and hasty. —v. 1890, American English, make feel good; from the adjective. Earlier use in jolifen be cheerful or cheering (about 1385) is not connected with the use in American English.

jolt v. 1599, perhaps alteration of jollen to knock or batter (before 1450; earlier to stagger, about 1410). Alteration of jollen to jolt and association with jolt-head clumsy, stupid person (1533) are unexplained. —n. 1599, a knock; probably from the verb. The meaning of a jarring shock or jerk is first recorded in 1632.

Jones n. The expression keep up with the Joneses strive not to be outdone by one's neighbors or associates, is first recorded in 1913 in American English; coined from the title of a comic strip.

jonquil n. 1664 junquill, borrowed from French jonquille, from Spanish junquillo, diminutive of junco rush, reed, from Latin juncus rush (in reference to the rushlike leaves), as in JUNIPER.

josh v. 1845 Josh, American English, perhaps from the name Josh, short for Joshua, but the connection is obscure.

joss n. Chinese idol. 1711, from a Chinese Pidgin English form of Javanese dejos, from Portuguese deus god, from Latin deus; see DEITY. The term joss stick, meaning a stick of fragrant paste burned as incense, is first recorded in 1883.

jostle v. 1678 jostle, alteration of earlier justle (1580) and iustle (1546); formed from jousten, justen to JOUST + suffix *-le*³. —n. 1607 justle struggle or joust; 1611, push or knock; from the verb.

jot n. 1526 iott (pronounced as one syllable); earlier ioote something of no value or importance (before 1500); borrowed from Latin jōta, iōta, from Greek iōta IOTA. —v. write briefly or in haste. 1721, originally Scottish.

joul n. 1962, borrowed from Canadian French, from the joul pronunciation of French cheval horse.

joule n. 1882, unit of work or energy, in allusion to James P. Joule, British physicist.

jounce v. 1440, implied in jouncing jolting movement; possibly an alteration (influenced by jog and jump) of bounce. —n. 1787, from the verb.

journal n. 1355–56, book of church services; borrowed through Anglo-French jurnal, jurnale a day, and directly from Old French journal, originally adjective, daily, from Late Latin diurnālis daily, DIURNAL. The meaning of a daily record of public transactions, is first recorded in 1565, and that of a daily personal record, diary, in 1610, from French journal. The connection with journal part of a shaft or axle that turns on a bearing (1814) is unknown, except that it comes from Scottish use probably related to its movement. —journalism n. 1833, borrowed from French journalisme, from French journal journal. —journalist n. 1693, formed from English journal + -ist.

journey n. Apparently before 1200 urnee passage through life; borrowed from Old French ournée, urnee, urnee day's work or travel, from Vulgar Latin diurnāta* events of a day, from diurnum day, noun use of neuter of Latin diurnus of one day, from diēs day. —v. Before 1338 journeyen, borrowed from Anglo-French journeyer from Old French journoier, from ournée. —journeyman n. 1414 journeuman workman qualified in his trade; formed from English journey + man.

joust v. Apparently about 1300 justen; later jousten (about 1378); borrowed from Old French joster, jouster, juster, from Vulgar Latin juxtāre* be next to, from Latin juxtā beside, near; related to ungere join. An earlier sense of join or ally oneself, is first recorded in about 1250. —n. Probably before 1300 (usually in the plural) justes; about 1300 (also in the plural) joustes; borrowed from Old French joustes, justes, from jouster, juster to joust.

jovial adj. 1590, under the influence of the planet Jupiter; borrowed through Middle French jovial, and directly from Latin Jovialis of Jupiter, from Jovius, from Jovis (genitive of Juppiter) Jupiter, Roman god of the sky. The meaning of good-humored and merry derives from the belief that those born under the sign of the planet Jupiter are of a cheerful disposition.

jowl¹ n. jaw. 1577 jole, in the phrase cheek by jowl, alteration (possibly by association with *JOWL*²) of Middle English chawl (probably about 1380); earlier chavel (before 1250); developed from Old English (about 750) ceafst; cognate with Old Saxon kaflos, pl., jaws, Middle High German kiver, kivel jowl (modern German Kiefer), from Proto-Germanic kaflaz*, kefraz, keflaz. The forms with j in *jowl*¹ and *jowl*² began to appear in the late 1500's, but the shift from ch- to j- is not satisfactorily accounted for; perhaps influenced by jol head (1371, found in jolrap head rope, as for a cow).

jowl² n. fold of flesh hanging from the jaw. 1591 joule, alteration of Middle English cholle (probably about 1300); perhaps related to Old English ceole throat, cognate with Old High German kela throat, Proto-Germanic kelōn-*; see note at *JOWL*¹.

joy n. Probably before 1200 joie gladness, delight, joy; borrowed from Old French joie, from Latin gaudia, plural of gaudium joy, from gaudēre rejoice. —joyful adj. About 1250 joiful; formed from Middle English joie + -ful. —joyous adj. Probably before 1300 joious, borrowed through Anglo-French joyous, from Old French joios, from joie joy; for suffix see -OUS.

joyant adj. 1667, probably borrowed from Latin jubilantem (nominative jubilans), present participle of jubilāre to shout for joy, related to jubilum wild shout. Cognates are found in Middle High German jū, jūch shout of joy, jūchezen to shout with joy (modern German jauchzen), and Middle Low German jōlen to rejoice, jubilate. —jubilation n. Probably before 1375 jubylacion; borrowed through Old French jubilacion and jubilee n. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French jubilé, from Late Latin jubilaeus the jubilee year; originally, of the jubilee, alteration (by association with Latin jubilāre to shout with joy) of Greek iōbēlaos, from iōbēlos, from Hebrew yōbhēl a shout of joy; originally, trumpet or ram's horn. The original reference of jubilee was the year of emancipation of slaves and restoration of lands to be celebrated according to the Bible (Leviticus 25) every fiftieth year. The jubilee was proclaimed by the sound of a ram's horn on the Day of Atonement.

from Latin jubilatiōnem (nominative jubilatiō), from jubilāre; for suffix see -ATION.

The transferred sense of a time or season of rejoicing, is first recorded about 1450.

Judaism n. Before 1400 Judaisme religion of the Jews; borrowed, probably through Old French Judaisme, and directly from Late Latin Judaismus, from Greek Ioudaismós, from Ioudaios JEW; for suffix see -ISM. —Judaic adj. 1611, borrowed probably through Middle French judaïque, and directly from Latin Judaicus, from Greek Ioudaïkós, from Ioudaios Jew; for suffix see -IC. Also a shortened form of earlier Judaical (1464).

judge n. About 1303 juge, possibly from the verb in English, and borrowed from Old French juge, from Latin jūdicem (nominative jūdex), a compound of jūs right or law, and the root of dicere say. The general meaning of one who decides a question, an expert or umpire, is first recorded about 1380, and the specific meaning of umpire in a contest about 1385. —v. Probably before 1200 jugen, juggen form an opinion or estimate, interpret, decide; borrowed through Anglo-French juger, from Old French jugier to judge, from Latin jūdicāre to judge, from jūdicem judge.

The spelling with -dg- is not found in English before 1469 and follows the spelling pattern representing the sound changes in late Middle English as found in -gg- to -dge-; see note at DRUDGE. —judgment n. Before 1250 jugement, juggement capacity for making decisions, act of judging, decision; borrowed from Old French jugement, from jugier to judge.

judicatory adj. 1603, borrowed from French judicatoire, from Late Latin jūdicatōrius judicial, from Latin jūdicāre to JUDGE; for suffix see -ORY.

judicial adj. Before 1382, borrowed from Latin jūdicālis of or belonging to a court of justice, from jūdicium judgment or decision, from jūdicem (nominative jūdex) JUDGE; for suffix see -IAL.

judiciary adj. 1604, forming a judgment, especially in reference to astrology, discerning; 1611, relating to the courts or the administration of justice; reborrowed, perhaps through French judiciare, from Latin jūdicārius of or belonging to a court of justice, from jūdicium judgment. An earlier use of judiciary, adj. (borrowed directly from Latin), is found before 1415, but the word does not appear again for almost 200 years. —n. 1802, branch of government that administers justice; earlier, art of divination (1587); borrowed from Medieval Latin judiciarius judge, justice, from Latin jūdicārius; see the adjective above.

judicious adj. 1598; borrowed from Middle French judicieux, judicieux, from Latin judicium judgment, from judicem (nominative judex) JUDGE; for suffix see -IOUS.

judo n. 1889, borrowing of Japanese jūdō (jū softness, gentleness + dō way, art, from Chinese tao way).

jug n. Before 1477 jugge, variant of jubbe, of uncertain origin (sometimes proposed as a use of the proper name Jug, a familiar alteration of the female name Judith or of Joan).

jugate adj. 1887, borrowed from Latin jugātus, past participle of jugāre join together, from jugum YOKE; for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1974, American English; from the adjective.

juggernaut n. 1865, relentless, crushing force or object, figurative use of earlier Juggernaut a huge wagon bearing an image of the Hindu god Krishna (1814). The cart was drawn annually in a procession, it is said, in which many devotees allowed themselves to be crushed under its wheels as a sacrifice. Juggernaut, is an altered form of earlier Jaggarnat a title of Krishna (1638); borrowed from Hindi Jagannāth, literally, lord of the world, from Sanskrit Jagannātha-s (jāgat world + nāthā-s lord, master).

juggle v. About 1378 jogelen entertain by clowning or performing tricks; probably, in part a back formation from juggler, and also a borrowing from Old French jogler, from Latin joculari to joke, from joculus, diminutive of jocus JOKE.

—juggler n. Probably before 1200 juglur an entertainer; developed from Late Old English gēogelere magician, conjuror (before 1100); borrowed through Anglo-French jugelur, jogelour, from Old French (accusative) jogleor, from Latin joculātorem (nominative joculātor) joker, from joculārī to joke; for suffix see -OR².

jugular adj. 1597, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French jugulaire, and directly from New Latin jugularis, from Latin jugulum collarbone, throat, neck, diminutive formation of jugum yoke; related to jungere to JOIN. —n. 1615, from the adjective.

juice n. About 1300 jus; borrowing of Old French jus, from Latin jūs broth, sauce, juice. The spelling juyce (iuyce) is first recorded in 1533, and juice (iuiice) in 1553. —juicy adj. Before 1420 jousy full of juice; from jus juice. The meaning of full of interest, lively, is first recorded in 1838.

jujitsu n. 1875 jiu-jitsu, from Japanese jūjutsu (jū softness, gentleness, from Chinese jou soft, gentle + jutsu art, science, from Chinese shu, shut).

jujube n. Before 1400, datelike fruit of an Asiatic tree; borrowed through Middle French jujube, or directly from Medieval Latin jujuba, from the plural of Vulgar Latin zizupum*, from Latin zizyphum the jujube tree, from Greek zīzyphos, from Persian zayzafūn. The small gummy candy with datelike flavor is first recorded in 1835 and pronounced jū'jū bē'.

julep n. Before 1400, syrup, sweet drink in which medicine was given; borrowed from Old French julep, from Spanish julepe; and Medieval Latin julapium; both the Spanish and Medieval Latin from Arabic julab, from Persian gulāb rose water (gul rose + āb water). The alcoholic drink, flavored with mint, is first recorded in 1787.

July n. Before 1121 Julie; borrowed through Anglo-French Julie, from Old French Jule, Juil, from Latin Jūlius, from the name of Gaius Jūlius Caesar, Roman general born in this month, then called Quintilis (fifth month, March at the time of Caesar's birth being the first month).

jumble v. Before 1529, to move about in disorder and confusion, perhaps a coinage on the pattern of stumble, tumble, fumble, etc. The meaning of mix or confuse, is first recorded in 1542.

An earlier form jumbeled made double (about 1460) is related to gemelled paired or doubled and without any seeming connection to jumble. —n. confused mixture. 1661, from the verb.

jumbo n. big, 1883, American English, from the name of Jumbo, a huge elephant owned by the American showman P.T. Barnum. The name was probably taken from earlier English Jumbo a clumsy or unwieldy fellow (1823); possibly abstracted from Mumbo-Jumbo grotesque bogey or idol (1738). —adj. 1897, American English; from the noun.

jump v. Before 1460 jumpen (probably with the meaning of walk quickly or jump); probably borrowed from the Gallo-Romance dialects of southwestern France during the English occupation of that region (compare jumbá to rock, balance, swing; yumpá to rock; also surviving in Sardinian iumpare to jump). The word jump may also have acquired an onomatopoeic flavor which was instrumental in its borrowing into English. If jump is of imitative origin, parallel forms may be found in Middle High German and Low German gumpen to jump or hop, and possibly Swedish guppa to jump. —n. 1552, from the verb.

juniper n. 1853, apparently derived from earlier jump short coat (1653), also kind of woman's under bodice (1666); of uncertain origin. The application of juniper to a sleeveless dress worn over a blouse is first recorded in 1939 in American English.

junco n. 1706, borrowed from Spanish junco rush or reed, as in junco ave a bird of the Indies, and rabo de junco a bird of New Guinea; see JONQUIL.

junction n. 1711, a joining, union, combination; borrowed, perhaps by influence of French jonction, from Latin junctiōnem (nominative junctiō), from jungere to JOIN; for suffix see -TION. The sense of a place of joining, as where railroad lines or highways meet, is first recorded in 1841, apparently from proper names of canals and railways, such as Grand Junction Canal and South Western Junction Railway.

juncture n. Before 1382, a joining, joint; borrowed from Latin junctūra, from jungere to JOIN; for suffix see -URE. The meaning of a point of time, made critical by a concurrence of events, is first recorded in 1656.

June n. 1110 Junie; later June (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (about 1050) Junius; borrowed from Latin Jūnius, probably a variant of Jūnōnius, sacred to the goddess Jūnō.

jungle n. 1776, borrowed from Hindi jaṅgal desert, forest, wasteland, from Middle Indic jāṅgala-s* desert or dry ground, from Sanskrit jāṅgala-s arid or sparingly grown with trees and plants. The meaning of a wild, tangled mass (as in a jungle of red tape), is first recorded in 1850, and a place where the law of the jungle prevails in 1906. —jungle gym (1923, in American English as a trademark) junior adj. 1296 Junior the younger (in a Latin context); later, in a list of names (1311–1423) and in an English context (1448); borrowed from Latin jūnior (from pre-Latin juveniōs), comparative of juvenis YOUNG. —n. 1526; from the adjective.

juniper n. About 1390; earlier, a desert shrub of Biblical times (before 1382); borrowed from Latin jūniperus, of uncertain origin. The first element jūni- is perhaps related to juncus reed, rush, as in JONQUIL.

junk¹ n. object of little value. 1338 junke, jonke an old cable or rope (a nautical use), of uncertain origin (possibly the same word as junke, jonke rush, a plant with hollow stems used for mats, baskets, etc.; borrowed from Old French jonc, junc rush, reed, from Latin juncus, as in JONQUIL; or borrowed from Portuguese junco cordage, rush, reed).

The original nautical meaning of junk was extended to any piece of old cable or rope cut up and used to make fenders, gaskets, etc. (1666), later extended to old refuse from boats and ships (1842), which produced such related compounds as junk dealer (1866) and junkman (1872), both originally meaning a dealer in marine stores. The meaning of old or discarded articles of any kind, appeared about 1880. —v. 1803, to cut off in lumps; later, to scrap (1916); from the noun. —junkie n. 1923, a drug addict; formed from English *junk*¹ narcotic drug + -ie. —junky adj. worthless; trashy. 1946, formed from English *junk*¹ + -y.

junk² n. Chinese sailing ship. 1613, borrowed from Dutch jonk, or directly from Portuguese junco, from Malay jong, ajong, probably from Javanese jong.

Junker or junker n. 1554, borrowing of German Junker, from Old High German junchērro, literally, young lord (junc YOUNG + hērro lord).

junket n. 1382 ionkett, iunket a basket made of rushes; probably borrowed from Medieval Latin juncata rush basket, also perhaps in Old North French jonquette, jonquet*, jonket* rush basket, perhaps from jonc a rush, from Latin juncus rush as in JONQUIL.

The meaning of a food made of curdled milk or cream, originally prepared on a rush basket, is first recorded in English about 1450. The meaning of a feast or banquet is first recorded before 1500, but is found earlier in the form jonkrey (1443), junkery (1449); borrowed from Old French jonceroi; the shift in form is obscure. The sense of a pleasure trip is first recorded in 1814 an extension of a feast or banquet, found in the compound junket basket picnic basket (1825).

junta n. 1623, Spanish council for deliberation or administration; borrowed from Spanish junta council, from Medieval Latin juncta joint, from Latin jūncta, feminine past participle of jungere to JOIN. The meaning of a political or military group in power is first recorded in 1714. An earlier form, junto faction, clique, cabal (1641) was probably formed by confusion with Spanish nouns ending in -o, as in cargo, from Spanish carga, and bravado, from Spanish bravada.

juridical adj. 1584, formed in English from Latin jūridicus (jūs right or law, genitive jūris + dicere say or speak) + English suffix *-al*¹; also possibly influenced by Middle French juridique paralleling English typical from French typique, and hypothetical from hypothétique.

jurisdiction n. Before 1325 jureddiccion, jureddiccioun legal power, authority; later jurisdiccoun (about 1390); borrowed from Old French jurisdiction, jureddiccion, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin jūrisdictiōnem (nominative jūrisdictiō), a compound of jūs (genitive jūris) right, law + dictiōnem (nominative dictiō) a saying. Appearance of medial s in later Middle English jurisdiccoun comes from the spelling in Latin.

jurisprudence n. 1628, borrowed, probably through French jurisprudence, and directly from Late Latin jūrisprudentia the science of law, (jūris right or law genitive of jūs + prudentia knowledge, from prudentem PRUDENT).

jurist n. 1481, borrowed from Middle French juriste, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin jurista, from Latin jūs (genitive jūris) law; for suffix see -IST.

jury¹ n. group of persons selected to hear evidence in a law court. 1398, in jurybook; probably before 1400 jure group of men sworn to deliver a verdict; later jurie (1436); borrowed through Anglo-French juree, Old French jurée oath or inquest, from juror to swear, from Latin jūrāre to swear, from jūs (genitive jūris) law; for suffix see *-y*⁴. The word is found earlier in Latin texts in England from 1188. —juror n. 1301 jurour; borrowed through Anglo-French jurour, Old French jureor, from Latin jūrātōrem (nominative jūrātor) swearer, from jūrāre; for suffix see *-OR*².

jury² adj. for temporary use on a ship. 1616, in jurymast; probably borrowed ultimately from Old French ajurie help or relief, from Latin adjūtāre to AID; for suffix see -ERY.

just adj. Before 1375, having proper dimensions, fitting; about 1380, accurate, exact (also) borrowed from Old French juste, learned borrowing from Latin jūstus upright or equitable, from jūs (genitive jūris) right or law. —adv. exactly, barely, only. Probably before 1400, from the adjective.

justice n. 1140, quality of being fair, just; borrowed from Old French justise, justice, learned borrowing from Latin jūstitia righteousness, equity, from jūstus upright, JUST.

justify v. About 1378 justifien govern, rule, have charge; before 1382, prove to be just or right; borrowed from Old French justifier, learned borrowing from Latin jūstificāre act justly toward, make just, from jūstificus dealing justly, righteous (jūstus JUST + the root of facere to DO¹ perform); for suffix see -FY. —justification n. About 1384 justificacion act of justifying, correction, rectification; borrowed through Old French justification, and directly from Late Latin jūstificātiōnem (nominative jūstificātiō), from jūstificāre justify; for suffix see -ATION.

jut v. About 1450 jutteyen stick out, project; later jutt (1565–73). —n. 1786, from the verb (but compare earlier jutei, variant of Middle English gete, n., a projection, jetty, overhang).

jute n. 1746, borrowed from Bengali jhūṭo, jhōṭo, from Sanskrit jūṭa-s twisted hair.

juvenile adj. 1625, borrowed through French juvénile, and directly from Latin juvenilis of or belonging to youth, from juvenis young person, from juvenis YOUNG. —n. 1733, from the adjective.

juxtapose v. 1851, borrowed from French juxtaposer Latin juxtā beside, near + Old French poser to place. —juxtaposition n. 1665 juxta-position, probably a borrowing of French juxtaposition (1664), formed from Latin juxtā near + French position; also formed from Latin juxtā near + English position.

K

Kabuki or kabuki n. 1899, borrowing of Japanese kabuki art of song and dance (ka song + bu dance + ki art).

Kaiser or kaiser n. 1858, borrowing of German Kaiser, from Old High German keisar emperor, an early borrowing from Latin Caesar CAESAR. Similar borrowings are found in Old Saxon kēsar, kēsar emperor, Old Frisian keisar, keiser, Old English cāsere, and Old Icelandic keisari. In the sense of a Roman emperor, a Caesar, or a ruler, the forms keiser and kaiser appeared in Middle English (probably before 1200), apparently as a borrowing of Middle High German keisar, and eventually replacing Middle English kaser (recorded about 1200) which developed from Old English cāsere.

kale n. Before 1300 kale; earlier cawul (probably about 1200), eventually becoming a variant (Scots) form of COLE.

kaleidoscope n. 1817, formed in English from Greek kal-, the root of kalós beautiful + eido-, the stem of eidōs shape + English -scope. The term was coined by its inventor, Sir David Brewster, 1781–1868. The figurative meaning of a constantly changing pattern is first recorded in 1819.

kamikaze n. 1945, American English, borrowing of Japanese kamikaze suicide corps; literally, divine or providential wind (kami god, providence, divine + kaze wind). Kamikaze was originally a name given in Japanese lore to a typhoon which in August 1281 saved Japan from invading Mongols by destroying their navy.

kangaroo n. 1770 kangooroo, kanguru recorded as the native name of the animal among the aborigines at Endeavour River (now Cooktown), in northeastern Queensland, Australia. Kangaroo may have been a localism, or it may have been a mistranscription of a local name.

The term kangaroo court originated in American English and was first recorded in 1853, where it refers to an irregularly conducted court which was also called a “mustang” court.

kaolin or kaoline n. 1727–41, borrowing of French kaolin, in allusion to Kao-ling, transliteration of the name of a mountain in China (kao high + ling mountain, hill) near which this material was originally obtained.

kapok n. 1858; earlier capoc (1750); borrowed from Malay kapok.

kaput or kaputt adj. 1895, borrowing of German kaputt, probably abstracted from the earlier phrase capot machen, a partial translation by false interpretation of faire in the French faire capot be defeated; from its use in the game of piquet where the phrase refers to losing all the tricks in a game; ultimately from capot cover or bonnet, from Middle French cape cloak.

karat n. See CARAT.

karate n. 1955, borrowing in transliteration from Japanese karate, literally, empty hand or bare hand (kara empty + te hand).

karyotype n. 1929, American English; probably borrowed from French caryotype (caryo- cell nucleus, from Greek káryon nut or kernel + type, from Late Latin typus form, character, type). Apparently originally proposed by the Russian biologist G.A. Lewitsky in 1924.

katydid n. 1784, American English, formed in imitation of the sound made by the male when it rubs its front wings together. The sound was described in 1751 as catedidist.

kayak n. 1757 kajak, borrowed, possibly through Danish which may have had the first written form of the word (after Denmark exercised sovereignty over Greenland in 1721), from kazoo n. 1884, American English, possibly alteration of earlier bazoo trumpet (1877); see BAZOOKA.

Eskimo (as spoken in Greenland) kajakka, literally, small boat of skins. —v. 1875, from the noun.

keel n. 1338 kelle; later kele (1410); borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kjöl keel, Norwegian kjøl, Danish køl, Swedish köl). The Scandinavian forms are cognate with Middle Low German keil, kel keel (modern German Kiel), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch kiel, from Proto-Germanic keluz*, related to Old High German kēla throat, beak of a ship. —v. 1828, American English; from the noun.

keelson or kelson n. 1627 keelson, alteration (influenced by keel) of earlier kelsine (about 1611), and kilson (before 1618), from Middle English kelsyng (1402), earlier kelswayn (1296); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish kölsvin keelson, Danish and Norwegian kjölsvin, all derived from the root of Old Icelandic kjöl KEEL) + swīn SWINE, used for a timber, from Proto-Germanic swīnaz*.

keen¹ adj. sharp, acute. Probably before 1200 kene, kenne bold, brave, daring, sharp-pointed, wise; developed from Old English (before 725) cēne bold, brave, clever, wise; cognate with Middle Dutch coene bold, daring (modern Dutch koen), Old High German kuoni (modern German kuhn), Old Icelandic kœnn wise, clever, able; related to kan know, from Proto-Germanic kan-/kōn-*; see CAN¹ be able to, and KEN.

keen² v. to wail or lament. 1811, implied in keener one who keens; borrowed from Irish caoinim I weep, wail, lament, from Old Irish coimim, caimim. —n. 1830, borrowed from Irish caoine, from caoinim.

keep v. 1127 kepen watch for, observe, retain, hold, take, keep; developed from Old English (about 1000) cēpan (from Proto-Germanic kōpijanan*), possibly related to capian to look; cognate with Old Saxon capen in upcapen stand out, be visible, Middle Low German kapen to gape, Old High German kapfen to look, and Old Icelandic kōpa to stare, gape, from Proto-Germanic kap-/kōp-*. The original sense may have been “to lay hold” in the literal sense and was so extended figuratively to “keep an eye on, watch,” thereby used to render Latin observare to watch, take note of, and Latin servare to watch, observe. —n. About 1250 kep care or heed in watching, concern, charge; from kepen to keep. The meaning of sustenance, support, is recorded before 1825. The sense of a stronghold of a medieval castle is found before 1586. —keeper n. 1279, in the surname Kepere; from keep, v. + *-er*¹.

keg n. 1632, variant of earlier kag (1452); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kaggi keg, cask, Swedish kagge, Norwegian kagg, kagge); origin uncertain.

kelp n. 1663, dialectal variation of earlier kilpe (1601); developed from culp or culpe (before 1387); of unknown origin.

kempt adj. Probably about 1378 kempt well-combed, neat; from past participle of kemben to comb; developed from Old English cemban (about 1000); cognate with Old Saxon kem- bian, kemmian to comb, Old High German kemben, chempen, and Old Icelandic kemba, from Proto-Germanic kamibjan*, from kamb- COMB, n. Though kemben was largely displaced by comb, v., and kemb appears infrequently after the 1400's, its use has been stimulated lately as a quaint back formation from unkempt.

ken v. Scottish. to know, recognize, or understand. Probably before 1200 kennen; developed from Old English cennan make known, declare, acknowledge (about 725, in Beowulf). Introduction of the sense of know (in distinction to make known) found in Old English cunnan to know, was probably influenced by Old Icelandic kenna to know, which is cognate with Old Frisian kanna, kenna to know, Old Saxon kennian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch kennen, Old High German chennan, kennen, Middle High German and modern German kennen, and Gothic kannjan make known; see KEEN. —n. 1545, distance one can see, especially at sea; earlier found in kenning sight or view (probably before 1400).

kennel n. 1301 kenill, 1302 kennel; borrowed probably from Anglo-French kenil*, from Old French chenil, from Vulgar Latin canile*, from Latin canis dog; see HOUND. —v. 1552, to lie in a kennel; from the noun. The meaning of put or keep in a kennel is first recorded in 1592.

keratin n. 1847–49, formed in English from Greek kéras (genitive kératos) HORN + English *-in*².

kerchief n. 1223 kovrechief; later curchief (before 1325) and kerchief (before 1387); borrowed through Anglo-French courchief, and directly from Old French couvrechief a kerchief; literally, cover-head (couvrir, covrir to COVER + chief head). The compounds neckerchief (neck + kerchief) and handkerchief appeared in 1384 and 1530, respectively.

kernel n. Probably before 1200 curnel kernel of grain; later, any seed (about 1300), and kernel (1381); developed from Old English cyrnel (about 1000), formed from corn seed, grain + -el (diminutive suffix); see CORN.

kerosene n. 1852, Canadian English; formed from Greek kēros wax + English -ene (suffix used in names of pure hydrocarbons). Reference to the Greek word for wax comes from the fact that kerosene contains paraffin (in British English kerosene is called paraffin oil). Its other name coal oil is associated with its original distillation from albertite (a bituminous mineral resembling coal) by Abraham Gesner, who discovered the process about 1846.

kestrel n. 1602, variant of earlier castrell (before 1500 with development of t between s and n); borrowed probably from Middle French cresserelle, cresselle, quercelle, apparently related to crecelle, crecelle rattle, from Gallo-Romance crepicella*, from Latin crepitācillum small rattle, diminutive of crepitaculum rattle, from crepitare to crackle, rattle.

ketch n. 1655, variant of earlier catch (1443–46), cacche (1422), and cache (1371–72), probably from cacchen to capture, ensnare, chase; see CATCH. For sense development compare YACHT.

ketchup n. 1711, borrowed from Malay kěchap, perhaps by influence of earlier CATCHUP.

kettle n. 1338 ketil, ketel; developed from Old English cetil (before 700, in Mercian dialect); borrowed probably directly from Latin catillus small bowl, dish, or plate, diminutive of catinus bowl, dish, pot. If the word was borrowed from Latin, it was an early borrowing also found in Old Saxon and Middle Dutch ketel, Old High German kezzil (modern German Kessel), Old Icelandic ketill and Gothic katilē, pl.

kewpie n. 1913, American English; Kewpie, an altered and diminutive form of Cupid. The name was coined according to their American illustrator "because they look like little Cupids" (Rose C. O'Neill, 1909).

key¹ n. small metal piece that operates a lock. Before 1200 kei, keie; developed from Old English (before 725) cæg; cognate with Old Frisian kēi, kāi, and perhaps with Middle Low German keie, keige lance, spear, of unknown origin. The figurative meaning of something that unlocks and discloses, solution or explanation, is found in Old English (about 897).

The musical sense of a note, a tone appeared before 1450, but the sense of a scale is not recorded before 1590; originally, perhaps a translation of Latin clāvis (or French clef), after the solmization system of Guido d'Arezzo, in which clāvis meant a note or tone, especially the keynote or tonic.

key² n. low island, reef. 1697, borrowed from Spanish cayo, from Taino cayo or caya small island. Both the spelling in English and the borrowing from Spanish were influenced by an association with earlier key wharf (about 1200 from Old French cai, kai).

khaki n. 1857, the color khaki or a fabric of this color; borrowed from Urdu khākī, literally, dusty, from khāk dust, from Persian. Khaki was introduced first in uniforms of a British cavalry force in India (the Guide Corps, 1846). —adj. 1863, borrowed from Urdu khākī.

kibbutz n. 1931, borrowed from modern Hebrew qibbiṣ, from Hebrew, a gathering together, from the root of qibbēš he gathered together.

kibitz v. 1927, American English; borrowed from Yiddish kibitsen, from German kiebitzen to look on at cards, to kibitz; originally in thieves' cant, to visit, from Kiebitz the European pewee (a shore bird), meddler; later, onlooker at cards, from Middle High German gībitz, gīwiz pewee, of imitative origin.

kibosh n. Slang. put the kibosh on, dispose of finally; finish off; do in. 1836 kye-bosk; of unknown origin.

kick v. About 1384 kiken strike out with the foot, in the phrase kiken ayens the pricke kick against the pricks, with the sense of show disobedience or defiance to one's own hurt; borrowed perhaps from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kikna bend backwards, sink at the knees, Norwegian keike bend backwards, wrangle; the sense of kick backwards, perhaps appearing in Middle English and thereby making a possible semantic connection). —n. 1530, a knock or blow with the foot; from the verb.

kid¹ n. young goat. Probably before 1200 kide; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kidh young goat, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian kid, and Shetland kid). The Scandinavian forms are cognate with Middle High German and East Frisian kitze young goat, Old High German kizzī (modern German Kitz, Kitze).

The extended meaning of a child, especially a young child, is first recorded as slang usage in 1599; it became established in informal use by 1841.

kid² v. 1839, tease playfully, talk jokingly; earlier in thieves' slang, to coax, wheedle, hoax, or humbug (1811); probably from *kid*¹ in the sense of treat as a child; amuse.

kidnap v. 1682, probably a compound of *kid*¹ child and nap snatch away, an earlier (1673) variant of nab. It is also possible that kidnap is a back formation from kidnapper. Originally, kidnap referred to stealing children or carrying off others in order to provide servants or laborers in the American colonies. —kidnapper n. 1678, formed from *kid*¹ child + nap snatch away + *-er*¹.

kidney n. Before 1325 kidenere; later kydeneye (1392); of uncertain origin, but perhaps developed from an unrecorded Old English compound cydenēore*: the first element of the compound being represented by dialectal English kid a pod (related to Old English cod a bag, in the form cyde*, cydde* belly), from Proto-Germanic kudjās*; the second element of the compound being Old English nēora*, found in Middle English nere kidney (before 1325). The modern spelling kidney developed from Middle English kideneye (1392), apparently an alteration of earlier kidenere, by association with ey, ei EGG (from the resemblance of the kidney's shape to an egg).

kill¹ v. put to death. Probably before 1200 cullen to strike or hit; later, put to death, slay (about 1300); perhaps developed from Old English cyllan*, related to cwellan to kill; see QUELL. —killer n. 1288, in the surname Kyller. —killjoy n. (1776) kill² n. stream, creek. 1669, American English; earlier, used as the name of a strait (1639); borrowed from Dutch kil, from Middle Dutch kille riverbed, channel.

killdeer n. 1731 kildeer, American English; probably imitative of the bird's call.

kiln n. Before 1325 kilne; developed from Old English (before 800) cyln, cylen, borrowed from Latin culīna kitchen, cooking stove; see CULINARY.

kilo n. 1870, short for KILOGRAM.

kilo- a prefix meaning one thousand, as in kilogram, kilometer, kilowatt. Borrowed from French kilo-, arbitrary alteration of khilioi, French transliteration of Greek chilioi (Aeolic chéllioi) a thousand.

This prefix was introduced into French in 1795, when the metric system was officially adopted by France. The words kilogramme kilogram, and kilomètre kilometer, were introduced in French at the same time.

Kilroy n. a mythical character of graffiti, developed by U.S. servicemen during World War II. 1945, especially in the phrase Kilroy was here, variously explained as: 1) the name of Sergeant Francis J. Kilroy, Jr. of the U.S. Army Air Transport Command, whose friend or friends kept writing Kilroy's name wherever they went; or 2) the name of James J. Kilroy, an inspector of war materials who wrote his name on equipment he inspected.

kilt n. 1746, from the earlier verb kilt to tuck up (the skirts), gird up (1513); developed from Middle English kilten to tuck up (about 1340); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish kilte (op) to tuck up, Swedish dialect kilta to swathe, Old Icelandic kjalta fold made by gathering up a dress, kilting billowing fold of a dress, and Old Swedish kilta lap).

kilter n. Before 1657, variant of earlier kelter (1643); of unknown origin.

kimono n. 1886, borrowed from Japanese kimono (ki wear + mono thing).

kin n. Probably about 1200 kinn, kin race, people, family, descendants, sex; in the surname Kinne (1180), and as found in cinnes men (1129); developed from Old English (before 725) cyn family, race, kind, nature; cognate with Old Frisian kenn kin, Old Saxon kunni, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch kunne sex or gender, Old High German chunni kin or race, kind child (modern German Kind), Old Icelandic kyn family or race, and Gothic kuni, from Proto-Germanic kunján*. —kinsman n. 1129 cinnes man, later kinnessmann (about 1200); formed from English kin + man. —kinswoman n. 1330; formed from English kin + woman.

—kin a suffix meaning little, as in lambkin, pipkin. Middle English -kin, probably borrowed from Middle Dutch -keijn and -ken; cognate with Old Saxon -kin diminutive suffix, Middle Low German -kin, Old High German -chîn (modern German -chen).

This suffix appeared in English probably originally in proper names (Melekin, 1181); it was also added to common nouns in late Middle English. Some words with -kin were borrowed from Dutch or Flemish, such as bodkin and catkin; others were formed in English, but the diminutive meaning is often no longer perceived, as in napkin (fundamentally, nap, nape cloth and -kin, -kyn diminutive; thus, little cloth).

kind¹ adj. friendly, doing good rather than harm. About 1250 kind, kinde natural, native, related by kinship; later, benevolent, kind (about 1325); developed from Old English gecynde natural, native, innate (about 725, in Beowulf) originally, with the feelings that relatives have, from Proto-Germanic zakundijáz*, from gecynd, cynd nature, KIND². —kindly adj. Before 1325 kyndli; earlier kuindeliche (before 1275); developed from Old English cyndelic (before 899); formed from cynd nature + -lic -ly; —adv. Before 1325 kindli; earlier kinde-like (about 1250); developed from Old English gecyndelice, formed from gecynde kind² + -lic -ly².

kind² n. class, sort, variety. Probably about 1200 kinde nature, character, type, class; developed from Old English gecynd, cynd kind, nature, race (before 899); related to cynn family, KIN, and developed from Proto-Germanic [ga-]kundi*.

kindergarten n. 1852, borrowed from German Kindergarten, literally, children's garden (Kinder children, plural of Kind child + Garten GARDEN). A kindergarten was established in England in 1850 by Johannes Ronge, a German Roman Catholic priest.

kindle v. Probably about 1200 kindelen, kindlen; borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kynda kindle, kyndill a candle, torch, Old Swedish quindla kindle), of unknown origin; for suffix see -LE³. —kindling n. (1513) kindred n. Probably before 1200 kinrede, kinreden; formed from kin KIN + -rede, -reden, from Old English ræden condition or rule, related to rædan to advise, rule, explain, READ.

The present spelling is infrequently recorded in Middle English, in which it was probably influenced by kinde KIND² class, sort; but the modern kindred, that became common in the 1600's, is probably the result of phonetic intrusion of d between n and r, as in thunder. —adj. 1530, from the noun.

kinesthetic adj. 1880 kinaesthetic; from New Latin kinaesthesia (from Greek kinēin to move and alsthēsis sensation) + -ic, on the pattern of aesthetic, prosthetic.

kinetic adj. 1864, borrowed from Greek kinētikós moving, from kinēin to move; for suffix see -IC. —kinetic energy (1870) king n. Before 1121 king chief ruler, monarch; developed from Old English (before 725) cyning, also later contracted to cyng; cognate with Old Frisian kening, kening king, Old Saxon kuning, Middle Dutch coninc (modern Dutch koning), Old High German kuning, kunig (modern German König), Old Icelandic konungr, kongr, Old Danish konung, konung (modern Danish and Norwegian konge, and Swedish konung, kung). It is possible that in Old English the form for king is derived from cynn family, race, KIN + -ing one descended from (the literal meaning being descendant or scion of the race). Another view is that Old English cyning derived from Proto-Germanic kuningaz* one who descended from noble birth. —kingdom n. About 1250, developed from Old English (about 725) cyningdōm (cyning king + -dōm -dom).

kinin n. substance that causes dilation of blood vessels and contraction of smooth muscles. 1954, apparently abstracted from bradykinin (1949, from Greek bradys slow + kin-, abstracted from Greek kinētikós KINETIC + English *-in*²). In botany, a substance that promotes cell division and regulates growth in plants (1956); also called cytokinin (1965).

kink n. 1678, originally a nautical term; borrowed from Dutch kink twist in a rope; cognate with Middle Low German kinke kink, and Old Icelandic kikna bend at the knees. The figurative sense of odd notion or mental twist is first recorded in American English, in 1803. —v. 1697, from the noun. —kinky adj. 1844, American English, twisted or curly; formed from English kink + *-y*¹. The meaning of morally twisted or perverted is first recorded in 1959, as an extension of the sense eccentric or crotchety (1859).

kiosk n. 1625, borrowed from French kiosque, from Turkish köşk pavilion, palace, from Persian gōše corner.

kipper n. 1326 kipre, kypre cured fish; developed from Old English (before 1000) cypera male salmon, probably related to coper reddish-brown metal, COPPER¹, with reference to the color of the fish. —v. 1773, from the noun.

kirk n. About 1200 kirke; borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kirkeja church, Norwegian and Danish kirke, Swedish kyrka; see CHURCH).

kismet n. 1834, borrowed from Turkish kismet, from Arabic qisma, qismat portion, lot, fate, from the root of qasama he divided.

kiss v. About 1175 cussen (in Southwestern Dialect of England); about 1250 kissen (in Midland Dialect of England); developed from Old English (about 750) cyssan to kiss; cognate with Old Frisian kessa to kiss, Old Saxon kussian, Middle Dutch cussen (modern Dutch kussen), Old High German kussen (modern German küssen, probably from the noun), Old Icelandic and Swedish kyssa, Norwegian and Danish kysses; from Proto-Germanic kussijanan*, from kuss-*, the root of Old English coss kiss, Old Frisian kos, Old Saxon kus, Middle Dutch cus, cuss, Dutch kus, Old High German kus, kuss (modern German Kuss), and Old Icelandic koss. —n. Probably before 1400 kiss, alteration (by association with kissen, v.) of earlier coss (probably before 1200); found in Old English coss kiss (about 950).

kit n. 1275, in compound kittewritt kitwright or maker of kits (wooden tubs or buckets); later kytt, kyt (1362); borrowed probably from Middle Dutch kitte jug, tankard, wooden container; of uncertain origin. The meaning of soldier's supplies carried in a knapsack is first recorded in 1785. The meaning of parts of an article to be assembled by the buyer was known in the 1930's.

kitchen n. Probably before 1200 kuchene room where food is cooked; later kichene (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) cykene; borrowed probably from Vulgar Latin coquina*, variant of Latin coquina kitchen, from feminine of coquūnus of cooks, from coquus cook, from coquere to COOK.

It is also likely some Germanic languages borrowed a common West Germanic form kokina*, providing the source for Middle Low German kokene kitchen, Middle Dutch cokene (modern Dutch keuken), and Old High German chuhhina (modern German Küche).

kite n. Probably before 1325 kite kind of hawk; earlier kete (probably before 1300); developed from Old English cȳta (before 800); cognate with Middle High German kūze owl (modern German Kauz), probably both named from the cries they make, and Middle Low German kūten to chatter (modern German Köter cur). The meaning of a light wooden frame covered with cloth, paper, or plastic, flown in the air by means of a long string, is first recorded in 1664.

The meaning of a fictitious check, bill of exchange, etc., is first recorded in 1805 in the phrase to fly a kite, to raise money or credit by issuing commercial paper on nonexistent funds. —v. 1863, from the noun. The meaning of to issue bogus commercial paper is first recorded in 1839 in American English.

kith n. Probably before 1200 cuththe one's native land, countrymen, neighbors, friends; developed from Old English cȳthth, cȳththu native country, home, from cūth known, past participle of cunnan to know. Old English cȳththu is cognate with Old High German chundida, from Proto-Germanic kunthithō*. The phrase kith and kin (originally with the meaning of country and kinsmen) is found about 1230.

kitten n. About 1378 kitoun, probably borrowed from an Anglo-French variant of Old French chitoun, cheton, from chat cat, from Late Latin cattus CAT.

kitty¹ n. kitten. 1719, formed from English kitt(en) + -y², perhaps by influence of kitty a girl or young woman (1500–20), and a pet form of the name Catherine.

kitty² n. pool or fund of money. 1887, money pooled by players in a card game to defray expenses, probably formed from English kit a container or a collection of necessary supplies (1833) + -y².

kiwi n. 1835, borrowed from Maori kiwi, of imitative origin. —kiwi fruit an edible fruit originally imported from China. The name is first recorded in American English in 1966, but probably originated in New Zealand, where it was known as Chinese gooseberry (1925).

kleptomania n. 1830, New Latin kleptomania, formed from Greek kleptēs thief (from kleptein to steal) + manīa madness, MANIA.

klutz n. 1967 (but known before 1965, as in klutzy, etc.), American English; borrowed from Yiddish klots clumsy, awkward person; literally, block or lump, from Middle High German kloz, klotzes lump or ball (modern German Klotz boor, clod).

knack n. 1369 knakke deception, stratagem, trick; of uncertain origin, though suggestive of German knacken to solve a puzzle or problem, to crack, etc. The meaning of a special skill or aptitude is first recorded in 1581.

knapsack n. 1603, borrowed from Low German Knapsack (probably from knappen to eat + Sack bag; compare Dutch knapsak).

knave n. Probably before 1200 cnave rogue, rascal, boy; later knave (probably about 1225); developed from Old English (about 1000) cnafa boy, male servant; cognate with Old High German knabo boy (modern German Knabe). —knavery n. 1528; formed from English knave + -ery. —knavish adj. About 1390; formed from English knave + -ish.

knead v. About 1150 cneden; later knedden (probably before 1300); developed from Old English cnedan (about 950); cognate with Old Saxon knedan to knead, Middle Dutch cneden (modern Dutch kneeden), Old High German knetan (modern German kneten), Old Icelandic knodha to knead (from Proto-Germanic kneðanan*, kneðanan*), knott ball, sphere.

knee n. Probably before 1300 knee, kne; developed from Old English (about 725) cnēo, cnēow; cognate with Old Saxon keuo, knio knee, Old Frisian kni, knē, Middle Dutch cnie (modern Dutch knie), Old High German kneo (modern German Knie), Old Icelandic knē, and Gothic knīu, from Proto-Germanic knewan*. —v. Before 1225 knewen bend the knee, kneel; developed from Old English (about 1000) cnēowian, from cnēo(w) knee.

kneel v. Probably before 1200 cnelen, cnolen; later knelen (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (before 1000) cnēowlian, from cnēow KNEE. Old English cnēowlian is cognate with Middle Low German knēlen kneel and Middle Dutch cnelen (modern Dutch knien).

knell v. About 1350 knellen, variant of knullen to knell, (also) to beat, knock (probably before 1325, in Southwest Midland dialect) and later knyllen (probably before 1400, in East Midland dialect); developed from Old English cnyllan to knell (about 950); cognate with Middle High German erknellen to toll, knüllen to beat, and Old Icelandic knýlla to beat, thrash. —n. Before 1325 knell, variant of knell, found in Old English (about 961) cnyll sound of a bell, from cnyllan to knell.

knickers n. pl. 1881, shortened from earlier knickerbockers (1859). These trousers are said to be so called for their resemblance to the knee breeches of the Dutchmen in illustrations to History of New York (1809), a book penned by Washington Irving under the name Diedrich Knickerbocker, in allusion to Irving's friend Herman Knickerbocker, of Schaghticoke, near Albany, New York.

The name Knickerbocker also came to be popularly applied in American English by 1831 to any New Yorker, especially one descended from the original Dutch settlers.

knickknack n. 1682, from earlier knickknack a petty trick, artifice (1580), varied reduplication of KNACK in the original sense of stratagem, trick.

knife n. About 1300 knif; developed from Late Old English cnif (before 1100); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic knifr, Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish kniv). Old English cnif is cognate with Middle Low German knif knife (modern German Knife pocket knife), Middle Dutch knijf, and obsolete Dutch knijf knife from Proto-Germanic knīfaz*. —v. About 1865, from the noun.

knight n. Probably before 1150 knicht youth, attendant, military servant, knight; later Knight (1241, as a surname); developed from Old English (before 725) cnicht boy, youth, servant, (rarely) soldier; earlier cēapneht a purchased youth, a young slave (about 700). The Old English forms cnicht and -neht are cognate with Old Frisian knecht, kniucht boy, youth, servant, soldier, Old Saxon kneht, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch Knecht manservant, footman, and Old High German kneht boy, youth, page (modern German Knecht manservant, serf, slave). For shift in spelling see note at FIGHT. —v. Probably 1225 knigheten, from knight, n. —knighthood n. Probably about 1225 knighthod; formed from Middle English knigt + -hod -hood, but also found in Old English cnihthād period between childhood and manhood.

knit v. About 1150 cniten; later knutten (probably before 1200), and knyttan (about 1300); developed from Old English cnyttan to tie with a knot, bind, fasten (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German knutten knit, fasten, Middle High German knützen to press, and Old Icelandic knyttja bind together; related to knútr KNOT. The figurative sense of join closely together, is first recorded about 1375; that of make cloth by looping yarn together, in 1530.

knob n. 1373 knobe; cognate with Old Frisian knopp, knapp knob, Middle Low German knobbe knob, gnarl, bud, Middle Dutch cnoppe (modern Dutch knop), Old High German knopf (modern German Knopf button), Norwegian knubb block of wood, and Old Icelandic knýfill short horn.

knock v. Probably before 1300 knoken to strike or hit; developed from Old English (about 1000) cnocian and cnucian, possibly of imitative origin. —n. About 1333–52 knocke, from knoken to knock. —knocker n. Before 1382, formed from Middle English knoken + -er.

knoll n. Probably about 1250 knol; earlier as a surname Knolle (1203); developed from Old English cnoll hilltop, small hill, before 899; cognate with Middle High German knolle clod, lump, tuber (modern German Knolle, modern Dutch knol tuber, turnip), Old Icelandic knollr mountaintop, Norwegian knoll tuber, and Swedish knöl bump, knot, knoll.

knot n. Probably about 1200 cnotte; later knotte (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) cnotta; cognate with Old Frisian knotta knot, Middle Low German knutte knot, knob, Dutch knot knot, and Middle High German knotte a knotty excrescence, from Proto-Germanic knuttan*—earlier knuðnan*—. The spelling cnot was known by 1154 in place names, such as Cnotlinid and that of knotte before 1200, in Thorneknotte. —v. Probably 1440 knotten; developed from cnotted having knots, full of knots; adjective (1137), from cnotte, n. + -ed. —knotty adj. Probably about 1200 cnotti, knotti puzzling, intricate, difficult (figurative use); formed from English knot, n. + -y.

know v. Probably before 1200 cnowen; later knowen (probably about 1225); developed from Old English cnāwan, past tense cnēow (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German chnān, as in bichnān, irchnān to know, recognize, and Old Icelandic knā I can, from Proto-Germanic knāwjan*. —n. in the know. having inside information. 1883, from earlier know fact of knowing, knowledge (1592); from the verb. —knowledge n. Before 1121 cnawlece acknowledgment; later knowlych (1303), knoweche (about 1330), and knowledge (probably before 1400); formed from knowen + -lych, -leche, -lege noun suffixes serving some functions of -ness, as found in forms with a variant ending, such as in godleiche, godlece goodness, kindness.

knuckle n. Probably 1388 knokel finger joint; earlier knokil fist; cognate with Old Frisian and Middle Low German knokel knuckle, Middle Dutch knökel (modern Dutch kneukel), Middle High German knöchel (modern German Knöchel). All forms cited are diminutives probably derived from the same Germanic root as Middle Low German knoke bone, Middle High German knoche (modern German Knochen), Dutch knook, knok bone, knuckle, from Proto-Germanic knuk-*; for suffix see -LE¹. —v. 1740, put the knuckles on the ground in playing marbles (in knuckle down); from the noun. The meaning of to apply oneself earnestly to (in knuckle down to) is first recorded in 1864 in American English. The meaning of give in, submit (in knuckle under) is first recorded in 1740.

knurl n. 1608, probably a diminutive of earlier knur knot (1545); developed from Middle English knor hard excrescence, swelling (probably about 1400); cognate with Middle Low German knorre hard swelling, knot, Middle Dutch knorre (modern Dutch knor), Middle High German knorre (modern German Knorren), and Old High German chniurig knotty, rough, rigid, from Proto-Germanic knur-*.

koala n. 1808, borrowed from the aboriginal name of the animal, recorded at various times and in various places in Australia as koola, kiilla, and kiilā.

kohlrabi n. 1807, borrowing of German Kohlrabi, alteration of Italian cavoli rape, plural of cavolo rapa kohlrabi (cavolo cabbage, from Latin caulis cabbage, and rapa turnip, from Latin rāpa).

kola or cola n. 1830, variant of earlier cola (1795); of African origin (compare Temne kola, Mandingo kolo).

kook n. 1959, odd, cranky, or crazy person; American English; possibly a shortened and altered form of CUCKOO. —kooky adj. (1959)

Koran n. 1615 Korran, 1735 Koran; borrowed from Arabic qur'ān, qur'ān a reading, recitation, book, from the root of qara'a he read, recited.

kosher adj. 1851, borrowing of Yiddish kosher, from Hebrew kāshēr fit, proper, lawful. The informal meaning of legitimate, correct, proper, was first recorded in 1896, though perhaps earlier as this extended sense has been known in German student slang since 1737.

kowtow n. 1804 koo-too former Chinese custom of touching the ground with the forehead to show respect or submission, borrowing of Chinese k'o-t'ou, literally, knock the head. The meaning of an act of slavish submission is first recorded in 1834. —v. 1826, from the noun.

Kremlin n. 1662 Cremelena, borrowed from Old Russian kremliñū; later Kremelin (1796), borrowed from earlier German Kremelin (now Kreml after modern Russian kremli'). The Old Russian kremliñū, adj., derived from kremli citadel, fortress, related to krōma slice, kremén' flint.

krill n. 1907, borrowed from Norwegian kril small fry of fish.

krypton n. 1898, borrowing of Greek kryptōn, neuter of kryptós hidden; so called from its being a rare gas, forming a minute part of the atmosphere.

kudos n. 1831 (implied earlier in kudos'd praised, used by Southey in 1799); borrowed from Greek kýdos glory, fame, renown. Kudos was originally a singular noun in English, as it was in Greek, but because of the final -s it came to be construed as a plural, which led to the appearance in 1941 of the singular form kudo, derived by back formation from kudos.

Ku Klux Klan 1867 Kuklux Klan, American English; formed in English supposedly from alteration of Greek kýklos circle + English clan.

kumquat n. 1699 camquit, from Chinese (Cantonese) kamkwat (kam golden + kwat orange).

kung fu 1966, borrowing of dialectal Chinese kung fu, literally, boxing method.

la n. Before 1300, borrowed, probably through Italian, from Medieval Latin la, from the initial syllable of Latin labii of the lip, the word sung to this note in the Hymn for St. John the Baptist's day; see GAMUT.

label n. Probably about 1300 lable narrow band with pendants on a coat of arms; borrowed from Old French label ribbon, fillet, fringe, possibly from Frankish (compare Old High German lappa flap; see LAP¹ flap). The meaning of a strip of material attached to a document to hold an appended seal is first recorded before 1400; the more generalized meaning of a tag or sticker is found as early as 1679. —v. 1601, from the noun.

labial adj. 1594, borrowed from Medieval Latin labialis having to do with the lips, from Latin labium LIP.

labium n. 1597 (plural labia); borrowing of Latin labium LIP.

labor n. Before 1325 labour task, project; later, exertion, toil, work (before 1375); borrowed from Old French labour, learned borrowing from Latin labor toil, pain, possibly related to lābī to slip, glide, fall; see LAP¹. The sense of physical exertions of childbirth, was introduced from Latin (1595). —v. Before 1376 labouren; borrowed from Old French labourer, laborer, learned borrowing from Latin labōrāre to work, toil, suffer, be in distress, from labor toil, pain. —laborer n. (probably before 1350) —laborious adj. Before 1393, diligent or industrious; later, requiring hard work, burdensome (about 1415); borrowed through Old French laborieux, and directly from Latin labōriōsus full of labor, toilsome, from labor toil, pain; for suffix see -IOUS.

laboratory n. 1605, borrowed from Medieval Latin laboratorium a place for labor or work, from Latin labōrāre to work, LABOR; for suffix see -ORY.

labyrinth n. 1548, in the figurative sense of a confusing, complicated state of affairs; earlier laberynth maze (1408) and laboryntus (about 1380); both forms in allusion to the labyrinth of Greek mythology built to contain the Minotaur; borrowed from Latin labyrinthus, from Greek labyrinthos, a word of the pre-Greek culture designating a structure that was Egyptian, Cretan, or of Asia Minor. Some have compared the Greek word to Lydian (an Anatolian language related to Hittite) lābrys, meaning a double-edged axe, symbol of royal power; hence a labyrinth may have been a royal structure or palace.

lac n. 1618, perhaps borrowed from Middle French lace, but found also in Middle English as lacca (probably about 1425); borrowed from Hindi lākh, perhaps originally so called from the color of salmon. Related to LACQUER and LAKE². See also SHELLAC.

lace n. Before 1325 lace cord for tying; also laas (before 1382), developed from earlier laz (about 1230); borrowed from Old French las, laz a net, noose, string, from Latin laqueus, a trapping and hunting term meaning noose, snare.

The sense of a net in an ornamental pattern is first recorded in English in 1555. The earlier sense of a cord for tying is now retained chiefly in reference to shoe or boot laces. —v. Probably before 1200 lacen fasten with a lace; borrowed from Old French lacier, from Latin laqueāre ensnare, from laqueus noose or snare. —lacy adj. 1804, formed from English lace + -y¹.

lacerate v. Probably before 1425 laceraten; borrowed from Latin lacerātus, past participle of lacerāre tear to pieces, mangle, from lacer torn, mangled; for suffix see -ATE¹. —laceration n. 1597, borrowed perhaps through Middle French laccération, from Latin lacerātiōnem (nominative lacerātiō), from lacerāre lacerate; for suffix see -ATION.

laches n. Before 1376 laches, lachesse laziness, negligence; borrowed through Anglo-French lachesse, Old French laschesse, from lasche lax, lazy, from laschier let go, loosen; see LUSH¹, adj. The specific legal sense of negligence in performing a duty is first recorded in English in 1574.

lachrymal or lacrimal adj. Probably before 1425 lacrimal; borrowed from Medieval Latin lacrimalis, from Latin lacrima tear (earlier lacruma); for suffix see -AL¹. The spelling ch arose from the practice of substituting it for c before r in Latin words, such as ANCHOR.

lachrymose adj. 1661, tearlike; later, tearful, sorrowful (1727); borrowed from Latin lacrimōsus tearful, doleful, from lacrima tear, see LACHRYMAL; for suffix see -OSE¹.

lack n. Before 1300 lac, lakke; later lak (about 1300); probably developed from an Old English lac*; cognate with Middle Low German lak lack, fault, slack, loose, Old Frisian lek disadvantage, damage, lakia to oppose, dispute, and Old Icelandic laker lacking, from Proto-Germanic laka-*. —v. Before 1225 lacen; later laken (about 1250), and lacken (about 1325); probably from the noun in Old English. —lackluster adj. 1600, formed from English lack, v. + luster.

lackadaisical adj. 1768, affectedly languishing; formed from English lackadaisy, interj., alas, alack (1748) + suffix -ical. Lackadaisy is an alteration of the earlier lack-a-day (1695), a shortened and altered form of the phrase alack the day (1592). Perhaps the shift in meaning to languid was influenced by lax.

lackey n. 1529, borrowed from Middle French laquais, probably from Old Provençal lacai, from lecai glutton, covetous, from lecar to lick. The figurative sense of servile follower, toady, appeared in English in 1588. —v. 1568, from the noun.

laconic adj. 1583, of or pertaining to Laconia or its inhabitants; 1589, in the Laconian manner, brief, concise; a shortened form of earlier laconical (1576), and possibly influenced by Middle French laconique. Both the English and French forms were borrowed, probably through Latin Lacōnicus Laconian, from Greek Lakōnikós, from Lākōn a Laconian (person from the ancient district of Laconia in southern Greece whose capital was Sparta); for suffix see -IC.

Reference to the brevity of speech, characteristic of Laconians appears in the record of English in 1570 in the form Laconism the habit of imitating the Laconians in brevity of speech.

lacquer n. 1673 lacker, borrowed from obsolete French lacre a kind of sealing wax, from Portuguese lacre, from lacca resinous substance, lac, from Arabic lakk, from Persian lak, from Sanskrit lāksā; see LAC. The spelling lacquer was influenced by French laque lake². An earlier sense of dye obtained from lac, is recorded in 1579. Related to LAC, LAKE², and SHELLAC. —v. 1687 lackered, participial adjective; 1688 lacquer, from the noun.

lacrosse n. 1718, in American English; borrowed from Canadian French la crosse the game of lacrosse; originally, the racket used in the game; literally, the hooked stick, the crosier.

lact- a form of lacto- before vowels, as in lactiferous.

lactation n. 1668, act of suckling a baby; later, secretion of milk (1857); borrowed through French lactation, from Late Latin lactātiōnem (nominative lactātiō), from Latin lactāre suckle, from lac (genitive lactis) milk; for suffix see -ATION. —lactate v. 1889, probably a back formation from lactation; for suffix see -ATE¹.

lacteal adj. 1658, formed in English as if borrowed from Latin lacteus, from lac (genitive lactis) milk; for suffix see -AL¹.

lactic adj. 1790 lactic acid an acid obtained from sour milk; borrowed from French lactique, formed from Latin lactis (genitive of lac milk) + French -ique -ic.

lacto- a combining form meaning milk, as in lacto-globulin, or lactic acid, as in lactobacillus. Borrowed from Latin lac (genitive lactis) milk.

lactose n. 1858, formed in English from Latin lactis (genitive of lac milk) + English suffix *-ose*².

lacuna n. 1663, borrowed from Latin lacūna hole or pit, from lacus (genitive lacūs) pond, LAKE¹.

lad n. Probably before 1300 ladde foot soldier; later, young male servant, man of low social position, vagabond (about 1300); and boy or youth (before 1338); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish and Norwegian askeladd, literally, ash lad, referring to the youngest son in a folk tale who pokes in the ashes, and Norwegian tusseladd pale, insignificant-looking person, weakling; literally, fairy lad).

ladder n. About 1175 læddre; later laddere (probably before 1300); developed from Old English hlæder (971). The Old English form is cognate with Old Frisian hlēdere, hlādder ladder, Middle Dutch lēder (modern Dutch leer, also ladder, from Frisian), Middle Low German ledder, Old High German leitara (modern German Leiter), and dialectal Danish lejre ladder, from Proto-Germanic Hlaidrī*.

lade v. Probably about 1200 laden to draw water; later, to load (about 1250); developed from Old English hladan to load, heap, draw water (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hlada to load, Old Saxon hladan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch laden, and Old Icelandic hladha, from Proto-Germanic Hlad-*; also with Old High German hladan, ladan (modern German laden), and Gothic afhlathan, from Proto-Germanic Hlath-*. —laden adj. 1595, from laden, past participle of lade to load.

ladle n. About 1300 ladel, developed from Old English (before 1000) hlædel, from hladan to load, LADE; the suffix -le expresses the sense of an appliance or tool, as in thimble. —v. About 1532, from the noun.

lady n. Before 1121 læfdige female ruler; later lavedi, levedi (about 1300), and ladi (probably about 1350); developed from Old English hlāfdie mistress of a household, wife of a lord; literally, one who kneads a loaf or loaves (before 830); earlier hlæfdige (about 750, a compound of hlāf bread, LOAF¹ + -dige, related to dæge maker of dough, from dæg DOUGH).

lag v. 1530 move too slowly, fall behind; developed from earlier lag, n. the last or hindmost person (1514), found in the Middle English compound lag-mon last man (probably about 1390); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian dialect lagga go slowly). —laggard adj. 1702, formed from English lag, v. + -ard; —n. 1808, from the adjective.

lager n. 1855, American English, short for lager beer (1854), half translation of German Lagerbier (Lager storehouse, bed, LAIR + Bier BEER).

lagoon n. 1612 laguna, later Lagune (1673), both forms in reference to Italian places, especially around Venice; borrowed through French lagune, and directly from Italian laguna pond, lake, from Latin lacūna pond, hole, from lacus (genitive lacūs) pond, LAKE¹; for suffixal ending see -OON.

lair n. About 1410 leire place where an animal takes shelter, from earlier leir bed, couch (probably before 1200); developed from Old English leger act or place of lying down (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian leger situation, Old Saxon legar bed, Middle Dutch lēgher, lēghere act or place of lying down (modern Dutch leger bed, camp), Old High German legar bed, a lying down (modern German Lager bed, lair, camp, storehouse), Old Icelandic legr grave, nuptials (as a lying down together), from Proto-Germanic lezran*.

laird n. Before 1325, northern Middle English lavered; later, Scottish lard (about 1450), northern variants of lord, loverd LORD.

laity n. Before 1415 laite, formed in Middle English from *lay*² + -ity.

lake¹ n. body of water. Before 1121 lac; later lake (probably before 1300), in part developed from Old English lacu body of water (944), and in part borrowed from Old French lac. Both Old English lacu and Old French lac were borrowed from Latin lacus (genitive lacūs) pond or lake.

lake² n. deep-red coloring matter obtained from lac. 1616, probably borrowed through French laque, from Old Provençal laca, from Arabic lakek; see LACQUER.

larn n. 1897, as in on the lam; from the verb meaning of run away; of unknown origin, sometimes compared with lam to beat (as in LAMBASTE), but no apparent connection can be established.

lama n. 1654, borrowed from Tibetan blama (with unsounded b). —lamasery n. 1867, borrowed from French lamaserie (lama, from Tibetan blama + -serie, probably from Persian sarāi inn, as in French caravanseraï, 1686).

lamb n. Old English (about 858) lamb; earlier lomb (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian lamb lamb, Old Saxon lamb, Middle Low German lam, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lam, Old High German lamb (modern German Lamm), Old Icelandic lamb (Swedish lamm, Danish lam), and Gothic lamb, from Proto-Germanic lambaz*. —v. 1611, from the noun.

lambaste v. 1637, probably formed from English lam (1589, in lamback); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic lama bruise, and Old Icelandic lemja to beat, lame) + BASTE³ to thrash.

lambda n. About 1400, borrowing of Greek lámdba, from a Semitic source (compare Hebrew lāmedh the twelfth letter of the Hebrew alphabet). Mostly appearing in scientific usage, in such terms as lambda point (physics, 1932), lambda virus (genetics, 1965) etc.

lambent adj. 1647, borrowed from Latin lambentem (nominative lambēns), present participle of lambere to lick; for suffix see -ENT. The sense of shining with a soft, clear light, is first recorded in 1717, and that of playing lightly and brilliantly over a subject, in 1871.

lame adj. About 1175 lame; developed from Old English (about 750) lama; cognate with Old Frisian lam, lom lame, Old Saxon lamo, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lam, Old High German lam (modern German lahm), Old Icelandic lami, from Proto-Germanic lamōn*. —v. About 1300 lamen to injure, wound, disable; from the adjective. —lame duck 1761, disabled person or thing; later, in American English, a public official who has been defeated for reelection and is serving the last part of his term, in 1863.

lamella n. 1678, borrowing of Latin lāmella, diminutive of lāmīna thin plate, LAMINA.

lament v. Before 1450 lamenten to regret, be sorry for; later lament express grief (1530); borrowed from Middle French lamenten to moan, bewail, and directly from Latin lāmentārī, from lāmentum a wailing, related to lātrāre to bark or cry. —n. 1591, borrowing of Middle French lament, and probably borrowed directly from Latin lāmentum. Also possibly a noun use of the verb in English. —lamentable adj. Before 1420, borrowing of Middle French lamentable, and borrowed directly from Latin lāmentābilis, from lāmentārī to lament; for suffix see -ABLE. —lamentation n. Before 1382 lamentacioun, borrowing of Old French lamentation, and borrowed directly from Latin lāmentātiōnem (nominative lāmentātiō), from lāmentārī to lament; for suffix see -ATION.

lamina n. 1656, borrowing of Latin lāmīna thin piece of metal or wood, plate, leaf, layer. —laminare v. 1665, to beat or roll into a succession of bonded plates or layers; formed from English lamina + -ate¹. —lamination n. 1676, formed from English laminare + -ion.

lamp n. About 1200 lampe oil lamp, light; borrowing of Old French lampe, from Latin lampas, from Greek lampás torch, lamp, beacon, meteor, light, from lámpein to shine. —lamp-light n. (probably about 1380) lampoon n. 1645, borrowed from French lampon, of uncertain origin; possibly from lamponner, v., or from lampons let us drink (a popular refrain of satirical drinking songs of the 1600's), from lamper to drink or guzzle; for suffix see -oon. —v. Before 1657, either from the noun in English, or borrowed from French lamponner scoff or jeer at, from Middle French lamponner.

lamprey n. About 1300 laupre; earlier as a surname Lampre (1199); borrowed from Old French lampreie, from Medieval Latin lampreda. The Medieval Latin word may be an alteration (influenced by Latin lambere to lick) of Late Latin naupreda, nauprida lamprey, perhaps a Gaulish borrowing; or it may have an uncertain relationship to Late Latin lampetra lamprey; literally, lick rock, from Latin lambere to lick + petra rock, in reference to their habit of attaching themselves to rocks by their suckerlike mouths.

lanai n. Before 1869, borrowing of Hawaiian lānai shed, shelter, booth, porch. An earlier spelling, ranai, is recorded in 1823 and 1826.

lance n. Probably before 1300 launce horseman's spear; earlier as surname Lance (1198–99); borrowed from Old French lance, from Latin lancea light spear. —v. Probably about 1300 launcen to throw, thrust, pierce; later lancen (before 1338); borrowed from Old French lancier, from Late Latin lanceāre wield a lance, pierce with a lance, from Latin lancea spear.

lancet n. 1392 launcet, later lancet (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French lancette small lance, diminutive of lance LANCE; for suffix see -ET.

land n. Old English land, lond (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian land, lond land, Old Saxon land, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch land, Old High German lant (modern German Land), Old Icelandic, modern Scandinavian, and Gothic land, from Proto-Germanic landan*. —v. Probably about 1225 londen bring to land, set ashore; later landen (probably before 1400); from the noun.

landscape n. 1603, a picture of a land scene; borrowed from Dutch landschap, from Middle Dutch landscap region (land LAND + -scap -SHIP); cognate of Old English landscepe region (though no such term appears in Middle English); cognate of Old Saxon landscepi, Old High German lantscaf (modern German Landschaft), and Old Icelandic landskapr. —v. 1927, from the noun. An earlier meaning of represent as a landscape, depict, appeared in 1868.

lane n. Probably about 1300 lane; earlier, as a surname (1176); found in Old English (971) lane, lanu narrow, hedged-in road or way; cognate with Old Frisian lane, lone lane, Middle Dutch lāne (modern Dutch laan), and Old Icelandic lōn oblong hayrick, row of houses; of unknown origin.

lang syne or langsyne adv. 1500–20, a compound of lang long and syne since, Scottish variants of Middle English lang LONG and sin, contraction of sithen, sithens SINCE. —n. 1788.

language n. About 1280 language what is said, talk; later langue (about 1330); borrowed from Old French langage, from langue tongue, language, from Latin lingua TONGUE; for suffix see -AGE. The sense of speech of a nation, tongue, is first found in Middle English about 1300. The form with u developed in English through Anglo-French, from assimilation with French langue in Middle English.

languid adj. 1597, borrowed from Middle French languide, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin languidus faint, listless, from languēre be weak or faint.

languish v. Before 1325 languishen fail in strength, weaken; borrowed from Old French languiss-, stem of languir be listless, from Vulgar Latin languire*, from Latin languēre be weak or faint, see LAX¹ loose; for suffix see -ISH².

languor n. Probably before 1300 langour sickness or misery; later languor (about 1350); borrowed from Old French languor, langour, from Latin languor faintness, feebleness, lassitude, from languēre be weak or faint; for suffix see -OR¹. The sense of lack of energy, feebleness, was first recorded in English in 1656.

lank adj. Probably about 1150 lonke; later, in a surname Lank (1294); developed from Old English (before 1000) hlanc, from Proto-Germanic Hlankaz*. Old English hlanc is cognate with Old High German hlanca loin, side, flank, Middle High German lenken to bend (modern German lenken to guide), and Old Icelandic hlykkir bend, noose, loop. —lanky adj. 1670, (of hair) straight and flat; later, awkwardly tall and thin (1818); formed from English lank + *-y*¹.

lanolin n. 1885, borrowed from German Lanolin, from Latin lāna WOOL + oleum OIL + -ina *-in*².

lantern n. About 1250 lanterne lamp or lantern; borrowed from Old French lanterne, from Latin lanterna, from Greek lampṓr, from lámpein to shine.

lanthanum n. 1841, New Latin, from Greek lanthánein to lie hidden, escape notice; so called because the element was found concealed in oxide of cerium.

lanyard or laniard n. 1626, short rope used on ships to fasten rigging, perhaps an alteration of Middle English lainer thong for fastening parts of armor or clothing (about 1330); later lanjoure (1425); borrowed from Old French laniere, lasniere, from lasne strap, thong. Old French lasne was apparently an alteration (influenced by las LACE) of nasle* lace, represented by dialectal French (Walloon) nale ribbon, from Frankish (compare Old High German and Old Saxon nestla lace, strap, band, Old Frisian nestla lace, band, Middle Dutch nestel, from Proto-Germanic nastila-*, related to Middle Dutch nette NET¹ fabric). The later appearance (1626) may have been a re-borrowing from French rather than an alteration of Middle English lanier. The spelling of English lanyard was influenced by YARD² a long beam used to support a sail. Compare HAL-YARD.

lap¹ n. Probably before 1300 lappe lower part of a shirt; also, front part from the waist to the knees of a person sitting down; developed from Old English leppa skirt or flap on a garment, lappet (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian lappa flap, Old Saxon lappo end, rag, Middle Dutch lappe (modern Dutch lap rag, patch), Old High German lappa flap (modern German Lappen rag, cloth), and Old Icelandic leppr, from Proto-Germanic lapp-* (earlier lapn-*). The figurative sense of a place where anything rests or is cared for (as in the lap of luxury) is first recorded in 1531.

lap² v. to lay one partly over another. Probably before 1325 lappen to coil, fold, wrap, from lappe flap, LAP¹. The sense of overlap is first recorded in 1607. —n. 1673, something coiled or wrapped up; from the verb. The meaning of one of a turn around a track to complete a course is first recorded in 1861 (though the verb sense is found in 1841).

lap³ v. lick with the tongue. Before 1325 lapien to drink by lapping; developed from Old English (about 1000) lapien, from Proto-Germanic lapōjanan*. Old English lapan is cognate with Old High German laffan to lick, Old Swedish lapa and Icelandic leppja to lap, Old Saxon lepil spoon, Middle Low German lepel, Middle Dutch lepel (modern Dutch lepel), and Old High German leffil (modern German Löffel). The meaning of splash gently, is first recorded in 1823. —n. 1567, something lapped; from the verb.

lapel n. 1789, implied earlier in lapelled (1751); formed from English LAP¹ flap on a garment + -el, diminutive suffix. Compare LAPPET.

lapidary n. About 1380 lapidarie treatise on precious stones; also, before 1382, person who cuts or polishes precious stones; borrowed, probably through Old French lapidaire, from Latin lapidārius stonemason; originally, adjective, of or working with stone, from lapis (genitive lapidis) stone; for suffix see -ARY.

lapis lazuli n. Before 1425, borrowed, probably through Old French lapis lazuli, from Medieval Latin, a compound of Latin lapis stone and Medieval Latin lazuli, genitive of lazulum lapis lazuli, from Arabic lāzuward azure; compare AZURE.

lappet n. Probably about 1425 lappette lobe of the lungs or the liver; later, flap or fold (1573); formed from Middle English lappe (modern English lap) LAP¹, flap on a garment + -et, diminutive suffix.

lapse n. 1440 laps an elapsing of time; later lapse moral transgression, sin (before 1500), and slight mistake (before 1526); borrowed from Middle French laps lapse, from Latin lapsus a slipping and falling, flight (of time), a falling into error, from labi to slip, glide, fall; see LAP¹ front part. The legal sense of ending of a right or privilege because of neglect is first recorded about 1447. —v. Probably before 1425 lapsen (of a humor) to deviate from the normal; later, (of time) to go by (about 1443); borrowed from Latin lapsāre lose one's footing, slip, related to lapsus a slipping and falling. The meaning of fall into error, is first recorded in English in 1611.

lapwing n. About 1350 lapwunge, alteration by folk etymology, which connected the word with *lap*³, v. and wing, n., of Old English (about 1050) hlēapewince (hlēapan to LEAP + -wince totter, waver, related to wincian to WINK); so called from its irregular, flapping manner of flight.

larboard n. Perhaps before 1583 lerbord, larborde, alteration of Middle English (probably about 1380) ladde-borde the loading side (laden to load, LADE + bord ship's side, BOARD). —adj. 1495, from the noun.

larceny n. theft. Before 1475, borrowed through Anglo-French larcin + English *-y*³, from Old French larrecin theft, from Latin latrōcinium robbery, from latrō (genitive latrōnis) hireling, mercenary, bandit, from a lost Hellenistic latrōn* mercenary, formed from Greek latron pay, hire, wages.

larch n. 1548, borrowed from German Lärche, from Middle High German larche, lerche, from Latin larix (genitive laricis).

lard n. 1231, as an English word in a Latin context; borrowed from Old French larde bacon fat, and directly from Latin lārdum, lāridum lard. —v. Before 1338 larden, borrowed from Old French larder, from larde bacon fat. The figurative sense of intersperse or garnish (speech or writing), is first recorded in 1549.

larder n. About 1300, a supply of meat; later, a place for storing meat (1380); borrowed through Anglo-French larder a place for meats, corresponding to Old French lardier a tub for meats, from Medieval Latin lardarium a room for meats, from Latin lārdum lard.

large adj. Probably before 1200, abundant, ample, roomy; also, liberal or generous, lavish; borrowing of Old French large, from Latin lārgus abundant, copious, of uncertain origin. The sense of extensive, is first recorded before 1325; big, huge, about 1385. —largely adv. Probably before 1200 largeliche; formed from Middle English large + -liche *-ly*¹.

largess or largesse n. Probably before 1200, quality of being generous; also, liberal bestowal of gifts; borrowed from Old French largesse a bounty, from large LARGE.

lariat n. 1832, American English; borrowed from Spanish la reata the rope (la the + reata rope, from reatar tie again, re- again + atar to tie, from Latin aptāre to join).

lark¹ n. songbird. About 1275, as a surname Larke; earlier, in the place name Lauerkesfeld (1184–85), and laverche (probably about 1200); developed from Old English lāwerce (about 700); cognate with Frisian liurk lark, Old Saxon lēwerka, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch lēwerke (modern Dutch leuwerik), Old High German lērihha (modern German Lerche), Old Icelandic lævirkri, Swedish lārka, Danish and Norwegian lerke, from Proto-Germanic laiw(a)rikōn*.

lark² v. to frolic. 1813, possibly a shortened form of skylark, skylarking to participate in rough play, originally among sailors, and especially carried on in the rigging of a ship (1809). The verb lark was probably also influenced by its earlier noun use. —n. 1811, possibly a shortened form of skylark, as in skylarking, vbl. n.

Possibly reinforced by northern British English lake to play or sport, developed from leyken, laiken to engage in sport or play (probably before 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic leika to play, Swedish leka, Danish lege). The connection with lake (found also as lairk) may be through the shift in pronunciation with an intrusive r-sound common to southern British English.

larva n., pl. larvae 1768, New Latin, special use of Latin lārva, earlier lārua ghost, mask. The word was applied to the immature form of the insect by Linnaeus, because it masked the adult form.

Earliest use of larva in English was in the sense of a ghost or specter (1651).

laryngeal adj. 1795, formed in English from New Latin laryngeus (from Greek lārynx) + English *-al*¹. —laryngitis n. 1822–34, New Latin; formed from Greek lārynx (genitive lāryngos) + -itis inflammation.

larynx n. 1578, borrowed through Middle French larynx, from New Latin, from Greek lārynx (genitive lāryngos) the upper windpipe, probably altered from laimós throat, under the influence of phārynx throat, windpipe.

lascar n. 1625; borrowed from Portuguese lachar (erroneously laschar), probably from Hindi lashkāri soldier, native sailor, from lashkar army, camp, from Persian laskar, from Arabic al-ʿaskar the army.

lascivious adj. About 1450, borrowed perhaps through Middle French lascivieux, from Late Latin lascīviōsus, from Latin lascīvia lewdness or playfulness, from lascīvus lewd or playful; for suffix see -OUS.

laser n. 1960, acronym formed from l(ight) a(mplification by) s(timulated) e(mission of) r(adiation), on the pattern of the earlier (1955) MASER. —lase v. 1962, back formation from LASER.

lash¹ n. whip. Probably before 1300 las a blow or stroke; later lashe flexible part of a whip (about 1380), possibly of imitative origin. —v. Probably before 1300 laisen to strike out, throw, or move violently; later lasschen to whip or flog (before 1398); possibly of imitative origin, as the noun.

lash² v. bind. 1624, developed from lasschyn to lace a garment (1440); probably borrowed from Middle French lachier, from Old French lacier to LACE.

lass n. About 1300 lasce, later las, lasse (about 1390); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic lǫsker idle, weak, Old Swedish lask kona unmarried woman, literally, one without a fixed dwelling); cognate with West Frisian lask light, thin, and dialectal German lasch slack or weak.

lassitude n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French lassitude, from Latin lassitūdō faintness or weariness, from lassus faint, tired, weary; for suffix see -TUDE.

lasso n. 1819, American English; borrowed from Spanish lazo, from Latin laqueum, accusative of laqueus noose, snare. —v. 1807, American English.

last¹ adj., adv. ending. Probably before 1200 leaste; also laste, latste (probably about 1200); developed from the contraction of Old English latost (from Proto-Germanic latast-*) and Old English, laetst (from Proto-Germanic latist-*), found before 899. The Old English forms are superlatives of laet, adj. and late, adv. and correspond to Middle Dutch laetst last (modern Dutch laatst), Old High German lazzost, lezzist (modern German letzt), and Old Icelandic lasta slowest. —n. Probably before 1200 laste; from the adjective.

last² v. endure. 1122 laesten; later lasten (1137); developed from Old English lāestan to continue, endure (possibly about 750); earlier, accomplish, carry out (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian lāsta, lesta to fulfill, Old Saxon lēstian to perform, Old High German and modern German leisten to perform, carry out, and Gothic laistjan to follow, from Proto-Germanic laistijanan*; all derived from the same Germanic source as Old English lāst track, footprint; see LAST³.

last³ n. shoemaker's block. Before 1300 leste; later laste (1395); developed from Old English lāste (about 1000), from earlier lāst track, footprint, trace (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch leest form, model, last, Old High German leist (modern German Leisten last), Old latch v. Probably before 1200 lecchen catch, ensnare; later lacchen (about 1250), and latchen (before 1338); developed from Old English læccan to grasp or seize (about 950), from Proto-Germanic lakkijanan*. The sense of fasten with a latch is first recorded in 1440. —n. 1296–97 lacche (English word in Latin context); later latche (about 1350); from lacchen to catch.

Icelandic leistr trouser leg, sock, and Gothic laists footprint, from Proto-Germanic laistaz*.

late adj. Probably before 1200 let slow or sluggish; later lat, late tardy, remiss (about 1225); developed from Old English læt late, slow, sluggish (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian let late, Old Saxon lat lazy, Middle Low German lat, Middle Dutch laet (modern Dutch laat late), Old High German laz slow (modern German lass indolent, weary), Old Icelandic latr sluggish, lazy (Swedish, Norwegian lat, Danish lad), Gothic lats, from Proto-Germanic latás*. —adv. Probably before 1200 late; found in Old English late (about 750); from læt, adj.

latent adj. 1459, concealed or secret; borrowed through Middle French latent, and directly from Latin latentem (nominative latēns), present participle of latēre to lie hidden; for suffix see -ENT. The meaning (of a disease) dormant, is first recorded in 1684.

lateral adj. Probably before 1425 lateralis; borrowed through Middle French latéral, and directly from Latin lateralis belonging to the side, from latus (genitive lateris) side. —n. 1635, from the adjective.

latex n. 1662, body fluid; borrowed from Latin latex (genitive laticis) liquid, fluid, probably from Greek látax (genitive látagos) dregs. The sense of a milky liquid from plants is first recorded in 1835.

lath n. 1281–82 lathe (English word in Latin context); later lathie (before 1393); probably developed from Old English læththe*, variant of lætt lath; cognate with Old Saxon latta lath, Middle Dutch latte (modern Dutch lat), and Old High German latta (modern German Latte), apparently from Proto-Germanic laththō*.

lathe n. 1310, device used by coopers, perhaps a turning lathe; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish -lad stand, supporting framework, as in drejelad turning lathe, and Old Icelandic hladh pile built up as from the shavings of a lathe, related to hladha to load, LADE). The first reference to a turning lathe is found in 1611.

lather n. 1583, probably redeveloped in modern English from the Middle English verb. A noun is found in Old English (about 1000) leathor washing soda, lather; cognate with Old Icelandic laudhr foam, washing soda, from Proto-Germanic lauþran*. —v. About 1450 latheren to wash or soak clothes, alteration of earlier liþeren, letheren be bathed in, be covered with foam, sweat, etc. (probably about 1200); developed from Old English lēþran, lþþran to cover with lather (about 950); cognate with Old Icelandic leydhra to clean, wash.

Latin n. About 1275 latyn, possibly from the adjective, and rarely found in Old English latin (about 950); borrowed from Latin Latīnum. The Old English form in general use was læden (before 899), also found in Middle English, and altered from earlier læden*, from Vulgar Latin Ladīnum*, a variant of Latin Latīnum, having arisen from a confusion with lēden, lūden, lōden language, probably in the compound bōc-lēden book language, which was formed by popular etymology as a synonym for læden. —adj. About 1391 Latin, found in Old English latin (about 950); borrowing of Latin Latīnus belonging to Latium, the part of Italy that included Rome.

Latino n., adj. 1946, American English; borrowing of American Spanish Latino, shortened form of Spanish Latinoamericano Latin-American.

latitude n. About 1390, breadth, width, geographical latitude; borrowed through Old French latitude, and directly from Latin lātītūdō breadth, width, extent, size, from lātus wide; for suffix see -TUDE. The figurative sense of an allowable degree or range of variation is first recorded probably before 1425.

latrine n. 1297 laterin a privy, probably borrowed from Latin lātrīna, contraction of lavātrīna washbasin, washroom (lavāre to wash + -trīna suffix denoting a workplace). The word disappeared from the record of English and is not found again until 1642 as a borrowing from French (usually in the plural form latrines), learned borrowing from Latin lātrīna.

latter adj. About 1175 lator, later; later latter, adj. and adv., at a later time (probably about 1200); developed from Old English lætra, lator slower (about 1000), comparatives of Old English læt LATE, and corresponding to Old Frisian letora latter, Middle High German lazzter slower, and Old Icelandic latari. The meaning of second of two is first recorded in 1555.

lattice n. 1304 lattis; later latyce (probably about 1450); borrowed from Old French latte lath, from Frankish (compare Old High German latta LATH).

laud v. About 1378 lauden, borrowed from Old French lauder, from Latin laudāre to praise, from laus (genitive laudis) praise, fame, glory; probably cognate with Old English lēoth song, poem, hymn, Middle Dutch liet (modern Dutch lied), Old High German liod (modern German Lied song), Old Icelandic ljōdh strophe, stanza, from Proto-Germanic leuthan*. —n. About 1375 laude praise or fame; borrowed from Old French laude, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin laudem (nominative laus) praise, glory, fame. The plural form lauds a morning church service with psalms of praise to God is first recorded as laudes (1340); borrowed through Old French laudes and directly from Medieval Latin, from Latin laudēs, plural of laus praise, glory, fame. —laudable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Old French laudable, and from Latin laudābilis praiseworthy, from laudāre to praise; for suffix see -ABLE. —laudatory adj. 1555, borrowed from Middle French laudatoire, and directly from Late Latin laudatōrius of praise, from Latin laudātor praiser, from laudāre to praise; for suffix see -ORY.

laudanum n. 1543, borrowed through Middle French laudanum, and directly from New Latin laudanum, a word used by Paracelsus for a medicine supposed to contain opium. The origin of the word is uncertain, though it may have been confused with ladanum, borrowed from Latin lādanum a gum resin.

laugh v. Probably before 1200 lahhen; later laughen (about 1375); developed from Old English hlæhhan (before 830); earlier hlīhhan (before 725); cognate with Old Frisian hlakkeia to laugh, Old Saxon hlahhan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lachen, Old High German hlahhan, lahhēn (modern German lachen), Old Icelandic hlēja (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian le), and Gothic hlahjan, from Proto-Germanic *HlaHjanan.

The original sound, as represented by gh in laugh, cough, rough, etc., was like that of Scottish loch or German ach. As the pronunciation shifted to the sound of f in off, the spelling of some words also changed to reflect this process, as in dwarf, draft (for draught), etc.; but some spellings remained fixed. —n. 1690, act of laughing, laughter; later, instance of laughing (as in a hearty laugh, 1713); from the verb. —laughter n. Probably before 1200 lahtre; later laughter (about 1385); developed from Old English hleahtr (about 725, in Beowulf), corresponding to Old High German lahtar laughter, Old Icelandic hlātr, from Proto-Germanic *HlaHtraz.

launch¹ v. propel. Probably before 1300 launchen to leap, spring, rush; later, to throw, hurl (about 1330); borrowed from Old North French lancer, lanchier, corresponding to Old French lancer, lancier to fling, throw, from Late Latin lanceare wield a lance, from Latin lancea light spear, LANCE.

The sense of set afloat, is first recorded probably before 1400, and that of start, set going, set out (as in to launch an enterprise), is recorded in 1602. —n. 1440 launche a leap or bound; from the verb.

launch² n. boat. 1697, largest boat carried by a warship; borrowed from Spanish and Portuguese lancha barge or launch, apparently from Malay lanchāran, from lanchār quick, agile. The English spelling was probably influenced by *launch*¹.

launder v. 1664, from the noun launder one who washes, especially linen (1440), contraction of earlier lavender (about 1325), also found as a surname Lavendre (1227); borrowed from Old French lavandier lavandiere washer, from Medieval Latin lavandaria a washer, from Latin lavanda (things) to be washed, from lavāre to wash; for suffix see -ER¹. The meaning of make seem lawfully gained or acceptable, is first recorded in 1970. —laundry n. Before 1450 laundre act of washing; earlier lavendrye place for washing (about 1378); borrowed from Old French lavanderie, from lavandier, lavandiere washer; for suffix see -RY.

laureate adj. About 1375, borrowed from Latin laureātus, from laurea laurel crown, laurel tree, from feminine of laureus of laurel, from laurus LAUREL; for suffix see -ATE³. The term poet laureate is first found in 1429, though laureat poete is to be found in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. —n. Before 1529, from the adjective.

laurel n. 1373 laureol, later laurel (about 1415); borrowed from Latin laureola small laurel branch, from laurus laurel tree.

lava n. 1750, borrowing of Italian lava, from dialectal Italian (Neapolitan or Calabrian) lava, of uncertain origin (by traditional etymology, from Latin lavāre to wash, originally in Italian from a rivulet caused by sudden downpour of rain, 1611). Italian etymologists derive the word from Latin lābēs a fall, from lābī to fall.

lavatory n. Before 1382 lavorie, lavatory washbasin; borrowed from Latin lavātōrium place for washing, from lavāre to wash; for suffix see -ORY. The meaning of a washroom is first recorded in English in 1656.

lave v. Archaic. to wash, bathe. Probably before 1200 laven to wash, bathe; formed in part by: 1) development from Old English gelafian wash by pouring, pour, as water, etc. (about 725, in Beowulf); possibly an early borrowing from Latin lavāre, lavere to wash; and 2) by probable influence in form and meaning of Old French laver to wash, from Latin lavāre, and perhaps reinforced by Latin lavāre itself.

lavender n. 1373 lavandyr, borrowed through Anglo-French lavendre, from Medieval Latin lavendula, livendula lavender, perhaps derived from Latin lividus bluish, LIVID; probably later associated with French lavande and Italian lavanda lavender, from lavanda a washing (so called because of its use in washing and to perfume distilled water), from lavare, from Latin lavāre to wash, bathe, from the plant's use as a bath perfume. —adj. pale-purple. 1840, from the noun.

lavish adj. 1469 laves outpouring, unrestrained, profuse, prodigal; later lavas (1485); possibly developed as an adjective use of earlier lavas, n., profusion, extravagant outpouring (not recorded before 1483); borrowed from Middle French lavasse, lavache torrent (of rain), deluge, from laver to wash, from Latin lavāre to wash; for suffix see -ISH¹. It is also possible that lauessh* existed as a parallel form, implied in lauesshenes lavishness (about 1477). —v. give or spend without stint. 1542, from the adjective.

law n. Probably about 1200 lawe; developed from Old English (before 1000) lagu; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic lög law, collective plural of lag layer, measure, stroke; literally, something laid down or fixed). The Scandinavian forms correspond to -lag in Old Saxon gilag decree, fate, orlag fate, war, and Old High German urlag fate, from Proto-Germanic lagan*. The semantic development from "something laid down" to "decree, law" is also found in German Gesetz law, from setzen to set down, and outside Germanic in Latin and Greek. —lawbreaker n. (1440 lawe brekare) —lawful adj. (about 1300, as a surname 1230). —lawless adj. (before 1268) —lawmaker n. (about 1475) —lawman n. 1535, a lawyer; later, law-enforcement officer (1865); a magistrate of a borough or town (1130–35, in Anglo-Latin lagamannus); possibly influenced by Old Icelandic lögmann.

lawn¹ n. grassy ground. 1548 laune glade, open space between woods; developed from launde (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French lande heath, moor, from Gaulish (compare Breton lann heath, and Old Irish land open space; see LAND). The meaning of grassy ground, kept mown, is first recorded in 1733. —lawn mower (1869) lawn² n. thin linen or cotton cloth. 1416 lawnd (possibly by confusion with the spelling launde glade, open ground), and lawn (1423); probably from Laon a city in France, long a center of linen manufacture.

lawrencium n. 1961, a New Latin formation based on the name of Ernest O. Lawrence (an American physicist, 1901–1958, who founded the laboratory where this element was discovered) + -ium.

lawyer n. Probably 1383 lawiere one skilled in the law (found earlier in the surname Lawyer, 1336); formed from Middle English lawe LAW + -iere -ier. The spelling with y is first recorded in 1611.

lax¹ adj. loose, slack. 1373 lax loose or open; later, not strict, careless, negligent (about 1450); borrowed from Latin laxus wide, loose, open. —laxity n. 1528, borrowed from Middle French laxité, learned borrowing from Latin laxitatem (nominal laxitās), from laxus loose, LAX¹; for suffix see -ITY.

lax² n. salmon. Before 1200 lex, also in the place name Lexemer (1187); later lax (about 1300); developed from Old English leax, læx (before 800); cognate with Old Saxon, Middle High German, and Old High German lahs salmon (modern German Lachs), and Old Icelandic, Swedish lax, Norwegian and Danish laks, from Proto-Germanic laHs-*. Related to LOX.

laxative n. 1373 laxatife, borrowed as a noun use from Old French laxatif, adj., learned borrowing from Medieval Latin laxativus loosening, from Latin laxare loosen, from laxus loose, LAX¹; for suffix see -IVE. —adj. 1373 laxatife having freely moving bowels, not constipated; later, making the bowels move (before 1387); borrowed from Old French laxatif.

lay¹ v. put or set down. About 1150 leyen, leggen; developed from Old English leggan put down (before 725); cognate with Old Frisian lega, leia to cause to lie, lay, Old Saxon leggian, Middle Dutch legghen (modern Dutch leggen), Old High German and modern German legen, Old Icelandic leggja (Swedish lägga, Danish lægge, Norwegian legge), and Gothic lagjan, from Proto-Germanic laġjanan*, causative of LIE². —n. 1558, act of laying a tax; from the verb. The meaning of way in which a thing is laid or lies (as in the lay of the land) is first recorded in 1819.

lay² adj. of ordinary people; not of the clergy or a profession. About 1303 lai secular; later lay unlearned, uneducated (before 1338); borrowed from Old French lai, from Late Latin laicus, from Greek laikos of the people, from laos (earlier laōs) people. —layman n. (probably about 1425) —laywoman n. (1529) lay³ n. short poem to be sung. Before 1250 lai a song or lyric; later lay short poem to be sung (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French lai, of uncertain origin; possibly from a Celtic source (compare Irish laid song, poem).

layer n. Before 1382 leyer one who lays stones for a building, a mason; earlier legger (1282); formed from leggen, variant of leyen to lay¹ + -er. The sense of thickness of matter laid over a surface, is first recorded in 1615. —layer cake (1881) layette n. 1839, borrowing of French layette, from Middle French layette chest of drawers, from laie drawer or box, from Middle Dutch laeye; for suffix see -ETTE.

lazar n. Probably about 1300 lazer; also in the surname Lazur (1280); borrowed from Medieval Latin lazarus leper, from Late Latin Lazarus, name of the beggar full of sores described in the New Testament.

lazy adj. 1549 laysy disliking work, idle, slothful; origin uncertain, possibly borrowed from Middle Low German lasich weak, feeble, tired; cognate with Middle High German erleswen grow weak, Old Icelandic lasinn weak, slack, limp, Gothic lasiws weak —laze v. About 1588; back formation from LAZY. —lazybones n. (1592)

-le¹ a suffix forming nouns found in the names of tools and utensils, as in handle, thimble, kettle, and in the names of articles worn to accomplish a purpose, as in bridle, girdle. In words such as bundle the purpose of -le and its relationship to the base form is unclear.

The suffix had also a diminutive sense in Old English, which is found in words such as nozzle and bramble, but this has lost its force in modern English (compare use as a frequentative form in Middle English and modern English *-le*³).

Modern English -le developed from Middle English -el, -ele, and is also found in Middle English -le, all of which developed from or are found in Old English noun suffixes -ela, -ele, -le, -l; cognate with Old Frisian -le, Old Saxon and Old High German -al, -la (modern German -el), Old Icelandic -al, -ill and Gothic -ils.

-le² a suffix forming adjectives with the meaning of liable (to do something) or apt (to be something), as in fickle and brittle, and usually having no obvious significance as a particle because the root forms from Middle and Old English are no longer recognizable.

Modern English -le developed from Middle English -el, -ele, and is also found in Middle English -le, all of which developed from Old English adjective suffixes -ol, -ul, -el; cognate with Old Frisian -ol, -el, Old Saxon and Old High German -al, -il, and Gothic -ils, -uls.

-le³ a suffix forming (frequentative) verbs as in sparkle, wriggle, paddle, bubble and earlier sometimes having a diminutive sense. A few modern examples exist from Old English, including nestle, twinkle, and wrestle, but most such words are of Middle and modern English formation, as the imitative words babble, crackle, giggle, and mumble.

Modern English -le developed from Middle English -elen, -len, both of which developed from Old English -lian; cognate with Old Frisian -lia, Old Saxon and Old High German -lōn, and Old Icelandic -la.

This suffix is equivalent in sense to *-er*⁴, as in clatter, jabber, putter.

lea n. About 1230 lehe; later leie (before 1250); developed from Old English (about 779) -lēah meadow, clearing, untilled land; earlier -lēch (before 735) recorded in place names such as Pærgalæch, Godmundeslēah, and cognate with Old Frisian lāch meadow, Old Saxon lōh woods, Old High German lōh grove, and Old Icelandic -lō (Norwegian lo) clearing or meadow, from Proto-Germanic lauHaz*. After the Old English period, the word is chiefly found in poetical or rhetorical use.

leach v. 1796, probably developed from the noun (but traditionally said to come from Old English leccan to moisten). —n. 1397, leche in lechecomb a tub for soaking; probably developed from lech, leche muddy ditch or stream (1389, and as a surname, about 1100); developed from Old English læc*, lece*, læce*, lece*, from leccan to moisten; see LEAK.

The meaning of act or process of leaching, derived from the verb and is first recorded in 1828.

lead¹ v. guide. 1125 leden, developed from Old English (before 725) lædan cause to go with one, lead; cognate with Old Frisian lēda to lead, Old Saxon lēdian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch leiden, Old High German and modern German leiten, and Old Icelandic leidha, from Proto-Germanic laidijanan*. —n. Before 1325 lede leading, guidance, from the verb. The meaning of the place in front, place of a leader, is first recorded in 1570. Related to LOPE, LOAD. —leader n. About 1300 ledere, formed from Middle English leden to lead + *-er*¹.

lead² n. metal. Probably before 1200 laed; later led (before 1300); developed from Old English lēad (about 750); cognate with Old Frisian lād lead, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lood, Middle High German lōt (modern German Lot plummet), from Proto-Germanic laudan*. The art of using this metal and its name were borrowed by the Germanic peoples from the Celts. —v. 1390 leden to cover with lead (but found earlier in past participial use leadet weighted with lead, probably before 1200); from the noun.

leaf n. Before 1225 lef, leaf; developed from Old English (before 725) lēaf leaf of a plant, page of a book; cognate with Old Frisian lāf leaf of a plant, Old Saxon lōf, modern Dutch loof, Old High German loub (modern German Laub foliage), and Old Icelandic lauf leaf (Danish, Norwegian løv, Swedish löv), from Proto-Germanic lauban*. —v. put forth leaves. 1611, from the noun. Compare earlier LEAVE³.

league¹ n. association. 1561, formed from: 1) liege a pact, agreement (1418); borrowed from Middle French ligue, from Italian liga, variant of lega, and 2) probably in its later spelling league directly by influence of Italian lega, from legare to tie or bind, from Latin ligāre to bind; see LIGAMENT. —v. 1611, from the noun.

league² n. distance of about 3 miles. Before 1387 lege; borrowed from Provençal lega or Old French legue, and directly from Late Latin leuga, leuca, from Gaulish.

leak v. Before 1398 lyken lose liquid; later leken to run off or leak away (probably 1440); probably borrowed from Middle Dutch leken to drip or leak; cognate with Old Icelandic leka to drip or leak, Middle High German lechen to crack from drought, become leaky (modern German lecken to leak), and Old English leccan to moisten. —n. 1487 leke hole causing a leak; probably from the verb in English, and as a borrowing from Middle Dutch lec, lek, related to leken to drip.

lean¹ v. to slant. Probably before 1200 lenen, leonen, leoniens; developed from Old English hleonian to lean or recline (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian lena to lean, Old Saxon hlinōn, Middle Dutch lēnen (modern Dutch leunen), and Old High German hlinēn (modern German lehnen), Danish læne, and Norwegian lene. —n. 1610, a support; later, inclination (1776); from the verb.

lean² adj. thin. Probably before 1200 læne; developed from Old English (about 1000) hlæne, perhaps from hlænan cause to lean or bend, from Proto-Germanic Hlainijanan*; related to Old English hleonian LEAN¹. —n. Probably before 1200 læne lean people or animals; from the adjective.

leap v. Probably before 1200 lepen; developed from Old English hlēapan to jump, run, leap (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English hlēapan is cognate with Old Frisian hlāpa to run, Old Saxon hlōpan, Middle Dutch lōpen (modern Dutch lopen), Old High German hlouffan (modern German laufen), Old Icelandic and modern Icelandic hlaupa to run, leap, and Gothic ushlaupan to jump up, from Proto-Germanic Hlaupanan*. —n. Probably before 1200 lupe; later lep, leap (in place names, 1219 and 1291); developed from Old English -hlēp in clif-hlēp cliff leap (before 800); compare West Saxon hlȳp (before 900), from Proto-Germanic Hlaupiz*; related to hlēapan to leap. —leap year Before 1387 lepe yere.

learn v. Probably before 1200 leornen; later lernen (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (before 725) leornian to get knowledge, be cultivated; cognate with Old Frisian lernia, lirnia to learn, Old Saxon linōn (with -in- representing earlier -izn-, from -isn-), Old High German lernēn, lirnēn, lernōn, and Middle High German lernen learn, teach (modern German lernen learn), originally to follow along a track, from Proto-Germanic lizinōjanan*. Related to LORE. —learned adj. About 1303 lerned educated or trained, from past participle of lernen learn; for suffix see -ED². —learning n. About 1380 lerning, developed from Old English (before 900) leornung, from leornian learn; for suffix see -ING¹.

lease n. About 1384 lese; later lees (1426); borrowed through Anglo-French les, from lessor to let or let go, from Old French laisier, lessier, from Latin laxāre loosen, from laxus loose, LAX¹. —v. Before 1475 lesen, from the noun.

leash n. Probably before 1300 les, lasse; later leshe (1356–57); borrowed from Old French laisse, lesse, from laisier loosen, from Latin laxāre, from laxus loose, LAX¹. —v. 1599, from the noun.

least adj. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (before 950) lēast; earlier lēsest smallest, superlative of lēas smaller, LESS (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English lēsest developed from Proto-Germanic laisistaz*. —n. About 1125, least important person; later, smallest thing (probably before 1200); developed from Old English lēst; from the adjective. —adv. Probably before 1200; from the adjective.

leather n. Old English (about 700) lether hide, skin, leather (found only in compounds, such as letherwyrhta leather worker, gewaddlether rein, bridle). The Old English word element is cognate with Old Frisian lether leather, Old Saxon lethar, Middle Low German leder, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch leder, Old High German ledar (modern German Leder), and Old Icelandic leður (Danish læder, Swedish läder, Norwegian lær), from Proto-Germanic lethran*. —adj. Before 1333 lether, from the noun.

leave¹ v. go away. 1127 leaven leave alone; later, go away (probably before 1200); developed from Old English lēfan to leave, remain, bequeath (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian lēva leave over, Old Saxon farlēbian, Middle Low German lēven, Old High German leiban, Old Icelandic leifa leave behind, and Gothic bilaiþjan, from Proto-Germanic laiþjanan*; causatives derived from the same Germanic source as Old English belifan to remain, and Old High German blīban (modern German bleiben), from Proto-Germanic -leibanan*, related to the root of LIVE¹.

leave² n. permission, consent. 1129 leve; developed from Old English lēafe (before 900). Old English lēafe is the dative and accusative form of lēaf permission (from Proto-Germanic laubō*), related to ālyfan allow, permit, and cognate with Old High German irlouben allow (modern German erlauben), Gothic uslaubjan (from Proto-Germanic uz-laubjanan*), and Old Icelandic leyfa allow, permit, leyfi permission; also cognate with Old High German urloub leave, furlough (modern German Urlaub), Old Frisian orlof, and Old Saxon orlōf. Related to BELIEVE and FURLOUGH.

leave³ v. put forth leaves. About 1250 leaven.

leaven n. 1340 levain; later leven (probably before 1425) and leaven (1471); borrowed from Old French levain, from Latin levāmen alleviation, mitigation (literally, a lifting), from levāre to raise; see LEVER. —v. Before 1400 levainen; from the noun.

lecher n. Probably before 1200 lechur; later, in compounds lecher- (1280), and the usual spelling lehour (from about 1300 to the 1600's); borrowed from Old French lechēor lick, from lechier to lick, from Frankish (compare Old High German leckōn to LICK). —lecherous adj. About 1300, probably formed from Middle English lecher- and lecherie lechery + -ous; but compare rare Old French lecheros, from lechēor lick as a possible alternative source. —lechery n. Probably before 1200 lecherie, lecherie (probably about 1200); borrowed from Old French lecherie, from lechier to lick; for suffix see -Y³.

lecithin n. 1923, borrowed from French lecithine (Greek lékithos egg yolk + French -ine -INE²).

lectern n. Before 1425 lectryne; also lectorne (1440); alterations (influenced by Medieval Latin lectrinum lectern) of earlier letorne (about 1390), lettrune (before 1425); borrowed from Old French letrin, leitrin. The Old French forms were adaptations of Medieval Latin lectrinum and Late Latin lectrum lectern, from Latin legere to read.

lecture n. Probably before 1300, literature, written works; later, reading, learning from books (probably before 1387), and lectour reading aloud (about 1443); borrowed through Old French lecture, and directly from Medieval Latin lectura a reading, lecture, from Latin legere to read; for suffix see -URE. —v. About 1590, from the noun. —lecturer n. 1583; formed from English lecture + *-er*¹.

ledge n. 1272–73 legge crossbar on a door; later ledge (1452); perhaps formed from leggen to place, LAY¹. For a note on spelling see DRUDGE. The sense of a narrow shelf appeared in 1558.

ledger n. 1481, book that lies in a permanent place, especially a large copy of a breviary; probably from leggen to place, LAY¹ (perhaps in imitation of Dutch ligger, legger one that lies down, a book kept for reference); for suffix see -ER¹. The sense of a book of accounts is first recorded in 1588, as a shortened form of ledger-book (1553).

lee n. Probably about 1200 leohe; later le (before 1325); developed from Old English (before 725) hlēo shelter, protection; cognate with Old Frisian hlī shelter, protection, Old Saxon hleō, Middle Low German lē, modern Dutch lij lee side, Old Icelandic hlē lee side, shelter (Swedish lä, Danish læ, Norwegian le), also hlý warmth, and modern German Lee lee. —adj. 1513; from the noun. —leeward adj. 1666, situated away from the wind; formed from English lee + -ward. An earlier and obsolete sense “that makes much leeway” (applied to a ship); it appeared before 1618. Adverb use is first recorded in 1785. —leeway n. 1669, sideways drift of a ship (away from the wind); formed from English lee + way. The sense of extra space is first recorded in 1827.

leech¹ n. bloodsucking worm. Probably about 1150 leche; developed from Old English (before 900) læce, Kentish lyce bloodsucking worm; cognate with Middle Dutch lieke leech, of unknown origin. The form and sense in Middle English were transferred to leche physician, LEECH², by early folk-etymology; however, the meaning of physician became obsolete, leaving only the sense of a bloodsucking worm. The sense of a person who is a parasite, is first recorded in 1784.

leech² n. Archaic. physician. Probably before 1200 leche, developed from Old English (about 900) læce; cognate with Old Frisian lētza physician, Old Saxon lāki, Old High German lāhhi, Old Icelandic læknir (Swedish läka to heal, läkare physician, Danish læge, Norwegian lege to heal, physician), and Gothic lēkeis physician, from Proto-Germanic lækijaz* one who counsels.

leek n. Before 1300 lek, developed from Old English: Mercian (about 700) læc, -lēc (in compound gārlēc garlic), West Saxon (about 1000) lēac leek, onion, garlic; both Old English forms are cognate with Old Saxon lōk leek, Middle Dutch looc (modern Dutch look), Old High German louh (modern German Lauch), and Old Icelandic laukr (Swedish lök, Danish løg, Norwegian løk, lauk), from Proto-Germanic lauka-*; related to Old English locc curl of hair, LOCK².

leer v. 1530, probably developed from (obsolete) leer cheek, face, countenance; in turn developed from Middle English ler (probably before 1300); earlier leor (probably before 1200). The Middle English forms developed from Old English (about 700) hlēor, originally, area near the ear, from Proto-Germanic Hleuzás*. Old English hlēor is also cognate with Old Saxon hleor cheek, Middle Dutch liere, Middle Low German ler, and Old Icelandic hlýr. —n. 1598, from the verb. —leery adj. 1718, alert, wide-awake; formed from archaic English leer adj., looking slyly + *-y*¹. The sense of wary, doubtful, suspicious, appeared in 1896.

lees n. pl. About 1380 lies, borrowed from Old French lies, plural of lie sediment, probably from Celtic (compare Old Irish lige bed, cognate with Old English ligan to recline, *LIE*²).

left adj. Probably before 1200 lift, luft, leoft; later left (Kentish dialect, before 1333 and northern British dialects before 1325); developed from Old English lyft-weak; cognate with Middle Low German lucht and Middle Dutch lucht, luft left. The Old English sense of “weak” (as in lyft-ād lameness, paralysis) apparently arises ultimately from the fact that the left hand is generally the weaker of the two hands. —adv. Before 1325, from the adjective. —n. Probably about 1200 luft, later left (before 1325); from the adjective. Left, in the sense of the members of a legislative body assigned to the left side of the chamber is first recorded in 1837, probably a loan translation of French la gauche (1791); said to have originated during the seating of the French National Assembly of 1789, in which the position on the President's right was assumed by the nobility and the Third Estate (persons not of the nobility or clergy) sat on his left.

leg n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic leggr leg, bone, Norwegian legg, Danish læg, and Swedish låg), from Proto-Germanic laǵjaz*.

legacy n. About 1384, function or office of a deputy or legate; borrowed from Old French legacie, from Medieval Latin legatia, from Latin lēgāre appoint by a last will, bequeath, send as a LEGATE; for suffix see -ACY. The sense of property left by a will appeared in Scottish about 1460. —legatee n. 1679–88, formed from English legate, v. (1546, borrowed from Latin lēgātus, past participle of lēgāre bequeath) + -ee.

legal adj. 1447, borrowed from Middle French légal, learned borrowing from Latin lēgālis legal, from lēx (genitive lēgis) law, possibly related to legere to gather; for suffix see -AL¹. —legality n. 1459 legalite, borrowed from Medieval Latin legalitas, from Latin lēgālis legal; for suffix see -ITY. —legalize v. Before 1716, formed from English legal + -ize.

legate n. Before 1121, a representative of the Pope; borrowed through Old French legat, and directly from Latin lēgātus, originally, provided with a commission, past participle of lēgāre send as a deputy, send with a commission, bequeath, from lēx (genitive lēgis) contract, law; for suffix see -ATE³. —legatee n. See under LEGACY. —legation n. Before 1400 legacyoun diplomatic mission; borrowed through Old French legation, and directly from Latin lēgatiōnem (nominative lēgatiō), from lēgāre; for suffix see -ATION.

legend n. Probably before 1325, story of the life of a saint; borrowed from Old French legende, and directly as a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin legenda legend, story; originally, (things) to be read (on certain days in church, etc.), from Latin, neuter plural gerundive of legere to read, gather, select.

The extended sense of a nonhistorical or mythical story is first recorded in 1386, and that of an inscription in 1611. —legendary adj. 1563–87 legendarie of the nature of a legend, celebrated in legend; borrowed directly from Medieval Latin legendarius, from legenda (things) to be read; for suffix see -ARY.

legerdemain n. Probably about 1430 legerdemeyn; borrowed from Middle French léger de main quick of hand (léger light, from Vulgar Latin leviārius*, from Latin levis LIGHT² not heavy; de of, from, from Latin dē from; and main hand, from Latin manus; see MANUAL).

legible adj. Probably before 1440; borrowed from Late Latin legibilis that can be read, from Latin legere to read; for suffix see -IBLE.

legion n. Probably before 1200 legiun Roman legion; later legioun (about 1280); borrowed from Old French legion, legiun, learned borrowing from Latin legiōnem (nominative legiō) a body of soldiers in the Roman army, from legere to choose, gather (as for an army); for suffix see -ION.

The sense of a very large number is first recorded in English about 1378. It comes from the Biblical reference in Mark 5:9: “My name is Legion, for we are many.”

legislator n. 1605, borrowed, probably from French législateur, and directly from Latin lēgis lātor proposer of a law; lēgis, genitive of lēx law (see LEGAL); lātor proposer, a form serving as agent noun of ferre to carry; for suffix see -OR². —legislate v. 1805, back formation from legislator, legislation; for suffix see -ATE¹. —legislation n. Before 1655, probably borrowed from French législation, learned borrowing of Late Latin lēgislatiōnem (nominative lēgislatiō) enactment of a law or laws, from Latin lēgis (genitive of lēx law) + lātiō a bringing, a form serving as abstract noun of ferre to carry; for suffix see -TION. —legislative adj. About 1641, formed (probably through influence of French législatif) from English legislat(or) + -ive. —legislature n. Before 1676, legislative body, formed from English legislat(or) + -ure.

legitimate adj. Before 1464 legitimat lawfully begotten; later, lawful (1638); borrowed from past participle of Middle French legitimer, and directly from Medieval Latin legitimus, past participle of legitimare make lawful, from Latin lēgitimus lawful; originally, in line with the law, from lēx (genitive lēgis) law; see LEGAL; for suffix see -ATE³. —legitimacy n. 1691, formed from English legitimate, adj. + -cy.

legume n. 1676, borrowing of French légume, learned borrowing from Latin legūmen. —leguminous adj. 1656, probably borrowed from French légumineux, from Latin legūmen (genitive legūminis) + French -eux -ous. Leguminous also appeared in Middle English (probably before 1425) in the sense of containing meal made from the seeds of legumes.

lei n. 1843, borrowed from Hawaiian, any ornament worn about the neck or around the head.

leisure n. Probably before 1300 leiser time free from work or duties; borrowed from Old French leisir permission, leisure, from leisir, v., be permitted, from Latin licere be permitted. The spelling leisure appeared in English in the 1500's, probably influenced by words such as measure.

lemma n. 1570, subsidiary proposition in mathematics; later, heading or theme (1601); borrowing of Latin lēm̄ma a theme, from Greek lēm̄ma anything received or taken. The sense of a word or phrase glossed appeared in 1896.

lemming n. 1713, borrowing of Norwegian lemming, lemende, related to Old Icelandic lōmundr, lēm̄ingi, lēm̄ingr lemming.

lemon n. About 1400 lymon; borrowed from Old French limon (probably influenced by Old Provençal limon, or Italian limone), from Arabic limūn, from Persian limū(n). The shift in spelling to e did not occur until the mid-1600's. The slang sense of a worthless person or thing is first recorded in 1906 in American English. —lemonade n. 1663, borrowed from French limonade; for suffix see -ADE.

lemur n. 1795, New Latin lemures, a name given by Linnaeus from Latin lemurēs, pl., specters, ghosts; so called because of the animal's nocturnal habits and ghostlike appearance.

lend v. Probably about 1375 lenden, alteration of earlier lenen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 725 lēnan to lend, from læn LOAN).

Substitution of lend- for len-, in Middle English, was influenced by the past tense lende and association with many words in -end, such as bend, rend, send.

length n. 1122 lengthe; developed from Old English (about 893) lengthu; cognate with Old Frisian lengethe length, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch lengede, and Old Icelandic lengd, from Proto-Germanic langthō*; derived from the Germanic root of Old English lang LONG¹, adj.; for suffix see -TH¹. —lengthen v. About 1450 lenthēnen, formed from Middle English lengthe length + -enen -en¹.

lenient adj. 1652, softening, soothing, relaxing; borrowed from Middle French lenient, from Latin lēnientem (nominative lēniēs), present participle of lēnīre soften, from lēnis mild; for suffix see -ENT.

The sense of mild, gentle, merciful is first recorded in English in 1787, probably influenced by the meaning of lenity mildness, gentleness.

lenity n. mildness, gentleness, mercifulness. 1548 lenitie, borrowed from Middle French lénité, learned borrowing from Latin lēnitātem (nominative lēnitās), from lēnis mild; for suffix see -ITY. In Middle English (probably before 1425) the word was used in medicine with the form lenite and the sense of softness; borrowed from Latin.

lens n. 1693, New Latin lens, from Latin lēns (genitive lentis) LENTIL (in reference to its seeds which have a double-convex shape similar to an optical lens).

Lent n. Before 1387 lente, a shortened form of earlier lenten spring, lent (1123); developed from Old English (about 700) lencten spring; cognate with Old Saxon and Middle Dutch lentin spring (modern Dutch lente), and Old High German lengizin, lenzin, lenzo (modern German, poetic Lenz), from a Proto-Germanic compound langa-tīnaz*, made up of the root that was the source of Old English lang LONG¹ and that of Gothic -teins (in sintēins daily). The probable reference is to the lengthening of the days in spring. Only in English did the ecclesiastical meaning of Lent develop.

lenticul n. About 1250, borrowed from Old French lenticule, from Vulgar Latin lenticula*, from Latin lenticula, diminutive of lēns (genitive lentis) lentil.

leonine adj. About 1375, borrowed from Old French leonin, from Latin leōninus belonging to a lion, from leō (genitive leōnis) LION; for suffix see -INE¹.

leopard n. Probably before 1300 leuparz, lipard; borrowed from Old French leupart, leopard, lipard, learned borrowing from Late Latin leopardus, from Greek leopardos (leōn LION + pardos male panther; the leopard originally being thought a hybrid animal). The spelling leopard appeared in Middle English about 1330, apparently borrowed from Late Latin.

leotard n. 1886, in allusion to Jules Léotard, 1830–1870, a French trapeze artist who performed in such a garment.

leper n. Before 1398 lepre person who has leprosy; perhaps developed from leprous or, more likely from attributive use of earlier lepre leprosy (about 1250), borrowed from: 1) Old French lepre, lepre leprosy, learned borrowing from Late Latin lepra, and 2) probably directly from Late Latin lepra (in Latin, only leprae, pl.), from Greek lēprā leprosy, formed from the feminine of leprōs, adj., scaly, from lēpos a scale, which is related to lēpein to peel, lopós a peel. —leprosy n. 1535; developed from earlier lepruse (probably before 1450), from leprus, variant of LEPROUS; for suffix see -Y³. Middle English lepruse replaced lepre; see LEPER. —leprous adj. Probably before 1200 leprus; later leprous (about 1280); borrowed from Old French lepros and Late Latin leprōsus, from lepra leprosy, see LEPER; for suffix see -OUS.

lepidopterous adj. 1797, formed in English from New Latin Lepidoptera, pl., the order name (Greek leptōs, genitive leptōdos, fish scale, related to lēpein to peel + pterón wing, feather) + English -ous.

leprechaun n. 1604 lubrican; borrowed from Irish lupracān, alteration of Old Irish luchorpān (lu little + corpān, diminutive of corp body, from Latin corpus body). The spelling leprechaun appeared in 1860 probably altered from Irish leipreachān.

lepton n. 1948, any elementary particle of small mass, formed in English from Greek leptōs small, thin, delicate + English suffix -on. The meaning of a class of weakly interactive particles appeared about 1969 to distinguish leptons from hadrons.

lesbian adj. 1591 Lesbian of or relating to the Greek island of Lesbos (in the northeastern Aegean sea); later Lesbian of or relating to homosexual relations between women (1890); borrowed from Latin Lesbius of Lesbos, from Greek Lesbios, from Lesbos Lesbos. The second (and now common) meaning developed because of the reputed homosexuality of Sappho, the Greek lyric woman poet of Lesbos. —n. 1925, from the adjective.

lesion n. Probably before 1425 lesioun bodily injury; borrowed from Middle French lesion, from Latin laesiōnem (nominative laesiō) injury, from laedere to strike, hurt, damage; for suffix see -SION. —v. 1972, from the noun.

less adj. About 1125 læsse the younger or smaller (in importance); later lesse, lasse (about 1150). The forms in Middle English developed from a fusion of Old English læs, adv. (before 725), and læssa, adj. (about 725, in Beowulf) comparative of læs (from Proto-Germanic laisaz*), which is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon lēs less, Middle High German, Middle Low German, and Middle Dutch līse soft or gentle, modern German leise soft, gentle, slight. —adv. Probably about 1175 lesse, lasse, developed from Old English læs. —n. Probably about 1175 lesse, developed from a fusion of Old English læsse (about 1000, from læssa, adj.) and læs (about 725, in Beowulf, from the adv.). —lessen v. Probably about 1380 lesnen make less; later lessenen (probably before 1400), from earlier lessen (probably about 1200), formed from lesse, adj. + -en¹. —lesser adj. (as in the lesser evil). About 1225, comparative of less, formed from Middle English lesse + -er². —adv. 1594, now generally archaic except, since about 1960, in lesser-known (for less well-known), formed by analogy with better-known.

-less a suffix meaning without a _____, that has no _____, as in childless, homeless; that does not _____, as in tireless; that cannot be _____ed, as in countless. Middle English -lesse, developed from Old English -lēas, from lēas free from, without; cognate with Old Saxon lōs loose, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch los, Old High German lōs (modern German los, lose), Old Icelandic lauss, and Gothic laus empty, from Proto-Germanic lausaz*.

lesson n. Probably before 1200 lesceun; later lessoun (about 1300); borrowed from Old French leçon, from Latin lēcōnem (nominative lēcō) a reading, from legere read.

The earliest recorded meaning was a portion from the Bible or other sacred writing read aloud to the congregation. The meanings of something to be learned by a student appeared before 1300.

lest conj. Probably before 1200 leste, contraction of the phrase les te less that, developed from Old English (about 1000) thȳ lǣs the whereby less that (thȳ, instrumental case of thæt THAT; lǣs LESS; the, relative particle).

let¹ v. allow, permit. 1106 leten, developed from Old English (before 725) lĕtan, lĕtan to allow, let, let go, rent; cognate with Old Frisian lĕta to let, Old Saxon lātan, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, and Middle Low German laten, Old High German lāzzan (modern German lassen), Old Icelandic lāta, and Gothic lĕtan, from Proto-Germanic lĕtanan*.

let² v. Archaic. prevent, hinder. Before 1121 lætten; later letten (probably before 1200); developed from Old English lettan hinder or delay (before 889). Old English lettan is cognate with Old Saxon lettian to hinder, Middle Dutch letten, Old High German lezzen to delay or hurt (modern German verletzen to hurt), Old Icelandic letja hold back, and Gothic latjan, from Proto-Germanic latjanan*. —n. Probably before 1200 lette; from the verb. The sense of interference, as with the ball in tennis is first recorded in 1871, though now many in America call a let ball, a net ball.

-let a suffix meaning: little, as in booklet, leaflet; thing worn as a band on, as in anklet. Middle English -let; borrowed from Old French -elet, a compound formed of -el (from Latin -ellus, diminutive suffix, or -āle, neuter of -ālis -AL¹) + -et -ET.

lethal adj. 1583, borrowed from Late Latin lēthālis, an alteration with th of Latin lētālis, from lētum death; for suffix see -AL¹. Development of the Late Latin form with th came by association with Latin Lēthē, a river in Hades that caused forgetfulness of the past when its water was drunk. The Romans borrowed Lēthē from Greek lēthē forgetfulness, along with the mythology association.

lethargy n. 1373 litarge, also litargie (about 1380), and letargye (about 1410); borrowed from Old French litargie, letargie, or directly from Medieval Latin litargia, from Late Latin lēthārgia, from Greek lēthārgiā, from lēthārgos forgetful; originally, inactive through forgetfulness (lēthē forgetfulness + ārgos idle); for suffix see -Y³. The spelling lethargy (with th) is first recorded about 1593, influenced by the Late Latin and Greek forms. —lethargic adj. Before 1398 litargik; borrowed from Old French litargique, lethargique, from Latin lēthārgicus, from Greek lēthārgikós, from lēthārgiā lethargy; for suffix see -IC.

letter n. Probably about 1150 lettre knowledge of reading and writing, book learning; later alphabetic sign, written message (probably before 1200); borrowing of Old French lettre, from Latin littera, earlier lītera letter of the alphabet, litterae, pl., epistle, written documents, literature. —v. 1668, from the noun.

lettuce n. About 1300 letuse; borrowed from Old French laituēs, plural of laituē, from Latin lactūca lettuce, from lac (genitive lactis) milk; so called from the milky juice of the plant.

leuco- or leuko- a combining form meaning white, colorless, or slightly colored, as in leucocyte, leukemia. Also spelled leuc- or leuk- before vowels. Borrowed from Latin leuco-, from Greek leuko-, combining form of leukós clear, white.

leucocyte n. 1870 (probably influenced by French leucocyte and German Leukocyt); formed from English leuco- + -cyte.

leukemia n. 1855; formed in English from leuk- white + -emia blood, after earlier German Leukämie (1848).

Levantine adj. 1649, formed from Middle English levant the Levant (1497) + *-ine*¹. Middle English levant was a borrowing of Middle French levant the Levant, from levant, present participle of lever to rise, from Latin levāre to raise; so called because of the Levant's position relative to the rising sun.

levee¹ n. bank built to keep a river from overflowing. 1719 levée a French word used in a description of New Orleans; originally, feminine past participle of lever to raise, from Old French, from Latin levāre to raise. The sense of a dock, was first recorded in 1813.

levee² n. reception. 1672, borrowed from French lever a rising from bed, reception held while rising, noun use of the verb lever to rise, raise; see LEVEE¹. French kings used to hold levees in the morning while getting up and dressing.

level n. 1340, device for showing whether a surface is horizontal, flat, or even; borrowed from Old French livel, from Vulgar Latin libellum*, from Latin libella a balance, level, diminutive of libra balance, scale, unit of weight.

The sense of a horizontal condition or position (as in the level of the lake) appeared in Middle English probably before 1400. —v. About 1450, from the noun. —adj. 1431, from the noun.

lever n. About 1300 levour bar used for prying or dislodging something; later lever (1408); borrowed from Old French levier a lifter or lever (Old French levour with a different suffix is also sometimes cited), from lever to raise, from Latin levāre to raise; for suffix see *-ER*¹. —v. 1856, from the noun. —leverage n. 1724, action of a lever; formed from English lever, n. + -age. The figurative sense of advantage appeared in 1858.

leviathan n. Before 1382, a huge sea animal in the Bible; also, the Devil; borrowed from Late Latin leviathan, from Hebrew livyāthān dragon, serpent, huge sea animal. The sense of a great and powerful person or thing is first recorded in 1607.

Levi's n. pl. 1926, American English, from the name of Levi Strauss and Company, the original American manufacturer of such trousers. The forms Levis (1926) and levis (1944) are alterations of the trademark.

levitate v. 1673, formed in English from Latin levitās lightness (see LEVITY) + English *-ate*¹, patterned on earlier gravitate. —levitation n. 1668, formed in English from Latin levitās lightness + English -ation, patterned on earlier gravitation.

levity n. 1564, borrowed from Latin levitās (genitive levitātis) lightness, frivolity, from levis LIGHT² in weight; for suffix see -ITY.

levo- a combining form meaning toward the left, as in levorotatory (turning the plane of polarized light to the left), or meaning levorotatory, as in levoglucose. Borrowed from French lévo-, from Latin laevus left.

levy n. 1416 leve act of raising taxes, etc.; borrowed through Anglo-French leve, from Old French levée act of raising, levy, from feminine past participle of Old French lever to raise; see LEVER. The term is found in Anglo-French context as early as 1227. —v. 1436–37 leveyen; from the noun.

lewd adj. Before 1121 lewed nonclerical, lay, uneducated; developed from Old English læwede (before 899); of uncertain origin. The sense of wicked, unchaste, lustful, is recorded probably about 1378.

lexicographer n. 1658, formed in English from French lexicographe lexicographer (1578) + English suffix *-er*¹. The French word was borrowed from Greek lexikographos (lexikōn wordbook, LEXICON + gráphein to write). —lexicography n. 1680, formed from English lexicon + -graphy, or from lexicographer, on the pattern of such pairs as geographer, geography.

lexicon n. 1603, borrowed probably through Middle French lexicon from Greek lexikōn (biblōn) wordbook, from neuter of lexikós pertaining to words, from léxis word, from légein say. —lexical adj. 1836, formed from English lexicon + *-al*¹.

liable adj. 1450, bound by law, legally subject; probably formed with the English ending -able from Old French lier to bind, from Latin ligāre to bind, tie. The sense of likely to suffer from is first recorded in 1593; that of subject to the possibility, likely, in 1682. —liability n. 1794–1809; formed from English liable + -ity.

liaison n. Before 1648, act of thickening a sauce; borrowed from French liaison a union, a binding together, from Latin ligātiōnem (nominative ligātiō) a binding, from ligāre to bind; for suffix see -ION. The sense of a close relation between persons or groups is first recorded in 1809. —liaise v. 1928 (military use); back formation from liaison.

liar n. Before 1225 liar, liar; developed from Old English lēgere (about 950); later lēogere (before 1023); from Anglian lēgan, and West Saxon lēogan be untruthful, LIE¹.

The form in -ar is probably in imitation of the refashioned forms such as scholar for scoler and pillar for piler.

lib or Lib n. 1970, American English, shortened form of liberation (originally in Women's Lib, short for Women's Liberation).

libation n. About 1384 libacioun; borrowed from Latin libātiōnem (nominative libātiō), from libāre pour out (an offering); for suffix see -ATION. The sense of any liquid poured out to be drunk is first recorded in 1751.

libel n. About 1300, formal written statement; later, little book (about 1382); borrowed through Old French libel, libelle and directly from Latin libellus a little book, petition, diminutive of liber book.

The meaning of a plaintiff's statement of charges is first recorded in 1340; this usage evolved into the sense of any published or written statement likely to harm the reputation of a person in 1521. —v. 1570, from the noun. —libelous adj. 1619, formed from English libel, n. + -ous.

liberal adj. Probably before 1350, befitting free men, noble, generous; borrowed from Old French liberal, learned borrowing from Latin liberalis noble, generous, from liber free; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

The term liberal arts, the seven arts considered "worthy of or befitting free men," appeared before 1398 as a translation of Medieval Latin artes liberales. The sense of free from prejudice, tolerant, is first recorded in 1776–88, followed by the political sense of favoring constitutional change and legal reforms in 1801, probably borrowed into English from French libéral favorable to individual political freedoms. —n. 1820, from the adjective. —liberalism n. (1819) —liberality n. Probably about 1350 liberalite generosity; borrowed from Old French liberalité, from Latin liberalitatem (nominative liberalitās), from liberalis liberal; for suffix see -ITY. —liberalization n. (1835) —liberalize v. (1774) liberate v. 1623, borrowed from Latin liberātus, past participle of liberāre set free, from liber free; for suffix see -ATE¹. In some instances, liberate is probably a back formation from liberation. —liberation n. Probably before 1425 liberacion; borrowed through Middle French libération, and directly from Latin liberatiōnem (nominative liberatiō), from liberāre set free; for suffix see -ATION.

liberationist n. 1970, American English, abstracted from Women's Liberationist; formed from English liberation + -ist. An earlier use (1869) was restricted to a member of the "Liberation Society" of Great Britain, advocating withdrawal of state support from the established church. The current form is a redevelopment in English.

libertarian n. 1789, one who holds the doctrine of free will; later, person advocating liberty in thought and conduct (1878); formed from English liberty + -arian, as in Unitarian.

libertine n. About 1384, emancipated slave, freedman; borrowed from Latin libertinus member of the class of freedmen, from libertus one's freedman, from liber free; for suffix see -INE¹. The sense of a freethinker is first recorded in 1563–83, evidently influenced by the word liberty; the sense of a dissolute or licentious person is found in 1593. —adj. 1577, freethinking; later, dissolute (1605); from the noun.

liberty n. About 1375 libertee; borrowed from Old French liberté freedom, learned borrowing from Latin libertatem (nominative libertās), from liber free; for suffix see -TY².

libido n. 1909, borrowed from Latin libīdō desire or lust, from libēre be pleasing, please. —libidinous adj. 1447, borrowed probably through Middle French libidineux (feminine libidineuse), from Latin libidinōsus, from libīdō (genitive libīdinis) desire or lust; for suffix see -OUS.

library n. About 1380 librarye place containing books; also librarie collection of books (before 1382); borrowed through Anglo-French librarie, from Old French librairie collection of books, and directly from Latin librarium chest for books, from liber (genitive librī) book, paper, parchment, inner bark of a tree (used in early times for writing). The Romance languages now use the word to mean bookstore, derived from that sense in Late Latin. —librarian n. 1670, scribe; later, custodian of a library (1713); formed from English library + -an.

libretto n. 1740, borrowing of Italian libretto, diminutive of libro book, from Latin liber (genitive librī).

license n. Before 1376 licence permission given by law to do something; borrowed from Old French licence, learned borrowing from Latin licentia, from licentem (nominative licēns), present participle of licēre be allowed, be lawful. —v. Probably before 1400 licencen; from the noun. —licensee n. 1868, formed from American English license + -ee.

licentious adj. 1535, lawless; later, lewd or lustful (1555); borrowed from Latin licentiōsus full of license, unrestrained, from licentia LICENSE; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning "lewd" may have come from Middle French licencieux (1537).

An example of licentious is found about 1425 in the sense of freely, with permission.

lichen n. 1601, liverwort (formerly included in the same group with the lichens); borrowed from Latin lichēn, from Greek leichēn, (originally) what eats around itself, probably from lechein to lick. The meaning of a fungus or alga is first recorded in 1715.

licit adj. 1483, borrowed from Middle French licite, learned borrowing from Latin licitus lawful; and borrowed directly from Latin licitus, from licēre be allowed, be lawful.

lick v. Probably about 1200 licken; developed from Old English lician (830); cognate with Old Saxon likkōn to lick, modern Dutch likken, Old High German leckōn (modern German lecken), Old Icelandic sleikja, and Gothic bilaigōn. The sense of beat or thrash is first recorded in 1535 and that of overcome or defeat in 1800. —n. 1603, from the verb.

lickety-split adv. 1859, American English, formed from earlier (1817) lickitie very fast (irregular formation from lick, n., used dialectally in the sense of fast) + split, n.

licorice n. Probably before 1200 licoriz; borrowed through Anglo-French lycorys, Old French licorice, licorece, from Late Latin liquiritia, alteration of Latin glycyrrhiza, from Greek glykērrhiza (glykēs sweet + rhiza root). Development of Late Latin liquiritia was influenced by Latin liquēre become fluid, in reference to the process of treating the root to obtain its extract.

lid n. Before 1250 lid eyelid; later, covering or cover (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) hlid lid, cover, opening, gate; cognate with Old Frisian hlid lid, Middle Low German lit, Middle Dutch lit (modern Dutch lid), Old High German lit, hlit (modern German Lid and Augenlid eyelid), Old Icelandic hlidh gate, from Proto-Germanic Hlidān*.

lie v. speak falsely. Probably about 1175 lien; later ligen (probably before 1200) and legen (before 1250); developed from Old English lēgan, līgan (before 830), and earlier lēogan (before 725); cognate with Old Frisian liāga to lie, Old Saxon liogan, Middle Dutch lieghen (modern Dutch liegen), Old High German liogan (modern German lügen), Old Icelandic ljuga (Swedish ljuga, Danish lyve), and Gothic liugan, from Proto-Germanic leuzanan*. —n. About 1175 hyge; later lye (about 1385); developed from Old English (about 900) hyge lie; cognate with Old High German lugī (modern German Lüge), and lie² v. rest horizontally. 1137 lien; later liggen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English liggan to lie (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian liga, lidzia to lie, Old Saxon luggian, Middle Dutch ligghen, modern Dutch liggen, (from Proto-Germanic lezjanan*), Old High German ligen (modern German liegen), Old Icelandic liggja (Swedish ligga, Danish and Norwegian ligge), and Gothic ligan.

Old Icelandic lygi, from Proto-Germanic luzin*, from the root luz-/leus-* that is the source of Old English lēogan to lie.

Middle English liggen represents a regular phonetic development from Old English liggan. The form lien, from which modern English lie developed, was based upon Old English lig-, stem of the second and third person singular present indicative. —n. 1697, from the verb.

liege adj. Probably before 1300 liege; later lege (probably about 1390); borrowed through Anglo-French lege, and directly from Old French liege, lige, from Late Latin laeticus cultivated by serfs, from laetus serf, probably from a Germanic source (compare Old English læt half-freedman, serf, Old Frisian lēt, Old High German lāz, Middle Low German lāt; probably from the Proto-Germanic root of Old English lætan to allow). —n. Probably about 1375 lige vassal, and lege feudal lord (about 1380); from the adjective.

lien n. 1531, borrowing of Middle French lien a band or tie, from Latin ligāmen bond, from ligāre to bind.

lieu n. 1534 in (the) lieu of in place of, instead of (possibly also about 1300, cited in a single use); borrowed from Middle French lieu place, Old French leu, from Latin locum (nominative locus) place.

lieutenant n. About 1378 lieutenant, civil or military officer who acts for a superior; borrowed from Late Old French lieutenant (earlier luetenant) substitute; literally, placeholder (lieu place + tenant, present participle of tenir to hold).

life n. Before 1121 life, found in Old English līfe, dative of līf (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian līf life, person, body, Old Saxon līf life, person, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lijf body, Old High German līb life (modern German Leib body), and Old Icelandic līf life (Swedish lif, Danish and Norwegian liv life, body), from Proto-Germanic lība-*; related to Old English lifian, libban to have life, LIVE¹. —lifeless adj. Before 1200 lifleas; developed from Old English līflēas (līf life + -lēas -less). —lifetime n. (before 1250 lif time) lift v. Probably about 1200 liften; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hypta to raise). Old Icelandic lypta is cognate with Middle Low German lichten to raise, lift, Middle Dutch luchten (modern Dutch lichten), Middle High German lūften, from Proto-Germanic luftijanan*; from the Proto-Germanic root that is the source of Old English lyft heaven, air; see LOFT —n. 1485, from the verb. The figurative sense of act of helping, helping hand is first recorded in 1633, and that of help given by offering a ride in a vehicle in 1712. —lift-off n. (1956, American English). ligament n. 1392, band of strong tissues; borrowed from Latin

ligāmentum band, tie, ligature, from ligāre to bind, tie; for suffix see -MENT.

ligature n. Before 1400, borrowed through Old French ligature, and directly from Late Latin ligātūra, from Latin ligāre to bind; for suffix see -URE. The sense of two or more letters joined in writing and printing is first recorded in 1693, possibly taken from French (1680). —v. 1716–20, from the noun.

light¹ n. radiant energy. About 1175 liht; later light (before 1325); developed from Old English lēht (before 830); earlier lēoht (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian liacht light, Old Saxon lioht, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch licht, Old High German liohht (modern German Licht), Old Icelandic ljōs, and Gothic liuhath.

By the early 1300's gh was beginning to appear as a variant and then a substitute for Old English h in the middle of such words as light, also formerly written liht in early Middle English, owing in particular to influence of the French scribes. —adj. 1122 liht; later light (before 1325); developed from Old English (before 830) lēht bright, shining; developed with the noun. —v. Probably before 1160 lihten; later lighten (before 1325); developed from Old English līhtan (about 1000), līhtan (before 1000), līhtan; cognate with Old Saxon liuhtian give light, light up, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lichten, Old High German liuhten (modern German leuchten), Old Icelandic lýsa, and Gothic liuhtjan, from Proto-Germanic leuHti-janan*, from leuHtan* light, the source of Old English lēoht, n.

light² adj. not heavy. Before 1150 liht; later light (about 1300); developed from Old English lēoht (before 899); later līht (about 950); cognate with Old Frisian licht not heavy, light, Old Saxon līht, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch licht, Old High German līhti (modern German leicht), Old Icelandic lēttr (Danish let, Norwegian lett, Swedish lätt), and Gothic leihts, from Proto-Germanic linHtaz*. —adv. Probably about 1150 lihte, later light (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 900) lēohte, līhte; from the adjective. —light-hearted adj. (probably before 1400) light³ v. come down to the ground, alight. About 1175 lihten descend, dismount, lighten a load; later lighten (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 900) līhtan, from līht, lēoht not heavy; cognate with Old Frisian lichta to lighten a load, Middle Dutch lichten, Old High German līhten, and Old Icelandic létta (Danish and Norwegian lette, Swedish lätta), from Proto-Germanic linHti-janan*, from linHtaz* LIGHT².

lighten¹ v. brighten. Before 1325 lightenen, about 1340 light-nen; developed from light bright, LIGHT¹.

lighten² v. take weight off. Probably about 1350 lihtnen make lighter or cheerful; later lightenen (about 1380), from light not heavy, LIGHT²; compare LIGHT³, v.

lighter¹ n. thing or person that starts something burning. 1553, person who lights or kindles something; formed in English from *light*¹ make bright + *-er*¹.

lighter² n. barge. 1372–74, probably formed in English from *light*³ lighten a load + *-er*¹.

lightning n. About 1280, formed from Middle English lightnen make light, brighten + *-ing*¹; see LIGHTEN¹.

lights n. pl. Probably before 1300 lightes, earlier lihte (before 1200), from liht LIGHT² not heavy; so called because the lungs were distinguished from other internal parts of the body by their lightness.

ligneous adj. 1626, borrowed (perhaps through French ligneux, feminine ligneuse) from Latin ligneus wooden, of wood, from lignum wood, from legere to gather; for suffix see -OUS.

lignite n. 1808, borrowed from French lignite, from Latin lignum wood; for suffix see -ITE¹.

like¹ adj. similar. About 1200 iliche, ilike; later like (about 1225); developed as an abbreviated form of Old English gelic like, similar (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian gelike like, Old Saxon gilik, Middle Dutch ghelijc (modern Dutch gelijk), Old High German gilih (modern German gleich), Old Icelandic glíkr, líkr (Norwegian and Swedish lik, Danish lig), and Gothic galeiks, from a Proto-Germanic compound galikaz* having the same form, literally, with a corresponding body ja*, source of Old English ge- with, together + (likan* source of Old English lic body). Compare -LY². —prep. (as in sing like a bird) Apparently about 1200 lic; later like (before 1250); from the adjective. —adv. (as in like enough it will rain) Before 1325, in the same manner as; from the adjective. —conj. (as in act like he was afraid) Probably about 1380; from the adverb. —n. (as in not to see her like again) Probably before 1200 liche; later like (before 1393); from the adjective. —like-ness n. About 1175 licnesse; later liknesse something similar (about 1250); appearance, guise (probably before 1300); developed from Old English gelicness, from gelic like + -ness. —like-wise adv. About 1443, from in lik wise in a similar manner.

like² v. be pleased with. Probably about 1150 liken to please; later, be pleased, find agreeable (probably before 1200); developed from Old English līcian to please (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian likia to please, Old Saxon likōn (from Proto-Germanic likōjanan*), Old High German līhhen, Old Icelandic lika, and Gothic leikan; derived from the Proto-Germanic source of Old English gelic similar, LIKE¹. —likes n. 1851, likings, preferences; earlier like, likes pleasure or will (before 1325); from the verb. —likable adj. 1882, variant of likeable (1730; formed from English like + -able). —liking n. Probably before 1200 licung; developed from Old English līcung, from līcian to please + -ung -ing¹.

-like a suffix forming adjectives from nouns and meaning: like, resembling, as in daisylike, wolflike; characteristic of, as in childlike, workmanlike; suited to, as in businesslike. Late Middle English, abstracted from LIKE¹, adj.

likely adj. Before 1325 licly; later likly (about 1385); developed from late Old English geliclic; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic líkligr, glíkligr likely, formed from líkr, glíkr similar, LIKE¹ + -ligr -ly², adjective suffix). —adv. Apparently about 1378 licly; later likly (probably before 1400); from the adjective. —likelihood n. 1390 liklyhede; later liklyhode (1427); formed from Middle English likly likely + -hede, -hode hood.

liken v. 1280 likenen, formed from Middle English like similar, like¹ + -nen -en¹.

lilac n. 1625 lelacke tree; later lilac (1658); borrowed from obsolete French lilac (now lilas), from Persian lilak, variant of nīlak bluish, from nīl indigo. —adj. pale pinkish-purple. 1801, from the noun.

lilt v. Apparently about 1380 (West Midland dialect) lulten to sound an alarm; of uncertain origin. The East Midland form liltten* is implied in the compound lilting-horn. The sense of sing in a light, tripping manner is first recorded in 1786. —n. 1728, lively song; from the verb. The sense of rhythmical swing or cadence is first recorded in 1840.

lily n. About 1150 lilie; found in Old English (971) lilie; borrowed from Latin lilia, plural of lilium a lily. —adj. Before 1533, like a white lily, pure, lovely; later, pallid or colorless (1590); from the noun.

lima bean 1756; associated with Lima (lĕ'mə), Peru, from which the plant was first introduced.

limb¹ n. leg, arm, wing, or branch. 1547 limb, alteration (with added b as in thumb) of early modern English lim, lymme, lym, etc., found in Middle English lim (1125), and Old English lim limb, part of the body, joint, main branch of a tree (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Icelandic limr, lim limb, branch (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish lem limb, member of the body), from Proto-Germanic limu-. The -b in words such as limb and thumb began to appear at the end of the 1500's and has no etymological significance. It is probable that the spelling with -b developed by influence of *limb*² either by design or confusion.

limb² n. 1392, graduated edge of a quadrant or other astronomical instrument; borrowed from Old French limbe and directly from Latin limbus border, edge. The meaning of the edge of the disk of a celestial body is first recorded before 1677.

limber¹ adj. flexible. 1565, of uncertain origin. The origin has been ascribed to a possible derivation from *limb*¹, in allusion to the relatively easy movement of boughs of a tree; another suggestion makes a connection with *limber*², in allusion to the flexible movement of the shafts of a cart (this ignores the difference in date and form: *limber*² is not recorded with -b until more than fifty years after the appearance of *limber*¹). —v. 1748, from the adjective.

limber² n. detachable front part of the carriage of a field gun. 1628, alteration of Middle English lymer (1454), lymour (1430), from earlier lymon shaft of a cart (about 1400); borrowed from Old French limon shaft of a carriage or cart, of uncertain origin; (perhaps from a Germanic source; compare Old Icelandic limr, lim LIMB¹; but possibly, from a Celtic source). —v. 1843, from the noun.

limbo n. About 1378, region on the border of hell; borrowed from Latin (in) limbō (on) the edge, ablative case of limbus edge, border; see LIMP¹, v. The figurative sense of a place for people and things forgotten is first recorded in 1642.

Limburger n. About 1870; earlier Limburg cheese (1817); borrowed from Dutch Limburger or from Limburg, a province in northeastern Belgium, where the cheese is made.

lime¹ n. white substance made up of calcium oxide, obtained by burning shells, bones, etc. About 1150 lim lime; developed from Old English (about 700) lim sticky substance, birdlime, glue. Old English lim is cognate with Old Saxon lim birdlime, glue, Middle Dutch lim (modern Dutch lijm), Old High German lim (modern German Leim), and Old Icelandic lim (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish lim), from Proto-Germanic leimaz*. Related to LOAM. See also SLIME. —v. Probably before 1200 limen to cement; developed from Old English geliman (before 800); cognate with Old High German limen to cement, and Old Icelandic lima; derived from the Germanic root that is the source of Old English lim, n. —limelight (1826) —limestone n. (before 1398) lime² n. greenish-yellow fruit. 1638, borrowed from Spanish lima, from Arabic lima citrus fruit, probably a back formation from limūn lemon, from Persian. Related to LEMON.

lime³ n. linden tree. 1625, variant of earlier line (about 1510); developed from Middle English lynde (about 1325), found in Old English lind LINDEN.

limerick n. 1896, in allusion to Limerick, a county and city in Ireland. There is no evidence to support the explanation that the verse was named after the custom at parties of presenting extemporaneous nonsense verses, each followed by the refrain "Will you come up to Limerick?"

limey n. 1918, American English, possibly from the earlier Australian slang name for an English immigrant (1888). Limey is first recorded as an Australian shortening for lime-juicer (1857), so called from the use of lime juice on British naval ships (introduced by the Navy in 1795) to prevent scurvy among sailors.

limit n. Probably 1384, a legal limitation on power or authority; later, a geographical boundary (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French limite a boundary, learned borrowing from Latin līmitē (accusative of limes) a boundary, embankment between fields, border, related to līmen threshold, and perhaps to līmus sidelong; see LIMB¹, n. The general sense, as in a limit to one's patience, is first recorded in English in 1413. —v. About 1390, prescribe, fix; also, set a limit to (before 1398); borrowed from Old French limiter, from Latin līmitāre bound, limit, fix, determine, from līmes boundary. —limitation n. About 1395 limitacioun district allotted for begging; later, an assigned limit or bound (probably before 1430); borrowed through Old French limitacion, and directly from Latin līmitātiōnem (nominative līmitātiō), from līmitāre to limit; for suffix see -ATION.

limn v. About 1420 lemynen; also limnen to illuminate a manuscript (before 1425); both forms are variants of earlier luminen (before 1398); borrowed from Old French luminer, from Latin lūmināre illuminate, burnish, from lūmen (genitive lūminis) radiant energy, LIGHT¹. The sense of paint a picture, portray, depict, is first recorded in English in 1592.

limnology n. 1893, formed in English from Greek līmnē lake, marsh + English -o- + -logy. Greek līmnē is probably related to leimōn meadow; originally, a hollow, and limēn harbor (as a protected bay).

limousine n. 1902, borrowing of French limousine (about 1900), earlier a cloak of wool or goat's hair used by cart drivers or wagoners (since 1836), from the name Limousin, a region in central France, earlier an adjective referring to the capital, Limoges.

limp¹ v. walk lamely. 1570, of uncertain origin; not found in Middle or Old English, but possibly related to Middle English lympen to fall short, as of the truth (probably before 1400); perhaps short for lympe hault (as recorded in 1530), from Old English lemphealt, læmpihalt halting, lame, limping (about 700); compare Middle High German limpfen to limp, lampen hang down. —n. 1818, from the verb.

limp² adj. lacking stiffness or firmness. 1706, of uncertain origin, but probably related to LIMP¹.

limpet n. 1312–13 lempet, developed from Old English (about 1050) lempedu; borrowed from Medieval Latin lampreda limpet. The spelling limpet appeared in 1602.

limpid adj. 1609, limpidde, borrowed through French limpide, and directly from Latin limpidus clear.

linchpin n. 1376–77 linspin, formed from earlier (before 1333) lins linchpin + pin. Middle English lins developed from Old English lynis (before 809); cognate with Old Saxon lunisa linchpin, Middle Dutch lunse (modern Dutch luns), late Middle High German luns, lunse (modern German Lünse), from Proto-Germanic luntsō*.

linden n. 1577, noun use of linden, adj., made of wood of the linden tree; Middle English (probably before 1300) and Old English (before 1000), from earlier lind linden (about 700); cognate with Old Saxon linda, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch linde, Old High German linta (modern German Linde), and Old Icelandic lind, from Proto-Germanic lindō*. Related to LIME³.

line¹ n. long thin mark. By 1425, most of the ordinary senses of line in modern English had been recorded in Middle English and any sense division between the Old and Middle English forms had been completely coalesced in a fusion of: 1) Old English līne rope, row (before 900), and 2) Middle English line, līgne cord or rope, line (probably about 1225), borrowed through Old French līgne. Both Old and Middle English forms were ultimately borrowed from Latin līnea linen thread, string, line, from the phrase līnea restis linen cord, from līneus, adj., of linen, from līnum flax, LINEN. —v. Before 1398 linen to tie with a cord; from the noun. The sense of mark or mark off with lines probably appeared before 1460. —liner¹ n. Probably about 1400, an official in Scotland who supervises land boundary records; later, a ship (1829) belonging to a transportation system; formed from English *line*¹, n. and v. + -er¹. The meaning of cosmetic marker is first recorded in 1926.

line² v. put a layer inside of. About 1387–95 linen, developed from Old English (about 700) līn linen cloth, LINEN. —liner² n. 1611, person who fits a lining to; later, something that serves as a lining (1869), formed from English line + *-er*¹. Possibly known by 1454 in the form lineur linen underwear.

lineage n. 1697, spelling alteration (influenced by *line*¹) of Middle English linage (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French lignage, from ligne LINE¹; for suffix see -AGE.

lineal adj. Before 1398, of or in a line; borrowed through Anglo-French lineale, Old French lineal, and Late Latin lineālis belonging to a line; both from Latin linea LINE¹; for suffix see *-AL*¹. Compare LINEAR. The sense of in the direct line of descent is first recorded before 1420.

linear adj. 1642, borrowed, perhaps through French linéaire, from Latin lineāris belonging to a line, from linea string, LINE¹; for suffix see -AR.

Linear and lineal are of the same Latin origin: in Latin lineāris the original suffix -ālis was dissimilated to -āris, but in Late Latin, this rule was no longer productive and the formation or re-formation in -ālis remained unchanged.

linen n. Probably before 1325, a garment made of linen, from earlier linnen, adj., made of flax, made of linen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 700) līnin, adj., made of flax, from līn flax, linen thread or cloth. Old English līn was probably an early borrowing (along with Old Saxon, Old High German, and Old Icelandic līn flax, and Gothic lein linen cloth) from Latin linum flax, linen.

-ling a suffix forming nouns and meaning: little, unimportant, as in lordling, duckling; one that is, as in underling; one belonging to, as in earthling. Middle English and Old English -ling; cognate with Old High German and modern German -ling, Old Icelandic -lingr, and Gothic -lings; probably formed from the Germanic suffixes -el *-LE*¹ + *-ing*¹.

linger v. Before 1325 lengeren reside, dwell, frequentative form of lengen prolong, lengthen (before 1225); developed from Old English lengan prolong, lengthen (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian lengza lengthen, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lengen, Old High German lengan lengthen, draw out, and Old Icelandic lengja, from Proto-Germanic langijanan*; derived from the Proto-Germanic root that is the source of Old English lang LONG¹, adj. The meaning of stay on or go slowly, as if unwilling to leave, is first recorded in 1530.

lingerie n. 1835, borrowing of French lingerie things made of linen, from Old French linge linen, from Latin līneus, adj., of linen, from linum flax, LINEN.

lingo n. 1660, possibly borrowed from Provençal lingo, lengo language or tongue, from Old Provençal lenga, from Latin lingua TONGUE.

lingua franca 1678, borrowed from Italian lingua franca, literally, Frankish language. The original lingua franca, spoken especially in the Levant, was a hybrid language of some French, Spanish, Greek, Arabic, and Turkish, but consisting largely of Italian words with reduced inflections. "Frankish" probably meant European to the Arabs and other users of the original lingua franca.

lingual adj. 1650, probably borrowed directly from Medieval Latin lingualis of the tongue, from Latin lingua TONGUE; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

linguine n. 1948, borrowing of Italian linguine, plural of linguina little tongue, diminutive of lingua tongue, from Latin lingua TONGUE.

linguist n. 1588, person skilled in languages, formed in English from Latin lingua language, TONGUE + English -ist. The sense of a student of language is first recorded in 1641.

—linguistic adj. 1856, formed from English linguist + -ic, and probably in some instances borrowed from French linguistique (1833). —linguistics n. 1847, American English, the study or science of languages; formed from English linguist + -ics, on the patterns of physics, mathematics, etc. An earlier singular noun form, linguistic (1837) was apparently borrowed from German Linguistik.

liniment n. Probably before 1425, an ointment, salve; borrowed from Late Latin linimentum a soft ointment, from Latin linire, earlier linere to daub, smear; for suffix see -MENT.

lining n. 1378, formed from Middle English linen to LINE² + *-ing*¹.

link n. Before 1415 lynke section of a rope or cord; later, link of a chain (about 1443); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Swedish lænker chain or link, modern Swedish länk, Norwegian lenke, Danish lænke); from Proto-Germanic Hlankijaz*; cognate with Old English hlencan, pl., armor, Middle High German gelenke flexible parts of the body (modern German Gelenk joint or link), lenken to bend. —v. About 1385 linken to bind or fasten; probably from the noun, although recorded some thirty years earlier, which suggests a defect in the record of this word. —linkage n. 1874, formed from English link, v. + -age.

links n. pl. 1728, from Scottish and Northumbrian links sandy, rolling ground, usually covered with turf, and found near the seashore (1702); developed from Old English (931) hlinc rising ground, ridge (plural hlincas).

linnet n. About 1530, borrowed from Middle French linette, from lin flax, from Latin linum LINEN; so called because flaxseed forms much of the bird's diet.

linoleum n. 1878, a compound of Latin linum flax, LINEN + oleum OIL. The word was coined in 1860 for a preparation of solidified linseed oil used to coat canvas for making floor coverings.

linseed n. About 1150 linsed; developed from Old English (about 1000) līnsæd flaxseed.

lint n. 1392 linet fleecy material, obtained by scraping linen; also lint (before 1400); borrowed from Middle French linette grain of flax, diminutive of lin flax, from Latin linum flax, LINEN. The sense of bits of thread or fluff is first recorded in 1611.

lintel n. 1315, borrowed from Old French lintel threshold, of uncertain origin; probably alteration of lintier, from Vulgar

Latin limitāris* threshold, from Latin limitāris, adj., that is on the border, from limes (genitive limitis) border or boundary, LIMIT; the Vulgar Latin meaning "threshold" was influenced by Latin līmen (genitive līminis) threshold.

In the Wycliffe Bible, ouerthreswold was later written as threisfold, which may help to explain the confusion surrounding lintel and how it got from the sense of a doorsill to that of the top of a door or window. This confusion over threshold persisted at least until 1834.

lion n. About 1175 leon; later lyon (about 1200), and lioun (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French lion and Latin leōnem (nominative leō), from Greek leōn (genitive leontos).

The form lēo, recorded in Old English (before 830) as a variant of Anglian lēa, was a borrowing directly from Latin leō, the source for all Germanic forms, as found in Old Frisian lawe, Old Saxon leo, Middle Dutch leuwe (modern Dutch leeuw), Old High German lēwo, louwo, Middle High German lewe, louwe (modern German Löwe, Leu), and Old Icelandic leōn, liōn.

lip n. Before 1200 lippe, developed from Old English lippa (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian lippa lip, Middle High German and Middle Dutch lippe (modern Dutch lip), Old High German lefs, dialectal High German Lefze, modern German Lippe (from Low German), Swedish läpp, Norwegian leppe, from Proto-Germanic leppjōn*. The slang sense of saucy talk, impudence appeared in 1821, probably from the earlier (1579) phrase move the lip to utter even the slightest word (against someone). —lip-read v. 1892, back formation from lip-reading, n. (1874). —lipstick n. (1880).

lipid n. 1925 lipide, borrowed from French (1923), from Greek lipos fat + French -ide (chemical suffix). The spelling lipid was perhaps formed independently in English from Greek lipos + -id, variant of -ide.

liquefy v. Probably before 1425 liquefien; borrowed from Old French liquefier, learned borrowing from Latin liquefacere make liquid, melt (liquēre be fluid + facere make); for suffix see -FY.

liqueur n. 1729, borrowing of French liqueur, from Old French licour liquid; see LIQUOR.

liquid adj. Before 1384, borrowed from Old French liquide, from Latin liquidus fluid, liquid, moist, from liquēre be fluid, related to liqui to melt, flow, lixa water, lye. The application to sound with the meaning of clear, flowing, is found before 1637, and the sense pertaining to finance as of assets, securities, etc. in 1879. —n. 1530 liquid the sound of l or r, liquid consonant; borrowed from Middle French liquide, from Latin liquidus (litterae) the letters l, m, n, r, a translation of Greek hygrá (stoicheia). The meaning of a liquid substance is not recorded before 1708; from the adjective.

liquidate v. About 1575, make clear or ascertain the amount (of a debt, etc.); borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French liquider, from Late Latin liquidatus, past participle of liquidare to melt, make liquid or clear, clarify, from Latin liquidus LIQUID; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The sense of clear away (a debt) is first recorded in 1755. The sense of settle the accounts of (a business, etc.) by distributing the assets is first recorded in English in 1870. The meaning of eliminate, wipe out, kill (1924), was possibly a loan translation from Russian likvidirovat'. —liquidation n. About 1575, act of liquidating assets, etc.; borrowed from Middle French liquidation (liquider liquidate + -ation -ation).

liquor n. Probably before 1200 licur a liquid; later liquour (before 1398); borrowed from Old French licour, likeur, learned borrowing from Latin liquor liquid, liquidity, from liquēre be fluid; see LIQUID. Related to LIQUEUR. The sense of any drink, especially wine is first recorded probably before 1300.

liquorice n. = licorice.

lisle n. 1851, borrowing of French Lisle, earlier spelling of Lille, a city in northern France where this thread was originally made.

lisp v. Before 1225 wlispin; later lispyn (about 1440); developed from Old English (before 1100) -wlispian, in āwlispian, from ulisp, adj., lisp; probably of imitative origin and similar in formation to Middle Low German wlisp to lisp, Low German lisp, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lisp, Old High German lisp (modern German lispeln), Swedish läspa, Norwegian lespe, and Danish læspe. —n. Before 1625, from the verb.

lissome adj. Before 1800, variant of earlier lithesome (1768–74); formed from English lithe + *-some*¹.

list¹ n. series of names, numbers, words, etc. 1602, borrowed from French liste, from Old French liste border, band, row, group, from Italian lista, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German lista strip, border, LIST²). —v. 1614, from the noun.

The meaning of *list*¹ is a Romance development and the sense of a list of names, etc., came from French, and not by way of Middle English from the already existing Old English līste border.

list² n. border or edge of cloth. Probably about 1280 liste; found in Old English (about 700) līste border; cognate with Middle Low German līste border or edge, Middle Dutch lijste (modern Dutch lijst), Old High German lista (modern German Leiste), Old Icelandic lista (Norwegian and Swedish list, Danish liste), from Proto-Germanic listōn*. —v. Probably before 1300 listen, from the noun.

list³ v. (of a ship) to lean or incline to one side, tilt. 1880, variant of earlier lust (1626); of uncertain origin (sometimes referred to Middle English lysten LIST⁴, as an extended use of "be inclined to," but while the form lust in early modern English fits cognates of *list*⁴, the development of the spelling in English is at odds with *list*⁴). —n. 1793, variant of earlier lust (1633); from the verb.

list⁴ v. Archaic. to please, desire. About 1150 lysten to please, desire, wish, like; later listen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English lystan to desire (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon lustian to desire or wish, modern Dutch lusten to like, fancy, Old High German lusten to desire or wish (modern German lusten), and Old Icelandic lysta, from Proto-Germanic lustijan*; all derived from the Proto-Germanic root that is the source of Old English lust desire; see LUST. —n. Archaic. desire, longing, inclination. Probably before 1200 liste, from listen, v.

list⁵ v. Archaic. listen. About 1175 lysten, later listen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English hlystan hear, hear-ken, LISTEN (before 899). Old English hlystan was formed from hlyst hearing (from Proto-Germanic Hlustiz*).

listen v. Probably about 1150 lusnen pay attention, try to hear; later lustnen (probably before 1200), and listnen (before 1250). The Middle English forms with t are spelling alterations (by association with listen to try to hear, LIST⁵) of Old English hlysnan to listen (before 800), corresponding to Middle High German lūsenen, from Proto-Germanic Hlusiñjanan*, and related to hlystan to hear, listen, and hlyst hearing. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Icelandic hlusta to hear, listen, hlust hearing, ear, Old Saxon hlust hearing, ear, Old High German lūstrēn to listen, hlosēn to listen, attend. —n. 1788, American English; from the verb. —listenable adj. (1920) listless adj. 1440 listles; formed from Middle English liste desire, LIST⁴ + -less.

lists n.pl. About 1385 listes; a blend of *list*² border, and Old French lisse place of combat, from Germanic (compare Old High German lista border, edge, LIST²).

litany n. Probably before 1200 letanie; borrowed from Old French letanie and Medieval Latin letania, both from Late Latin litanīa, from Greek litaneia litany, an entreating, from liē prayer, entreaty.

The generalized sense of a repeated series (as in a litany of courses) is recorded before 1822, probably borrowed from French litanie a monotonous enumeration. The spelling litany appeared in English in 1679, influenced by the Late Latin and Greek forms.

-lite a combining form meaning stone or rock, as in the names chrysolite, aerolite (meteorite made up of stone). Borrowed from French -lite or -lithe, from Greek lithos stone.

liter n. 1797 litre, borrowing of French litre (1793), from litron, an obsolete French measure of capacity, from Medieval Latin litra, from Greek litra pound (unit of weight, 12 ounces), apparently from the same source (probably Sicilian Italic liθrā*) as Latin libra pound (12 ounces), balance, pair of scales.

literal adj. Before 1397, not figurative or allegorical; also before 1398, pertaining to letters of the alphabet; borrowed from Old French lital and from Late Latin litterālis, litterālis of or belonging to letters or writing, from Latin littera, littera LETTER; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense as in a literal translation, is first recorded in 1599.

literary adj. 1646, pertaining to letters of the alphabet; later, pertaining to literature (1737); borrowed from French littéraire, from Latin litterārius, litterārius belonging to letters or learning, from littera, littera LETTER; for suffix see -ARY.

literate adj. Probably before 1425 litterate able to read and write, educated; borrowed from Latin litterātus, litterātus lettered, learned, formed in imitation of Greek grammatikós (see GRAMMATICAL) from Latin littera, littera LETTER; for suffix see -ATE¹. —literacy n. 1883, formed from English literate + -cy, in contrast to earlier illiteracy (1660).

literati n.pl. 1621, borrowed from Latin litterātī, litterātī, plural of litterātus, litterātus lettered, LITERATE.

literature n. Probably before 1425 litterature knowledge from books, book learning; borrowed through Middle French littérature, and directly from Latin litterātūra, litterātūra writing, from littera, littera LETTER; for suffix see -URE.

The meaning of a body of writings of a period or of a country, emerged relatively late in English in 1812. The sense of a bibliography or list of works published on a given subject is first recorded in English in 1860.

lith- a form of litho- before a vowel, as in lithic consisting of stone or rock (1797).

-lith a combining form meaning stone or rock, as in megalith, monolith. Borrowed, through New Latin -lithus or French -lithe, from Greek lithos stone.

lithe adj. About 1150, gentle, smooth, pleasant; found in Old English lithe soft, mild, gentle (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon liθi soft, mild, gentle, Old High German lindi (modern German lind), and Norwegian linn, from Proto-Germanic linthijaz*. The Old English and Old Saxon forms show a characteristic loss of n before th. The sense of supple, bending easily, is first recorded about 1300.

lithium n. 1818, New Latin, from Greek lithos stone + New Latin -ium; so called from the mineral or "stone" origin of this alkali metal, as distinguished from two previously known alkalis of vegetable origin.

litho- a combining form meaning stone or rock, as in lithography, lithosphere. Borrowed from Greek litho-, from lithos stone.

lithography n. 1813, borrowed from German Lithographie (litho- stone + -graphie -graphy). In the obsolete sense of a description of stones or rocks, lithography appeared in English as early as 1708, borrowed from New Latin lithographia.

—lithograph n. 1839, print made by lithography; —v. 1825, to print by lithography; both back formations from lithography.

litigate v. 1615, borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French litigier, from Latin litigātus, past participle of litigare, from a lost adjective litigus* carrying on a lawsuit (lis, genitive litis, lawsuit + the root of agere to drive, conduct); for suffix see -ATE¹. —litigant n. 1659, from (1638) adj., engaged in a lawsuit; borrowed from French litigant, learned borrowing from Latin litigantem (nominative litigāns), present participle of litigare; for suffix see -ANT. —litigation n. 1567, disputation; 1647, act of carrying on a lawsuit; borrowed from Middle French litigation, learned borrowing of Late Latin litigatiōnem (nominative litigatiō), from Latin litigare; for suffix see -ATION. Litigate was probably not a back formation from litigation because the sense of litigation a carrying on of a lawsuit was later (1647) than the first recorded use of the verb (1615).

litigious adj. About 1384, quarrelsome; later, engaged in litigation (about 1450); borrowed from Latin litigiōsus contentious or quarrelsome, from litigium dispute, strife, from a lost adjective litigus* carrying on a lawsuit, see LITIGATE; for suffix see -IOUS.

litmus n. 1324–25 litemose, borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Norwegian litmosi (lita to dye + mosi moss), Swedish letmossa. The earliest Middle English form is lykemose (1320), borrowed from Middle Dutch lijkmoes, variant of lēcmoes (lēken to drip, LEAK + mos MOSS); so called because this dye is obtained from various lichens.

The spelling litmus was probably reinforced by obsolete English lit to dye or stain, borrowed from Old Icelandic lita, from litr color, dye, cognate with Old English wlite brightness, beauty, and Gothic wlits face, from Proto-Germanic wlitiz*. The phrase litmus test with the figurative meaning of a decisive or acid test (1957), derives from the use of paper treated with litmus as a chemical indicator (litmus paper, 1803).

litotes n. 1657, borrowing of Greek litōtēs, from litós small, plain, simple, related to leōs smooth; see LIME.

litter n. Probably before 1300 liter portable bed; later litter (1410); borrowed through Anglo-French litere, Old French litier, alteration of expected leitier* (by influence of lit bed), from Medieval Latin lectaria litter, from Latin lectus bed, couch; see LIE² recline; for suffix see -ER¹. Middle English liter was also influenced in formation by Anglo-Latin litera, alteration of Medieval Latin lectaria.

The sense of straw used for bedding is first recorded about 1410, and that of the offspring of an animal at one birth in 1440. The meaning of odds and ends, things scattered about, debris, appeared in 1730, probably from the verb. —v. Before 1398 literen provide with bedding; from the noun. The meaning of scatter things about is first recorded in 1713.

little adj. 1106 litel; earlier litte (1066); developed from Old English lytel (about 725, in Beowulf), related to lyt little or few (from Proto-Germanic lūtī*). Old English lytel is cognate with Old Saxon luttill little, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch luttel, Old High German luzzil, dialectal German lützel, from West Proto-Germanic lūtīla-, luttīla-, from lūt-*.

A cognate, synonymous and phonetically similar Proto-Germanic form, lūtīla-*, found as Gothic leitils small, little, Old Icelandic litell (Swedish and Norwegian liten, Danish liden), Old Frisian litik, and Middle Dutch litel suggests influence from Old Icelandic litell. —adv. Before 1125 litel, developed from Old English (about 1000) lytel; from the adjective. —n. Before 1121 litel, developed from Old English (about 1000) lytel; from the adjective.

littoral adj. 1656, borrowed from Latin littoralis, littoralis of or belonging to the seashore, from litus (genitive litoris) shore; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1828, borrowed from Italian littorale, originally adj., of the seashore, from Latin littoralis, littoralis.

liturgy n. 1560, borrowed through Middle French liturgie, and directly from Late Latin liturgia public service, public worship, from Greek leitourgía, from leitourgós one who performs a public ceremony or service (leitō-, earlier leitō- public, from laōs people; see LAY² + -ergos that works, from érgon WORK); for suffix see -Y³. —liturgical adj. 1641; formed in English from Late Latin liturgicus (from Greek leitourgikós, from leitourgia liturgy) + English -al¹.

live¹ v. have life, exist. Before 1121 lifēn; later liven (probably before 1160); developed from Old English lifian (Anglian, about 725, in Beowulf), and libban (West Saxon), cognate with Old Frisian libba to live, Old Saxon libbian, Middle Dutch lēven (modern Dutch leven), Old High German lebēn (modern German leben), Old Icelandic lifa (Swedish leva, Danish and Norwegian leve), and Gothic liban; all from the Proto-Germanic stem libbē*, from the root lib-* to remain, continue, whence English LIFE. —livable, liveable adj. 1611, likely to live; later, conducive to living (1664); and suitable for living (1814); formed from English *live*¹ + -able. —living n. About 1350, fact of being alive; formed from Middle English liven to live + -ing¹. —adj. Before 1375, being alive; alteration of earlier liviend (probably before 1200), developed from Old English lifiende, present participle of lifian to live; for suffix see -ING².

live² adj. alive. 1542, having life; later, burning, glowing (1611); variant of ALIVE. The meaning as in a live performance, is found first in 1934 in British English. —livestock n. (1742 live stock, American English) livelihood n. 1611, alteration of livelode means of keeping alive, by association with livelihood liveliness. The older Middle English form livelode (probably before 1325) took the form livelihood (1566, from lyvelyhed, before 1475, a compound of lyvely living + -hed -head), and developed from Old English (about 1000) līflād course of life (līf LIFE + lād way, course; see LOAD).

live³ adj. About 1410 live long (day), leve longe (day); formed from Middle English leve, lef dear + LONG¹ and corresponding to German die liebe lange Nacht (literally) the dear long night.

lively adj. 1377 līflich active, energetic; later lyvely (probably before 1400); developed from Old English (before 1000) līflīc living, existing (līf LIFE + -lic -ly²).

liven v. 1884 liven up; formed from English live + -en¹, under the influence (or as an abstracted form) of the earlier enliven (1633) from en- + live + -en¹.

liver n. About 1150 liver, in compound liver-sar pain or disease of the liver; developed from Old English lifer (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian livere, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch lēver (modern Dutch lever), Old High German lebara (modern German Leber), and Old Icelandic lifr, genitive and plural lifrar (Swedish lever, Danish and Norwegian lever), from Proto-Germanic librōn* fattened up, an adjective left after loss of the original noun for liver.

liverwort n. Before 1325 liverewort, developed from Old English (before 1100) lifewyrȝt (lifer LIVER + wyrȝt WORT¹); loan translation of Medieval Latin hepatica hepatica; so called from the plant's liver-shaped leaves.

liverwurst n. 1869, American English, half translation of German Leberwurst (Leber liver + Wurst sausage).

livery n. Probably about 1300 liveray allowance of food and drink; later livere servants' rations, and lyvery delivery of merchandise (probably about 1400); borrowed from Old French livrée, from feminine past participle of livrer dispense, from Latin liberāre liberate; for suffix see -y⁴.

The sense of distinctive clothing given to servants is found about 1380, that of provender for horses before 1440, and that in livery stable, in 1705.

livid adj. Probably before 1425 livide; borrowed from Middle French livide and Latin lividus, from livere be bluish. The sense in livid with rage, is first recorded in 1912.

living n. See under LIVE¹.

lizard n. About 1378 lusarde any reptile, such as a crocodile or serpent; also, before 1382 lisard a lizard; borrowed through Anglo-French lusard, Old French lesard (feminine laisarde), from Latin lacertus, (feminine lacerta) lizard.

llama n. 1600, borrowing of Spanish llama, from Quechua (Peru) llama.

lo interj. Before 1121 la; later lo (probably before 1200); a fusion of Old English lā, an exclamation of surprise, grief, or joy (about 725, in Beowulf), and of Middle English lok look! imperative of loken to LOOK.

load n. Before 1250 lode burden or load, earlier lade course, way (probably about 1200); found in Old English lād way, course, carrying (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic laidō*; related to lædan to guide, LEAD¹; influenced in meaning by Middle English laden to load, LADE. Also compare LODE for differentiation of meaning. The spelling load appeared in the 1500's. —v. Before 1470 loden, from lode, n.

loaf¹ n. bread baked as one piece. About 1280 lof, developed from Old English (before 725) hlāf bread or loaf; cognate with Old Frisian hlēf loaf, Old High German hleib, hlaiba (modern German Laib), Old Icelandic hleifr (Swedish lev, Norwegian leiv), and Gothic hlaiþs, from Proto-Germanic Hlaibaz*. Whether the sense of "bread" or that of "loaf" is the earlier is uncertain.

loaf² v. spend time idly. 1835, American English; back formation from loafer an idler or vagabond (1830), variant of land-loafer (1836, earlier land looper, 1795); partial loan translation of German Landläufer vagabond (Land LAND + Läufer runner, from laufen to run).

loam n. Before 1325 lam moistened clay; later lom (about 1350); developed from Old English (probably about 700) lām clay, mud, mire, earth (from Proto-Germanic laimaz*). Old English lām is cognate with Old Saxon lāmo, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch leem, Old High German leime (modern German Lehm), and related to Old English līm glue; see LIME¹. —v. 1600, from the noun.

loan n. About 1175 lan; later loan (before 1250); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic lān, related to ljā to lend). Through Middle English lan is cognate with Old English lān loan, the Old English form did not survive into Middle English, but its verb is found in modern English lend. Other Germanic cognates are found in Old Frisian lēn, Old Saxon lēhan loan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch leen, Old High German lēhan loan, lēhan borrow, lend (modern German leihen lend), and Gothic leiþwan to lend. Old Icelandic lān (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish lån) is from Proto-Germanic laiþwuniz*, -az-. —v. 1542–43 (perhaps before 1200); from the noun.

loath adj. About 1280 loth; earlier lath (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 700) lāth hostile, loathsome, injurious; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon lēth loathsome, Old High German leid (modern German Leid sorrow, harm), Middle Dutch leet (modern Dutch leed), and Old Icelandic leidhr loathsome (Swedish and Danish led, Norwegian lei), from Proto-Germanic laithaz*. —loathsome adj. Before 1400 laithsum foul, detestable; later lothsom fearsome, terrifying (before 1420); formed from Middle English lath, loth loath + -sum, -som, -some¹.

loathe v. About 1300 lothen be hateful or distasteful; also, about 1303, to hate, dislike; developed from Old English lāthian to hate (before 899), from lāth hostile, LOATH. Old English lāthian is cognate with Old Saxon lēthan and Old Icelandic leidha, from Proto-Germanic laithōjanan*.

lob v. 1847, possibly developed from an amalgam of earlier meanings: to move heavily or clumsily (1819), to cause to hang heavily (1599); perhaps associated with lobbe, lob, n., country bumpkin (1533), from earlier lobi a lazy lout (before 1376, and found as a surname Lobb, 1291); probably developed from Old English (unrecorded). —n. 1875, from the verb.

lobby n. 1593, entrance hall, passageway; earlier, cloister or covered walk (1533); borrowed from Medieval Latin lobia covered walk, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German louba hall, roof, modern German Laube covered way, bower, arcade).

The meaning of persons who try to influence legislators is first recorded in 1808 in American English, from the lobbyists' custom of gathering in the lobby outside a legislative chamber. Such a lobby originally (1640) referred to the one in the British House of Commons, and served for interviews with persons not belonging to the House. —v. Before 1848, American English; from the noun. —lobbyist n. 1863, American English, formed from lobby, v. + -ist.

lobe n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French lobe, and directly from Medieval Latin lobus, from Late Latin lobus hull, husk, pod, from Greek lobós lobe, vegetable pod.

lobelia n. 1739, New Latin, in allusion to Matthias de Lobel, 1538–1616, Flemish botanist.

lobotomy n. 1936, formed from English lobe + connective -o- + -tomy surgical incision.

lobster n. Before 1311–12 lopister, later lobster (1390); developed from Old English (before 1000) lopystre, probably from loppe spider, variant of lobbe; cognate with Middle Low German lobbe, lubbe thick, hanging lip, and Old Icelandic lubba large cod (fish).

local adj. 1392, borrowed possibly through Old French local, and directly from Late Latin locālis, from locus place, see LOCATE; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1824, local inhabitant; from the adjective. —localism n. (1823) —localization n. (1816) —localize v. (1792) locale n. 1772 local; later locale (1816); borrowed from French local; noun use of local, adj., from Old French; see LOCAL. The spelling with e is probably based on morale.

locality n. 1628, the fact of having a place or location; borrowed from French localité, from Late Latin localitatem (nominative localitās), from locālis belonging to a place, LOCAL; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of a geographical place or location, is first recorded in 1830.

locate v. 1739, mark the limits of (a place); borrowed from Latin locātus, past participle of locāre to place, from locus a place, from Old Latin stlocus; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of fix or establish in a place is first recorded in 1807 and that of find the exact place or locality of, in American English, in 1882. —location n. 1592, act of leasing for hire; borrowed from Middle French location, learned borrowing of Latin locātiōnem (nominative locātiō) a placing, leasing, from locāre hire out, lease, (originally) to place; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of position or place is first recorded in English in 1597.

loch n. 1375 lauch, borrowed from Gaelic loch, from Old Irish loch body of water, LAKE¹.

lock¹ n. means of fastening. About 1250 lok; developed from Old English loc bolt, fastening, enclosure (about 750, from Proto-Germanic lukan*, and related to lūcan to lock or close); cognate with Old Frisian lok, Old High German loh hole, opening (modern German Loch), Old Icelandic lok, loka fastening, lock, and Gothic luk*, in usluk opening. —v. About 1300 lokken; from the noun; replacement of Old English lūcan (about 750) to close, fasten, lock; cognate with Old Frisian lūka to close, Old Saxon lūkan, Old High German lūhhan (from Proto-Germanic lūkanan*), Old Icelandic lūka, Gothic galūkan. —locker n. 1313 loker a means of locking; later, locked receptacle (1388); formed from Middle English lokken, v., to lock + -er¹.

lock² n. tress of hair. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (about 700) loc; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon lok lock; Middle Dutch loc, locke (modern Dutch lok), Old High German loc (modern German Locke), and Old Icelandic lokker, from Proto-Germanic lukkás*; see LOCK¹.

locket n. 1679, ornamental case (with hinged cover); developed from Middle English loket crossbar, fastener (1354–55); borrowed from Old French loquet latch, diminutive of Old French loc, from Frankish (compare Old Icelandic lok fastening, LOCK¹).

loco n. 1844, American English, borrowed from Spanish loco, adj., insane, of uncertain origin (possibly borrowed from Arabic lauqa, lauq, feminine and adjective forms of 'alwaq fool, crazy person). —adj. 1887, American English; borrowed from Spanish loco.

locomotion n. 1646, formed in English from Latin locō from a place (ablative of locus place) + mōtiōnem (nominative mōtiō) MOTION.

locomotive adj. 1612, of or pertaining to locomotion; borrowed from French locomotif (feminine locomotive), from Latin locō from a place (ablative of locus place) + Late Latin mōtivus moving, MOTIVE; for suffix see -IVE; applied to a railroad engine in 1815. —n. 1829, from the adjective.

locus n. 1715, borrowing of Latin locus place. The sense in mathematics of a curve or other figure that contains all the points that satisfy a given condition is first recorded in 1727–51.

locust¹ n. kind of grasshopper. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French locuste, and directly from Latin lōcusta locust, lobster.

locust² n. any of various trees. 1615, fruit of the carob tree, probably so called from a supposed resemblance of the carob pod to the locust (insect). Greek akrís a locust or grasshopper, was commonly applied in the Levant to the carob pod and from very early times it has been believed that the "locusts" eaten by John the Baptist were these pods. In 1623 the word was used in the phrase locust tree for the carob tree, and by 1640 locust was applied to various other trees.

locution n. Probably before 1425 locucion; borrowed through Middle French locution, and directly from Latin locutiōnem (nominative locutiō) a speaking, from loquī speak; for suffix see -TION.

lode n. 1602, vein of metal ore; earlier, watercourse, channel (1572); developed from Middle English lode, lade course, carrying; see LOAD. The form lode was the original Middle English spelling of load; however, the two forms became differentiated in sense during the 1500's. —lodestone n. About 1515, literally, way-stone; formed from Middle English lode course, way, carrying + stone; so called from the early use of this stone as a magnet in guiding mariners.

lodge n. 1231 lhoge siege tower; later logge small shelter (1290); and lodge (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French loge arbor, covered walk, from Frankish laubja* (compare Old High German louba hall, roof, modern German Laube covered way, arcade; cognate with Old Icelandic lopt LOFT). The sense of a local branch of various societies appeared in 1686, having developed from an early sense of logge as the workshop of masons (1348). —v. Probably before 1200 loggen; later lodgen (before 1470); borrowed from Old French logier, from loge covered walk. —lodger n. Before 1325 loger tent dweller; earlier, as a surname Loggere (1208–12); formed from Middle English loggen to lodge + -er¹. The sense of one who lives in rented rooms is first found in 1596.

loess n. 1833, borrowed from German Löss, from Swiss German *lös*ch, adj., loose, related to German los loose; see -LESS. The -sch of Swiss German *lös*ch was evidently regarded as dialectal and altered to -s (-ss).

loft n. Before 1225, upper room, sky; developed from Old English (before 1000) loft air; borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic loft air, sky, upper story (-pt-pronounced as -ft-), Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish loft. The Scandinavian forms are cognate with Old English lyft air, Old Saxon luft, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lucht, Old High German luft (modern German Luft), and Gothic luftus; all from Proto-Germanic luftuz*. —v. 1518, to store (goods) in a loft; from the noun. The sense of hit (a ball) high into the air is first recorded in 1857. —lofty adj. About 1426 lofte of high rank, noble; earlier, as a surname Lofty (1332); formed from Middle English loft (in on loft on high, ALOFT) + *-y*¹.

log n. Before 1398 logge; earlier, as a surname Log (about 1210); of uncertain origin (not a borrowing of Old Icelandic lág felled tree).

The sense of a wooden float to measure a ship's speed is first recorded in 1574; hence logbook (before 1679) and log (1825). —v. 1699, from the noun. The sense of to record in a log is first recorded in 1823; that of travel (a distance) or attain (a speed) as noted in a log, is found in 1883.

loganberry n. 1893, American English, in allusion to James H. Logan, who developed it + berry.

logarithm n. 1615–16, borrowed from New Latin logarithmus; a compound of Greek lógos proportion, ratio, word (from légein speak) + arithmós number.

loge n. 1749, booth stall; 1768, box in a theater; borrowed from French loge, from Old French loge covered walk.

loggerhead n. 1588, probably formed from dialectal English logger heavy block of wood (log + *-er*¹) + head. The phrase at loggerheads in disagreement, is first recorded in 1831, probably from the earlier loggerhead thick-headed iron instrument (1687).

logic n. Before 1378 logyk system of reasoning; borrowed from Old French logique, learned borrowing from Latin logica, from Greek logikḗ téchnē reasoning art, from lógos reason, idea, word, from légein speak. The meaning of use of argument, reasoning, is first recorded in 1601 and that of reason, sound sense in 1682. The sense of a system of operations in a computer is first recorded in 1950. —logical adj. Probably before 1425, based on logic or reason; later, capable of reasoning correctly (1664); borrowed from Medieval Latin logicalis, from Late Latin logica logic; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —logician n. Before 1382 logicien; borrowed from Old French logicien, from logique logic + -ien -ian.

logistics n. 1879, borrowed from French logistique logistics, from Middle French logistique, formed (by influence of logistique pertaining to calculation) from logis lodging, from Old French (1308) logeis (earlier logeiz*) shelter for an army, encampment (with -eiz, suffix from Vulgar Latin -āticus), from loge; see LODGE; for suffix see -ICS.

logo n. 1937, probably shortened form of logogram sign or character representing a word (1840); formed in English from Greek lógos word (see LOGIC) + English *-gram*¹.

logy adj. 1848, American English; perhaps borrowed from Dutch log heavy, dull; cognate with Middle Low German luggich sleepy, sluggish; or perhaps a variant of British English loggy sluggish in movement (1847).

—logy a combining form meaning: 1 study or science of, as in biology; 2 speech, expression, or discussion, as in eulogy, tautology; 3 collection, as in anthology. Borrowed through French -logie or Latin -logia, and directly from Greek -logía, in part from lógos speech, word, discourse, but generally from -lógos one who deals with or treats of (a certain subject, e.g. astrológos astronomer); both Greek forms from légein speak (of); see LEGEND. See -OLOGY.

loin n. Often loins, pl. Before 1325 loyne; borrowed from eastern Old French loigne, from Vulgar Latin lumbea*, shortened form of lumbea carō* meat of the loin, from Latin lumbus loin.

This borrowing from Old French replaced the native Middle English lende (plural lendes), developed from Old English lenden, pl., loins; cognate with Old High German lentī, lentīn kidneys, loins (modern German Lende loin, Lenden loins), Old Saxon lendin loins, Middle Dutch lendine (modern Dutch lende loin), Old Frisian lendenum loins (from Proto-Germanic land-wīn-*), Old Icelandic lend loin (Norwegian lend, Swedish lånd and Danish lænd). Related to LUMBAGO, LUMBAR.

loiter v. About 1425 loitren, borrowed from Middle Dutch loteren be loose or erratic, shake, totter; probably cognate with Old English lūtian lurk, Middle Low German and late Middle High German lūschen (modern German lauschen eavesdrop), Old High German luzēn lurk, and Gothic lutōn mislead; see LITTLE.

loll v. Before 1376 lollen to lounge idly, hang loosely; possibly of an origin similar to that of Middle Dutch lollen to doze, mumble; later, to hang loosely; see LULL.

Lollard n. 1395, borrowed from Middle Dutch lollaerd, literally, mumbler or mutterer, so called by their critics, who regarded them as heretics pretending to be pious and humble, from lollen to mumble or doze.

lollipop or lollypop n. 1784 lolly-pops sweetmeats, candy, perhaps formed from loll to dangle the tongue, LOLL + *pop*¹ stroke, slap. The piece of hard candy on a stick, is first recorded in the 1920's.

lollygag v. 1862 lallygag a fooling around; American English, perhaps formed from dialectal English lolly tongue + *gag*² deceive or trick.

lone adj. About 1378, shortened form of alone, by misdivision of al one, alone all by oneself, as a lone (see ALONE) or possibly through loss of weakly stressed a- in al one, alone. —lonely adj. 1607, formed from English lone + *-ly*¹. —loneliness (before 1586) —lonesome adj. 1647, formed from English lone + *-some*¹.

long¹ adj. that measures much from end to end. About 1175 long, lang; found in Old English (before 725) lang, long; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon lang long, Middle Dutch lanc long² v. yearn. Probably before 1200 longen; developed from Old English (about 875) langian (from Proto-Germanic langōjanan*); cognate with Old Saxon langōn to long, Middle Low German langen to reach, hand, Middle Dutch langhen (modern Dutch aanlangen), Old High German langēn to long (modern German verlangen ask, desire, demand), and Old Icelandic langa to long. —longing n. Before 1250 longinge a yearning, formed from Middle English longen yearn + -inge *-ing*¹.

(modern Dutch lang), Old High German and modern German lang, Old Icelandic langr (Danish and Norwegian lang, Swedish lång), and Gothic laggs, from Proto-Germanic langa-*. —adv. About 1175 longe; found in Old English lange, longe (about 725); from the adjective. —n. long time. Apparently about 1200; from the adjective.

longevity n. 1615, borrowed from Late Latin longaevitās, from Latin longaevus long-lived (longus LONG¹, adj. + aevum life-time, AGE); for suffix see -ITY.

longitude n. 1391, borrowed through Old French longitude, and directly from Latin longitūdō length, from longus LONG¹, adj.; for suffix see -TUDE.

longshoreman n. 1811, formed from long shore, longshore along the shore + man. Longshore is a shortening of alongshore (1779, along + shore).

look v. Before 1121 locon, later loken (about 1200); developed from Old English lōcian see, gaze, look, spy (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon lōkon see, look, spy, Middle Dutch loeken, Old High German luogēn look out (modern German lügen look, peep), of unknown origin. —n. Probably before 1200 loke act of looking, glance; from the verb.

loom¹ n. machine for weaving cloth. Probably before 1200 lome tool, implement; later, a loom for weaving (1380); developed from Old English gelōma utensil, tool (before 800); formed from ge- perfective prefix (see ENOUGH) + -lōma, as in andlōman, pl., apparatus, furniture, of unknown origin. The spelling loom appears as early as 1440.

loom² v. appear dimly. 1542, applied to a ship; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish loma move slowly; see LUMBER²).

loon¹ n. large diving bird. 1634, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian lom loon, Old Icelandic lōmr); see LAMENT.

loon² n. stupid person, scamp, idler. Probably about 1450 lowen rascal, of uncertain origin (compare early modern Dutch loen stupid person).

loony adj. 1872, American English; probably developed by shortening and alteration from LUNATIC, but also influenced by *loon*², and by lunatic, found with the spelling luny. —n. 1884, from the adjective.

loop n. Probably about 1390 loupe; borrowed probably from a Celtic source (compare Gaelic lub bend, Irish lúbaim). However, the form of the Middle English word suggests the Celtic word was reshaped by blending with a borrowing from Scandinavian (compare Old Icelandic hlaup a leap, run, hlaupa to LEAP). —v. Probably before 1400 loupén, from loupe, n., loop.

loophole n. 1464 lopehole small opening for ventilation; later loop hole small opening to look or shoot through, or admit light (1591). The word is formed after Middle English loupe opening in a wall (1386, loop 1512); possibly cognate with Middle Dutch lūpen, glūpen to watch, peer (modern Dutch luipen, gluipen to spy, sneak). Medieval Latin loupa (1388) was apparently borrowed from Middle English.

The common figurative meaning of an outlet or means of escape is first recorded in 1663–64.

loose adj. Probably before 1200 louse not firmly attached; later loos (about 1350); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic lauss loose; see -LESS). —v. Probably before 1200 lowsen; from the adjective. —loosen v. Before 1382 losnen; later lousnen (probably before 1425); formed from Middle English los, loos loose + -nen *-en*¹.

loot n. 1788, Anglo-Indian loot, borrowed from Hindi lūt, probably from Sanskrit lōta-m, lōtra-m booty, stolen property. —v. 1842, from the noun.

lop¹ v. cut off. 1519, developed from Middle English loppe, n., the smaller branches and twigs trimmed from trees (1355–56); of uncertain origin, but related to lopped (1458), participial adj., trimmed; found earlier in the place name Loppedthorn (1287).

lop² v. droop. 1578, probably variant of LAP (as flop is of flap) and closely related in meaning to LOB to droop (1599). —lopsided adj. 1711 lapsided (of a ship) unevenly balanced; formed from English *lop*² + -sided (1400's), on the pattern of lop-eared (1687, lap-eared).

lope v. About 1300 loupén to jump or leap; later lopen (before 1376); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hlaupa to run, LEAP). The sense of run with a long, easy stride is first recorded before 1825. —n. Before 1393 lope a jump or leap; from the verb.

loquacious adj. 1667, probably a back formation from English loquacity + -ous, though theoretically formed in English from the stem of Latin loquāx (genitive loquācis) talkative + English -ous. —loquacity n. Probably before 1200 loquacite; borrowed from Latin loquacitatem (nominative loquacitās) talkativeness, from loquāx (genitive loquācis) talkative, from loqui to speak, talk, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ITY.

loran n. 1943, American English, acronym formed from lo(ng) ra(nge) n(avigation).

lord n. Before 1121 laverd; later loverd, lord (about 1250); developed from Old English hlāford master of a household, ruler, superior (about 725, in Beowulf); literally, one who guards a loaf or loaves (hlāf bread, LOAF¹ + weard keeper, guardian, WARD); compare LADY. —v. About 1340 lorden; from the noun. —lordly adj. Before 1225 loverdlich; later lordlich (before 1376) and lordli (about 1395); formed from Middle English loverd, lord lord + -lich, -li *-ly*². —adv. About 1350, from the adjective. —lordship n. About 1300 louerdshipe; later lordshipe lose v. 1120 losen be lost, perish; later, be deprived of, lose (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 725) losian be lost, perish, from los destruction, loss, related to Old English forlēosan to lose; cognate with Old Frisian forliāsa to lose, Old Saxon farliosan, Middle Dutch verliesen (modern Dutch verliezen), Old High German firliosan (modern German verlieren), and Gothic fraliusan, from Proto-Germanic fra-leusanan*. The modern English pronunciation of lose (lüz) is probably the result of influence of loose, which in to lose one's hold closely approaches the meaning of lose.

(about 1350); developed from Old English hlāfordscipe rule or dominion of a lord (before 899), from hlāford lord + -scipe -ship.

lore n. About 1300, developed from Old English (before 725) lār learning, teaching, knowledge, doctrine; cognate with Old Frisian lāre doctrine, teaching, Old Saxon lēra, Middle Dutch lēre (modern Dutch leer), Old High German lēra (modern German Lehre), from Proto-Germanic laizō*.

loss n. Probably before 1200 los death, destruction; later, a losing, loss (before 1338); found in Old English los loss, destruction (before 899), and possibly influenced by Old Icelandic los looseness, breaking up, from Proto-Germanic lusan*; see LOSE.

The Old and Middle English form was probably reshaped by analogy with lost, past participle of losen to lose.

lot n. About 1300, object used to decide something by chance; later, portion, share (probably before 1350); developed from Old English hlot in compound huon-hlotum, adv., by little portions, minutely (before 800). The Old English form hlot, abstracted from the compound above, and derived from Proto-Germanic Hlutan*, is cognate with Old Frisian hlot lot, Old Saxon hlōt, Middle Low German lot, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lot, Old High German hluz, hlōz (modern German Los), Old Icelandic hlutr (Danish lod, Swedish lott, and Norwegian lodd, lott), and Gothic hlauts.

The sense of a plot or portion of land is first recorded in 1633 and that of a group, collection, set (as in a bad lot, a large lot of ore) in 1725, which by 1812 evolved into the sense of a great many, often used in the plural (a lot of people, lots of money).

Lothario n. 1756, from the name of the principal male character in Nicholas Rowe's play The Fair Penitent (1703). The name had been previously used for a somewhat similar character in William Davenant's play The Cruel Brother (1630).

lotion n. Before 1400 loscion; borrowed through Old French lotion, from Latin lōtiōnem (nominative lōtiō) a washing, from lōtus, popular form of lautus, past participle of lavare to wash (later, lavātus, past participle of lavāre to wash, LAVE); for suffix see -TION.

The spelling lotion, after the French and Latin, appeared in English in 1549.

lottery n. 1567, borrowed from Middle French loterie, from Middle Dutch loterje, from lot share, LOT; for suffix see -ERY.

lotto n. 1778 loto, borrowed through French loto, and directly from Italian lotto lotto, lot, from Old French lot lot, from Frankish (compare Old Frisian and Old English hlot LOT).

lotus n. 1540–41, borrowed from Latin lōtus, from Greek lōtós, the name of several plants, perhaps from a Semitic source (compare Hebrew lōt myrrh).

loud adj. About 1175 lude; later loud (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (before 725) hlūd making noise, sonorous; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hlūd loud, Middle Dutch luut (modern Dutch luid), Old High German hlūt, lūt (modern German laut) from Proto-Germanic Hlūdās*, Old Icelandic hljóðh silence, hearing, and Gothic hliuma hearing. —adv. Probably before 1200 lude; later loude (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 750) hlūde, from Proto-Germanic Hlūdai*, and cognate with Old Saxon hlūdo, Middle Dutch luut (modern Dutch luid), Old High German hlūto, lūto (modern German laut).

lounge v. 1508, Scottish, of uncertain origin, possibly borrowed from French s'allonger (pareseusement) to lounge about, lie at full length, Middle French and Old French alongir, longuir, eslongier, from Old French alongier lengthen, long, lonc long, from Latin longus *LONG*¹, adj. —n. 1775, from the verb. The meaning of a comfortable drawing room is first recorded in 1881, and that of a couch, in 1830.

lour v. See *LOWER*².

louse n. Before 1300 louse; developed from Old English (about 700) lūs; cognate with Middle Low German lūs louse, Middle Dutch luus (modern Dutch luis), Old High German lūs (modern German Laus), and Old Icelandic lūs (modern Icelandic lús), from Proto-Germanic lūs*.

The plural lice, known in Old English before the end of the 600's (lyse, lyse), is the result of adjustment of the vowel in louse to a more forward position, caused by the following vowel sound represented by i in Proto-Germanic lūsiz*. —v. Before 1387, to remove lice from; from the noun. —lousy adj. Probably about 1350 lousy infested with lice; formed from louse louse + *-y*¹. The figurative sense of worthless, inferior, contemptible, is first recorded in 1395.

lout n. Before 1548, developed from louten, v., bow down (probably before 1300), from Old English (before 900) lūtan bow low, earlier forthlūtan (before 830). Old English lūtan is cognate with Old Icelandic lútr bend down, stooping, lūta to stoop; see LITTLE.

louver n. Before 1325 lover chimney, skylight; later louver (1367–68); borrowed from Old French lover, lovier and Medieval Latin lovarium, luvarium; perhaps from Germanic (compare Old High German loubā upper room, roof; see LOBBY). The sense of overlapping strips in a window, etc. is first recorded in 1555, and earlier in louverstrings cords to adjust louverboards (1356–57).

love n. About 1200 luve; later love (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (before 725) lufu love; cognate with Old Frisian luve love, Old Saxon luva, Old High German luba, and Gothic -lubō, from Proto-Germanic lubō*. A different grade, leuba-* and its derivatives, produced Middle Dutch and modern Dutch liefde, and Old High German liubi, liuba (modern German Liebe). —v. Before 1121 luven; later loven (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (before 725) lufian; cognate with Old High German lubōn to love (modern German lieben) from Proto-Germanic lubōjanan*. —lovely adj. Probably before 1200 luvelich, before 1375 loveli lovely, loving; developed from Old English (about 1000) luflic (from lufu love + -lic -ly²).

low¹ adj. not high. About 1175 lah; later low (about 1280); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic lāgr low, Swedish låg, Danish lav, Norwegian lav, låg, from Proto-Germanic læzaz*). The Scandinavian words are cognate with Old Frisian and Middle Low German lēch low, Middle Dutch lage (modern Dutch laag low), Middle High German læge flat, and dialectal German lāg flat. —n. About 1300, from the adjective. —adv. Probably before 1200 lahe; later lowe (before 1250); from the adjective.

low² v. make the sound of a cow. Before 1300 lowen, developed from Old English (before 1000) hlōwan; cognate with Middle Low German lōien to low, Middle Dutch loeyen, loeyen (modern Dutch loeien), Old Low Franconian luon, luogin, and Old High German hluoēn, from Proto-Germanic Hlō-*. —n. 1549, from the verb.

lower¹ v. let down or haul down. 1606 lowre to descend, sink; 1659 lower to cause to descend; developed from lower adj., and replacing Middle English lahzhenn to make humble (probably before 1200); later lowen, lowen to lower in space, come downward (probably before 1300); developed from lahzh, loue, low adj. The original Middle English verb to low is recorded as late as 1793. —adj. Probably before 1200 lahre, comparative of lah low + -re (feminine, neuter) or -ra (masculine) comparative suffix; later lower (before 1398); see LOW¹.

lower² or lour v. look dark and threatening. Probably about 1225 luren to frown or scowl; later lourcen (probably before 1300); either developed from Old English lūran* or borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch. The probable Old English form would be cognate with Middle Low German lūren lie in wait, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch loeren, Middle High German lūren (modern German lauern), and dialectal Norwegian and Swedish lurka move slowly, creep forward. The word's form and meaning suggests a number of words starting with gl-, for example English glower and Low German gluren.

lox n. About 1930–34, American English; borrowed from Yiddish laks, from Middle High German lahs salmon, LAX².

loyal adj. 1531, faithful, especially in allegiance to a ruler or country; borrowed from Middle French loyal faithful, from Old French loial, leial faithful, lawful, from Latin lēgālis legal, from lēx (genitive lēgis) law; for suffix see -AL¹. Modern English loyal replaced Middle English lel (recorded probably before 1300); later leal (about 1350); borrowed from Old French leal, leial, from Latin lēgālis legal. —loyalty n. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French loialté, from loial loyal. During the 1500's loyalty replaced earlier leaute (1265, borrowed from Old French leauté, from leal); for suffix see -TY².

lozenge n. 1320 losonge; 1330 lozenge; borrowed from Old French losenge windowpane, small square cake of herbs, etc., or other things with a quadrilateral shape, from pre-Roman, perhaps either Iberian lausā* flat stone (the source of Old Provençal lauza, Catalan llosa, Spanish losa, Portuguese lousa), found also in Latin lausiae lapidēs stone chips, or Gaulish lausā*, from a pre-Celtic language.

luau n. 1853, feast generally held outdoors; earlier, baked dish of young taro tops (1843); borrowed from Hawaiian lū'au (literally) young taro tops (so called because taro tops were served at an outdoor feast).

lubber n. About 1390 lobre; later lobur (before 1475); developed from or related to earlier lobi a lazy lout (before 1376); see LOB.

lubricate v. 1623, borrowed from Latin lubricātus, past participle of lubricāre make slippery or smooth, from lubricus slippery; for suffix see -ATE¹. Modern English lubricate replaced lubrifien (recorded probably before 1425, and borrowed perhaps from Middle French lubrifier, and from Medieval Latin lubrificare make slippery). —lubricant adj. 1822–34, lubricating; borrowed from Latin lubricātem (nominative lubricāns), present participle of lubricāre to lubricate; for suffix see -ANT. —n. 1828, from the adjective. —lubrication n. (1803) lucid adj. 1591, bright or shining; borrowed through Middle French lucide, and directly from Latin lucidus light, bright, clear; related to lūcere to shine. The sense of easy to follow or understand is first recorded in 1786. —lucidity n. 1656, brightness; later, intellectual clearness (1851); borrowed from French lucidité, learned borrowing from Late Latin luciditās, from Latin lucidus bright; for suffix see -ITY.

Lucifer n. Old English Lucifer Satan; also, the morning star (probably about 725); borrowed from Latin lūcifer the morning star; literally, light-bringing (lūx, genitive lūcis light + ferre carry).

This name for Satan comes from the Biblical passage (translated from the Vulgate) “How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!” (Isaiah 14:12).

luck n. Before 1500 lucke, luk good fortune; possibly a back formation from earlier lucky, but more likely borrowed from Middle Dutch luc, shortened form of gheluc, ghelucke happiness, good fortune, luck (modern Dutch geluk); cognate with Middle Low German lucke luck, Middle High German gelücke, and modern German Glück happiness, good fortune, success, luck. Perhaps the word came into English as a gambling term, though the ultimate etymology of the word is unknown. —lucky adj. About 1450 lucky; probably formed from Middle English luk luck + *-y*¹.

lucrative adj. About 1412 lucratif, borrowed from Old French lucratif (feminine lucrative), and directly from Latin lucrātīvus, from lucrāri to gain, from lucrum gain or profit, see LUCRE; for suffix see -IVE.

lucre n. About 1390 lucre illicit gain; also, monetary gain, profit (before 1393); borrowed from Latin lucrum gain or profit.

luddite or Luddite n. 1811, person strongly opposed to increased mechanization, in allusion to the Luddites, who destroyed machinery in England for fear its use would put them out of work. Their name supposedly derives from Ned Ludd (worker who destroyed stocking frames) + *-ite*¹.

The word by 1961 had contemporary application to use of automation and computers.

ludicrous adj. 1619, intended for play or pastime, sportive; borrowed from Latin lūdicus, from lūdicum source of amusement, joke, from lūdere to play; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of ridiculous, is first recorded in English in 1782.

luff n. Probably before 1200 lof a spar holding out and down the windward tack of a square sail; later lufe (probably before 1400); borrowed through Old French lof probably a device for adjusting a sail; perhaps originally, an oar to assist in steering; or borrowed from Middle Dutch loef probably the windward side of a ship; cognate with Middle Low German lof side of a ship toward the wind. The sense of the windward side of a ship appeared about 1380 in Middle English and that of a turning the bow toward the wind before 1400. —v. Before 1393 loven, from lof, n., luff.

lug¹ v. drag. Probably about 1380 luggen move heavily; later loggen drag (about 1390); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish lugga, Norwegian luge to pull by the hair). —n. 1545, something heavy; later, act of lugging (before 1616), from the verb.

lug² n. part to hold or grip something. 1624, handle of a pitcher, etc.; developed from luggie, Scottish, earflap of a cap, ear (1495); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish lugg forelock, Norwegian lugg tuft of hair). The sense in lug bolt is first recorded in 1794.

luge n. 1905, borrowing of French luge small coasting sled, from dialectal French (Savoy and Switzerland), from Medieval Latin studia sled, perhaps from a Gaulish word of the same root as English SLED and SLIDE.

luggage n. 1596, formed from English *lug*¹ to drag + -age.

lugger n. 1757, probably formed from English lug(sail) + *-er*¹; see *LUG*¹.

lugubrious adj. 1601, formed in English from French lugubre, or directly from Latin lūgubris mournful, mourning (from lūgere mourn) + English suffix -ous. Latin lūgubris (earlier lūgosris*) is cognate with Greek hygrós mournful or sad.

lukewarm adj. 1373 luke warm; later leuke-warm (probably before 1425), a compound of leuk, luke, adj., tepid + warm. Note also, about 1450, lew warm, from Old English hlēowe (adverb) warm. The source of Middle English leuk, luke (probably before 1200), if related to -hlēow warm, hlēo shelter or LEE, remains obscure, though it is cognate with Low German lūk tepid, modern Dutch leuk, East Frisian lūk, luke tepid, weak.

lull v. Before 1325 lullen hush to sleep; possibly of imitative origin; similar forms are found in Swedish lulla, Danish and Norwegian lulle lull, Middle Dutch lollen to doze, mumble (modern Dutch lullen to prattle), Middle Low German lollen (modern German lullen) to lull. —n. 1719, something which lulls; from the verb.

lullaby n. 1588, song sung to children to soothe them to rest; developed from earlier lullay by a soothing refrain to pacify infants (about 1542); formed from Middle English lollai (probably before 1325; later lullay, 1372; from lullen to LULL) + -by, as in good-by.

lumbago n. 1693 (possibly earlier, implied by lumbaginous, 1620); borrowing of Late Latin lumbāgō disease or weakness of the loins or lumbar region of the lower back, from Latin lumbus LOIN.

lumbar adj. 1656, borrowed from New Latin lumbaris of the loins, from Latin lumbus LOIN; for suffix see -AR. —n. 1858, from the adjective.

lumber¹ n. timber cut into boards. Probably 1662, American English, specialized meaning of the earlier sense of disused articles of furniture or the like, heavy, useless objects that take up room inconveniently (1552); probably a noun use of *LUMBER*², v.

lumber² v. move heavily or clumsily. 1530, developed from Middle English lomerēn move slowly or haltingly (probably about 1380 lomerande, present participle); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish loma move slowly and haltingly, related to Old Icelandic lami LAME).

lumen n. 1898, borrowed from French lumen, from Latin lūmen light, opening; see LUMINOUS.

luminary n. Before 1449 luminary source of light, lamp; later luminarie (before 1475); borrowed from Middle French luminarie, luminare lamp, light, from Late Latin lūmināre that which gives light; formed from Latin lūmen (genitive lūminis) light + -āris (specialized neuter use of adjective suffix); for suffix see -ARY. The sense of a notable person, celebrity, is first recorded in 1692.

luminescence n. 1896, possibly a back formation from luminescent, or a formation from Latin lūminis (genitive of lūmen light) + English -escence. —luminescent adj. 1889, formed from Latin lūminis (genitive of lūmen light) + English -escent.

luminous adj. Probably before 1425 luminose; later luminouse (1471); borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French lumineux, from Latin lūminōsus shining, from lūmen (genitive lūminis) light, related to lūcere to shine; for suffix see -OUS. —luminosity n. 1634, either borrowed from French luminosité, from Latin lūminōsus luminous + French -ité -ity; or formed from English luminous + -ity, perhaps by influence of French luminosité.

lummo n. Before 1825, East Anglia dialect, apparently related to lummock to move heavily or clumsily, of uncertain origin; compare German Lümmel lout, from an archaic (now dialectal) adjective lumm limp, flabby, Middle High German lūeme flabby, soft, mild. Phonetic modification from -ock to lump¹ n. solid mass. Before 1325 lumpe; of uncertain origin (compare early modern Dutch lompe mass, chunk, piece; related to Dutch lomp rag, tatter), cognate with German Lumpen rag, and Middle High German lumpe rag. —v. 1624; from the noun. —lumpy adj. 1707, formed from English *lump*¹ + *-y*¹.

-ocks, written -ox, was probably influenced by association with ox as a heavy-moving and dull beast of burden.

lump² v. endure. 1791 (in "As you like it, you may lump it"), apparently extended sense of to look sulky, dislike (1577); of uncertain origin.

lumpectomy n. 1972, formed from English *lump*¹ + -ectomy, as in mastectomy.

lumpenproletariat n. 1924, borrowing of German Lumpenproletariat, coined in 1850 by Karl Marx from Lumpen (volk) rabble (from Lumpen rag) + Proletariat; see LUMP¹.

lunacy n. 1541, formed from English luna(tic) + -cy. The sense of extreme folly is first recorded in 1588.

lunar adj. Probably before 1425 lunare, lunar crescent-shaped; borrowed through Old French lunaire, or directly from Latin lūnāris of the moon, from lūna moon; for suffix see -AR. The sense "of or belonging to the moon" is first recorded in 1626.

lunatic adj. About 1300 lunatyke, borrowed from Old French lunatique insane, from Latin lūnāticus moon-struck, from lūna moon; so called because it was thought recurrent attacks of insanity were brought on by phases of the moon; for suffix see -IC. —n. About 1378 lunatik, probably from the adjective.

lunch n. 1829, shortened form of LUNCHEON. —v. 1823, from the noun, though of preceding date.

luncheon n. 1580 luncheon a thick piece, hunk; later, a light meal (lunching, before 1652, and luncheon, 1706). Semantic development was probably influenced by north English lunch hunk of bread or cheese; morphological development may have been by alteration of nuncheon light meal, developed from Middle English nonechenche, nonschench (1342), a compound of none NOON + schench drink, from Old English scenc, from scencan pour out.

lung n. Probably before 1300 lunge; developed from Old English lungen, pl. (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian lungen lung, Old Saxon lunga, Middle Low German lung, Middle Dutch longe (modern Dutch long), Old High German lungun (modern German Lunge), and Old Icelandic lunga (Danish and Norwegian lunge, Swedish lunga), from Proto-Germanic lungw-*.

lunge v. 1735, shortened form of allonge to thrust (1668); borrowed from French allonger to extend, thrust, from Old French alongier to lengthen, make long (à- to + Old French long, from Latin longus LONG¹, adj.). —n. 1748, probably from the verb lunge; or shortened form of allonge (1731); from the English verb allonge.

lunk n. 1867, shortened form of earlier lunkhead (1852, possible alteration of *lump*¹ + head).

lupine¹ n. plant. 1373 lupyne; borrowed from Old French lupin or directly from Latin lupīnus, lupīnum a lupine (plant), from lupīnus of the wolf, LUPINE². The association with wolf is unknown, but is perhaps in allusion to the plant's quality of destroying the land it grows on.

lupine² adj. wolflike, fierce. 1660, borrowed from French lupine, learned borrowing from Latin lupīnus of the wolf, from Latin lupus wolf; for suffix see *-INE*¹.

lupus n. 1392 lupe, before 1398 lupus any of several diseases that cause ulceration of the skin; borrowing of Medieval Latin lupus, from Latin lupus wolf (apparently from its rapid eating away of the affected part).

lurch¹ n. sudden leaning or roll to one side. 1819, originally a nautical term, of unknown origin; (perhaps abstracted from lee lurches, variant of lee larches a sudden jerky roll of a ship to the leeward, possibly representing an alteration of lee latch in reference to keeping a ship from going leeward). —v. 1833, from the noun.

lurch² n. 1584, predicament or discomfiture; later in leave in the lurch (1596); probably from lurch v., implied in lurching (about 1330) a complete victory in lorche a game similar to backgammon; borrowed from Old French lourche name of a game, also adj. ensnared, duped. Also perhaps related to lurken (about 1300), lorken (before 1375) to lie hidden, lie in ambush, LURK.

lure n. About 1386, attraction, enticement; earlier bringen to lure bring under control (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French lure, from Old French loirre device used to recall hawks, lure, from Frankish (compare Middle High German luoder and Middle Low German löder lure, bait, from Proto-Germanic lōthran*, in modern German Luder, related to Old High German ladōn to call, invite, German einladen invite). Old High German ladōn is cognate with Old Saxon and Old English lathian to call or invite, Old Frisian lathia, Middle Dutch laden, Old Icelandic ladha, and Gothic lathōn. —v. About 1378 luren, from the noun.

lurid adj. 1656, lighted up with a red or fiery glare; borrowed from Latin lūridus pale yellow, ghastly, of uncertain origin. The sense of terrible, ghastly, sensational, is first recorded in English in 1850.

lurk v. About 1300 lurken to hide or lie hidden, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian and Swedish lurka move slowly, creep forward); sometimes considered a frequentative form with -k (as in the pair tale, talk) of louren frown, LOWER².

luscious adj. Before 1400 licius delicious; later lucius (about 1450); perhaps an alteration by aphesis from DELICIOUS.

lush¹ adj. tender and juicy. 1440 lusch lax or soft; probably an alteration of lasche loose or weak (1440), earlier lacche (before 1300) and in a surname Lacheman (1212); borrowed from Old French lasche soft, succulent (as young shoots), from laschier loosen, from Late Latin laxicare become shaky, related to Latin laxare loosen, from laxus loose, LAX¹. The sense of succulent and luxuriant in growth is first recorded in English in 1610.

lush² n. drunkard. 1890, person who drinks too much; earlier, liquor (1790); perhaps a humorous use of LUSH¹, in the sense of watery or juicy or a back formation from lushing a drunkard (1840), though other use (v., indulge in drink, 1811) and lushy drunk, 1811; lushing action of drinking, 1829; lush ken alehouse, 1790, must have contributed to the current meaning.

lust n. Old English (before 725) lust desire, pleasure; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon lust desire, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch lust, Old High German lust (modern German Lust), Old Icelandic losti (Middle Swedish luste, loste, Danish lyst, possibly borrowed from Low German), and Gothic lustus, from Proto-Germanic lustis*. The sense of physical desire, bodily appetite, appeared in Old English before 1000, and that of sexual desire, passion, about 1000. —v. About 1175 lusten to desire, from the noun. —lustful adj. Old English (before 900) lustfull having a strong or excessive desire (lust + -full -ful). The meaning of sensuous is first recorded about 1340.

luster n. About 1522 lustre; borrowed from Middle French lustre, from Italian lustro splendor, brilliancy, luster, from lustrare illuminate, from Latin lustrare spread light over, brighten, related to lucere shine. The sense of fame, glory, brilliance, is first recorded in English about 1555. —lustrous adj. 1601, formed from English lustre + -ous.

lusty adj. Probably about 1200 lusty merry, cheerful, lively; later, healthy, strong, vigorous (about 1387–95); formed from Middle English lust vigor, energy, disposition, happiness (in Old English, desire, pleasure; see LUST) + -y¹, perhaps by influence of Middle Dutch lustich merry, cheerful.

lute n. 1295, borrowed from Old French lut, leüt, from Old Provençal laüt, from Arabic al-‘ūd the oud (Arabian lute), formed from al the + ‘ūd oud; literally, wood.

lutein n. 1869, formed in English from Latin luteum egg yolk (from neuter of luteus yellow, from lutum yellow weed) + English -in².

lutetium n. 1911, New Latin, from Latin Lutetia (the name of an ancient town on the site of modern Paris) + New Latin -ium.

lutz n. 1938, probably alteration of the name of Gustave Lussi, 20th-century Swiss figure skater, who invented the jump.

luxuriant adj. About 1540, prolific; borrowed possibly from Middle French luxuriant (used of vegetation), or directly from Latin luxuriantem (nominative luxuriāns), present participle of luxuriare have to excess, grow profusely, LUXURIATE; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of growing abundantly, lush, is first recorded in English in 1661. —luxuriance n. 1728–46, formed from English luxuriant; for suffix see -ANCE.

luxuriate v. 1621, borrowed perhaps by influence of French luxurier indulge in lustful pursuits, from Latin luxuriātum, past participle of luxuriare indulge or have to excess, from luxuria excess, LUXURY; for suffix see -ATE¹.

luxury n. 1340 luxurie lust, lasciviousness; borrowed from Old French luxurie, from Latin luxuria excess, luxury, from luxus (genitive luxūs) excess, extravagance, magnificence, related to luxus, adj., dislocated, and luctari wrestle, strain; see LOCK² tress; for suffix see -Y³. The sense of indulgence in what is choice or costly is first recorded in 1633, and that of something giving comfort or pleasure but not really necessary in 1704. —luxurious adj. Probably before 1300 luxoriosus lustful, lascivious; borrowing of Anglo-French luxurious, Old French luxorios, from Latin luxuriōsus, from luxuria luxury; for suffix see -OUS.

-ly¹ a suffix forming adverbs, chiefly from adjectives, and meaning: 1 in a _____ manner, as in cheerfully, warmly. 2 in _____ ways or respects, as in financially. 3 to a _____ degree, as in greatly. 4 in, to, or from a _____ direction, as in northwardly. 5 in the _____ place, as in thirdly. 6 at a _____ time, as in recently. Middle English -ly, -li (the common form by the 1400's), shortening (influenced by Scandinavian -liga) of earlier -liche, -like, developed from Old English -lice (derived from the adjective suffix -lic -LY²).

In Old English most adverbs were formed on an adjective in -lic (except for baerlice barely, sārlice sorely, and others formed directly on the simple adjective), but as the sound represented by -e in -liche and -like was gradually lost in Middle English, it became the practice to attach -ly, -li to an adjective without the intervening adjective suffix, except for an occasional use of friendlily. A curious formation also exists in partly which is formed of a noun + -ly.

Other adjectives that form adverbs in -ly undergo contraction. This group ending in -le (double, simple) includes doubly, simply. Another form of contraction (but only graphically) is the loss of l in words that end in -ll, such as full, which becomes ful- + -ly when written.

-ly² a suffix forming adjectives and meaning: 1 like a _____, as in ghostly. 2 like that of a _____, as in brotherly. 3 suited to a _____, as in womanly. 4 of each or every _____, as in daily. 5 that is a _____, as in heavenly. Middle English -ly, -li (the universal form by the 1400's, but found commonly in the 1300's), shortening (influenced by Scandinavian -lig-) of earlier -lich, -lik; developed from Old English -lic; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon -lik -ly, Middle Dutch -lijc, Old High German -lih, -lih (modern German -lich), Old Icelandic -ligr, and Gothic -leiks; derived from the Proto-Germanic root that is the source of Old English lic body; see LIKE¹ similar.

lyceum n. 1579–80, borrowing of Latin Lyceum, a grove near Athens, where Aristotle taught, from Greek Lýkeion, from neuter of Lýkeios "Wolf-slayer," an epithet of Apollo, whose temple was near the Lyceum. Compare ACADEMY.

lye n. Before 1300 leihe; later lie (before 1400); developed from Old English (about 700) læg, lēag; cognate with Middle Dutch lōghe lye (modern Dutch loog), Old High German louga (modern German Lauge), Old Icelandic laug bath, hot spring, from Proto-Germanic lauzō*.

lymph n. 1725, nearly colorless liquid in the tissues of the body; earlier, water (before 1630); borrowed from French lymphe and New Latin lympa, both from Latin lympa water, clear water, variant of lumpae waters, borrowed from Greek nýmphē goddess of a spring, nymph. —lymphatic adj. 1649, of the lymph; borrowed from French lymphatique and from Medieval Latin lymphaticus of water, from Latin lympa water; for suffix see -IC. —lymphocyte n. 1890, formed from English lympho-, combining form of lymph + -cyte cell.

lynch v. 1835 Lynch, also, lynch (1839), to punish an accused person without a lawful trial; shortened form of earlier Lynch law (1811, after William Lynch, of Virginia, who in 1780 with his neighbors established a vigilance committee to maintain order in their community). Since the late 1800's, the term has meant inflict sentence of death without a lawful trial.

lynx n. 1340, borrowing of Latin lynx, from Greek lýnx.

lyre n. Probably before 1200 lire; borrowed through Old French lire, lyre, and directly from Latin lyra, from Greek lýra.

lyric adj. 1589, borrowed through Middle French lyrique, and directly from Latin lyricus of or for the lyre, from Greek lyrikós, from lýra LYRE; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1581, short poem expressing personal emotion; borrowed through Middle French lyrique, from Latin lyricum a lyric poem, from neuter of lyricus, adj. —lyrical adj. 1581, of lyric poetry; formed from English lyric, n. + -al. —lyricism n. 1760, formed from English lyric + -ism.

lysis n. 1902, dissolution of cells, bacteria, etc.; borrowed from Latin lysis, from Greek lýsis dissolution, from lýein untie; see LOSE.

M

macabre adj. 1833, in The Dance of Macabre; earlier the dance of Machabray (1598), and The Daunce of Machabree (probably about 1430). Use of the form Machabree suggests a connection with Maccabee and also a familiarity with the Middle French danse Macabré which was probably a translation of Medieval Latin chorea Machabeorum, literally, the dance of the Maccabees (leaders of the revolt of the Jews against Syria, about 166 B.C.).

The allegorical representation of Death leading mankind in a dance to the grave is first found in English literary and artistic works, perhaps as an allusion to the vivid description of the martyrdom of the Maccabees in the Apocryphal books of the Maccabees. From this representation characterizing the gruesome descriptions of the danse macabre modern English abstracted the sense of gruesome, horrible (1889), probably by influence of French macabre gruesome (1842).

macadam n. 1824, in allusion to its inventor, John L. McAdam, 1756–1836. —macadamize v. 1826, formed from English macadam + -ize.

macaque n. 1840, borrowing of French macaque, from Portuguese macaco monkey, from a Bantu word brought by the Portuguese to Brazil.

Originally macaque was applied to some Brazilian species of monkey (1698). The later meaning of a monkey of the genus Macacus was introduced into English in 1840.

macaroni n. 1 kind of pasta. 1599, borrowed from southern Italian dialect maccaroni (Italian macheroni) macaroni, plural of maccarone; possibly from maccare bruise, batter, crush; of uncertain origin. 2 fop, dandy. 1764, in allusion to members of the Macaroni Club, who affected French and Italian fashion and food (macaroni was an exotic dish in England at the time). An earlier use by Addison (1711) in the sense of blockhead, fool, is probably not connected with this sense of fop, dandy.

macaronic adj. 1611, mixed or jumbled; later, denoting a burlesque form of verse with a mixture of native and foreign words, usually Latin words with words from another language, or with non-Latin words that are given Latin endings (1638); borrowed from New Latin macaronicus, from dialectal Italian maccarone MACARONI, and allusion to the coarse, rustic mixture of words is comparable to macaroni.

macaroon n. 1611, borrowed from French macaron, from dialectal Italian maccarone, singular of maccaroni MACARONI; for ending see -OON. The French meaning was apparently an invention of Rabelais, who introduced the word in 1552.

macaw n. 1668, borrowed from Portuguese macau, from a Brazilian name (perhaps from Tupi macavuaná).

mace¹ n. medieval weapon of war. Probably before 1300; earlier as a surname (1229); borrowed from Old French mace a club, scepter, from Vulgar Latin mattea*, from Latin mateola (in Late Latin also matteola) a kind of mallet. Related to MATTOCK.

mace² n. spice. Probably before 1300; back formation as a new singular form from earlier maces (1234), and macis (1381); borrowed from Old French mace, macis, mistaken to be a plural form; or borrowed directly from Medieval Latin macis, apparently a scribal error for Latin macir a red spicy bark from India.

macerate v. 1547, cause to waste away; either developed from macerate wasted, weakened (1540), from Latin mācerātus; or borrowed, through influence of Middle French macérer, from Latin mācerātus, past participle of mācerāre soften, related to māceria garden wall (originally of kneaded clay); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also macerate may be a back formation from maceration (1491); borrowed from Latin mācerātiōnem (nominative mācerātiō), from mācerāre; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of soften by soaking is first recorded in 1563.

machete n. 1832, borrowing of Spanish machete, probably diminutive of macho sledge hammer, alteration of mazo club, probably dialectal variant of maza mallet, from Vulgar Latin mattea* war club, MACE¹.

Machiavellian adj. 1579 (earlier as a noun, 1568); from Machiavellian, n. (Machiavelli, Florentine statesman who advised that rulers place advantage above morality, + -an, -ian).

machicolation n. 1788, borrowed from Medieval Latin machicolationem (nominative machicolatio) from machicolare furnish with openings, a Latinization of Old French machicouler, ultimately from Old Provençal machacol machicolation, a southern dialect variant of macacol*; literally, neck crusher (macar to crush, from Vulgar Latin maccāre* crush + col neck); for suffix see -ATION.

A connection may be found in the earlier recorded past participle machekolud machicolated, having openings in a parapet (1408), a variant form of machecolled, from machecole, probably borrowed from Old French machecoller, and directly from Medieval Latin machecollare provide with machicolation.

machination n. Before 1475 machynacion intrigue, fraud, trick; borrowed through Old French machinacioun, and directly from Latin māchinātiōnem (nominative māchinātiō) device, contrivance, machination, from māchinārī contrive, plot, from māchina MACHINE; for suffix see -ATION.

machine n. 1549, any structure or contrivance; borrowed from Middle French machine device, contrivance, learned borrowing from Latin māchina, from Greek māchanā, Doric variant of mēchanē device, means; related to mēchos means, expedient. The sense of mechanical device, is first recorded in 1673, and in the form machinament (1413, borrowed from Latin māchināmentum, from māchinārī to contrive, plot). —v. 1878, from the noun; earlier machynen decide a course of action, contrive, plot (probably about 1450) borrowed from Old French machiner, and directly from Latin māchinārī to contrive, plot. —machinery n. 1687, devices for creating stage effects, formed from English machine + -ery.

machismo n. 1948, borrowed through American Spanish machismo, from Spanish macho male, MACHO.

macho n., adj. 1928, borrowed from Spanish macho male, from Latin masculus MASCULINE.

mackerel n. About 1300 makerel; earlier, as a surname (1183); borrowed from Old French makerel, maquerel; of uncertain origin. Though apparently the same word as Old French maquerel pimp or procurer, from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch makelaer broker), it is difficult to make a connection.

mackinaw n. Found in Mackina boat (1812), from earlier Mackinac trading post on the site of Mackinaw City, Michigan; borrowed from Canadian French michili-mackinac, from Algonquian (Ojibwa) mitchi makināk large turtle.

mackintosh n. 1836, in allusion to Charles Macintosh, inventor of a waterproofing process.

macro- a combining form meaning large or long, in scientific terms, such as macrocephalic having an abnormally large head and in general terms with the sense of on a large scale, from use in macrocosm. Borrowed through Middle and Old French and from Medieval Latin, from Greek makro-, combining form of makrós large, long. Compare MEGA-.

macrocosm n. 1600, borrowed from French macrocosme, and directly as a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin macrocosmus (Greek makrós large, long + kósmos COSMOS), probably formed in distinction to microcosm. Medieval Latin macrocosmus is found as English macrocosm probably before 1408.

macron n. 1851, borrowed from Greek makrón, neuter of makrós long.

mad adj. About 1275 madde crazy, angry; later mad (about 1300); developed from Old English (before 1000) gemædde, pl.; earlier gemæded rendered insane (before 800), past participle of gemædan* make mad, from gemād mad; cognate with Old Saxon gimēd foolish, Old High German gimeit foolish, vain, and Gothic gamaidans (accusative plural) crippled (from Proto-Germanic ga-maidaz*, compound of ga- perfective prefix + maidās*, corresponding to Old Icelandic meida to hurt). —madden v. 1735; formed from English mad + -en¹ replacing mad v., developed from madden to drive mad (about 1395), to become insane (probably about 1380), from earlier medden (before 1325); from mad, adj. —maddening adj. Before 1743, from madden, v. —madding adj. 1579, from mad, v. + -ing².

madam n. Probably before 1300 madame, borrowed from Old French ma dame my lady.

madame n. 1599; see MADAM.

madder n. Probably before 1300 madere; later madder (1347–48); in part developed from Old English (about 1000) mædere plant used for making dyes; and in part borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic madhra).

Madeira n. 1584 Madera, shortened form of Madeira or Madeira wine, in allusion to the island of Madeira, from Portuguese madeira wood, from Latin māteria wood, matter; see MATTER.

mademoiselle n. 1642, borrowed from French; see DAMSEL. An isolated example of this word is recorded in Middle English, probably about 1450.

Madonna n. 1644, in reference to a wall painting of the Virgin Mary; earlier, Italian form of address for a lady (1584); borrowing of Italian madonna (ma my, weakly stressed variant of mia + donna lady).

madras n. 1882 Madras-net muslin closely woven cotton cloth, and Madras handkerchief (1833); in allusion to the former state of Madras and its capital where this type of cloth was exported.

madrigal n. 1588 madrigales short lyrical poem, song with parts for several voices; borrowing of Italian madrigale, probably from dialectal Italian (Venice) madregal, maregal simple, ingenuous, from Late Latin mātrīcālis invented, original, of or from the womb, from mātrīx (genitive mātrīcis) womb; see MATRIX.

maelstrom n. 1701 Maelstrom, whirlpool off the coast of Norway (recorded in English in 1682 as Male Stream, and about 1560 as Malestrand); borrowed from Danish Malstrøm, from earlier Dutch Maelstrom (now Maalstroom, a compound of malen, to grind + stroom STREAM). The sense of any great or violent whirlpool was popularized in English about 1841, and that of a violent confusion of ideas, conditions, etc., in 1831.

maenad n. 1579, borrowed from Latin maenas (genitive maenadis) from Greek mainás (genitive mainádos) priestess of Bacchus; literally, madwoman, from maínesthai to rage, go mad; see MANIA.

Mafia n. 1875, borrowing of Italian Mafia secret society of criminals in Sicily, from dialectal Italian (Sicily) mafia boldness, bravado, probably from Arabic mahjās aggressive boasting, bragging.

magazine n. 1583 magosine; also 1589 magasin warehouse, depot, store; borrowed from Middle French magasin, from Italian magazzino, from Arabic makhāzin, plural of makhzan storehouse, from khazana to store up. The spelling magazine is first recorded in English in 1599, and appeared in the title of a periodical in 1731. The sense of a storehouse for ammunition, gunpowder, etc., appears in 1596.

magenta n. 1860, named in allusion to the Battle of Magenta, Italy, 1859, because the dye was discovered in that year.

maggot n. Probably before 1475 magat, and magot (before 1500); perhaps related to earlier mathek maggot (about 1225), and maddokk earthworm, maggot (before 1400); possibly developed from Old English matha maggot, grub, with a Proto-Germanic suffix in -k-, as represented in Middle English suffix -ok, as in hillock, bullock.

The Middle English mathek corresponds to Old Icelandic madhkr maggot and Middle Low German medeke; Old English matha is cognate with Gothic matha, Old Saxon matho, Old High German mado (modern German Made), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch made, from Proto-Germanic mathōn*.

Magi n. pl. Probably about 1200 magy men skilled in magic and astrology; later magēs (before 1350); borrowing of Latin magī, plural of magus, from Greek mágos, either: one of the Magi or Magians (a Median tribe); or one of the members of the Persian learned and priestly caste, though also portrayed as pagan kings in the Bible; see MAGIC.

magic n. About 1380 magik, borrowed from Old French magique, from Latin magicē sorcery, magic, from Greek magikḗ, from feminine of magikós magical (presumably used to modify téchnē art), from mágos one of the members of the learned and priestly caste, from Old Persian maguš a member of a priestly caste. —adj. Before 1393 magique, borrowed from Old French magique, from Latin magicus, from Greek magikós magical. —magician n. About 1375 magicien sorcerer; borrowed of Old French magicien, from magique magic.

magisterial adj. 1632, borrowed from Late Latin magisteriālis of or pertaining to the office of magistrate, director, teacher, or to teaching, from magisterius having the authority of a magistrate, director, teacher, magisterial, from Latin magister MASTER; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

magistrate n. About 1380, magistrat office of a magistrate; 1384, a civil official, magistrate; borrowed, perhaps through Old French magistrat, from Latin magistrātus (genitive magistrātūs) a magistrate; originally, magisterial rank or office, from magistrāre serve as a magistrate, from magister chief, director, MASTER; for suffix see *-ATE*³.

magma n. Probably 1440, sediment or dregs; borrowed from Latin magma dregs of an ointment, from Greek mágma an ointment; related to mássein to knead, mold. The meaning of molten material beneath the earth's crust, is first recorded in 1865.

magnanimous adj. 1584, back formation from magnanimity + -ous; or borrowed from Latin magnanimus high-minded (magnus great + animus mind, soul, spirit), probably a loan translation of Greek megálōpsýchos high-souled, generous, or megáthymos great-hearted; for suffix see -OUS. —magnanimity n. 1340 magnanimite high-mindedness; borrowed from Old French magnanimité, learned borrowing from Latin magnanimitātem (nominative magnanimitās) greatness of soul, high-mindedness, from magnanimus having a great soul, high-minded; for suffix see -ITY.

magnate n. Probably before 1439 magnates, pl.; borrowed from Late Latin magnātēs, plural of magnās (genitive magnātis) great person, nobleman, from Latin magnus great.

magnesia n. About 1395 magnasia mineral ingredient of the philosophers' stone; borrowed from Medieval Latin magnesia, from Greek (hē) Magnēsīā (lithos) the lodestone; literally, the Magnesian stone, from Magnēsīā Magnesia, a region in Thessaly.

magnesium n. 1812, New Latin, from Medieval Latin magnesia MAGNESIA + New Latin -ium.

magnet n. Before 1398 magnes, magnas piece of lodestone; later magnet (1429); borrowed from Latin magnētem, accusative of magnēs lodestone, from Greek Mágnēs lithos, Magnētis lithos Magnesian stone, from Magnēsīā Magnesia, a region in Thessaly. —magnetic adj. 1611, of or acting like a magnet; borrowed through French magnétique, and directly from Late Latin magnētīcus, from Latin magnēs (genitive magnētis) magnet; for suffix see -IC. Curiously the figurative sense of very attractive is first recorded in 1632. —magnetism n. 1616, the properties of a magnet; borrowed from New Latin magnetismus, from Latin magnēs (genitive magnētis) MAGNET + -ismus -ism. —magnetize v. 1787, formed from English magnet, n. + -ize.

magneto n. 1882, shortened form of magnetolectric, in magnetolectric machine. The adjective magnetolectric characterized by electricity produced by magnets (1831), was formed from magneto- + electric.

magneto- a combining form meaning magnetic, magnets, or magnetism, as in magnetometer, magnetolectric, and magnetochemistry. Formed in English from magnetic, but also representing the combining form of Latin magnēs (genitive magnētis) lodestone, MAGNET.

magnificence n. 1340, high-mindedness, fortitude; later, grandeur, glory; borrowed from Old French magnificence splendor, nobility, grandeur, learned borrowing from Latin magnificentia, from the comparative and superlative stem magnificēt- of magnificus noble, eminent, splendid (magnus great + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -ENCE. —magnificent adj. Before 1460, splendid, exalted, glorious; probably as a back formation from magnificence; and a borrowing from Middle French magnificent, from magnificence; for suffix see -ENT.

magnify v. About 1380, magnifying, gerund of magnifier glorify, praise, make greater (before 1382); borrowed from Old French magnifier, learned borrowing from Latin magnificāre esteem greatly, extol from magnificus splendid; see MAGNIFICENCE; for suffix see -FY. The meaning of increase the apparent size of an object artificially, as with the lens of a telescope or microscope, appeared in 1665. —magnification n. Probably before 1425 magnificacioun enlargement; borrowed from Middle French magnification, from Old French, act of magnifying, glorification, praise, from Late Latin magnificatiōnem (nominative magnificatiō), from Latin magnificāre; for suffix see -ATION.

magniloquence n. 1623, borrowed from Latin magniloquentia lofty style of language (magnus great + loquentem [nominative loquēns] speaking, present participle of loqui speak); for suffix see -ENCE. —magniloquent adj. 1656, back formation from magniloquence and probably borrowed directly from Latin magniloquentia; for suffix see -ENT.

magnitude n. Before 1400, grandeur, magnificence; later, size, extent (before 1425); borrowed, probably through Old French magnitude, and directly from Latin magnitūdō greatness, bulk, size, from magnus great; for suffix see -TUDE.

magnolia n. 1748, adoption of New Latin Magnolia the genus name from Magnolius, the Latinate name of Pierre Magnol, a French botanist.

magpie n. 1605, a compound of Mag, nickname for Margaret, and *pie*² magpie. The nickname Mag was long used in various proverbial phrases referring to idle chattering, such as Middle English magge tales tall tales, nonsense, trifles (before 1410).

mah-jongg or mah-jong n. 1922, borrowed from dialectal

Chinese (Shanghai) ma chiang the name of the game; literally, hemp birds, sparrows; so called from a design on the game pieces.

mahogany n. 1671 mohogeney, borrowed from obsolete Spanish mahogani, perhaps from the native name in Maya (Honduras). —adj. 1730, from the noun.

maid n. Probably before 1200 maide young woman, female servant, shortened form of MAIDEN.

maiden n. About 1200 maiden, mæden; developed from Old English (about 950) mæden, (about 750) mægden, diminutive of mægth, mægeth maid. Old English mægden is cognate with Old High German magatin, from Proto-Germanic mazadīnan*; and Old English mægeth is cognate with Old Frisian maged, megith maiden, Old Saxon magath, Middle Dutch maghet (modern Dutch maagd), Old High German magad (modern German Magd), and Gothic magaths virgin, from Proto-Germanic mazadīs* young womanhood, related to mazuz*, whence Gothic magus boy and Old Icelandic magr son. —adj. Probably about 1300, virgin, unmarried; from the noun. The figurative sense of new, fresh, first (as in maiden voyage) is first recorded in 1555.

mail¹ n. letters, parcels, etc. Probably before 1200 male traveling bag; later mayll (before 1460); borrowed from Old French male wallet, bag, from Frankish (compare Old High German malha, malaha wallet, bag; cognate with Middle Dutch māle bag, modern Dutch maal mailbag, mail). The sense of a bag of letters, is first recorded in 1654. —v. 1828–32, from the noun.

mail² n. armor. Probably before 1300 maile mail, link of mail; later mayl (before 1400); borrowed from Old French maille link of mail, a mesh of a net, from Latin macula a mesh in a net; originally, spot, blemish.

maim v. About 1300 maymen; later maheimen (about 1415); borrowed from Old French mahaigrier, possibly from a Germanic source; compare Gothic gamaidans (accusative plural) crippled, and Old Icelandic meidha to hurt; see MAD. Related to MAYHEM.

main adj. Probably before 1200, mæin outstanding because of size, most important; later main (1303); developed from Middle English main, n.; and from Old English mægan- in compounds (about 725, in Beowulf), from mægen power, strength, force, probably influenced by Old Icelandic meginn strong, powerful and cognate with Icelandic magn, megin strength, and Old High German and Old Saxon magan, megin; see MAY. —n. Probably before 1200 maine power, strength, force; developed from Old English mægen.

Main in the sense of the principal part, essential point (1595) is derived from the adjective; the phrase in the main, is found before 1628. The meaning of principal channel in a utility system is recorded in 1727, abstracted from main drain (1707–12). —mainland n. (probably before 1400) —mainstay n. (1485; figurative use, 1787) —mainstream n. (1667; figurative use, 1831).

maintain v. Probably about 1300 mayntenen, meintenen keep, keep up; borrowed through Anglo-French meinténir, Old French maintenir, meinténir keep, maintain, from Latin manū tenēre hold in the hand (manū, ablative of manus hand; tenēre to hold). — maintenance n. Before 1333 mentenaunce action of wrongfully aiding and abetting litigation; later mayntenaunce support, backing (about 1378); borrowed through Anglo-French mayntenaunce, Old French maintenance act of maintaining, from maintenir maintain.

maize n. 1555, borrowed from Spanish maíz; earlier mahiz, mahis, mayz, from Arawakan (Haiti) mahiz.

majesty n. About 1300 majeste, mageste dignity, magnificence, especially of God; borrowed from Old French majesté grandeur, nobility, from Latin majestātem (nominative majestās) greatness, dignity, from the stem of major, comparative of magnus great. — majestic adj. 1601; formed from English majesty + -ic.

major adj. Probably before 1300 maiour great, greater; borrowed from Latin major, irregular comparative of magnus large, great. — n. 1579, borrowed from Middle French major (as in sergent-major sergeant-major), from Medieval Latin major chief officer, magnate, superior person, from Latin major an elder, adult, noun use of the adjective, greater, superior. — v. major in 1924, take as a major subject of study, from the noun, in the sense of a subject of specialization (1890).

major-domo n. 1589, borrowed from Spanish mayordomo or Italian maggiordomo, both from Medieval Latin major domūs chief of the household (major chief; domūs, genitive of domus house).

majority n. 1552, condition of being greater; borrowed from Middle French majorité, from Medieval Latin majoritatem, from Latin major, adj., MAJOR. The sense of the greater number or part (as in the majority of voters) is first recorded in 1691. An earlier sense, the state of being of full age (as in to attain majority at 21), is found in 1565.

make v. Before 1121 macen put together, build, form; later maken (1137); developed from Old English macian (before 901); probably borrowed from Old Saxon makōn, from Old High German mahhōn, machōn; cognate with Old Frisian makia to make, build, and Middle Dutch and modern Dutch maken, from Proto-Germanic makōjanan*. — n. Probably about 1300 make design, construction; from the verb. — make-believe n. (1811); adj. (1824) — maker n. 1340, the Creator; later, a writer or composer (about 1350), and a manufacturer or builder (1391); formed from maken make + -er. — makeshift adj. 1683, serving as a substitute; earlier, shifty, roguish (1592, from the noun). — n. 1802–12, temporary substitute; earlier, shifty person, rogue (1565); from to make a shift to try all means (about 1460). — makeup n. (1821). The meaning of cosmetics (1886) is from appearance of face, dress, etc., assumed by an actor (1858).

mal- a combining form meaning: 1 bad or badly, as in malfunction. 2 poor or poorly, as in malnutrition. 3 abnormal or abnormally, as in malformed. 4 wrongly or unfairly, as in malapportion. 5 wrong or unfair, as in malpractice. Borrowed from Old French mal-, male-, and Latin mal-, prefixes formed on Latin malus, adj., bad, and male, adv., badly. — maladjustment n. (1833) — malcontent adj. 1586, borrowed from Middle French (mal- poorly + content). — n. 1581, from the adjective (even though attested earlier). — malfunction v. (1928); n. (1941) — malnutrition n. (1862) — malpractice n. (1671).

malachite n. Before 1398 melochites; later molochites (before 1500); borrowed from Old French melochite, and as a learned borrowing directly from Latin molochitis, from Greek molochitis lithos mallow stone, from molochē, malachē MALLOW: perhaps so called from the similarity in color between the mineral and the leaves of the mallow plant.

malady n. About 1275 maladie, borrowed from Old French maladie sickness, illness, disease, from malade ill, from Latin male habitus doing poorly, feeling unwell; literally, ill-conditioned (male, adv., badly; habitus, past participle of habēre have, hold).

malaise n. Before 1300 maleise pain, suffering; also malayse distress, sorrow; borrowed from Old French malaise (mal bad + aise EASE).

malamute or malemute n. 1898, earlier maglemut (1874), from the name of an Alaskan Eskimo tribe that developed this breed of dog.

malapropism n. 1849; formed from earlier malaprop a malapropism (1823) + -ism. The forms malaprop and malapropism are an allusion to Mrs. Malaprop, a character in Sheridan's play The Rivals (1775), noted for her ridiculous misuse of words. Sheridan coined her name by back formation from MAL-APROPOS.

malapropos adv. 1668, borrowed from French mal à propos badly for the purpose, inappropriate (mal badly; à propos appropriately, to the purpose, from proposer PROPOSE).

malaria n. 1740, borrowing of Italian malaria, from mala aria bad air (mala bad, feminine of malo; aria air). The disease was formerly thought to be caused by bad air in swampy areas.

malarkey or malarky n. 1929 malaky, of unknown origin.

male n. 1373, borrowed from Old French male, masle, mascle, from Latin masculus masculine, male, diminutive of mās (genitive maris) male person or animal, male. — adj. About 1378, borrowed from Old French male, adj. and n. The sense in mechanics of a part designed to fit inside a corresponding part to make a connection (as in a male plug), is first recorded in 1669.

malediction n. 1447 malediccyoun; borrowed through Old French malediction, maledition, from Latin maledictionem (nominative maledictiō) the action of speaking evil of, slander (in Late Latin, a curse), from maledicere to speak badly or evil of, slander (male badly + dicere to say); for suffix see -TION.

malefactor n. Before 1438, borrowing of Latin malefactor, from malefacere to do evil (male badly + facere to perform); for suffix see *-OR*².

malevolence n. About 1454 malivolence; later malevolence

(1464); borrowed from Middle French malivolence, and from Latin malivolentia, malevolentia, from malivolentem, malevolentem (nominative malivolēns, malevolēns) malevolent (male badly + volentem, nominative volēns, present participle of velle to wish); for suffix see -ENCE. —malevolent adj. 1509, borrowed from Middle French malivolent, and from Latin malivolentem, malevolentem; for suffix see -ENT. It is also possible that malevolent is a back formation from malevolence.

malfeasance n. 1696; borrowed from French malfeasance wrongdoing (mal- badly + faisant, present participle of faire to do); for suffix see -ANCE. Malfeasance has largely replaced the older maleficence (1598), borrowed, probably through Middle French maleficence, from Latin maleficientia, from maleficus wicked (male badly; facere perform).

malice n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French malice ill will, spite, learned borrowing from Latin malitia badness, ill will, spite, from malus bad. It is probable borrowing of malice was influenced by malicious. —malicious adj. About 1225 malicious; later malicious (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French malicios showing ill will, spiteful, from Latin malitiōsus full of malice, from malitia; for suffix see -OUS.

malign adj. Before 1333 maligne; borrowed from Old French malign having an evil nature, learned borrowing from Latin malignus evilly-disposed, bad-natured (male badly + -gnus born, from gignere to bear, beget). —v. Before 1420 maligner; borrowed from Middle French malignier to plot, deceive, pervert, and from Late Latin malignāre injure maliciously, from Latin malignus evil, bad-natured. —malignancy n. 1601, malignant quality or character; formed from malignant + -cy; for suffix see also -ANCY. The sense of a malignant growth, is first recorded in 1685. —malignant adj. 1542–45, disaffected, malcontent; borrowed from Middle French malignant deceitful, and Late Latin malignantem (nominative malignāns) acting from malice, present participle of malignāre injure maliciously; for suffix see -ANT. The meaning of severe, virulent, is first recorded in 1568, and that of having an evil influence, in 1591.

malingering v. 1820 (implied earlier in the once slang term malingeringer, n. 1785), probably an unrecorded slang term as a verb; borrowed from French malingrer to suffer; perhaps also, pretend to be ill, from malingre ailing, sickly, possibly a blend of Old French mingre sickly or miserable, and malade ill. Old French mingre is itself a blend of maigre MEAGER and haingre sick, haggard, possibly from a Germanic source (compare Middle High German and modern German hager thin).

mall n. 1737, from The Mall, broad promenade in St. James's Park, London (1674); formerly an alley used in pall-mall, a game in which a ball was hit with a mallet (mall, now MAUL) through a ring at the end of an alley. The name of the game was borrowed into English from obsolete French pallemaille, from Italian pallamaglio (palla ball + maglio mallet).

mallard n. Probably before 1300 maulard; later mallard (1348); borrowed from Old French malart, and from Medieval Latin mallardus, also from Old French malart, apparently from male, masle, mascle, from Latin masculus; see MALE. The original meaning was probably “male of the wild duck.”

malleable adj. About 1395 malliable; later malleable (1413); borrowed from Old French malleable, and directly from Medieval Latin malleabilis, from malleare to beat with a hammer, from Latin malleus hammer; see MALLET: for suffix see -ABLE. The figurative sense of adaptable, yielding, is first recorded in English in 1612.

mallet n. 1392 maylet; earlier in surname Malet (1159); also mallet (1406); borrowed from Old French maillet, mallot wooden hammer, diminutive of mail, from Latin malleus hammer, related to molere to grind.

mallow n. Before 1325 malwe; later malowe (1392); possibly developed from Old English malwe, mealwe (about 1000), from Latin malva, but more likely borrowed from Old French malve, mauve, and directly from Latin malva, from the same (Mediterranean) source as Greek maláchē, molóchē mallow.

malmsey n. 1407 malmesey; later malmsey (probably before 1475); borrowed, perhaps through Provençal malmesie*, or Middle Dutch malemesye, from Medieval Latin malmasia, alteration of Medieval Greek Monembasia Monemvasia, town in southeastern Peloponnesus that was an important center for production of wine in the Middle Ages. The word is complicated by the fact that a variety of wine of Madeira is also called malmsey and first appears as malmsey madeira (1723).

malt n. Old English (about 700, in Anglian dialect) malt; later (about 950, in West Saxon) mealt; both cognate with Old Saxon malt malt, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch mout, Old High German malz (modern German Malz), and Old Icelandic (also Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish) malt, from Proto-Germanic maltaz*; derived from the Germanic root that is the source of Old English meltan to MELT.

mamba n. 1862, borrowing of Zulu (i)mamba, or Swahili mamba.

mameluke n. 1600, slave in Moslem countries; earlier Mamoluke a member of a military body, originally consisting of Caucasian slaves (1511; they seized the Egyptian throne in 1254 and ruled until 1517); borrowed through Middle French mameluk; earlier mamelos, and directly from Arabic mamlūk purchased slave, from past participle of malaka he possessed.

mamma¹ or mama n. mother. 1579 mamma; later mama (1727); ultimately probably of imitative origin, representing sounds made by infants. The word is found in many European languages, (Irish, Cornish, Breton, and Welsh mam, Latin mamma mother, breast, Greek mámmē mother, breast, Lithuanian mamà mother, Russian máma, Armenian mam grandmother).

mamma² n. milk-giving gland in female mammals. 1693, borrowed from Latin mamma breast, mother.

mammal n. 1826, borrowed from New Latin Mammalia the class of mammals, from neuter plural of Late Latin mammālis of the breast, from Latin mamma breast; for suffix see -AL¹. —mammalian n. 1835, formed in English from New Latin Mammalia + English -an. —adj. 1851, from the noun.

mammary adj. 1682, borrowed from French mammaire (formed from Latin mamma breast, mother + French -aire -ary). — mammary gland (1831)

Mammon or mammon n. About 1390 Mammona, also Mammon (about 1400); borrowed from Late Latin mammōna, from Greek māmōnās, from Aramaic māmōnā, māmōn riches, gain.

mammoth n. 1706, borrowed from earlier Russian mammot, now mámmont, probably from Ostyak, a Finno-Ugric language (compare Finnish maa earth, so called because of the mammoth's once supposed habit of burrowing in the earth). — adj. 1802, American English; from the noun, in allusion to the mammoth's enormous size.

mammy n. 1523, a diminutive formed from earlier mam (probably before 1500) + -y. Mam is probably from children's speech and ultimately from the same source as English *MAMMA*¹.

man n. Old English (before 725) man, mann, mon (pl. men, menn) human being, person; later, adult male (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian monn human being, man, Old Saxon man, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch man, Old High German man, sing. and pl. (modern German Mann, pl. Männer), Old Icelandic maðr (-ðr from -nr, pl. menn), Swedish man, Danish mand, from Proto-Germanic manwaz*. In addition, Old English had manna, cognate with Gothic manna (earlier mana*), from Proto-Germanic manōn*.

In all Germanic languages, the word originally had the twofold sense "human being" and "adult male human being." Later, with the exception of English, the sense "human being," was mainly assumed by a derivative (German Mensch, Swedish människa, Dutch mens, etc.). The primary sense of Old English man was "human being." The words wer and wif (meaning man and woman) distinguished the sexes. By the late 1200's were (Old English wer) began to disappear, replaced by man in the sense "adult, male human being." — v. Probably before 1300 mannen supply (a ship, etc.) with men; from the noun. The sense of take charge, manage, is first recorded in 1338, and that of behave like a man, act with courage, is found about 1400. — manhood n. Before 1250 manhede human condition, nature, or form; later, manliness (before 1300); also manhode bravery (before 1333); formed from man + -hede, -hode -hood. — mankind n. Before 1225 man-kende; later mankinde (about 1300, man + kinde sort, *KIND*²). Mankind replaced mankenne, mannkin (recorded before 1200); developed from Old English mancynn human race (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from man MAN + cynn KIN. — manpower n. (1862) — manslaughter n. Before 1325 mans-slaughter; later manslaghter killing of a human being, homicide (probably about 1375); formed from man + slaghter slaughter. This form replaced the earlier monslaht (before 1225); developed from Old English (Anglian, before 1000) mannslæht, (West Saxon, before 899) mannsliht; formed from mann man + slæht, slieht act of killing.

manacle n. About 1340 manykil; later manacle (about 1395); borrowed from Old French manicle, from Latin manicula handle, little hand, diminutive of manicae long sleeves of a tunic, manacles, from manus hand. — v. 1307 manklen; later manaclen (1422); from the noun.

manage v. 1561 manege to handle or direct (a horse); probably borrowed from Italian maneggiare, from Vulgar Latin manizāre*, from Latin manus hand. The English word was influenced in meaning by French manège horsemanship, and by French ménager to use carefully, to husband, from ménage household. The original spelling manege was altered by 1570 to manage by influence of the suffix -age. The sense of administer (1609), is found earlier in carry on an undertaking (1579). — manageable adj. (1598) — management n. 1598, act or manner of managing; 1739, persons who manage a business or institution. — manager n. 1588, one who manages (something); later, one who manages a business establishment or a institution (1705). — managerial adj. (1767) manatee n. 1555, borrowed from Spanish manatí, from Carib manati breast, udder.

mandamus n. 1535, borrowing of Latin mandāmus we order, first person plural present indicative of mandāre to order, MANDATE.

mandarin n. 1589 mandelines, an erroneous transcription, borrowed from Spanish mandarín, from Portuguese mandarim; later mandorijn (1598); borrowed from Dutch mandorijn, now mandarijn, probably from Portuguese mandarim, from Malay mantri, found in Hindi mantri councilor, minister of state, from Sanskrit mantrī, nominative of mantrin- advisor. The sense of the chief dialect of Chinese (usually capitalized), is first recorded in 1604.

mandate n. 1552, borrowed through Middle French mandat, and directly from Latin mandātum, noun use of neuter past participle of mandāre to order, commit to one's charge (probably from manus hand + dare to give, with transfer to the -āre conjugation); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. — v. 1623, from the noun. — mandatory adj. 1576, borrowed from Late Latin mandātōrius of or belonging to one who commands, analyzed as either from Latin mandātor + -y or as mandāt-, participle stem of mandāre to order; for suffix see -ORY.

mandible n. 1392, borrowed from Old French mandible, and directly from Late Latin mandibula, from Latin mandere to chew.

mandolin n. 1707, borrowed from French mandoline, from Italian mandolino, diminutive of mandola, mandora a larger kind of mandolin, alteration of Late Latin pandūra three-stringed lute, from Greek pandoura.

mandrake n. About 1325 mondrake; later mandrake (1373); alteration of earlier mandragora (about 1150); borrowed from Medieval Latin mandragora, from Latin mandragorās, from Greek mandragorās.

The alteration of mandragora to mandrake is the result of equating the -drago- of mandragora with the drago- of dragoun dragon, and this with the noun drake meaning dragon. Association of the form of the root of this plant with that of the human form, and the fabled shriek the plant is supposed to utter when pulled from the ground (all to explain the element man of mandrake), is often cited.

mandrill n. 1744, either formed from English man + *drill*³ baboon, or from an African language, with misdivision of the form into recognizable English components. French mandrill (1751) and Spanish mandril (1817) were apparently borrowed from English.

mane n. Probably before 1300, developed from Old English (before 800) manu mane, related to mene necklace. Old English manu is cognate with Old Frisian mana mane, Middle Dutch mane, Old High German mana (modern German Mähne), and Old Icelandic mon mane (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish man), from Proto-Germanic manō*.

maneuver n. 1758 manœuvre; later maneuver (1778); borrowing of French manœuvre manipulation, maneuver, from Old French manœuvre manual labor, from Medieval Latin manuopera, from manuoperare to work with the hands, from Latin manū operārī. —v. 1777, borrowed from French manœuvrer, from Old French manouvrier to work with the hands, from Medieval Latin manuoperare. —maneuverability n. (1923) —maneuverable adj. (1921) manganese n. 1676, oxide or ore of manganese; borrowing of French manganèse, from Italian manganese, alteration of Medieval Latin magnesia; see MAGNESIA.

mange n. Before 1425, manjewe; borrowed from Middle French manjue, mangeue the itch, from manju-, accented stem of Old French mangier to eat, from Latin mandūcāre to chew, eat, from mandūcus glutton, from mandere to chew. —mangy adj. Before 1529, formed from English mange + *-y*¹.

manger n. Before 1333 manyour, also manger (before 1338); borrowed from Old French mangeoire, from mangier to eat + -oire (common suffix for implements and receptacles); see MANGE.

mangle v. Probably before 1400 manglen to mutilate; borrowed through Anglo-French mangler, frequentative form of Old French mangoner cut to pieces; of uncertain origin (sometimes connected with Old French mahaignier to maim). The sense of spoil, ruin, is first recorded in 1533.

mango n. 1681, earlier mangas (1582); borrowed from Portuguese manga, from Malay mangga, from Tamil mānkāy.

mangrove n. 1613 mangrow (probably influenced in formation by grow); borrowed from Spanish mangle, earlier mangue, probably from Carib or Arawakan. The current spelling appeared in 1697, influenced by grove.

mania n. About 1385 manye derangement, frenzy; also mania (before 1398); borrowed from Late Latin mania insanity, madness, from Greek manīā madness, related to malnēsthai to rage, go mad, also related to mēnos passion, spirit. The sense of unusual or unreasonable fondness, rage, craze, is first recorded in 1689.

Since the 1500's mania has been used as a final element in compounds to express the general sense of a certain kind or state of madness, after some Greek compounds such as erōtomanīā love madness, hippomanīā craze for horses. Some of the compounds in -mania that were formed as medical New Latin and adopted in English were nymphomania (1775), kleptomania (1830), and megomania (1890). —maniac adj. 1604 maniacque, borrowed from French manique, from Late Latin maniacus, from Greek maniakós, from manīā madness. A revival of a Latin spelling, found in the present-day maniac, is first recorded in English in 1727. —n. Before 1763, from the adjective. —maniacal adj. 1678, affected with mania; formed from English maniac, n. + *-al*¹. —manic adj. 1902, borrowed from Greek manikós mad, from manīā madness; for suffix see -ic.

manicure n. 1880, a manicurist; later, care of the fingernails and hands (1887); borrowing of French manicure, manucure (from Latin manus hand + cūra care). —v. 1889; from the noun. —manicurist n. (1889) manifest adj. About 1380, borrowed through Old French manifeste, or directly from Latin manifestus, manifestus caught in the act, plainly apprehensible, from manus hand + -festus (able to be) seized. —v. About 1380 manifesten, from the adjective by influence of Latin manifestāre to make plain, from manifestus palpable. —n. 1561, indication, manifestation; borrowed from Middle French manifeste, from manifeste to manifest, from Latin manifestāre to make plain. The sense of a list of a ship's cargo, is first recorded in 1706. —manifestation n. Probably before 1425 manifestacioun, borrowed through Middle French manifestation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin manifestatiōnem (nominative manifestatiō), from Latin manifestāre to manifest; for suffix see -ation; also possibly in some instances a formation in English of manifest, v. + -ation.

manifesto n. 1644, proof of evidence; also 1647, proclamation; borrowing of Italian manifesto an indication, public declaration, from Latin manifestus MANIFEST.

manifold adj. Before 1200 monifold; later manyfold, (about 1300); developed from Old English monigfald (Anglian before 830); earlier manigfeald (West Saxon about 750, manig MANY + -feald -fold), possibly formed in imitation or translation of Latin multiplex; see MULTIPLY. —n. About 1250 monie volde variety, great number; later manyfolde (about 1303); from the adjective. —v. 1767, make manifold, multiply; a new formation from the adjective. An older verb in English before 1500 developed as manifolden to increase, multiply (about 1350), from earlier monigfalden (probably before 1200), which in turn developed from Old English gemonigfaldian augment, multiply (before 830); from the adjective.

manikin n. 1570 manneken artist's manikin; borrowing of Dutch manneken, literally, little man, diminutive of man MAN. Compare MANNEQUIN.

manipulate v. 1827, back formation from MANIPULATION; for suffix see *-ate*¹. —manipulation n. 1727–41, method of digging ore; later, skillful handling of any object (1826); borrowed from French manipulation, in part as if from New Latin manipulationem* (nominative manipulatio*), from manipulare*; and in part a formation in French from manipule handful measure in pharmacy, learned borrowing from Latin manipulus handful, sheaf (manus hand + the root of plēre to fill) + French -ation -ation. The sense of clever use of influence especially to one's own advantage, is first recorded in 1828. —manipulative adj. 1836, formed from English manipulate + -ive. —manipulator n. 1851, probably on the model of French manipulateur (1783).

manna n. Old English manna (before 899); borrowed from Late Latin manna, from Greek mánna, from Hebrew mān. The extended sense of something that is supplied unexpectedly, is first recorded in 1593.

mannequin n. 1730–36 manequine jointed figure used by artists, manikin; borrowed of French mannequin, from Dutch manneken MANIKIN. The sense of a model employed to display new clothes is first recorded in English in 1902.

manner n. Probably before 1200 manere way of acting, kind, sort; borrowed through Anglo-French manere, Old French maniere way or mode of handling, from feminine of manier, handmade, skillful, from Vulgar Latin manārius*, from Latin manuārius belonging to the hand, from manus hand. —man-nered adj. About 1378 manered having manners of a certain kind; formed from manere manner + *-ed*². —mannerism n. 1803, excessive or affected adherence to a distinctive manner or style, especially in art and literature, formed from English manner + -ism. The sense of habitual peculiarity of action, expression, etc. is first recorded in 1819. —mannerly adj. Probably about 1390 manerly well-mannered; formed from Middle English manere + *-ly*². —adv. Probably 1350–75 manerlich properly, becomingly, formed from Middle English manere + -lich *-ly*¹.

manor n. About 1300 maner, borrowed through Anglo-French maner, Old French manoir; earlier maneir, noun use of maneir to dwell, from Latin manēre to stay, abide. —manorial adj. 1785, formed from English manor + -ial.

mansard n. 1734, borrowing of French mansarde, formed in allusion to François Mansard, a French architect.

manse n. 1534 parsonage; earlier manor house (1490); borrowed from Medieval Latin mansa a dwelling, noun use of feminine past participle of Latin manēre to stay, abide.

mansion n. About 1340 mansyon abode, act of dwelling; also, a house; borrowed from Old French mansion, and directly from Latin mānsiōnem (nominative mānsiō), from manēre to stay, abide; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of a stately residence is found in 1807.

mantel n. 1489, moveable shelter used by soldiers besieging a fortress; variant of MANTLE. Mantel, meaning a timber or stone supporting the masonry above a fireplace, is first recorded in 1519 as a shortened form of mantiltre manteltree, mantel (1451–52). —mantelpiece n. (1686) mantis n. 1658, New Latin Mantis, from Greek mántis, literally, prophet, from maínesthai be inspired, related to ménos passion, spirit.

mantle n. Probably before 1200 mentel; also about 1200 mantel, mantle; borrowed through Old French mantel, and directly from Latin mantellum; also influenced by Old English mentel cloak (before 899); borrowed from Latin mantellum, perhaps from a Celtic source. —v. Probably about 1225 mantelen, from mantel, n. and, in some instances, borrowed from Old French manteler.

mantra n. 1808, passage from a sacred text (used as a prayer); borrowed from Sanskrit māntra-s sacred message or text, charm, spell, counsel; related to mānyate thinks. The sense of a sacred name or special word used for meditation is first recorded in English in 1956.

manual adj. Probably 1406 manuel; later manual (about 1450); borrowed through Middle French manüel, or directly from Latin manuālis of or belonging to the hand, from manus hand; for suffix see *-AL*¹. Latin manus is related with Old English, Old Frisian, and Old Icelandic mund hand, Old High German munt (from Proto-Germanic mundō*), modern German Vor-mund guardian. —n. 1432 manüel service book used by a priest; also manual (1447); borrowed from Old French manuel, and directly from Late Latin manuāle the case or cover of a book, handbook, service book, from neuter of Latin manuālis, adj., manual.

manufacture n. 1567, something made by hand; borrowed from Middle French manufacture (1511), possibly from Italian manifattura or, more likely, Spanish manufactura, a compound formed from Latin manus hand + factūra a working, formation (fact-, participial stem of facere to perform); for suffix see -URE. The sense of act or process of manufacturing is first recorded in 1622. —v. 1683, from the noun, or possibly borrowed from French manufacturer, from Middle French manufacture, n.

manumission n. Probably before 1400 manumissioun; borrowed from Latin manūmissionem (nominative manūmissiō) the freeing of a slave, from manūmittere to set free, from manū mittere release from control (manū, ablative of manus hand, power of a master; mittere let go, release); for suffix see -SION.

manure v. Probably before 1400 manouren, maynoyren to cultivate or manage land; borrowed through Anglo-French meynoverer, meinourer, Old French manovrer, manouvrrer to work with the hands, from Medieval Latin manuoperāre, from Latin manū operārī (manū, ablative of manus hand; operārī to work, OPERATE). The meaning of put on the soil as fertilizer is first recorded in 1599 (implied in spread like manure, 1592); probably from the noun. —n. 1549, from the verb.

manuscript n. 1600, borrowed from Medieval Latin manu-scriptum document written by hand, from Latin manū scriptus written by hand (manū, ablative of manus hand; scriptus, past participle of scribere to write). Since Latin already had the form chirographum for a manuscript, the form in Medieval Latin may be a loan translation of Greek cheirógraphon.

many adj. 1137 mani; later monie (about 1175); developed from Old English monig, manig (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian manich many, Old Saxon manag, Old High German manag (modern German manch many a), Old Icelandic dic margr many, Old Swedish manger (Swedish mången, Danish mangen), and Gothic manags, from Proto-Germanic manazaz*, the Old English forms mænig, menig are cognate with Old Frisian menich, Middle Dutch mēnich (modern Dutch menig), and Old High German menig, from Proto-Germanic manizaz*. —n. 1137 mani; later monie (probably before 1200); from the adjective in Middle English and ultimately Proto-Germanic managin-*, from which cognates are found in Gothic managei multitude, crowd, Old High German managī, menigī large number, plurality (modern German Menge multitude), and Old English menigu, mengu, which did not survive long into Middle English.

map n. 1527 mappe; probably in part abstracted from mappe-mound (1393); earlier mapemounde (about 1380); and in part borrowed from Middle French mappe, from Old French mape (abstracted from Old French mapemond, mappemond), and from Medieval Latin mappa map (abstracted from earlier mappa mundi map of the world), from Latin mappa napkin, cloth (on which maps were once drawn). —v. 1586, from the noun.

maple n. Probably before 1300 mapel; earlier, in a place name Maplescanyse (1211–12); developed from Old English mapul-, as in mapultrēo maple tree (774); earlier, in mapuldur (about 700). Old English mapul- is cognate with Old Saxon mapul- in mapulder.

mar v. Probably before 1200 meren kill, defeat; also merren harm, ruin (probably about 1200); later marren (before 1250); developed from Old English merran to waste, spoil (about 950, in Anglian dialect); mierran (before 900, in West Saxon); both forms cognate with Old Frisian meria hinder, Old Saxon merrian, Middle Low German merren, marren, Old High German marren, merren hurt, harm, hinder, and Gothic marzjan offend, hinder, cause to stumble, from Proto-Germanic marzjanan*.

maraschino n. 1791–93, borrowed from Italian maraschino, from marasca bitter black cherry, shortened form of amarasca, from amaro bitter, from Latin amārus sour. The maraschino cherry, is first recorded in 1905.

marasmus n. 1656, New Latin marasmus, from Greek marasmós a wasting, withering, decay, from marainein put out, quench, weaken, wither, cause to waste away; see MORTAR² pounding bowl.

marathon n. 1896 (found in earlier Marathonian, 1767), in allusion to Marathon, a plain in Greece, site of the battle of Marathon (490 B.C.). The foot race was introduced in 1896 with the revival of the Olympic Games, to commemorate the unknown runner who carried the news of the victory to Athens.

Since the turn of the century marathon has also been applied to any competition requiring endurance or any event or activity that lasts a long time.

maraud v. 1711, borrowed from French marauder, from Middle French maraud rascal, of uncertain origin. —n. 1837, from the verb.

marble n. Before 1200 marbra; later marbre (about 1300), and marble (before 1338; a form thought to have developed by dissimilation of the second r in marbre to l); borrowed from Old French marbre, from Latin marmor, from Greek mármaros marble, gleaming stone. —adj. Probably about 1375, from the noun. —marbles n. pl. 1709 game played originally with marble balls. The marble (ball) was first recorded in 1694–95.

march¹ v. walk in time and step. About 1410 marchen; borrowed from Middle French marcher to march or walk, from Old French marchier to trample, stride, march; probably from Frankish (compare Old High German marchōn to mark out, delimit, MARK¹, v.); or possibly Old French marchier developed from a Gallo-Romance verb marcāre* to hammer, beat or mark time, from Latin marcus hammer, perhaps a back formation from marculus small hammer, and related to malleus hammer. —n. About 1572, rhythmic drumbeat to accompany marching; borrowed from Middle French marche, from marcher to march.

march² n. land along a border. About 1300; earlier marche (probably before 1300), and in a surname (1207); borrowed from Old French marche boundary, frontier, borderland; from Frankish (compare Old High German marca, marha boundary, MARK¹, n.). The borrowing marche, from Old French, replaced and coalesced with Old English meare boundary, mark, limit of space or time. —v. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French marchier to have a common border, bound, from marche boundary.

March n. Probably about 1200 march; also marz (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French march, marche, Old French march, dialect variant of marz, marz, from Latin Mārtius mēnsis month of Mars, the Roman god of war, from Mārs (genitive Mārtis) Mars; earlier Māvors (genitive Māvortis).

Mardi gras 1699, borrowing of French mardi gras, literally, fat Tuesday (mardi Tuesday, from Latin Mārtis diem day of the planet Mars; gras fat, from Latin crassus thick). The festival name is in allusion to the eating and festivities, before the fasting season of Lent.

mare¹ n. female horse. Before 1250 mare a riding horse, mare; also mere (about 1250), alteration (probably influenced by some form of Old English merh, meah horse) of Old English (Mercian) mēre, (before 900, in West Saxon) mýre, from miere* mare. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian merrie mare, Old Saxon meriha, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch merrie, Old High German marha, marha (modern German Mähre mare, jade), and Old Icelandic merr mare (Norwegian merr, and Danish mær mare), from Proto-Germanic marHjōn*.

mare² n. broad dark area of the moon or of another planet. 1860, New Latin Mare in the names of lunar or Martian “seas” such as Mare Tranquillitatis (Sea of Tranquility), from Latin mare sea; see MARINE. The word was first applied by Galileo to the dark areas of the moon.

margarine n. 1873, borrowing of French margarine (in oléomargarine, 1854), from margarique margaric acid; literally, pearly (in reference to the acid’s pearly luster), from Greek margarītēs pearl.

margin n. Probably before 1350 marginē; borrowed from Latin margō (genitive marginis) edge. —marginal adj. 1576, written or printed in the margin; borrowed from Middle French marginal and Medieval Latin marginalis, from Latin margō (genitive marginis) margin; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of that which is on the margin or of minor effect or importance, is first recorded in English in 1887.

marguerite n. 1866, borrowing of French marguerite, from Old French margarite daisy, pearl, from Latin margarita pearl, from Greek margaritēs pearl.

marigold n. 1373 marygolde; later marigold (about 1425); a compound of Mary (probably genitive, in reference to the Virgin) and gold.

marijuana or marihuana n. 1918 marajuana, alteration (probably influenced by the Spanish proper name María Juana Mary Jane) of earlier mariguan (1894); borrowed from Mexican Spanish mariguana, marihuana (a restored variant spelling in English, first recorded in 1907); of uncertain origin.

marimba n. 1704, borrowed from an African language, probably Bantu (compare Kimbundu and Swahili marimba xylophonelike instrument, Tshiluba madimba).

marina n. 1805, a promenade by the sea; later, a dock where moorings are available (1935); borrowed from Spanish or Italian marina shore, coast, from feminine of marino of the sea, from Latin marīnus MARINE.

marinade n. 1704, borrowed from French marinade spiced vinegar or brine for pickling, from mariner to MARINATE; for suffix see -ADE.

marinate v. About 1645, formed in English from French mariner to pickle in (sea) brine, from Old French marin, adj., of the sea, from Latin marīnus MARINE + English suffix -ATE¹.

marine adj. Probably 1440 maryne, borrowed from Middle French marin (feminine marine), from Old French marin, learned borrowing from Latin marīnus (feminine marina) of the sea, from mare (genitive maris) sea; cognate with Gothic marei sea, Old Icelandic marr, Old High German meri (modern German Meer), Middle Dutch mēre (modern Dutch meer), Old Saxon meri, Old Frisian mere, and Old English mere sea, lake, pool, pond (which did not survive into Middle English), from Proto-Germanic mari*. —n. 1669, shipping, fleet, later, a soldier who serves aboard a ship (1672); borrowing of French marine, from Old French marine, adj. This is a new borrowing from French, having no connection with an earlier borrowing found before 1375 with the meaning of seacoast, or area or promenade by the sea (surviving in 1703, and later in MARINA). —mariner n. About 1250, sailor, seaman; earlier as a surname Marinier (1197); borrowed through Anglo-French mariner, Old French marinier, from marin of the sea, MARINE; for suffix see -ER¹.

marionette n. About 1620, borrowed from French marionnette, from Marion, diminutive of Marie Mary; for suffix see -ETTE.

marital adj. 1603, borrowed from French marital, maritale, and directly from Latin marītālis of or belonging to married people, from marītus married man, husband; for suffix see -AL¹.

maritime adj. 1550, intended for service at sea; borrowed through Middle French maritime, and directly from Latin marītus of the sea, from mare (genitive maris) sea; see MARINE. The Latin ending -ītus was originally a superlative suffix (as in Latin optimus, superlative of bonus good) denoting close association.

marjoram n. 1373 magiron; later majorane (before 1393), and margenum (about 1550); borrowed from Old French majorane, from Medieval Latin maiorana; of uncertain origin.

mark¹ n. trace, impression. Apparently before 1200 meärke, merke, marke boundary, border, track, trace, imprint, mark; later mark (about 1303); in part, developed from Old English mearc boundary, sign, limit (701, in West Saxon) and merc a mark, as in the compound meāseren branding iron (about 700, in Mercian); also, in part, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic mark border area). The Old English and Old Icelandic forms are cognate with Old Frisian merke boundary, sign, Old Saxon marka boundary, Middle Dutch marc, marke (modern Dutch mark), Middle Low German mark district, Old High German marca, marha boundary, district (modern German Mark), and Gothic marka boundary, from Proto-Germanic markō*. —v. Probably before 1200 mearken; also merken, marken (probably about 1200); in part, developed from Old English mearcian to trace out boundaries (about 888, in West Saxon) and merciga (about 950, in Anglian); also, in part, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic marka, merka to mark). The Old English and Old Icelandic forms are cognate with Old Frisian merkia to mark, Old Saxon markon, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch merken, and Old High German markōn, markōn delimit, plan, merken, merchen to mark, note, observe (modern German merken), from Proto-Germanic markōjanan*; derived from the Proto-Germanic root that is the source of Old English mearc boundary, sign. —marker n. 1486, formed from mark + -er¹. Apparently a form mearcere existed in Old English as a gloss for Latin notārius clerk, secretary, but the word was not found again until late Middle English.

mark² n. unit of money or weight. Probably before 1200 marc, developed from Old English (about 960) marc unit of weight (about eight ounces); earlier, in the compound healf-marc (886); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic mark unit of weight, Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian mark). The Old English form is cognate with Middle High German marc, marke unit of weight, about half a pound (modern German Mark monetary unit), Middle Dutch marc unit of weight, and Old Frisian merk. Old French marc and Medieval Latin marca, merca, although themselves loans from the Germanic languages, may have affected the development of the word in Middle English. Essentially *mark*² is a derivative of *mark*¹ in that the meaning sign or imprint was a feature of the weight (bar) or coin.

market n. Before 1121 markete; also market (1124); borrowing of Old North French market, variant of Old French marchiet; later marchié, from Latin mercātus (genitive mercātūs) trading, trade, market, from mercārī to trade, deal in, from merx (genitive mercis) wares, merchandise. Related to MART, MERCHANT, MERCANTILE. —v. 1635, from the noun.

marlin n. fish. 1917, shortened form of marlinspike a marlinspike (so called from the shape of a the marlin's pointed snout, see MARLINE).

marline n. 1417 merlyn; later marlyne (1485); borrowed from Middle Dutch marlijn, variant (influenced by lijn line) of marling small cord, from marlen to fasten or secure (a sail) with a marline, probably a frequentative form of Middle Dutch māren, mēren to tie, MOOR¹, v. —marlinespike n. 1626, originally marling spike, from merlyng iren a pointed iron tool used by sailors to separate strands of rope (1485, also compare marlyne of the same date); formed originally from merlyng, marling after Middle Dutch marling (with later substitution of marline-); see MARLINE.

marmalade n. 1524, borrowed from Middle French marmelade, marmellade, from Portuguese marmelada, from marmelo quince (formed by dissimilation of the first l in the Latin melimēlum to r) in borrowing from Latin melimēlum a kind of sweet apple, from Greek melimēlon (mēli honey + mēlon apple); for suffix see -ADE.

marmoreal adj. 1798, like marble, cold, smooth; formed in English from Latin marmoreus of marble (from marmor MARBLE) + English -AL¹, possibly by influence of earlier marmorean (1656, also formed in English, from Latin marmoreus + English -AN).

marmoset n. Before 1398 marmusette a kind of small monkey; borrowed from Old French marmouset grotesque figurine, perhaps variant of marmot monkey, little child, from marmonner, marmouser to mumble; probably of imitative origin.

marmot n. 1607, borrowed from French marmotte, perhaps related to marmotter, marmonner to mumble; probably of imitative origin. Alternatively, French marmotte may be an altered form (by influence of marmot monkey; see MARMOSET) of mormont*, from Latin mūrem montis mountain mouse.

maroon¹ n., adj. very dark brownish-red. 1594, a kind of chestnut; later, a chestnut color (1791); borrowed from French marron chestnut, from the French dialect of Lyons, from a pre-Roman (perhaps Ligurian) word; for ending see -OON.

maroon² v. put (a person) ashore in a desolate place and leave there. 1697, be lost in the wilds; from earlier maron, n., a fugitive black slave living in the mountains and forests of the West Indies and Dutch Guiana (1666, but earlier found as Symeron, 1626). This noun was originally borrowed from Spanish cimarron wild, untamed, and later borrowed from French marron, a shortening of American Spanish cimarrón runaway person or animal; originally an adjective meaning wild, untamed, with the literal sense of living high in the mountains; probably derived from Spanish cima summit, top, from Latin cyma sprout; see CYME. The English suffix -roon, -oon, as in octroon, is an extended form of the noun suffix in French -on and Spanish -ón, often used in a derogatory manner.

The sense of put ashore on a desolate island or coast, is first recorded in 1724 as marooning, gerund.

marque n. official permission to capture enemy merchant ships, especially in the phrase letters of marque. 1419 merque, marque; earlier mark (1353); borrowed through Anglo-French mark from Old Provençal marca reprisal, from marcar seize as a pledge, mark, from Germanic (compare Old High German markhōn, markhōn delimit, MARK¹, v.).

marquee n. 1690, large tent, back formation (mistaken as a plural) from French marquise linen canopy placed over an officer's tent to distinguish it from others. The meaning of a canopy over the entrance of a hotel, theater, etc., is first recorded in 1934 in American English.

marquis or marquess n. Probably about 1300 marchis; later markeys (about 1395) and marques (1444); borrowed from Old French marquis, marchis, literally, ruler of a border area; compare Old French marche frontier, MARCH².

marriage n. About 1300 mariage; borrowing of Old French mariage, from marier to MARRY; for suffix see -AGE.

marrow n. About 1340 mergh; later marwe (before 1387) and marowe (before 1398); developed from Old English (before 1000) mearg marrow; earlier merg (before 800) and maerh (about 700). The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian merg marrow, Old Saxon marg, Middle Dutch merch (modern Dutch merg), Old High German marg, marag (modern German Mark), and Old Icelandic mergr (Swedish merg, Danish marv), from Proto-Germanic mazga-*.

marry v. About 1300 marien to give in marriage; borrowed from Old French marier, from Latin marītare wed, marry, from marītus married man or husband; of uncertain origin (very possibly a quasi-participle with the meaning of provided with a marī*, a young woman). —married adj. Before 1376 maried; developed from past participle of marien to marry; n.

marsh n. About 1250 mersh; later marsh (probably about 1450); developed from Old English (about 700) mersc, merisc; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon mersc marsh, Middle Low German mersch, marsch (modern German Marsch), and Middle Dutch mersch, marsh; derived from Proto-Germanic mariskō*. —marshy adj. Before 1382 mershi; formed from mersh marsh + -i -y¹.

marshal n. 1258 mareschal high officer of a royal court; earlier as a surname Marshal (1218); borrowed from Old French mareschal, marescal, originally, stable officer, horse tender, groom, from Frankish (compare Old High German marahscalc groom, corresponding to modern German Marschall marshal, Middle Low German marshalk groom, Middle Dutch maerschalc, and modern Dutch maarschalk marshal). —v. About 1450 marchalen arrange in order, tend horses; from the noun.

marshmallow n. Before 1400 marshmalwe kind of mallow plant which grows near salt marshes; developed from Old English (about 1000) mersc-mealwe (mersc MARSH + mealwe MALLOW. Marshmallow the confection (1884) was originally made from the root of the marsh mallow plant.

marsupial adj. 1696, formed in English from New Latin marsupium + English -al. Marsupium is found in Late Latin marsupium pouch or purse, from Latin marsupium, marsipium, from Greek marsippion, diminutive of marsippos, marsyppos pouch. —n. 1835, from the adjective.

mart n. 1436, market or fair; borrowed from Middle Dutch markt, or colloquial mart; borrowing of Latin mercātus trade, MARKET.

marten n. Probably about 1250 martre the animal or its fur; later martin (before 1300) and marten (1437); borrowing in part from Old French martreine, noun use of feminine martin of or pertaining to the marten, from martre, martre marten; and, in part from Medieval Latin martina, martina; both the Old French and Medieval Latin forms are from Germanic (compare Old Saxon marthrin, adj., of or pertaining to the marten, Old High German marthar marten, modern German Marder, Middle Dutch maerter, modern Dutch marter, Old Icelandic mǫrdhr, Old Frisian merth, and Old English meath, which did not survive into Middle English; from Proto-Germanic marthuz*).

martial adj. About 1385 marcial; later martial (before 1475); borrowed from Latin Martiālis of Mars or war, from Mars (genitive Martis) Mars, the Roman god of war. The term martial law, meaning military rule over civilians, is first recorded in 1533.

Martian adj. About 1395 marciē subject to influence of the planet Mars; in present-day English Martian of the planet Mars (1880); formed from Latin Martius pertaining to Mars (from Mars, genitive Martis Mars) + English -an. —n. 1892, from the adjective.

martin n. 1589; earlier Scottish martoune (about 1450); probably borrowed from Middle French martin, from Martin, a proper name, perhaps Saint Martin, bishop of Tours (about 371), whose festival of Martinmas is celebrated on November 11, at about the same time as the bird's migration.

Martin replaced martnet (1440), martynet (1513), European martin or swift; borrowed from Middle French martinet and from Medieval Latin martineta, diminutive forms of Martin, the proper name.

martinet n. 1779 Martinet a military or naval officer who is a strict disciplinarian, developed from earlier Martinet a system of drill (1676), reputedly invented by Colonel Jean Martinet, a French general.

martingale n. 1589, borrowed from Middle French martingale, originally, a style of fastening trousers, perhaps from Provençal martegalo, feminine of martegal inhabitant of Martigues, a small town near Marseilles, France.

martini n. 1894, in allusion to Martini and Rossi, an Italian company that manufactures vermouth; earlier (1870) a make of rifle.

martyr n. Old English martyr (before 899); borrowed from Late Latin martyr, from Greek mártýr, late form of mártýs (genitive mártýros) martyr, witness, probably related to mémēra care, trouble, mermalrein be anxious or thoughtful. In Middle English the term was reinforced by borrowing (probably before 1200) from Old French martir, from Late Latin martyr. —v. Probably before 1200 martren; later martiren (about 1200); developed from Old English gemartyrian (before 899), and gemartrian (before 899); from martyr, n. In Middle English, the verb was also reinforced by borrowing from Old French martirier, martirer, and Medieval Latin martyriare. —martyrdom n. About 1175, martirdom, developed from Old English martyrdom (before 899); formed from Old English martyr, n. + -dom -dom.

marvel n. Probably before 1300 merveille, merveille something wonderful; later marveyle (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French merveille a wonder, from Vulgar Latin mirabilia*, alteration of Latin mīrabilia wonderful things, from neuter plural of mīrabilis strange or wonderful, from mīrārī to wonder at, from mīrus wonderful. —v. Probably before 1300 mervelen be filled with wonder; later marvaylen (1439); borrowed from Old French merveillier to wonder, from merveille, n. —marvelous adj. Probably before 1300 merveilleuse causing wonder; borrowed from Old French merveillous, from merveille marvel; for suffix see -OUS.

Marxism n. 1897 (implied earlier in Marxist, 1886); probably borrowed from French marxisme, from Karl Marx, German political theorist + -isme -ism.

marzipan n. 1901, borrowing of German Marzipan, from Italian marzapane. Marzipan replaced earlier marcpayne (1494); borrowed from Middle French marcepain, also from Italian marzapane. The Italian word also means a candy box; earlier, especially in Medieval Latin, a small box, and a medieval coin bearing the image of a seated Christ.

maskara n. 1890 maskaro; probably an alteration of Spanish máscara soot, stain, mask, from the same source as Italian maschera MASK. The spelling maskara is first recorded in English in 1922.

mascot n. 1881, borrowed from French mascotte sorcerer's charm, good luck piece, from Provençal mascolo sorcery, fetish, from masco witch, from Old Provençal masca, from Medieval Latin masca mask, specter, nightmare; of uncertain origin.

masculine adj. Probably about 1350 masculyn masculine in gender; later, of men, male (about 1380); borrowed from Old French masculin, and directly from Latin masculinus male, masculine, of the masculine gender, from masculus, diminutive of mās (genitive maris) male person, male. —n. About 1450 masculin, from the adjective.

maser n. 1955, acronym formed from m(icrowave) a(mplification) by s(timulated) e(mission of) r(adiation). Compare LASER.

mash n. soft mixture. 1305 mas- in masfat vat used to hold mash (wort) in making beer or ale; later massh- in masshaf (1335); developed from Old English (about 1000) māsc- in māsc-wyrt mash-wort. The Old English element māsc- is cognate with Middle High German meisch crushed grapes, infused malt for beer (modern German Maisch), from Proto-Germanic maisk-, earlier maiH-sk-. The general meaning of soft mixture, is first recorded in 1598. —v. About 1250 meschen to reduce to a pulp; developed from Old English māscan*, māscan to make pulp; from māsc-, see the noun.

mask¹ n. make amorous advances. 1879 (but said to be in theatrical parlance as early as 1860), probably a figurative use of *mask*¹, v., either in the sense of press or force (one's attentions) on someone, or reduce someone's emotions to a soft mass or mash. Alternatively, *mask*² could be a back formation from masher, with the same sense development. —masher n. 1875, probably formed from *mask*¹ (in the sense of press or force one's attentions on someone, or reduce someone's emotions to a soft mass or mash) + *-er*¹.

mask n. 1534, borrowed from Middle French masque covering to hide or protect the face, through Italian maschera, and perhaps also directly from Medieval Latin masca mask, specter, nightmare, of uncertain origin, possibly shortened from Arabic maskhara buffoon, from sakhira to ridicule. —v. 1560, take part in a masquerade; later, to disguise (1579); either from the noun or borrowed from Middle French masquer (1550), from masque, n.

masochism n. 1893, borrowed from German Masochismus, from the name of Leopold von Sacher-Masoch, Austrian novelist who described this abnormality in his works + -ismus -ism. German Masochismus was coined in 1883 by the German neurologist Richard von Krafft-Ebing, 1840–1902. —masochist n. 1895, borrowed from German Masochist, from Sacher-Masoch + -ist. —masochistic adj. 1904, probably formed from English masochist + -ic, after German masochistisch.

mason n. Probably before 1200 machun worker who builds with stone or brick; later masoun (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French masson, maçon, machon, from Frankish (compare Old High German steinmezzo stone mason, modern German Steinmetz mason, related to māhōn to MAKE). Mason is also found as a surname Macun (1125–30). —masonry n. Probably about 1375, borrowed from Old French maçonerie, from maçon mason, and influenced in form by Middle English masoun mason; for suffix see -RY.

masque n. 1514 maske, borrowed from Middle French masque; see MASK. Originally the same word as mask, but now distinguishing the amateur dramatic entertainment, popular especially among the English nobility in the 1500's and 1600's, a sense first recorded in 1562, or a play written for such entertainment (1605).

masquerade n. 1597 mascarado, in imitation of Italian, using French mascarade with a supposed Italian ending -o; and also mascarad (1613); borrowed from French mascarade party or dance at which masks and fancy costumes are worn, from Italian mascarata, variant of mascherata masquerade, from maschera MASK. —v. 1654, to disguise as at a masquerade; from the noun.

mass¹ n. lump, heap. Before 1382 masse, borrowed from Old French masse lump, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin massa kneaded dough, lump, from Greek māza barley bread, related to māsein to knead. —adj. 1733 mass meeting, from the noun. The term mass media appeared in 1923 and the meaning of on a large scale (as in mass production) in 1920. —v. 1563, from the noun. An isolated example is recorded earlier in Middle English ymaced, ppl. (about 1380).

Mass or mass² n. eucharist. Before 1121 messe; also masse (1135); developed from Old English mæsse (before 901); earlier messe (before 810); borrowed as an alteration of Vulgar Latin messa* dismissal, also, the name of the religious service, from Late Latin missa dismissal, probably also, the name of the religious service, from Latin missa dismissal, feminine past participle of mittere to let go, send; probably so called from the concluding words of the Mass Ite, missa est, meaning "Go, it (the prayer) has been sent," or "Go, it is the dismissal."

massacre n. 1586, borrowed from Middle French massacre, maçacre wholesale slaughter, carnage, related to Old French macerecre, macecle a shambles, slaughterhouse, butchery, of uncertain origin (compare Latin macellum provisions store, butcher shop). —v. 1581, borrowed from Middle French massacrer to slaughter, from massacre massacre, n.

massage n. 1876, borrowed from French massage friction or kneading, from masser to massage, probably (during Napoleonic campaign in Egypt) from Arabic massa to touch, feel, handle. —v. 1887, from the noun.

masseur n. 1876, borrowing of French masseur, from masser to MASSAGE. —masseuse n. 1876, borrowing of French masseuse, feminine of MASSEUR.

massive adj. Probably about 1408, massiffe; later massif (before 1420); borrowed from Middle French massif (feminine massive) bulky, massive, from Old French masse lump, *MASS*¹; for suffix see -IVE.

mast¹ n. pole on a ship to support sails. Probably before 1200 mast; developed from Old English mæst (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch mast mast or pole, Middle Low German mast, and Old High German mast (modern German Mast), from Proto-Germanic mastaz*. —masthead n. 1748, top of a ship's mast; later, part of a periodical that gives the title (1838).

mast² n. nuts, etc., that have fallen to the ground, used as food for swine. About 1380 mast; earlier maste a feeding ground for swine (about 1300); developed from Old English (825) mæst; cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch mast food, mast, Old High German mast (modern German Mast), from Proto-Germanic mastaz*.

mastectomy n. 1923, formed in English from Greek mastós breast + English -ectomy surgical removal.

master n. Probably about 1150 maister, master person in authority, person holding a teaching degree; a fusion of 1) Old English (about 1000) mægester, borrowed from Latin magister chief, head, director, teacher, and 2) Old French maître, mas- tre, meister, from Latin magister, contrastive adjective formed from magis, adv., more, comparative of magnus great; see MUCH. —adj. Before 1225 meister, maister; from the noun. —v. Probably before 1200 meistren to overcome, defeat; later maistren (before 1300); from the noun, and also borrowed from Old French maistrier, from maistre, n., master. —masterpiece n. 1605 maisterpiece; formed as an Anglicization of earlier maisterstik (1579), probably a borrowing from, or loan translation of, Dutch meesterstuk or perhaps German Meisterstück work by which a craftsman gained the rank of master. —mastery n. Probably before 1200, Middle English meistrie; later masterie (before 1250); borrowed from Old French maistrie, from maistre, n., master.

mastic n. 1373 mastik, borrowed from Old French mastic, and directly from Late Latin masticum, masticha, naturalized forms of Latin masticē, from Greek masticē, related to masāsthai to chew.

masticate v. 1649, probably a back formation from earlier mastication; for suffix see -ATE¹. —mastication n. Probably before 1425 masticacioun; borrowed from Old French mastication, and directly from Late Latin masticātiōnem (nominative masticātiō), from masticāre chew, probably from Greek masticān gnash the teeth; related to māstax mouth, jaws, and masāsthai chew; for suffix see -ATION.

mastiff n. Before 1338 mastif, irregular borrowing from Old French mastin, from Vulgar Latin mānsuētīnus* domesticated, from Latin mānsuētus tame, gentle (manus hand + suētus, past participle of suēscere become used to). The ending of mastiff was influenced in Middle English by Old French mestif mongrel.

mastodon n. 1813, borrowed from French mastodonte, from New Latin Mastodon the genus name, formed from Greek mastós breast + odōn (genitive odōntos) tooth; so called from the nipplelike projections on the mastodon's teeth.

mastoid adj. 1732, borrowed from Greek mastoeidēs resembling a breast (mastós breast + eidos form). —n. 1800, from the adjective.

masturbation n. 1766, borrowed from French masturbation and probably directly from New Latin masturbationem (nominative masturbatio), from Latin māsturbārī, alteration, probably by influence of turbāre to stir up, of earlier man-stuprāre* (manus hand + stuprāre defile), which would reinforce connection with the earlier form in English mastupration, 1621; for suffix see -ATION. —masturbate v. 1857, back formation from masturbation; for suffix see -ATE¹.

mat¹ n. piece of coarse fabric used as a rug. Probably before 1200 matte; later mat (probably about 1350); developed from Old English matte (before 800); borrowed from Late Latin matta, probably from Phoenician (compare Hebrew mittāh bed, couch). —v. 1549, cover with mats; also tangle thickly together (1577); from the noun; recorded once in Middle English matten make mats (before 1425).

mat², matt, or matte adj. not shiny, dull. Before 1648 matte, probably developed from the verb in English, and in part borrowed from French mat dull, from the verb. —v. 1602, borrowed from French mater, from mat dull, from Old French mat beaten down, withered, probably from Latin mattus maudlin or sodden with drink (probably a dialectal or colloquial form of maditus* soaked, from madēre be wet or sodden, be drunk). —n. 1845, backing for a picture, borrowed from French mat a dull surface or finish; from the adjective.

matador n. 1681, borrowing of Spanish matador, literally, killer, from matar to kill or wound, probably from Vulgar Latin mattāre* beat down, wound; possibly from mattus* stupid, brutish, from Latin mattus drunk; see MAT² dull.

match¹ n. stick for striking a fire. About 1378 macche wick of a candle or lamp; later meche (before 1400) and matche (probably about 1450); borrowed from Old French meiche wick of a candle, of uncertain origin (probably from Gallo-Romance micca*, mycca*, perhaps a blend of Latin myxa, from Greek mýxa lamp wick, mucus, and Latin mucosus, mucus MUCUS); the semantic connection (going back to antiquity) is that the spout of a lamp resembles a nostril, and the wick is suggestive of mucus.

match² n. an equal. Probably about 1200 macche one's spouse, mate; later, one's equal (about 1300); developed from Old English mæcca (about 1000), from gemæcca companion, mate, wife (before 971, from Proto-Germanic zamakjōn*); earlier gemecca companion (before 810); cognate with Old Saxon gimaco fellow, equal, Old High German gimahho (from Proto-Germanic zamakōn*), and Old Icelandic maki companion, mate. The meaning of contest is first recorded in 1545, from an earlier sense of matching of adversaries (probably before 1400). —v. About 1353 machen, from the noun.

mate¹ n. one of a pair. Probably about 1350, fellow; also companion (about 1380); borrowed from Middle Low German māte, gemate one eating at the same table, messmate (modern German Maat mate); cognate with Old High German gimazzo messmate from Proto-Germanic za-matōn* having food (matiz*) together (za-*). —v. 1509, to equal, rival; later, to associate, couple, pair (1593); from the noun.

mate² v. checkmate. Probably before 1300 maten; earlier, to overcome, defeat, damage (probably about 1200); borrowed from Old French mater, from mat, n., checkmate, in eschecat; see CHECKMATE. —n. Probably before 1300 mat, borrowed from Old French mat; see verb above.

material n. About 1380, thing made of matter, substance; from the adjective. —adj. About 1340 materiel of matter, physical, concrete, earthly; later material (about 1390); borrowed through Old French materiel, material, and directly from Late Latin māteriālis of or belonging to matter, from Latin māteria matter; see MATTER; for suffix see -AL¹. —materialism n. 1748, belief that all action, thought, and feeling is made up of material things; borrowed from French matérialisme or from New Latin materialismus, from Late Latin māteriālis of matter; for suffix see -ISM. The meaning of devotion to material objects and needs, is first recorded in 1851. —materialist n. 1668, borrowed from French matérialiste or from New Latin materialista, from Late Latin māteriālis + -ista materiel or matériel n. 1827, earlier, the mechanical part of an art, such as style, technique, etc. (1814); borrowing of French matériel material, from Old French materiel, adj., learned borrowing from Late Latin materiālis of matter, from materia substance, MATTER.

-ist. —materialize v. 1710; formed from English material adj. + -ize.

maternal adj. 1481, borrowed from Middle French maternel, learned borrowing from Vulgar Latin māternālis*, derived (probably on the model of Latin mātrōnālis of or befitting a matron) from Latin māternus maternal, from māter MOTHER; for suffix see -AL¹.

maternity n. 1611, borrowed from French maternité motherhood, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin maternitatem (nominative maternitas), from Latin māternus MATERNAL; for suffix see -ITY.

mathematics n. 1581 mathematikes, plural of Middle English methametik (before 1387), borrowed from Latin mathēmatica; and mathématique (before 1393); borrowed from Old French mathématique, from Latin mathēmatica, from Greek mathēmatikḗ téchnē mathematical science, feminine singular of mathēmatikós relating to mathematics, from māthēma (genitive mathēmatos) learning, knowledge, mathematical knowledge; related to manthánein to learn. —mathematical adj. Probably before 1425 mathematicalle; borrowed from Medieval Latin mathematicalis, from Latin mathēmaticus (from Greek mathēmatikós) + -ālis -al¹. —mathematician n. Probably before 1425 mathematicioun; borrowed from Middle French mathematicien, from mathématique mathematical, from Latin mathēmaticus; for suffix see -IAN.

-matic a combining form abstracted from automatic, and used in allusion to the sense of automatic, often with a connective vowel, such as -a- or -o-, as in Adjustomatic, Instamatic.

matinee or matinée n. 1848, as a French term in matinée musicale; French matinée, from matin morning (i.e. daytime), from Old French matines; see MATINS. —adj. 1895 matinée actor, from the noun.

matins n. pl. About 1250, church service held in the morning; borrowed from Old French matines, from Late Latin mātūtīnās (accusative) morning prayers, originally mātūtīnās vigiliās morning watches, from Latin mātūtīnus of or in the morning, associated with Mātūta dawn goddess.

matr- a combining form borrowed from Latin mātri-, as found in such forms as mātrīcīda matricide and mātrīmōnium matrimony, from māter (genitive mātris) mother, used in terms describing kinship with the mother or the female line, as in matricentric mother-centered (1956), matrilineal (1904). Contrasted with PATRI-.

matriarch n. 1606, formed from English matr- + -arch, abstracted from patriarch; see PATRIARCH. —matriarchal adj. 1863, formed from English matriarch + -al¹, patterned after patriarchal. —matriarchy n. 1885, formed from English matriarch + -y³, patterned after patriarchy.

matricide¹ n. person who kills his or her mother. 1638, borrowed perhaps through French matricide mother killer, from Latin mātrīcīda, from māter mother + -īda -cide¹, killer.

matricide² n. act of killing one's own mother. 1594, borrowed perhaps through French matricide mother killing, from Latin mātrīcīdium, from māter mother + -īdium -cide², a killing.

matriculate v. 1579, enroll as a student in a college or university; earlier, to place a name on an official list (1577); either developed from English matriculate, adj., registered, enrolled (1487), borrowed from Medieval Latin matriculatus*, past participle of matriculare*; or borrowed directly from Medieval Latin matriculare*, from Late Latin mātrīcula a public register, diminutive of mātrīx (genitive mātrīcis) list, roll, sources, womb, from Latin mātrīx breeding animal, MATRIX; for suffix see -ATE¹.

The Late Latin meaning (also found in Latin) of mātrīx as list or roll is understandable only as a loan translation of Greek métrā register, lot, and Latin mētrī to measure as if that were the same word as Greek métrā womb. —matriculation n. 1588, formed from English matriculate + -ion.

matrimony n. About 1300 matrimoyne, also matrymony (about 1303); borrowed from Old French matrimoine and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin mātrīmōnium wedlock, marriage, derived (probably on the model of patrimōnium patrimony) from māter (genitive mātris) mother + -mōnium suffix signifying action, state, condition. —matrimonial adj. 1449 matrimonyal; borrowed from Middle French matrimonial, and directly from Latin mātrīmōniālis, from mātrīmōnium matrimony; for suffix see -AL¹.

matrix n. Probably before 1425 mold; earlier matrice womb (1373); borrowed from Old French matrice, from Latin mātrīx, and directly from Late Latin mātrīx (genitive mātrīcis) womb, from Latin, breeding animal, from māter (genitive mātris) mother. —v. 1951 (implied in matrixing); from the noun.

matron n. Before 1393 matrone married woman; borrowing of Old French matrone, and borrowed directly from Latin mātrōna married woman, from māter (genitive mātris) mother. The meaning of a woman who manages a hospital, school, or other public institution, is first recorded in 1557.

matt or matte adj., n. See MAT².

matter n. Probably before 1200 materie substance, concern, subject, as of discussion; later mater (before 1325); borrowed from Old French matere, matiere, and directly from Latin māteria substance from which something is made, timber, from māter origin, source, mother. —v. 1581, from the noun. An earlier meaning of form or discharge pus, is found in 1530.

mattock n. About 1303 mattoke; developed from Old English (about 700) mættoc; probably borrowed from Vulgar Latin matteuca* club, related to Latin mateola kind of mallet.

mattress n. About 1300 materas; later materace (1388); borrowed from Old French materas, from Italian materasso, and from Medieval Latin matracium, materacium, both Italian and mature v. 1541, probably a back formation from the earlier maturation, perhaps by influence of Middle French maturer ripen; for suffix see -ATE¹. It is also possible that the verb developed from maturate, adj., matured, (of an abscess) brought to a head (probably about 1425); borrowed from Latin mātūrātum ripened, past participle of mātūrāre to ripen; see MATURATION.

Medieval Latin forms from Arabic al-matrah the cushion; literally, thing thrown down, from ṭaraḥa he threw (down).

The old sense of mature, develop (1622) is now experiencing a revival in the social sciences.—maturation n. 1392 maturacioun formation of pus; borrowed from Middle French maturation, and directly from Latin mātūrātiōnem (nominative mātūrātiō) a hastening, from mātūrāre to ripen, from mātūrus ripe; for suffix see -ATION.

mature adj. Probably 1440, ripe, full-grown; later, well-considered, careful (1454); borrowed through Middle French mature, and directly from Latin mātūrus ripe, timely, early.—v. 1392 maturen ripen, bring to a head; borrowed from Latin mātūrāre to ripen, from mātūrus ripe. The meaning of come or bring to maturity is first recorded in 1626.—maturity n. Probably before 1430 matyryte; borrowed through Middle French maturité, and directly from Latin mātūrītatem (nominative mātūrītās) ripeness, from mātūrus ripe; for suffix see -ITY.

maudlin adj. 1607, tearful; later, sentimental (before 1631); developed from Middle English Maudelen (probably before 1325), Magdalene (about 1390, supposed to be the repentant sinner forgiven by Jesus, Luke 7:37); borrowed from Old French Madelaine, and directly from Latin Magdalēnē, from Greek Magdalēnē of Magdala, a town on the Sea of Galilee. The figurative meaning developed in allusion to the paintings in which Mary Magdalene was often represented as weeping in repentance.

maul n. 1545, spelling alteration of Middle English malle (before 1400); earlier mealle (probably about 1200) and, in the surname Maulmanger seller of mauls (1205); borrowed from Old French mail Mallet.—v. 1593, spelling alteration of Middle English mallen to strike with a maul (probably about 1350); earlier meallen (probably about 1200); from the noun. The meaning of knock about, handle roughly is first recorded about 1610.

Maundy Thursday 1440, developed from maunde the Last Supper, also the ceremony of washing the feet; borrowed from Old French mandé, from Latin mandātum commandment, in reference to the first word of the church service for this day, from the passage in John 13:34, "A new commandment (mandātum novum) I give unto you," spoken by Jesus to the Apostles after washing their feet at the Last Supper.

mausoleum n. 1600, from reference to Mausoleum (probably about 1425, name of the tomb built at Halicarnassus, in Asia Minor); borrowed from Latin Mausōlēum, from Greek Mausōleion, from Maússollos Mausolus, king of in Asia Minor. This tomb was considered one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world.

mauve n., adj. 1859, borrowing of French mauve, from Old French mauve mallow, from Latin malva mallow; so called from the color of the mallow plant.

maven or mavin n. 1965, borrowed from Yiddish mevvn, from Hebrew mēbhīn, literally, one who understands.

maverick n. 1867, unbranded calf, in allusion to Samuel Maverick, Texas cattle owner who did not brand the calves of one of his herds. The transferred meaning of individualist, unconventional person, is first recorded in 1886.

maw n. Probably before 1300 maue stomach; earlier mahe (probably before 1200); developed from Old English maga (before 800); cognate with Old Frisian maga stomach, Middle Dutch maghe (modern Dutch maag), Old High German mago (modern German Magen), and Old Icelandic magi, from Proto-Germanic mazōn*.

mawkish adj. 1668, inclined to sickness; formed from dialectal mawke maggot + -ish¹. Mawke, Middle English mawke (recorded before 1425) is borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic madhr MAGGOT). The sense of sickly sentimental, is found in 1702.

maxilla n. 1676, borrowing of Latin maxilla upper jaw, diminutive of māla cheekbone, jaw. The word was apparently lost for 250 years after its earlier appearance in Middle English maxille (1425); borrowed from Middle French, from Latin maxilla.—maxillary adj. 1626, formed in English from Latin maxilla jaw + English -ary.

maxim n. Probably before 1430 maxime proverb, adage; borrowed from Middle French maxime, learned borrowing from Late Latin maxima, usually cited in maxima prōpositiō axiom; literally, greatest premise, feminine of maximus greatest; see MAXIMUM.

maximum n. 1740, borrowed through French maximum, and directly from Latin maximum, neuter of maximus greatest, superlative of magnus great or large.—adj. 1834, from the noun.—maximize v. 1802, formed from English maximum + -ize.

may v. Before 1200 mai, may have power, may (first and third person singular present indicative for the infinitive mouen, with the past tense mighte, moghte); developed from Old English (perhaps 650) mæg (infinitive magan, past tense meahte, mihte). The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian mei have power, may (infinitive muga, past tense machte), Old Saxon mag (infinitive mugan, past tense mahte), Middle Dutch mach (infinitive moghen, past tense mohte; modern Dutch mag, infinitive mogen, past tense mocht), Old High German mag (infinitive magan, past tense mahta; modern German mag, infinitive mögen, past tense möchte), Old Icelandic mā (infinitive mega, past tense mätte; Norwegian, Danish, Swedish må, past tense mätte), and Gothic mag (infinitive magan, past tense mahte) from the Proto-Germanic root mag-* (infinitive mag-anan*). Related to MIGHT.

May n. 1110 Mai; borrowed from Old French mai, and directly from Latin Majus, Maius mēnsis month of May, possibly related to Maja, Maia, an earth goddess whose name is probably cognate with Latin magnus great, with reference either to her stature or her furthering growth of crops.

maybe adv. Before 1400 may be, a variant form of the phrase (it) may be; also corresponding to archaic mayhap (1444 may happe, a variant form of the phrase [it] may hap it may happen; see HAPHAZARD, HAPPEN).

Mayday or mayday n. 1927, adapted from the pronunciation of French m'aider, a shortening of venez m'aider come help me! Compare SOS.

mayhem n. Probably before 1300 maym a mutilation, injury; later maheym (about 1405); borrowed through Anglo-French mahaim, maihem, Old French mahaigne injury, related to mahaignier to MAIM, from Vulgar Latin mahanāre*, of unknown origin. The figurative sense of any excessive violence, damage, or disorder, is first recorded in 1868.

mayonnaise n. 1841, borrowing of French mayonnaise, mahonnaise (1807), probably named in allusion to Mahon, a seaport on the island of Minorca, captured by the Duc de Richelieu in 1756, whose chef is said to have introduced the Mahonnaise in commemoration of his employer's victory.

mayor n. About 1300 mer, later maire (about 1378), but also found as a surname Mair (1242); borrowed from Old French maire, major head of a city or town government; originally, greater or superior, adj., from Latin maior, major, comparative of magnus great. —mayoralty n. 1386, borrowed from Old French mairalte, from maire + -alte as in principalte, and reformed in English as -alty.

maze n. About 1300 mase delusion, deception, bewilderment; later maze (about 1385); developed from amasen AMAZE. The meaning of a network of paths, labyrinth, is first recorded about 1386.

mazurka or mazourka n. 1818, borrowed probably from Russian mazúrka, from Polish mazurek dance of the mazur, inhabitant of Mazowsze (Mazovia), ancient region in central Poland; in Russian the accusative in the Polish expression tańczyć (to dance) mazurka was reinterpreted as a feminine form with the suffix -ka, hence the form mazúrka.

McCoy n. the real McCoy, 1922, alteration of the earlier Scottish phrase the real Mackay (1883); of uncertain origin.

Several derivations have been proposed: 1) from Mackay, a Scotch whiskey distilled by A. and M. Mackay of Glasgow; a citation (1908) refers to the liquor as "the clear McCoy"; 2) from, or influenced by, Kid McCoy, a former welterweight boxing champion; 3) from the northern branch of the Scots clan Mackay, whose chief, Lord Reay, in rivalry with other branches, was referred to as "the Reay Mackay," said to be later altered to "the real Mackay" or the genuine article.

me pron. Old English mē dative, and mē, mec accusative case of I (about 650); cognate with Old Frisian mi me (accusative), mi, mir (dative), Old Saxon mī (dative and accusative), Middle Dutch mī, modern Dutch mij, Old High German mih (accusative), mir (dative), modern German mich, mir, Old Icelandic mik (accusative), mēr (dative), Gothic mik (accusative), mis (dative), from Proto-Germanic accusative meke*, dative mes*.

mead¹ n. Archaic. meadow. Probably about 1150 mede; developed from Old English (before 901) mæd, from Proto-Germanic mædwō*; earlier mede in Medeshamsted, Old English name of Peterborough (about 737); see MEADOW.

mead² n. alcoholic drink of fermented honey and water. About 1150 mede; developed from Old English medu mead (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian mede mead, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch mēde (modern Dutch mede, mee), Old High German metu (modern German Met), and Old Icelandic mjǫður (Swedish mjöd, Danish, Norwegian mjød), all from Proto-Germanic meduz*.

meadow n. Probably before 1200 medewe; later medwe (about 1300) and medow (before 1338); developed from Old English mædwē (777), from Proto-Germanic mædwōn*. Old English mædwē is the oblique case of mæd meadow, cognate with Old Frisian mēde meadow, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch māde, Middle High German mate, matte, modern German (poetic or dialectal) Matte, and Old Swedish math; related through, but not derived from, Old English mæth a mowing or crop of hay, māwan to cut down, *MOW*¹. The spelling meadow is a partial revival of the Old English, first recorded in Shakespeare's plays.

meager adj. About 1378 megre; earlier, in a surname (1179); borrowed from Old French megre, variant of (half-learned) maigre, from Latin macrum, accusative of macer thin, lean. A separate group of Germanic cognates, not borrowings from Latin, but from Proto-Germanic magrās*, include Old Icelandic magr thin (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish mager), Old High German magar (modern German mager), Middle Dutch māgher (modern Dutch mager), Middle Low German māger, and Old English mæger (which did not survive in Middle English).

meal¹ n. food served. Probably before 1200 mele, mel; developed from Old English (before 725) mæl appointed time, mealtime, meal; cognate with Old Frisian mēl time, Middle Low German māl appointed time, Middle Dutch mael time, meal (modern Dutch maal), Old High German māl (modern German Mahl meal, Mal time), Old Icelandic māl measure, time, meal (Swedish, Norwegian, Danish māl mark, measure, meal), Gothic mēl time (pl. mēla marks, writing), from Proto-Germanic mæla-*; probably related to Old English mæth MEASURE.

meal² n. ground grain. About 1150 melewe; later mele (probably about 1200); developed from Old English melu (before 899, from Proto-Germanic melwan*); cognate with Old Frisian mele meal, Old Saxon melo, Middle Dutch mele (modern Dutch meel), Old High German melo (modern German Mehl), Old Icelandic mjöl meal (Swedish mjöl, Danish mel), Old Saxon, Old High German, and Gothic malan to grind (modern German mahlen), and Middle Dutch and modern Dutch malen to grind.

mean¹ v. intend. About 1175, Middle English menen; later meanen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English mænan mean, tell, say (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian mēna signify or mean, Old Saxon mēnian intend or make known, Middle Dutch mēnen mean or think (modern Dutch menen), and Old High German meinen have in mind (modern German meinen hold an opinion, mean), from Proto-Germanic mainijanan*. — meaning n. Before 1387 mening sense or interpretation; from menen to mean + *-ing*¹.

mean² adj. inferior. Probably before 1200 mene shared by all, common; later, inferior, poor (before 1325); developed from Old English gemæne common; cognate with Old Frisian mēne common, Old Saxon gimēni, Middle Low German gemeine, Middle Dutch ghemēne (modern Dutch gemeen), Old High German gimeini (modern German gemein), and Gothic gama-ins, from Proto-Germanic za-mainiz* possessed jointly.

The sense development of inferior, of low grade, was probably influenced by confusion over the shared form mene in Middle English of the two adjectives *mean*² and *mean*³. The sense of small-minded, nasty, is first recorded in 1665; it developed from the earlier sense of petty, unimportant (1585). The use of remarkably good, clever, etc. (as in plays a mean trumpet), is first recorded in 1920, a development from use in no mean _____ not inferior or inconsiderable (1596). This also illustrates the Middle English confusion of *mean*² and *mean*³, for the definition no mean _____ could be rewritten as "not average, or intermediate," as in New York is no mean city.

mean³ adj. halfway between two extremes, intermediate. 1340 men; later mene (about 1375); borrowed probably through Anglo-French (found in pl. meines), Old French meien, variant of moien, from Latin mediānus of or that is in the middle, from medius MIDDLE. The meaning of only tolerable, mediocre (1340) is easily confused with *mean*². — n. Probably about 1300 mene intermediate tone or state, intermediary agent or tool, instrument or course of action, means of attainment; borrowed from Old French meien, moien from meien, adj.

The plural form means (Middle English menes) a course of action, method, way, is first recorded about 1390, and is found in by means of (before 1460). The meaning of wealth or resources (as in a man of means), corresponding to French moyens and German Mittel, is first recorded in 1603. The mathematical sense of an average value or quantity (such as the arithmetic mean), corresponding to French moyenne, is found before 1500, derived from the adjective sense, as in mean diameter (about 1391). — meantime n. (1340 mene-time); adv. (before 1382) — meanwhile n. (before 1375 mene while); adv. (before 1382) meander n. 1576, confusing ways, intricacies; later, a winding course (of a river, 1599); borrowed from Latin meander a winding course, in allusion to Greek Maíandros, name of a winding river in Asia Minor. — v. About 1612, from the noun.

measles n. Before 1325 maseles measles or pustules, plural of masel; perhaps borrowed from Middle Dutch masel blemish, or Middle Low German masele; cognate with Old High German masala blood blister (modern German Masern measles), from Proto-Germanic mas-*. The Middle English variants mesels (before 1398), meses (about 1450), source of the current spelling, were probably influenced by mesel leprous (about measly adj. 1687, affected with measles; formed from English measles + *-y*¹. The meaning of poor, meager, contemptible, is first recorded in 1864, originally in British slang.

1280); borrowed from Old French mesel, from Latin misellus wretched, unfortunate, diminutive of miser wretched.

measure v. Before 1325 mesuren to control, govern, regulate; later, to find the extent, size, etc., of (about 1380); borrowed from Old French mesurer, from Late Latin mēnsūrāre to measure, from Latin mēnsūra a measuring, a thing to measure by, from mētūrī to measure; for suffix see -URE. Development of the verb in Middle English was influenced by earlier use of the noun and replaced Old English mæth measure. — n. Probably before 1200 measure; borrowed from Old French measure, from Latin mēnsūra a measuring, a thing to measure by; see the verb above. — measurable adj. Probably before 1300, moderate, not excessive; later, that can be measured (about 1340); borrowed from Old French, from measure measure + -able. — measured adj. About 1390, deliberate and restrained; from measure, v. The sense of uniform, regular, is recorded before 1400, and that of rhythmical is found in 1581, in Sydney's works, perhaps a development of the earlier sense of proportioned (before 1400).

meat n. About 1125 mete food, meal (as in meat and drink); later, animal flesh (about 1250); developed from Old English (before 725) mete food, item of food; cognate with Old Frisian mete food, Old Saxon meti, Old High German maz, Old Icelandic matr (Swedish and Norwegian mat, Danish mad), and Gothic mats food, from Proto-Germanic matiz*.

Mecca or mecca n. 1850, place or goal which many aspire to reach, an allusion to Mecca sacred city of Islam where Mohammed was born and to which Muslims go on pilgrimages, from Arabic Mekkah, variant of Makkah.

mechanic n. 1562, borrowed through Middle French mechanique, mecanique, n. and adj.; and directly from Latin mēchanicus, n. and adj., from Greek mēchanikós, n., an engineer, and adj., pertaining to machines or contrivances, inventive, from mēchanē MACHINE; for suffix see -IC. An adjective use also existed in Middle English before 1393. — mechanical adj. Probably before 1425 mechanicall; formed from English mechanic, adj. (earlier mechanique, before 1393; borrowed from Old French mecanique and Latin mēchanicus) + suffix *-al*¹. — mechanics n. (1648) — mechanism n. 1662, borrowed from Late Latin mēchanisma piece of construction, alteration of Greek mēchanēma, from mēchanāsthai devise, from mēchanē machine; for suffix see -ISM. — mechanistic adj. 1884; formed from English mechanist (1606) a mechanic + -ic. — mechanization n. 1839; formed from English mechanize + -ation. — mechanize v. 1678; formed from English mechanic + -ize.

medal n. Before 1586, metal disk used as a charm; borrowed from Middle French médaille, from Italian medaglia medal; originally, a coin worth half a denarius, from Vulgar Latin medālia*, a form postulated on the probable dissimilation of iā . . . ia in Late Latin mediālia little halves, neuter plural of mediālis of the middle, medial; see MEDIAL.

medallion n. 1658, borrowed from French médailion, from Italian medaglione large medal, augmentative of medaglia; see MEDAL.

meddle v. About 1300 medlen to mix, mingle; also, to interfere (before 1338); earlier melen (before 1300); borrowed from Old North French medler, mesdler*, standard Old French mesler, later meller, from Vulgar Latin misculāre*, from Latin miscere to MIX. Related to MELEE.

media n. pl. 1927 (used as a singular), perhaps abstracted from mass media, originally, a technical use in advertising (1923). The form media is the plural of medium in the sense of intermediate agency, means, vehicle, or channel, which is first found in 1605.

medial adj. 1570, mean or average; borrowed from Late Latin mediālis of the middle, from Latin medius MIDDLE; for suffix see -AL¹.

median adj. 1592, middle (vein, nerve, etc.); borrowed through Middle French médian, or directly from Latin mediānus of the middle, from medius MIDDLE. —n. 1541, a median part (in anatomy); borrowed from Latin mediānus, adj. An earlier use restricted to medicine, is found in Middle English mediana a vein of the arm (1392); borrowing of Medieval Latin mediana median vein. The sense in mathematics of the middle number of a series, is first recorded in 1902; that of a strip of grassy area, between directions of traffic on highways, is first recorded in 1954.

mediate v. 1542, divide into two equal parts; later, to settle a dispute by intervening (1568); either a back formation from mediation, or developed from the adjective. Mediate replaced Middle English medien to halve (probably about 1425); borrowed from Late Latin mediārī. —adj. Probably before 1425, intermediate; borrowed from Late Latin mediātus, past participle of mediārī to be or divide in the middle, intervene, from Latin medius MIDDLE; for suffix see -ATE¹. —mediation n. Before 1387 mediacioun; borrowed through Old French mediacion, and directly from Late Latin mediātiōnem (nominative mediātiō), from mediārī intervene, mediate, from Latin medius MIDDLE; for suffix see -ATION. —mediator n. About 1350 mediatur; later mediatour (before 1387); borrowed from Late Latin mediātor one who mediates, from mediārī intervene, mediate; for suffix see -OR².

medic n. 1659, medical student, physician; borrowed from Latin medicus physician; see MEDICAL. The meaning of serviceman in a military medical corps, is first recorded in 1925.

medical adj. 1646, borrowed from French médical, from Medieval Latin medicālis, from Latin medicus, n., physician, and adj., healing, from medērī to heal; originally, know the best course for; for suffix see -AL¹.

medicate v. 1623, probably a back formation from medication, possibly influenced by Latin medicātus, past participle of medicāre, medicārī medicate, heal, cure; see MEDICATION; for suffix see -ATE¹. —medication n. Probably before 1425 medicacioun medical treatment; borrowed through Middle French médication, and directly from Latin medicatiōnem (nominative medi- cātiō), from medicāre, medicārī medicate, heal, cure, from medicus healing; see MEDICAL; for suffix see -ATION.

medicine n. Probably before 1200 medecine, medicine medicinal substance, art of healing; borrowed from Old French medicīne, medecine, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin medicīna (originally ars medicīna the medical art), from feminine of medicīnus, adj., of a doctor, from medicus a physician; see MEDICAL. —medicinal adj. About 1384, borrowed from Old French medicinal, and directly from Latin medicīnālis of or pertaining to medicine, from medicīna medicine; for suffix see -AL¹.

medieval adj. 1827 mediæval, formed in English from Latin medi(um) middle + æv(um) age + English -al¹.

mediocre adj. 1586, borrowed from Middle French médiocre, learned borrowing from Latin mediocris of middling or moderate quality; originally, halfway up a mountain (medius middle + ocris jagged mountain); also probably in some instances a back formation from mediocrity. —mediocrity n. Probably before 1425 mediocrite moderate or intermediate state or condition; borrowed from Middle French médiocrité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin mediocritātem (nominative mediocritās) a middling state or condition, from mediocris mediocre. The sense of mediocre quality, average, is first recorded in 1588.

meditate v. 1560, probably a back formation from meditation, possibly by influence of Middle French méditer, for suffix see -ATE¹. —meditation n. Probably before 1200 meditatium; later meditacioun (about 1390); borrowed from Old French meditation, and directly from Latin meditatiōnem (nominative meditatiō), from meditārī to meditate, cognate with Greek médesthai be mindful, médesthai take thought, plan; for suffix see -ATION.

Mediterranean adj., n. About 1400; borrowed from Late Latin Mediterrāneum in Mediterrāneum mare Mediterranean Sea, from Latin mediterrāneus midland or inland, with the sense originally of the sea in the middle of the earth (formed from Latin medius middle + terra land or earth); for suffix see -AN.

medium n. 1584, something lying in the middle, borrowing of Latin medium, from neuter of medius, adj., MIDDLE.

The meaning of substance through which something is conveyed, is first recorded in 1595 and that of a person who conveys messages from spirits in 1853. The technical sense of a liquid with which pigments are mixed in paint, is first recorded in 1854 and that of enveloping substance, environment, in 1865. See MEDIA. —adj. 1670, from the noun.

medley n. Before 1400 mele; later medle (1440) and medley (1438); borrowed from Old French mellee, medlee; earlier mesdlee*, meslee, from Gallo-Romance misculāta*, from Vulgar Latin misculāre* to mix; see MEDDLE. Related to MELEE. —adj. About 1303 medel; later medle (about 1350); from the noun.

medulla n. 1392, borrowing of Latin medulla marrow.

medusa n. 1758, New Latin Medusa the genus name, from Latin Medūsa Medusa (legendary monster with snakes for hair), from Greek Médousa; the genus name was coined in allusion to Medusa's hair and the resemblance of the feelers of some jellyfish.

meek adj. Probably before 1200 mēok gentle, humble; later mēc (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic mjúkr soft, pliant, gentle, from Proto-Germanic meukaz*).

meet¹ v. come face to face with. Probably before 1200 meten; developed from Old English mētan (about 725, in Beowulf), related to gemōt meeting. Old English mētan (from Proto-Germanic mōtijanan*) and gemōt are cognate with Old Frisian mēta to meet, Old Saxon mōtian to meet, mōt meeting, Middle Dutch ghemoete (modern Dutch tegemeet), Old High German muoz meeting, Old Icelandic mēta to meet (Swedish möta, Norwegian møte, and Danish møde), mōt meeting, and Gothic gamōtjan to meet. Related to MOOT. —n. 1831–34, meeting in preparation for a hunt; from the verb. —meeting n. Probably before 1300 meting, developed from gerund of meten to meet.

meet² adj. proper, fitting. Probably about 1300 mete; developed from Old English (about 961) gemēte suitable; cognate with Old High German gamāzi, gemāze suitable, acceptable (modern German gemäss appropriate), from Proto-Germanic ga-mētijaz*.

meg- or mega- a combining form used especially to form scientific terms and meaning: 1 large or great, as in megaspore, megadose, megohm. 2 one million, as in megacycle, megaton. Borrowed from Greek mégas great.

megalith n. 1853, back formation from megalithic, after the pattern mega- large + -lith stone. —megalithic adj. 1839, formed from English mega- large + -lith (borrowed from Greek lithos) stone + -ic.

megalomania n. 1890, borrowed from French mégomanie, formed from Greek mégas (genitive mégálon) great + manía madness, MANIA.

megalopolis n. 1832, formed in English from Greek mégas (genitive mégálon) great + pólis city. The Greeks applied it to Athens, Syracuse, and Alexandria.

meiosis n. 1905, process by which the number of chromosomes in reproductive cells is reduced to half the original number; New Latin meiosis, borrowing of Greek meiōsis a lessening, from meiōn lessen, from meiōn less; see MINOR.

melancholy n. About 1303 malyncoly mental disorder characterized by depression; later melancolie (before 1398); borrowed from Old French melancolie, malencolie, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin melancholia, from Greek melancholiā sadness, (excess of) black bile (mélās, genitive mélanos black + cholē bile). In medieval times melancholy was thought to be caused by an excess of black bile, a secretion of the spleen in a condition associated with jaundice. The Old French variant malencolie was formed by false association with mal sickness (from Latin malum an evil). —adj. 1392 malancolie mixed with or caused by black bile, gloomy or sad of temperament; later melancolie (probably before 1425); from the noun. —melancholic adj. About 1385 malencolyk; formed from malencoly (earlier malyncoly) melancholy + -ic.

melanin n. 1843, formed in English (probably by influence of earlier melanoma blackish tumor, 1840), from Greek mélās (genitive mélanos) black + English suffix *-in*².

meld¹ v. announce and show (cards for a score) in rummy, canasta, pinochle, etc. 1897, borrowed from German melden announce (Old High German meldōn); cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch melden announce, Old Saxon meldon, and Old English meldian, from Proto-Germanic meldōjanan*. Old English meldian (probably about 750), appears in Middle English melden accuse, call to account (about 1300); later, reveal, show (probably before 1325), but this form did not survive into Modern English and reappeared in the late 1800's as a borrowing from German, especially with the popularity of pinochle among German immigrants. —n. 1897, from the verb.

meld² v. to merge, blend. 1939, probably verb use of melled mingled or blended, past participle of dialectal English mell to mingle or blend, from Middle English mellen (about 1380), variant of medlen; borrowed from Old French meller, medler, variants of mesler to mix or mingle; see MEDDLE. —n. 1974, from the verb.

melee or mêlée n. Before 1648, borrowing of French mêlée, from Old French meslee confused fight, mixture, from feminine past participle of mesler to mix; see MEDDLE. The word is found in Middle English mele mixture (before 1400); earlier melle war or battle (before 1325), and medle, medlay (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French medlee, mellee, variants of meslee; see MEDLEY. Apparently the Middle English word did not survive into modern English, and so the present-day form is a reborrowing from modern French.

meliorate v. Before 1552, back formation from earlier melioration; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —meliorative adj. 1808, formed from English meliorate + -ive. —melioration n. Before 1400 melioracioun improvement; borrowed from Late Latin meliorātiōnem (nominative meliorātiō), from Latin meliorāre improve, from melior better (comparative of bonus good); see MULTI-; for suffix see -ATION.

mellifluous adj. Probably before 1425, learned borrowing from Late Latin mellifluus (Latin mel, genitive mellis, honey + -fluus flowing, from fluere to flow); for suffix see -OUS. —mellifluent adj. 1601, borrowed probably from Middle French mellifluent, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin mellifluentem (nominative mellifluens), a compound of Latin mel (genitive mellis) honey + fluentem (nominative fluens), present participle of fluere to flow; for suffix see -ENT.

mellow adj. 1440 melwe; of unknown origin (possibly an attributive use of melowe, variant of mele ground grain, *MEAL*²; its meaning possibly influenced by Middle English merow soft or tender, Old English mearu). —v. 1572, from the adjective.

melodeon n. 1847, variant of melodion, borrowing of German

Melodion, from Melodie melody, from Old French melodie; see MELODY.

melodrama n. 1809, romantic stage play with music; earlier melodrame (1802); borrowing of French mélodrame (Greek mélōs song, MELODY + French -drame). —melodramatic adj. 1816, substitution of dramatic for drama in melodrama.

melody n. Probably before 1300 melodie sweet music, tunefulness; borrowed from Old French melodie, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin melōdia, from Greek mélōidīā singing, chanting, a tune to which lyric poetry is set (mélōs song + ōidē song, ODE); for suffix see -Y³. —melodic adj. 1823, formed from English melody + -ic, after French mélodique, from Late Latin melōdicus, from Greek mélōidikós, from mélōidīā melody. —melodious adj. About 1385, borrowed from Old French melodios, from melodie melody; for suffix see -OUS.

melon n. About 1395 meloun, also melon (before 1398); borrowed from Old French melon, and directly from Medieval Latin melonem, shortened form of Latin mēlopepōnem a kind of pumpkin, from Greek mēlopépōn (mēlon apple + pépōn a kind of gourd, a noun use of pépōn ripe). Medieval Latin melonem may have been borrowed directly from Greek mēlon, interpreted as meaning “applelike fruit.”

melt v. Probably about 1150 melten, a fusion of Old English meltan become liquid (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic meltanan*, and of Old English gemæltan make liquid (before 830, Anglian), gemyltan (West Saxon), from Proto-Germanic ja-maltijanan*. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Icelandic melta to digest, melt, and Gothic gamalteins dissolution. Related to SMELT and MILD. —n. 1854, from the verb.

member n. Probably 1280 membre part of the body; later, person belonging to a group (before 1338); borrowed from Old French membre, from Latin membrum limb, member of the body, part.

membrane n. 1519, parchment; later, thin layer of tissue (1601); borrowed from Latin membrāna parchment, skin, tissue covering part of the body, from membrum limb, member of the body, part, member. The sense in English of a thin layer of tissue, may have been borrowed from French membrane. —membranous adj. 1597, borrowed from Middle French membraneux, from membrane membrane, from Latin membrāna; for suffix see -OUS.

memento n. Before 1376, borrowing of Latin mementō remember, imperative of meminisse to remember, related to mēns MIND. Memento first appears in English in Psalm 131. The meaning of an object serving to remind or warn, is first recorded in 1580, and from it developed the meaning of a keepsake (1768).

memo n. 1889, shortened form of MEMORANDUM.

memoir n. 1427 memoire written record, variant form of memorie memory, written record; borrowed through Anglo-French memorie, Old French memoire, learned borrowing from Latin memoria MEMORY. The plural memoirs appeared in 1659 in the sense of a personal record of events.

memorabilia n. pl. 1806–07, borrowing of Latin memorabilia, neuter plural of memorabilis worthy of being remembered; see MEMORABLE.

memorable adj. 1436, borrowed from Middle French mémorable, learned borrowing from Latin memorabilis worthy of being remembered, from memorāre to bring to mind; for suffix see -ABLE.

memorandum n. Probably 1435, borrowed from Latin memorandum (thing) to be remembered, neuter singular of memorandus, gerundive of memorāre to bring to mind.

memorial n. Before 1382, commemorative act, faculty of memory; borrowed from Old French memorial, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin memoriāle, from neuter of Latin memoriālis, adj., of or belonging to memory, from memoria MEMORY; for suffix see -AL². —adj. About 1375, borrowed from Latin memoriālis of or belonging to memory. —memorialize v. (1798) memory n. About 1250 memorie remembrance, renown; later, faculty of remembering (about 1380); borrowed through Anglo-French memorie, Old French memoire, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin memoria, from memor mindful, remembering. The meaning of a device in a computer in which information is stored, is first recorded in 1946. —memorize v. 1591, to commemorate in writing, formed from English memory + -ize. The meaning of commit to memory, is first recorded in 1838. —memorization n. 1886–87; formed from English memorize + -ation.

menace n. About 1303 manas; later menace (before 1325); borrowed from Old French menace, manace threat, from Vulgar Latin minācia*, singular of Latin mināciae, from mināx (genitive minācis) threatening, from minārī threaten, jut, project, from minae threats, projecting points. —v. Probably before 1300 manacen; borrowed from Old French menacer, manacer threaten, from Vulgar Latin mināciāre*, from minācia* menace.

ménage or menage n. 1698, management of a household, domestic establishment, borrowing of French ménage, from Old French menage, menaige, manaige household, family dwelling, from Vulgar Latin mānsiōnāticum* household, from Latin mānsiōnem dwelling, MANSION.

Ménage or menage is a reborrowing in modern English of a word that appeared in Middle English probably before 1300 and became obsolete before 1500.

menagerie n. 1712 menagery, borrowed from French ménagerie housing for domestic animals, from Old French menage MÉNAGE.

mend v. Probably before 1200 menden repair; later, make right, remove a fault (probably before 1300), shortened variant form of amenden amend; see AMEND. —n. Before 1325 mende (usually mendes, pl.) recompense, reparation, remedy; from the verb.

mendacious adj. 1616, borrowed probably from Middle French mendacieux, from Latin mendācium a lie, from mendāx (genitive mendācis) lying, deceitful, from menda fault, carelessness in writing; for suffix see -IOUS. — mendacity n. 1646, borrowed probably from French mendacité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin mendacitās, from Latin mendāx lying; for suffix see -ITY. It is also probable that mendacity was formed in English from mendac(ious) + -ity.

mendelevium n. 1955, New Latin, in allusion to Dmitri Ivanovich Mendeleev, Russian chemist + -ium.

mendicant n. 1395 mendicaunt, borrowed from Latin mendicantem (nominative mendicāns), present participle of mendicare to beg, from mendicus beggar, physically handicapped person (especially such a person who resorts to begging), from menda fault, physical defect; for suffix see -ANT. — adj. 1470, borrowed from Latin mendicantem, present participle.

menhaden n. 1643, American English, from Algonquian (probably Narragansett) munnauwateadg herringlike fish, once the most abundant fish on the eastern coast of the United States; literally, they fertilize; so called because these fish (menhaden, alewife, and herring) were used by American Indians as fertilizer.

menial adj. Before 1387 meynal belonging to the household, domestic; later meynyal (1433); borrowed through Anglo-French meignial, from meignée, meiné, Old French maisniée household, from Vulgar Latin mānsiōnāta*, from Latin mānsiōnem dwelling, MANSION; for suffix see -IAL. The meaning of lowly, humble, suited to a servant, is first recorded in 1673. — n. Before 1387 meynyal domestic servant; probably from the adjective.

meninges n. pl. 1616, borrowing of Middle French meninges (1532); learned borrowing, probably through Late Latin mēninga, from Greek mēnix (genitive mēningos) membrane, especially of the brain; see MEMBER. — meningitis n. 1828, New Latin, formed from mening(es) + -itis.

meniscus n. 1693, a lens convex on one side and concave on the other; New Latin meniscus, from Greek mēnskos a crescent, diminutive of mēnē MOON. The meaning in physics of the curved surface on a column of liquid is first recorded in 1812–16.

menopause n. 1872, borrowed from French ménopause, formed from Greek mēn (genitive mēnós) month + connective -o- + paūsís cessation, pause.

menses n. pl. 1597, borrowing of Latin mēnsēs, plural of mēnsis month; see MOON.

Menshevik n. 1917, borrowed from Russian men'shevik (men'she lesser, a comparative form to malo little + -evik one that is). The Mensheviks were so called (by Lenin) from the fact that they held a temporary minority within the party. Compare BOLSHEVIK.

menstrual adj. Before 1398, borrowed through Old French menstruel, or directly from Latin mēnstruālis monthly, of or having monthly courses, from mēnstruus of menstruation, monthly, from mēnsis month; for suffix see -AL¹.

menstruate v. 1800, probably a back formation from earlier menstruation; for suffix see -ATE¹. The form appeared as an adjective as early as 1384, borrowed from Late Latin mēnstruāta, past participle of mēnstruāre menstruate, but did not survive into modern English. — menstruation n. 1776–84, probably borrowed from French menstruation, and formed directly in English from Late Latin mēnstruāre menstruate, from Latin mēnstrua the menses, neuter plural of mēnstruus of menstruation, monthly, from mēnsis month + English suffix -ation.

mensuration n. 1571, act or process of measuring, borrowed from Middle French mensuration, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin mēnsūratiōnem (nominative mēnsūratiō), from mēnsūrāre to MEASURE; for suffix see -ATION.

-ment a suffix forming nouns, especially from the verbs, and meaning act or process of _____ing, as in enjoyment; condition of being _____ed, as in amazement; product or result of _____ing, as in pavement; means or instrument that _____s, as in inducement. Middle English, borrowed from Old French -ment, from Latin -mentum. In the Middle English period -ment occurred mainly in words borrowed from Old French or through Anglo-French; these words either represented Latin nouns ending in -mentum or were formed in French on the analogy of Latin forms by the addition of -ment to verb stems. Since in most cases the French verb was borrowed by English along with the noun in -ment derived from the verb, the suffix came to be treated as English and in the 1500's was freely added to English verb stems, producing such common words as atonement, amazement, betterment, and bewilderment.

mental adj. About 1422, borrowed from Middle French mental, learned borrowing from Late Latin mentālis of the mind, from Latin mēns (genitive mentis) MIND; for suffix see -AL¹. — mentality n. 1691, formed from English mental + -ity.

menthol n. 1876, borrowing of German Menthol, from Latin mentha MINT¹ (herb) + German -ol, from Latin oleum OIL. — mentholated adj. 1933, formed from English menthol + -ate¹ + -ed².

mention n. About 1300 mention act of commemorating by speech or writing; borrowed from Old French mention, learned borrowing from Latin mentīōnem (nominative mentīō) a calling to mind, a speaking, mention, from the root men- of Old Latin miniscā to think, related to mēns (genitive mentis) MIND; for suffix see -TION. — v. 1530, borrowed from Middle French mentionner, from Old French mention, n.

mentor n. 1750, borrowed in allusion to Greek Mēntōr, the name of a friend and adviser to Odysseus, in Homer's Odyssey. The name may ultimately mean "adviser," having the form of an agent noun related to Greek mēnos intent, purpose, spirit, passion; see MIND.

menu n. 1837, detailed list of what is served at a meal; borrowing of French menu, from Middle French menu, adj., small or detailed, from Latin minūsus small. The transferred sense of any detailed list, is first recorded in English in 1889, and the meaning in computer use in 1971.

meow n., interj. 1873, sound made by a cat; earlier miaow (1634 miau, probably influenced in form by French miauou). —v. 1894, earlier meaw (1632).

mercantile adj. 1642, borrowed from French mercantile, from Italian mercantile, from Medieval Latin mercantilis of a merchant or trade, or from Italian mercante merchant, from Latin mercantem (nominative mercāns) a merchant; also, trading, present participle of mercāri to trade; see MARKET.

mercenary n. About 1387–95 mercenarie hireling, person working for money only; borrowed perhaps through Old French mercenaire, and directly from Latin mercēnnārius, n., one who does anything for pay, from a lost noun mercēdō* (genitive mercēdinis*) pay, from mercēs (genitive mercēdis) pay, reward, wages; for suffix see -ARY. —adj. 1532 mercennary, from the noun in English, and probably borrowed in part from Latin mercēnnārius doing anything for pay; also.

merchandise n. Before 1250 marcaundise act of trading, wares; later merchaundise (probably before 1387); borrowed through Anglo-French marcaundise, Old French marcheandise, from marcaunt, marcaund MERCHANT + -ise; for suffix see -ISE. —v. About 1384 marcaundisen, from the noun.

merchant n. Probably about 1200 marcaunt; later, in the surname Merchaunt (1332); borrowed through Anglo-French marcaunt, Old French marcēant, from Vulgar Latin mercātāntem* (nominative mercātāns*) a buyer, present participle of mercātāre*, a frequentative form of Latin mercāri to trade, see MARKET; for suffix see -ANT. —adj. Probably before 1400 marchant; from the noun, and probably influenced by Old French marcēant, adj.

mercury n. About 1150 mercuris the Roman god; later, the planet (probably before 1300), and mercurie silver-white metal, quicksilver (about 1395); borrowing of Medieval Latin mercurius, from Latin Mercurius Mercury, the Roman god. —mercurial adj. 1647, sprightly, volatile, quick; originally, having the qualities of one born under the planet Mercury (1593); developed from Middle English Mercurial of or relating to Mercury (before 1393); borrowed from Latin mercurialis of Mercury (the god or planet), from Mercurius; for suffix see -AL¹. —mercuric adj. 1828–32; formed from English mercury + -ic.

mercy n. Probably before 1200 mearci; later merci (probably about 1200); borrowed from Old French merci reward, gift, kindness, mercy; earlier mercit, from Latin mercēdem reward, wages, from merx (genitive mercis) wares, merchandise. —merciful adj. About 1340, formed from Middle English merci + -ful. —merciless adj. Probably about 1380 mercyles; formed from Middle English merci + -les -less.

mere¹ adj. nothing more than, only, bare. About 1390, pure or unmixed; borrowed from Old French mere, mier pure, entire, and directly from Latin merus unmixed, pure, bare, mere, probably originally clear, bright.

The meaning of nothing more than, (as in the merest scratch), is first recorded in 1581 and existed alongside the conflicting sense of, nothing less than, absolute, sheer, downright, (as in of mere malice), first recorded about 1443, but no longer found, except in vestiges such as mere folly. —merely adv. About 1449, formed from Middle English mere¹ + -ly¹.

mere² n. lake, pond. Old English (before 700) mere sea, lake, pool, pond; cognate with Old Saxon meri a lake, Old Frisian mar sea, ditch, Middle Dutch mare, maer (modern Dutch meer) sea, pool, Old High German mari, meri (modern German Meer) sea, Old Icelandic marr, from Proto-Germanic mari*, and Gothic marei lake, from Proto-Germanic marin*.

meretricious adj. Before 1626, characteristic of a prostitute; borrowed from Latin meretrīcius of or pertaining to prostitutes, from meretrīx (genitive meretrīcis) prostitute, from merēre, merēri to earn, gain; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of showily attractive is first recorded in 1633.

merganser n. 1752, New Latin (from Latin mergus waterfowl, diver, from mergere to dip, immerse + anser goose).

merge v. 1636, to plunge or immerse in an activity, environment; later, be absorbed or swallowed up in something else (1726); borrowed from Latin mergere to dip, immerse. —merger n. 1728, absorption of an estate, etc., in another; formed from English merge + -er¹. The meaning of combination of one business firm with another is first recorded in 1889.

meridian n. Probably about 1350 meridien middle, noon; borrowed from Old French meridien, from Latin, and directly from Latin merīdianus of noon, southern, from merīdiēs noon, south, from merīdiē at noon, formed by dissimilation of r for d in the pre-Latin form mediei diē* (the locative form of medius mid + diēs day); for suffix see -IAN.

Meridian in the sense of a circle of the earth passing through the poles, is first recorded in 1391.

meringue n. 1706, borrowing of French meringue, of unknown origin.

merino n. 1781, borrowing of Spanish merino a breed of sheep; possibly an alteration (influenced by merino inspector of cattle pastures and sheep paths) of Arabic Merīni the Beni-Merīn, Berber family of sheep farmers in northwestern Africa, whose sheep were imported into Spain in the 1300's and 1400's to improve local breeds.

Spanish merino in the sense of inspector of sheep paths and cattle pastures was borrowed from Medieval Latin majorinus, as used in Spain to mean overseer, from Latin majōrinus, adj., from major greater.

meristem n. 1874, undifferentiated tissue of the younger parts of plants; formed from Greek meristós divisible or divided (from merizein to divide, from mēros part + -em, as in xylem).

merit n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French merite, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin meritum, neuter of meritus, past participle of merēre, merēri to earn, deserve, acquire, gain. —v. 1484, borrowed from Middle French meriter, from merite, n. —meritorious adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French meritoire, from Latin meritōrius serving to earn money, from meritus, past participle of merēre, merēri; for suffix see -ORY, and -OUS.

mermaid n. About 1350 meremayde; later mermayde (about 1390); formed from Middle English *mere*² sea, lake + made maid.

merry adj. Before 1200 murie mirthful, joyous, pleasing; later mirie (about 1250), and mery, meri (probably before 1300; as a surname Merilord, about 1273); developed from Old English myrige pleasing, agreeable (before 899). Old English myrige (from Proto-Germanic murgijaz*) is cognate with Old High German murg, murgi short, and Gothic gamaurgjan shorten. The transition from the Proto-Germanic sense "short" to the Old English sense "pleasant" may have occurred through a lost Old English verb meaning "to shorten," and hence "to shorten time, to cheer"; compare Old Icelandic skemta to shorten time, amuse oneself, derived from skammr short. —merriment n. 1576, comic performance, jest; later, merrymaking, mirth, fun (1588); formed from English merry + -ment.

mes- a combining form, the form of meso- before vowels, as in mesencephalon (the midbrain), meson.

mesa n. 1759, borrowing of Spanish mesa, literally, table, from Latin mēnsa table.

mescal n. 1702, peyote, borrowing of Mexican Spanish mescal, from Nahuatl mexcalli fermented drink made from the desert plant maguey (metl maguey and ixcalli stew). —mescaline n. 1896, formed from English mescal + *-ine*².

mesentery n. Probably before 1425 mesentarie, borrowed from Medieval Latin mesenterium, from Greek mesentērion (mésos middle + énteron intestine).

mesh n. About 1395 mesche mesh of a net; also found as mask, maske (1343; 1440); developed from Old English (probably about 1050) max net (a form showing metathesis of the sounds represented by sk to ks); earlier mæscere (probably about 950), from masc*, mæsc*, from Proto-Germanic mask-*. The Old English forms are cognate with Middle Dutch maesce (early modern Dutch maesche, later maas) mesh, from Proto-Germanic māsk-*, Old Icelandic mǫskvi, Old Saxon masca, and Old High German masca (modern German Masche) mesh, net.—v. 1532, to entangle, enmesh; from the noun. The use in reference to the teeth of a gear in machinery, is found in 1875.

mesmerism n. 1802, borrowing of French mesmérisme, formed in allusion to Friedrich or Franz Mesmer, + -isme -ism. Mesmer developed the theory according to which a mysterious body fluid allows a person to have a powerful hypnotic influence over another. —mesmerize v. 1829, formed from English mesmerism + -ize.

meso- a combining form meaning middle, halfway, midway, intermediate, as in mesoderm, mesosphere. Borrowed from Greek meso-, combining form of mésos MIDDLE. Also mes- before vowels.

mesoderm n. 1873, borrowing of German Mesoderm and French mésoderme (from meso- middle + -derm, -derme; from Greek dérma skin).

meson n. 1939, alteration of mesotron (1938, from meso- midway + -tron, as in electron). The alteration to meson was due to the influence of the suffix -on, as in proton, and possibly by an earlier French mésón, about 1935.

mesosphere n. 1950, formed from English meso- + -sphere, as specifically used in reference to atmosphere.

mesquite n. 1759, borrowing of Mexican Spanish mezquite, from Nahuatl mizquitl.

mess n. Probably before 1300 mes portion of food, prepared dish; borrowed from Old French mes portion of food, a course at dinner, from Late Latin missus (genitive missūs) course at dinner; literally, placing or putting (as if on the table), from mittere to put or place, from Latin mittere to send, let go; see MISSION. The sense of a kind of liquid or mixed food for an animal (1738) led to the contemptuous use of a concoction, jumble, mixed mass (1828). The figurative sense of a state of confusion (as to get into a mess), is first recorded in 1834, and later that of a dirty or untidy condition in 1851.—v. 1381 messen serve food; from the noun. The sense of make untidy or dirty, is first recorded in 1853. —messy adj. 1843, formed from English mess, n. + *-y*¹.

message n. Probably about 1300 message words sent from one to another; probably a back formation from earlier messenger, and in part a borrowing of Old French message, from Medieval Latin missaticum, from Latin missus, past participle of mittere to send. —messenger n. Probably before 1200 messenger, later messanger (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French messager, from message, n., message; for suffix see -ER¹.

In late Middle English the n was phonetically inserted before -ger in messenger as in some other words, such as harbinger, passenger, scavenger (a phenomenon for which no satisfactory explanation has been given).

Messiah n. 1560, alteration of Middle English Messyass (probably about 1200); later Messie (about 1300); borrowed from Old French Messie, and directly from Late Latin Messīās, from Greek Messīās, from Aramaic mēshīā and Hebrew māshīah anointed (of the Lord), from māshah anoint. The form Messiah was invented to give a Hebraic appearance to the name. —Messianic adj. Before 1834, borrowed from New Latin Messianicus, from Late Latin Messīās Messiah; for suffix see -IC.

mestizo n. About 1588, borrowing of Spanish mestizo of mixed European and Amerindian parentage, from Late Latin mixticius mixed, mongrel, from Latin mixtus, past participle of miscēre to MIX.

met- a combining form, the form of meta- before vowels, as in metencephalon, metonymy.

meta- a prefix meaning: 1 between, among, as in metacarpus (bones between the fingers and the carpus or wrist). 2a over or across, in the sense of change of place or state, as in metathesis (transposition of sounds, syllables, or letters), metamorphosis. b reciprocal, as in metacenter. 3a behind, after, as in metathorax (posterior segment of insect's thorax). b later, more advanced, as in metazoan (animals of more than one cell). 4 beyond, transcending, as in metalinguistics. 5 similar in chemical composition to, as in metaphosphate. Borrowed from Greek meta-, from metá, preposition meaning with, after, between.

metabolism n. 1878, formed from English metabol(ic) + -ism and borrowed from French métabolisme, formed from Greek metabolé change (see METABOLIC) + -isme -ism. —metabolic adj. 1743, involving change; borrowed from Greek metabolikós changeable, from metabolé change, from metabállein to change (meta- over + bállein to throw); for suffix see -IC. The sense of pertaining to metabolism (1845) was borrowed from French. —metabolite n. 1884, formed from English metabol(ism) + *-ite*¹.

metal n. About 1250, borrowing of Old French metal, learned borrowing from Latin metallum metal, mine, quarry, substance obtained by mining, from Greek metállon metal, ore; originally, mine, quarry, pit or cave where minerals are sought, probably a back formation from metalléuein to mine, to quarry. —adj. About 1477; (earlier in attributive use metal ore, etc., before 1382); from the noun. —metallic adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin metallicus, from Greek metallikós of or concerning mines or metal; for suffix see -IC. —metallurgy n. 1704, borrowed through French métallurgie, or directly from New Latin metallurgia, from Greek metallourgós worker in metal (metállon metal + -orgós, earlier -worgós*, from érgon work); for suffix see -Y³.

metamorphosis n. 1533, borrowed perhaps through Latin metamorphōsis, from Greek metamorphōsis a transforming, from metamorphoūn to transform (meta- change + morphé form). An earlier Anglicized form Metamorphoseos, in allusion to the Roman poet Ovid's work, is found about 1390. —metamorphic adj. 1816, formed, perhaps by influence of French métamorphique, from English metamorphos(is) + -ic. The geological sense of altered by heat and pressure appeared in 1833. —metamorphose v. 1576, borrowed from Middle French métamorphoser, from métamorphose metamorphosis, perhaps through Latin metamorphōsis, from Greek metamorphōsis.

metaphor n. About 1477 methaphor, borrowed from Middle French métaphore, and directly from Latin metaphora or from Greek metaphorá a transfer, especially to one word of the sense of another, from metaphéreîn transfer, carry over (meta- over, across + phéreîn to carry, BEAR²). —metaphorical adj. Before 1555, formed from English metaphor + -ical.

metaphysics n. 1569, plural of Middle English methaphisik (about 1449); earlier methaphesik (before 1387); borrowed from Medieval Latin metaphysica, neuter plural, from Medieval Greek (tà) metaphysiká, from Greek tà metá tà physiká the (works) after the Physics, the title given to a collection of Aristotle's writings with reference to the fact that the treatises on metaphysics were placed after the treatises on physics; for suffix see -ICS. —metaphysical adj. Probably before 1425 metaphysicalle; formed from Middle English methaphesik + *-al*¹, and probably borrowed from Medieval Latin metaphysicalis.

metastasis n. 1577, New Latin metastasis transition from one subject to another (a term in rhetoric), from Late Latin metastasis transition, from Greek metástasis transference, removal, change, from methístānai to remove, change (meta- over, across + hístānai to place). The sense of a transfer of pain, or disease from one part of the body to another, especially of cancerous cells, is first recorded in 1663. —metastasis v. 1907, formed from English metastasis + -ize.

metathesis n. 1577, transposition of letters; later, transposition of words (1608); borrowed from Late Latin metathesis transposition of words, from Greek metáthesis transposition, from metatithénai to transpose (meta- over, across + tithénai to set, put).

mete v. About 1175 meten to measure; later, to allot, apportion (before 1225); developed from Old English metan to measure (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian meta to measure, Old Saxon metan, Middle Dutch mēten (modern Dutch meten), Old High German mezzan (modern German messen), Old Icelandic meta to value, estimate, measure (Swedish mäta to measure), and Gothic mitan to measure, from Proto-Germanic metanan*. Related to MEET² proper. The word is now literary in use, except in the phrase mete out, first recorded in 1535.

meteor n. Probably 1471 Metheours atmospheric phenomena; borrowed from Middle French météore, and directly from Medieval Latin meteora, from Greek tà metéōra the celestial phenomena, plural of metéōron celestial phenomenon; literally, thing high up, neuter of metéōros high up, raised above the ground, earlier metēōros (meta- over, beyond + -aōros lifted).

The modern spelling meteor is first recorded in English in 1576, with the meaning of falling or shooting star in 1590. —meteoric adj. Before 1631, elevated, lofty; formed from English meteor + -ic. The meaning of pertaining to meteors is first recorded in 1812. —meteorite n. 1834, formed from English meteor + *-ite*¹.

meteorology n. 1620, borrowed through French météorologie, and directly from Greek meteōrologiā treatise on celestial phenomena, from metéōron celestial phenomenon + -logiā treatment of; -logy. Earlier appearance of meteorological suggests a defect in the record of English for meteorology, especially as the form in French is recorded from 1547. —meteorological adj. 1570, formed in English after Middle French météorologique or Greek meteōrologikós with English suffix *-al*¹; for suffix see -ICAL. —meteorologist n. 1621, formed in English after Greek meteōrológos one who deals with celestial phenomena with English suffix -ist.

meter¹ n. measured rhythm in poetry or verse. Old English mēter (before 899); borrowed from Latin metrum, from Greek mētron meter, MEASURE. As the word disappears from the record of English for almost 300 years (reappearing about 1338), it is possible that use in Middle English was a reborrowing of Old French metre with the additional meaning of metrical scheme or composition, verse, poetry, learned borrowing from Latin metrum poetic measure or meter.

meter² n. unit of length. 1797 metre, borrowed from French mètre, learned borrowing from Greek métron MEASURE. The term was developed by the French Academy of Sciences for a system of weights and measurement based on a decimal system originated in 1670 by a French clergyman, Gabriel Mouton.

meter³ n. mechanical device for measuring. 1830, probably abstracted from gas-meter (1815), but also found in earlier use (1790) describing a gazometer. The word in English was probably much influenced by the combining form -mètre in French and was also probably, in part, an extended use of earlier meter person who measures (about 1384); formed from meten to measure + *-er*¹. —v. 1884, from the noun.

-meter a combining form meaning a device or instrument for measuring something, in actual use commonly -ometer, as in speedometer, barometer, hygrometer, pedometer, and in some later formations -imeter, as in gravimeter, calorimeter. Borrowed from French -mètre, from Greek métron MEASURE. In some later formations -meter is attached to modern words without any attempt to parallel the form of the first element to that of a Greek or Latin combining form, as in voltmeter, ammeter.

methadone n. 1947, from (di)meth(yl)a(mino) + d(i)phenyl-(heptan)one, the chemical name of the drug.

methane n. 1868, formed from English meth(yl) + -ane (chemical suffix).

methinks v. Archaic. it seems to me. Before 1200 me thinketh; later me thinkes (before 1375); developed from Old English mē thynnth it seems to me (before 899); formed from mē, dative of I (see ME) and thynnth, third person singular of thyncan to seem. In Old English, the word thyncan to seem, and the closely related thencan to THINK, were kept distinct; but in Middle English, because Old English thync- and thenc- developed into Middle English think-, the two words became confused and finally coalesced.

method n. Probably before 1425, recommended medical procedure; borrowed from Latin methodus way of teaching or proceeding, from Greek méthodos, originally, pursuit, following after (meta- after + hodós a traveling road, way). The sense of any special way of doing things, is first recorded in 1586.

The name Methodist was originally applied to a member of a religious society of Protestants founded at Oxford in 1729 by John and Charles Wesley. The precise origin of the name is obscure though reference is made as early as 1692 to methodists in terms of religious practices. —methodical adj. 1570, formed in English from Late Latin methodicus (from Greek methodikós, from méthodos method) + English *-al*¹.

methy n. 1844, borrowed from French méthyle, back formation from méthylène METHYLENE; for suffix see -YL.

methylene n. 1835, borrowed from French méthylène, from Greek méthy wine + hýlē wood; for suffix see -ENE.

meticulous adj. 1827, extremely careful about small details; borrowed by influence of French méticuleux timorously fussy about details, from Latin meticulōsus; earlier, fearful or timid (1535); borrowed from Latin meticulōsus fearful or timid (metus fear + -iculōsus, an ending patterned after periculōsus perilous); for suffix see -OUS.

métier n. 1792, borrowing of French métier trade, profession, from Old French mestier, from Gallo-Romance misterium*, contraction (influenced by the form of Latin mysterium religious service) of Latin ministerium office, service, from minister servant; see MINISTER.

metonymy n. 1562, borrowed, perhaps through French métonymie, and directly from Late Latin metonymia, from Greek metōnymía, literally, a change of name (meta- change + ónyma dialectal form of ónoma NAME); for suffix see *-Y*³. An earlier form metonomian is recorded in 1547.

metric adj. 1864, probably in part borrowed from French métrique, from mètre METER² unit of length; for suffix see -IC; and also formed by reduction of earlier English metrical (1797) of or having to do with the meter or metric system.

metrical adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin metricus metrical, from Greek metrikós, from métron poetic meter, MEASURE. For suffix see -ICAL.

metronome n. 1815, formed in English from Greek métron MEASURE + -nómos regulating, verbal adjective of némein to regulate.

metropolis n. 1535, the see of a metropolitan bishop; later, the mother city or parent state of a Greek colony (before 1568); borrowed from Late Latin mētrópolis mother city, from Greek mētrópolis (mētēr MOTHER + pólis city). The sense of a large or chief city appeared about 1386 in the form metropol, borrowed from Late Latin mētrópolis. —metropolitan n. Probably before 1350, borrowed from Late Latin mētrópolis, from Greek mētrópolis resident of a city, chief bishop, from mētrópolis chief city; for suffix see -AN. —adj. Probably before 1425, probably from the noun, in part by influence of Late Latin mētrópolis of a metropolis.

-metry a combining form meaning the process or art of measuring, as in geometry, optometry. Borrowed from Greek -metriā, from metrein to measure, from métron MEASURE.

mettle n. 1581, spirit or courage; also, quality of disposition (1584); figurative use of metal, as the material of which a person is made. Mettle was originally a variant spelling of metal, later formally differentiated (1706) in the figurative senses cited above. —mettlesome adj. 1662, formed from English mettle + *-some*¹.

mew¹ v. make the characteristic sound of a cat. Before 1325 mewen; of imitative origin. —n., interj. 1596; of imitative origin.

mew² n. sea gull. Before 1200 meau; later mewe (about 1450); developed from Old English māw (about 700); cognate with Frisian meau, mieu sea gull, Old Saxon mēw, Middle Low German mēwe (modern German Möwe), Middle Dutch mēwe (modern Dutch meeuw), from Proto-Germanic maizwis*, and cognate with Old High German mēh and Old Icelandic mār, from Proto-Germanic maiHwaz*.

mew³ n. a cage. Before 1375 meuwe a hiding place, place of confinement; later, cage for hawks, especially while molting (about 1395); borrowed from Old French mue, from muer to molt, from Latin mūtāre to change, MUTATE. —v. About 1450, to cage; later, to hide, conceal (1577–87).

mews n. pl. Before 1631, developed from Mewes name of the royal stables at Charing Cross (1387, so called from the site where the royal hawks were caged at molting time), from plural of mewe; see MEW³.

Mexican n. 1604, borrowed from Spanish Mexicano, from Mexico + -an. —adj. (1696) mezzanine n. 1715, low story between two higher stories of a building; borrowing of French mezzanine, from Italian mezzanino, from mezzano middle, from Latin mediānus of the middle. The sense of lowest balcony in a theater, is first recorded in 1927.

mi n. Before 1450, third note of the musical scale; borrowing of Medieval Latin mi, from the initial syllable of Latin mīra wonders (wondrous things), the word sung to this note in the Hymn for St. John the Baptist's day. Latin mīra developed from mīrus, adj., wonderful; see MIRACLE.

miasma n. 1665, New Latin miasma noxious vapors, from Greek miasma stain, pollution, related to mialnein to pollute; see MOLE¹ spot.

mica n. 1706, New Latin mica, special use (perhaps influenced by Latin micāre to flash, glitter) of Latin mīca grain or crumb; see MICRO-.

mickle adj., adv., n. Probably about 1175 muchel much; later Michel and mikel (probably about 1200); developed from Old English micel (before 725), mycel (before 900), from Proto-Germanic mekilaz*; see MUCH.

micro- a combining form used chiefly to form scientific terms and meaning: 1 small, very small, as in microorganism. 2 one millionth of, as in microfarad. 3 that magnifies or amplifies, as in microscope. Borrowed from Greek mīkro-, from mīkρός, smīkρός small, short.

microbe n. 1881, borrowing of French microbe, formed as if from Greek mīkρός small + bios life. —microbial adj. 1887, formed from English microbe + -ial.

microbiology n. 1888, formed from English micro- + biology.

microcosm n. Probably before 1430 myrocosome, borrowed from Middle French microcosme, from Medieval Latin microcosmus, from Greek mīkρός kósmos little world. Earlier in Middle English microcosmos man thought of as an epitome of the universe, is found probably about 1200 as a direct borrowing from Medieval Latin microcosmus.

microfilm n. 1927, formed from English micro- + film. —v. 1940, from the noun.

micron n. 1885, borrowing of French micron (1880), from Greek mīkrón, neuter of mīkρός small.

microorganism n. 1880, formed from English micro- small + organism.

microphone n. 1683, ear trumpet to intensify small sounds for the hard-of-hearing; formed from English micro- + -phone sound. In 1878 microphone was applied to a telephone transmitter, and later to use in radio broadcasting and motion-picture recording, before 1929.

microscope n. 1656, borrowed from New Latin microscopium (about 1628, from micro- + Greek -skópiōn means of viewing, from skopēōn look at). —microscopic adj. 1732, like a microscope; formed, perhaps by influence of French microscopique, from English microscope + -ic. The sense of extremely small, is first recorded before 1770. —microscopy n. 1664–65, formed from English microscope + -y³.

microwave n. 1931, formed from English micro- + wave, n.

mid adj. Old English (before 725) mid; cognate with Old Frisian midde mid or middle, Old Saxon middi, Old High German mitti, Old Icelandic midhr, and Gothic midjis, from Proto-Germanic medjaz*. The Old English form was rare except in inflected forms, as midde, *midde*s, midre, midne, etc. In modern English its most common use is as the prefix mid-.

mid- a prefix meaning middle point or part of, as in midday, midnight, midcontinent; of, in, or near the middle of, as in midsummer. Middle English, developed from mid, adj., in the middle of.

midday n. 1135 mid dæi; later middei (probably before 1200), and midday (about 1275); found in Old English (about 1000) middæg; earlier midne dæg (971); cognate with Old High German mittitag, mitter tag (modern German Mittag), Middle Dutch and Middle Low German middach (modern Dutch middag), and Old Icelandic midhdagr (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish middag). —adj. Before 1325, from the noun.

middle adj. Probably before 1200 midle; developed from Old English (785) middel; cognate with Old Frisian middel middle, Old Saxon midil, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch middel, Old High German mittil (modern German mittel), from Proto-West-Germanic middila*, formed from middy*, from Proto-Germanic medjaz* MID; and cognate with Old Icelandic medhal among, between (Swedish medel Danish and Norwegian middle center). —n. Probably before 1200 midle; developed from Old English middel, from the adjective. —middle age (about 1378 myddel age) —middle-aged adj. (1608) —Middle Ages period of history intermediate between ancient and modern times (1722). —middle class (1766) —middleman n. 1795, trader who sells to a retailer; earlier, one who takes a middle course (1741), and soldier in a middle rank of a formation (1616).

midling adj. 1456, Scottish mydlyn; probably formed from English mid, adj. + -ling¹. —adv. 1719, from the adjective.

midge n. About 1340 mydge; developed from Old English (about 700) mygg, mycg, myge; cognate with Old Saxon muggia midge, Middle Dutch mugghe (modern Dutch mug), Middle midget n. 1884, very small person; earlier, anything very small, mite (1865); formed from English midge + -et.

Low German mügge, Old High German mucka (modern German Mücke), from Proto-Germanic muŕjōn*.

midland adj. Before 1447 mydlonde located or living in the Midlands of England; later mid land, in mid land sea the Mediterranean Sea (1579), and midland inland (1601); formed from Middle English mid + land land. —n. 1555 mydlande the interior part of a country.

midnight n. Probably before 1200 mid-niht; later midnigt (probably before 1300), and mydnyght (about 1385); found in Old English mid-niht, midde neaht (before 899).

midriff n. Before 1333 midrif; developed from Old English (about 1000) midhrif (mid MID + hrif belly, abdomen).

midst n. Before 1325 midde, formed from Middle English and Old English mid MID + adverbial genitive -s or -es; the ending was changed to -st in the 1400's by association with superlatives in -st and -est (compare amongst and against); alternatively the final -t may have been added to the ending -s or -es for phonetic or articulatory reasons (compare betwixt). —adv. 1667, from the noun, especially in the adjective use. The adverb also occurs in Middle English in the form myddys (1432). —prep. 1591, commonly considered a shortened form of amidst. The preposition also occurs in Middle English as myddis (probably before 1400).

midsummer n. 1101 midde sumeran; later midsummer (1131), and Midsummer in a place name (1269); found in Old English midsumor (about 1050), middum sumere (before 899), formed from Old English mid + sumor.

midway n. Probably before 1200 mid wei; later midwai (about 1225); found in Old English mid-weg (before 899). —adj. 1050 (but published in 1500) midway; from the noun. —adv. Probably before 1200 mid wei; from the noun.

midwife n. Probably before 1300 midwif (mid with + wif woman). The forms with med- may derive from influence of Latin medius mediator.

midwinter n. About 1000, Old English midwinter, earlier midde wintre (827). —adj. 1135, from the noun.

mien n. 1513, probably a shortened form of Middle English demean bearing or demeanor (about 1450, from *DEMEAN*² behave); influenced by Middle French mine appearance or expression of the face.

miff n. 1623, perhaps imitative of an exclamation of disgust. —v. 1797, from the noun.

might¹ v. past tense of may. About 1387–95 myghte; developed from Old English mihte, meahte (before 899); earlier mæhte (before 830); see MAY.

might² n. great strength, power. Before 1325 might, developed from Old English (before 900) miht; earlier mæht (before 830), and mæct (before 700); all cognate with Old Frisian macht might, Old Saxon maht, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch macht, Old High German maht (modern German Macht), Gothic mahts, from Proto-Germanic mahtis*, and Old Icelandic mátt, from Proto-Germanic mahtuz*. —mighty adj. About 1380 mighti; developed from Old English mihtig (before 899); earlier mæhtig (before 830), from miht, mæht might + -ig -y¹; see MAY.

migraine n. 1373 migrane; later mygrayne (before 1425); borrowed from Old French migraigne, migraine, from Late Latin hēmīcrānia pain on one side of the head, headache, from Greek hēmīkrānīā (hēmi- half + krānion skull). The form migraine was reinforced by a borrowing from modern French in the 1700's.

migrant adj. 1672, borrowed from Latin migrāntem (nominative migrāns), present participle of migrāre to move from one place to another; for suffix see -ANT.

migrate v. 1623, back formation from migration; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —migration n. 1611, borrowed through French migrātion, or directly from Latin migrātionem (nominative migrātiō), from migrāre to move from one place to another, remove, depart, formed from a lost adjective migrāns* moving; for suffix see -ATION. —migratory adj. 1753, formed from English migrate + -ory.

mikado or Mikado n. 1727, the former title of the emperor of Japan, rendered in English as mikado (mi honorable + kado gate, portal) and resembling the title of the former Turkish government or its ruler, the Sublime Porte, as well as the Egyptian royal title Pharaoh, literally, great house.

mil n. 1721 (in per mil per thousand, corresponding to per cent); borrowed from Latin mille a thousand; see MILE.

milch adj. About 1250 milche giving milk, milky; developed from Old English -milce a milking (as found in thrimilce month of May, in which cows could be milked three times a day). The Old English form is cognate with Old High German melch giving milk (modern German melk), Old Icelandic mjólk, and related to Old English milc milk, from Proto-West-Germanic melik-, altered from meluk-; see MILK.

mild adj. Old English (before 725) milde gentle, merciful, clement; cognate with Old Frisian milde mild, Old Saxon mildi, Middle Dutch milde (modern Dutch mild), Old High German multi (probably modern German milde), Old Icelandic mildr (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish mild), and Gothic -mildeis, -mild-s in compounds such as milditha kindness (from Proto-Germanic mildijaz*); related to MELT.

mildew n. About 1225 mildeu honeydew, nectar; later, kind of fungus, in reference to its sticky, honeylike appearance (1340, in a Latin context); developed from Old English (before 1000) mildēaw, meledēaw; cognate with Old Saxon milidou honeydew, and Old High German milidou, all from a Proto-Germanic compound of the root represented in Gothic milith honey and that found in Old English dēaw DEW. The Old English variant meledēaw was probably influenced by Old English melu ground grain, *MEAL*². —v. 1552, (implied in mildewed); from the noun.

mile n. Before 1121 mile, developed from Old English (before 800) mil; borrowed from Latin mīlia, mīlia thousands (as in mīlia passuum thousands of Roman paces), plural of mille a thousand (as in mille passūs a thousand paces). Many languages borrowed their word from Latin, as found in Middle Dutch mīle, Old High German mīla, Old French mille, mīle, Italian miglio, Portuguese milha, and Spanish milla, and through English, Old Icelandic mīla (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish mil).

The ancient Roman mīle was equal to one thousand double paces (one step with each foot or about 4,860 feet), a distance about 400 feet shorter than a statute mile. —mileage n. 1754, formed from English mīle + -age.

milieu n. 1877, a compound in French of mi middle + lieu place.

militant adj. Before 1415, engaged in warfare; borrowed from Middle French militant, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin militāntem (nominative militāns), present participle of militāre serve as a soldier, see MILITATE; for suffix see -ANT. —n. 1610, from the adjective.

military adj. 1460, borrowed from Latin militāris of soldiers or war, warlike, from mīles (genitive militis) soldier, Old Latin meiles, perhaps from Etruscan; for suffix see -Y¹. —n. 1736, an officer; later, the army, soldiers (1757); from the adjective. —militarism n. 1864, formed from English military + -ism by influence of French militarisme. —militarist n. 1601, formed from English military + -ist. —militaristic adj. 1905, formed from English militarist + -ic.

militate v. 1625, serve as a soldier, borrowed from Latin militātum, past participle of militāre serve as a soldier, from mīles (genitive militis) soldier, see MILITARY; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of exert force, operate (against), is first recorded in 1642.

militia n. 1590, military system, military force; borrowing of Latin militia military service, warfare, from mīles (genitive militis) soldier; see MILITARY. The sense of citizen army is first recorded in 1696, and may have been taken from French milice troops of the bourgeois (from Latin militia).

milk n. About 1150 mylc; later milk (about 1300); developed from Old English, in West Saxon meoluc (before 899), and in Anglian milc, both related to melcan to milk. Cognates are found in Old Frisian melok milk, Old Saxon miluk, Middle Dutch melc (modern Dutch melk) milk, Old High German miluh (modern German Milch) milk, Old Icelandic mjólk milk (Swedish mjöl, Norwegian melk, mjöl, Danish melk) and Gothic milukes milk, from Proto-Germanic meluk-*. —v. About 1300 milken; developed from Old English (971) meolcan, (about 1000) milcian, from the noun; also merged with melcan to milk; cognate with Old High German melchan, from Proto-Germanic melkanan*. —milk chocolate (1723) —milk shake (1889) —milky adj. About 1380, formed from Middle English milk + -y¹. —Milky Way About 1380, loan translation of Latin via lactea.

mill¹ n. machine for grinding grain into flour or meal. Probably before 1200 mulne building with machinery for grinding grain; later mylne (before 1225), and mille (about 1390); developed from Old English (about 961) mylen mill. The Old English word is an early borrowing from Late Latin molina, molinum mill, originally feminine and neuter of molinus pertaining to a mill, from Latin mola mill, millstone, related to molere to grind. The Late Latin molina was also borrowed into Old Frisian mole mill, Old Saxon mulin, Old High German mulī, mulin and Old Icelandic mylna.

The meaning of a machine for grinding grain is probably recorded before 1425; the building or machinery for manufacturing something (as a textile mill), is first recorded in 1417–18. —v. 1552, pass (cloth) through a mill; later, grind (grain) into flour (1570); from the noun. The meaning of move or mass in a circle (as in to mill about), is first recorded in 1888. —miller n. Before 1376 myllere; earlier as a surname Mulner (1230); formed from Middle English mille and mulne mill + -ere -er¹. —millpond n. (1371) —millstone n. Before 1225; earlier as a surname Mileston (1205).

mill² n. $\frac{1}{10}$ of a cent. 1791, shortened form of Latin millēsimum one thousandth, from mille a thousand; see MILE.

millennium n. Before 1638, New Latin millennium, a compound of Latin mille thousand + annus year, patterned on Latin biennium two-year period. Millennium was first used in English to refer to the period during which Christ is expected to reign on earth. The general meaning of a period of a thousand years is first recorded before 1711. —millennial adj. 1664, pertaining to the prophesied millennium; formed from English millenni(um) + -al¹. The general sense of pertaining to a thousand years, is first recorded in 1807.

millet n. Probably before 1425 milet; borrowed from Middle French millet, diminutive of mil millet, from Latin milium. An earlier form myle is first recorded before 1382; developed from Old English mīl, from Latin milium.

milli- a combining form meaning one thousandth, as in millimeter, millisecond. Borrowed from French milli-, and directly from Latin milli-, from mille a thousand. —milligram, milliliter n. 1810, borrowed from French. —millimeter n. 1807, borrowed from French.

milliner n. 1530 myllenor dealer in fancy goods, especially associated with those imported from Milan, probably special use of earlier Milener native or inhabitant of Milan, possibly considered as stylish or fashionable and also associated with the straw work in hats manufactured there (1449); formed in English from Milan, Italy, famous for its straw work + -er¹. The sense of one who makes or sells women's hats (1742) is possibly found as early as the 1530's. —millinery n. 1679–88, formed from English milliner + -y³.

million n. Before 1376 mylion, milioun; borrowed from Old French millon, million, probably from Italian milione, millione, augmentative form of mille thousand, from Latin mille. —adj. 1694, from the noun. —millionaire n. 1826, borrowed from French millionnaire.

millipede n. 1601, borrowed from Latin mīlipeda kind of crawling insect (mille thousand + pēs, genitive pedis FOOT), possibly a loan translation of Greek chiliópous.

milt n. 1483 milte, probably developed from mylte spleen (considered the source of milt or a spermatic member, 1392), from Old English milte spleen; cognate with Old High German milzi (modern German Milz) and Old Icelandic gerti (Swedish mjelte, Danish milt) spleen, from Proto-Germanic meltijōn*.

mime n. 1603, borrowed from French mime, and directly from Latin mimus, from Greek mimos imitator or actor. It is probable that mime was borrowed by influence of an earlier sense of mimic, adj., acting as a mime (1598), and n., a mime (1590). —v. 1616 (implied in miming); from the noun.

mimetic n. 1637, borrowed from Greek mīmētikós imitative, from mimēsthai to imitate; for suffix see -IC.

mimic adj. 1598, borrowed from Latin mimicus, from Greek mimikós of or pertaining to mimes, from mimos mime; for suffix see -IC. Later borrowing from French mimique is also recorded and in some instances the adjective in English was a development from the noun. —n. 1590, borrowed from Latin mimicus, adj. —v. 1687, from the noun. —mimicry n. 1687, formed from English mimic, n. + -ry.

mimosa n. 1751, New Latin Mimosa the genus name; formed from Latin mimus mime + -osa, adjective suffix, feminine of -osus -*ose*¹; so called because some species of this plant seem to mimic animal reactions by folding their leaves at the slightest touch.

minaret n. 1682, borrowed from French minaret, probably from Turkish minare a minaret, from Arabic manārah, manārat lamp, lighthouse, minaret, related to manār candlestick a derivative of nār fire.

mince v. 1381, borrowed from Old French mincier make into small pieces, from Vulgar Latin miniūtāre* make small, from Late Latin miniūtāre small bits, from Latin minūtus small, MINUTE². —mincemeat n. 1747, alteration of earlier minced meat (1578). —mincing adj. affectedly dainty (1530).

mind n. About 1175 mynd; later minde (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 725) gemynd memory; thinking; cognate with Old High German gimunt memory, Gothic gamunds, (from Proto-Germanic ga-mundis*), Old High German minna love, Old Saxon minnea, and Old Frisian and Middle Dutch minne, developed from the stem of the word for remembrance found in Old Icelandic minni and Gothic gaminthi, Proto-Germanic ga-menthijan*. —v. Probably before 1350 minden remember, notice, turn one's attention to; from the noun. The meaning of care or object is first recorded in 1608. —mindful adj. (about 1340) —mindless adj. (before 1400) mine¹ pron. belonging to me. 1100 mine, developed from Old English mīn mine, my (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon mīn, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch mijn, Old High German mīn (modern German mein), Old Icelandic mínn (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish min), and Gothic meins, from Proto-Germanic mīnaz*, an adjective formed from the old genitive (Gothic meina of me, Old English mīn; reduced in Middle English to mī before consonants) of the pronoun.

mine² n. pit dug to extract minerals. About 1303 myne; borrowed from Old French mine, either from the verb in Old French or possibly through Gallo-Romance mīna*, from Celtic (compare Welsh myyn ore, mine, and Irish mein ore, mine, from Proto-Celtic meini-*). —v. Probably before 1300 minen, borrowed from Old French miner, possibly from mine, n. —miner n. About 1300 mynur, as a surname Miner (1212).

mineral n. Probably before 1425, a substance obtained by mining; ore of a metal (before 1449); earlier, a variety of the philosophers' stone (before 1393); borrowed from Medieval Latin mineralis something mined, from neuter of mineralis pertaining to mines, from minera mine, and Old French miniére mine, from mine MINE²; for suffix see -AL¹. —adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin mineralis. —mineralogy n. 1690, formed from English mineral, n. + -logy; or borrowed from French minéralogie (1649).

mingle v. Before 1475 menglen, a frequentative form (showing repeated action) of earlier myngen to mix (about 1348), and mengen (about 1150); developed from Old English (before 800) mengan, related to AMONG. Old English mengan is cognate with Old Frisian mendza to mix, Old Saxon mengian, Middle Dutch menghen (modern Dutch mengen), Old High German and modern German mengen, from Proto-Germanic mangijanan*.

mini- a combining form meaning miniature or minor, as in minicrisis, minicourse; very short, as in miniskirt. Abstracted from miniature, but also influenced by minimum.

miniature n. Before 1586, thing represented on a small scale; borrowed from Italian miniatura manuscript illumination or small picture, from past participle of miniare to illuminate a manuscript, from Latin miniāre to paint red, from minium red lead.

Because illuminated pictures in medieval manuscripts were of small size, miniature developed the sense of small picture, influenced by association with Latin min- expressing smallness in minor less, minimus least, and minutus small. —adj. 1714, from the noun. —miniaturization n. (1947) —miniaturize v. 1946, formed from English miniature, adj. + -ize.

minimum n. 1663, portion so small that it is indivisible; borrowed from Latin minimum smallest (thing), neuter of minimus (earlier minumus) smallest, superlative to minor smaller (see MINOR, MINUS). The meaning of least amount attainable, allowable, etc., is first recorded in 1676. —adj. 1810, from the noun. —minimal adj. 1666, formed in English from Latin minimus smallest + English -al¹. —minimize v. 1802, formed from Latin minimus smallest + English -ize.

minion n. 1500–20, beloved or favorite person; also, servile dependent (1501); borrowed from Middle French mignon, n., a favorite, darling, and adj., dainty, pleasing, favorite, from Old minister n. About 1300 ministre agent or clergyman; later, servant (about 1325); borrowed from Old French ministre servant, learned borrowing from Latin minister (genitive ministri) servant, priest's assistant, from minus less; hence subordinate. In Medieval Latin minister had the meaning priest, adopted directly into Middle English. —v. Before 1338 ministren to serve, administer, perform religious rites; borrowed from Old French ministrer, and directly from Latin ministrare to serve, from minister, n., servant. —ministerial adj. 1561, borrowed through Middle French ministériel, and directly from Late Latin ministerialis of a minister, from Latin ministerium ministry, from minister minister; for suffix see -IAL.

French mignot, perhaps from Celtic (compare Old Irish mīn tender, soft); or derived from Old High German minnja, minna love, memory.

ministration n. About 1340 mynystacyon, borrowed through Old French ministration or directly from Latin ministratiōnem (nominative ministratiō), from ministrare to serve, see MINISTER; for suffix see -ATION.

ministry n. About 1200 menstre service in religious matters; later mynisterie (about 1384); borrowed perhaps from Old French ministere, and directly from Latin ministerium office or service, from minister servant, see MINISTER; for suffix see -RY.

mink n. 1431 myneke mink fur; possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish and Norwegian mink and Swedish mink). In English mink was the name of the fur before it was applied to the animal.

minnow n. Before 1425 menew, probably related to Old English myne, earlier mynwe* minnow; cognate with Middle Low German mōne a kind of fish, modern Dutch meun, and Old High German muniwa (modern German Münne), from Proto-Germanic muniwōn*. The Middle English forms may have been influenced by Old French menu small.

minor adj. 1 About 1410, lesser (used to designate smaller plant species); earlier, as part of surnames (1212); borrowed from Latin minor lesser, formed as masculine/feminine (on the pattern of maior: maius greater) to minus, though in early Italic times minus was not a neuter or even a comparative at all, but a u-stem adjective meaning small (compare Greek miny- short), from which was formed minuere to lessen. 2 About 1230 meonur, about 1300 menor lesser (used to designate religious orders); borrowed from Old French menor, from Latin minor; see def. 1.

The general sense of less important, not significant, is first recorded in 1623. —n. Probably before 1400, minor premise of a syllogism in logic; borrowed from Medieval Latin minor, from Latin minor, adj.; later, person under legal age (1612); from the adjective in English, probably also influenced by the sense in minority (1547). —minority n. 1533, condition of being smaller; borrowed from Middle French minorité, or directly from Medieval Latin minoritatem (nominative minoritas), from Latin minor lesser; for suffix see -ITY.

minster n. 1127 minstre monastery, church of a monastery; developed from Old English (probably about 750) mynster, from Vulgar Latin monisterium*, altered from Late Latin monasterium MONASTERY.

minstrel n. Probably before 1300 minstrel, minestral, singer or musician; earlier menestral a servant (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French menestrel entertainer or servant, from Medieval Latin ministralis servant, jester, singer, from Late Latin ministerialis imperial household officer, from ministerialis, adj., ministerial, from Latin ministerium MINISTRY. —minstrelsy n. Probably before 1300 minstralsie, borrowed through Anglo-French menestralsie, from Old French menestrel minstrel.

mint¹ n. sweet-smelling plant. Old English (before 800) mintē, borrowed from Latin menta, mentha mint. Other early Germanic borrowings from the Latin include Old Saxon mintā mint, Middle Dutch mente, mintē, and Old High German minza.

mint² n. 1423 mynt coin, money, place where money is coined, earlier (before 1200) munet coin, money; developed from Old English (about 700) mynit coin, an early borrowing (like Old Frisian menote, munte coin, Old Saxon munita, Middle Dutch munte, and Old High German munizza), from Latin monēta mint; see MONEY. —v. 1546, from the noun. —adj. in perfect condition, as a freshly minted coin (1902).

minuend n. 1706, borrowed from Latin minuendus to be made smaller, gerundive form of minuere to lessen.

minuet n. 1673, borrowed from French menuet, from Old French menuet, adj., small, delicate, from menu small, from Latin minūtus small, MINUTE² (so called from the small steps taken in the dance); for suffix see -ET. The spelling English was influenced by Italian minuetto.

minus prep. 1481–90 mynus, borrowed from Latin minus less, neuter of minor smaller, MINOR. The sense in English of subtracted from, probably originated in the commercial language of the Middle Ages, perhaps first used by German merchants next to a number to indicate a deficiency in weight or measure. —adj. 1789, from the preposition. —n. 1654, from the preposition.

minuscule adj. 1893, extremely small, an extended sense of the meaning of small letter, not capital (1727–41); borrowing of French minuscule, learned borrowing from Latin minuscula in minuscula littera slightly smaller letter, feminine of minusculus rather less, diminutive of minus less, MINUS.

minute¹ n. About 1378, one sixtieth of an hour or degree; borrowed from Old French minut, or directly from Medieval Latin minuta minute, short note, from Latin minūta, feminine of minūtus small, MINUTE². The plural minutes, in the sense of a record of proceedings developed about 1710.

minute² adj. 1472, very small, borrowed from Latin minūtus small, past participle of minuere lessen.

minutiae n. pl. 1751, borrowing of Late Latin minūtiae trifles, plural of Latin minūtia smallness, from minūtus small, MINUTE².

minx n. 1542 mynx a pet dog, of uncertain origin; later, a pert girl, hussy (1592), perhaps a shortened form of earlier minikins a girl or woman (before 1550); borrowed from Middle Dutch minnekeijn darling, beloved (minne love + -kijn -kin, diminutive suffix).

miracle n. 1137, borrowing of Old French miracle, from Latin mirāculum object of wonder (in church Latin, a marvelous event by the intervention of God), from mirārī to wonder at, from mirus wonderful, earlier smetros*. —miraculous adj. Before 1410 (implied in myraculosly); borrowed through Middle French miraculeux, or directly from Medieval Latin miraculosus, from Latin mirāculum miracle; for suffix see -OUS.

mirage n. 1812, borrowing of French mirage, from mīrer look at, se mīrer look at oneself in a mirror, be reflected, from Latin mīrāre, variant of mīrārī to wonder at, see MIRACLE; for suffix see -AGE.

mire n. 1219, in the compound mirepit muddy hole; later muir a swampy place (1300), and myre (before 1338); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic mýrr bog, swamp, cognate with Old English mos bog; see MOSS). —v. Probably about 1400, (figurative use) to involve in difficulties; from the noun.

mirror n. About 1250 mirour; borrowed from Old French miroir a reflecting glass, miroier, from mīrer look at, from Latin mīrāre, variant of mīrārī to wonder at, admire; see MIRACLE. —v. 1593, from the noun. The verb also appeared in Middle English mirouren to be a model for (probably 1410); also from the noun.

mirth n. Probably about 1300 mirthe a source of joy; earlier murthe (probably about 1150); developed from Old English myrth joy or pleasure (before 899); related to myrge pleasing, agreeable; for suffix see -TH¹.

mis- a prefix meaning bad or badly, as in misgovernment, misbehave; wrong or wrongly, as in mispronunciation, misapply; representing: 1) in native words, Old English mis-; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch mis-, Old High German missa, missi- (modern German miss-), Old Icelandic mis-, Gothic missa-, from Proto-Germanic missa-*, stem of an ancient past participle, and related to Old English missan fail to hit, MISS¹; 2) in borrowed words, Middle English mis-, mes-; borrowed from Old French mes-, from Frankish (compare Old High German missa-, missi-).

misadventure n. Probably before 1300 misaventour; borrowed from Old French mesaventure, from mesavenir to turn out badly (mes- mis- + avenir to happen); and perhaps formed from Middle English mis- + aventure; see ADVENTURE.

misanthrope n. 1563, borrowing of Greek mīsanthrōpos; later misanthrop (1683), borrowed through Middle French misanthrope, or directly from Greek mīsanthrōpos hating mankind (mīsein to hate + ánthrōpos man). —misanthropic adj. 1762, a shortened form of earlier misanthropical (1621). —misanthropy n. 1656, borrowed from French misanthropie, from Greek mīsanthrōpía, from mīsanthrōpos; for suffix see -Y³.

misbehave v. 1451, implied in misbehaving; formed from mis- + behave. —misbehavior n. (1486) miscarry v. About 1300 miscaryen go astray; later, come to harm (about 1340); formed from mis- + caryen carry. The meaning of deliver a baby before it can live, is first recorded in 1527. The meaning of fail is found in 1607. —miscarriage n. 1590, mistake, error; formed from mis- + carriage. The meaning of birth of a baby before it can live is first recorded in 1662.

miscegenation n. 1864, formed from Latin miscēre to MIX + genus race + English -ation.

miscellaneous adj. 1637, borrowed from Latin miscellāneus, from miscellus mixed, diminutive of a lost adjective misculus* (compare Vulgar Latin misculāre*), from miscēre to mix; for suffix see -OUS. —miscellany n. 1615, probably borrowed from French miscellanées, feminine plural, from Latin miscellānea, from neuter plural of miscellāneus miscellaneous.

mischief n. Probably before 1300 mischef misfortune, harm, injury; borrowed from Old French meschief, from meschever come or bring to grief (mes- badly + chever happen, come to an end, from Vulgar Latin capāre*, from capum* head, from Latin caput HEAD). The meaning of playful behavior, is first recorded in 1784. —mischievous adj. Before 1350 myschevous miserable, calamitous, formed from mischef misfortune + -ous. The meaning of disposed to playful behavior, is first recorded in 1676.

miscible adj. 1570, borrowed from Medieval Latin miscibilis mixable, from Latin miscēre to mix; for suffix see -IBLE.

misconstrue v. About 1385 mysconstruuen; formed from mys- + construuen construe.

miscreant adj. Probably before 1300 miscreaunt unbelieving, heathen; borrowing of Old French mescreant (mes- wrongly + creant, present participle of creire believe, from Latin crēdere); for suffix see -ANT. The meaning of villainous is first recorded in 1593. —n. Probably 1383 myscreaunt unbeliever, infidel; from the adjective. The meaning of villain is first recorded in 1590.

misdeemeanor n. 1487, formed from mis- wrong + demenure demeanor.

miser n. 1542, wretch, wretched, learned borrowing of Latin miser unhappy, wretched. The meaning of a person who hoards money, avaricious person, is first recorded about 1560. —miserly adj. 1593, formed from miser + -ly².

miserable adj. About 1412, very unhappy, wretched; borrowing of Old French miserable, and borrowed directly from Latin miserābilis pitiable, lamentable, from miserārī to pity, lament, from miser wretched; for suffix see -ABLE. —miser n. About 1375 miserie miserable state of mind; borrowed from Old French miserie, learned borrowing from Latin miseria wretchedness, from miser wretched; for suffix see -Y³.

misfeasance n. 1596, borrowed from Middle French mesfaisance, from mesfaisant, present participle of Old French mesfaire to misdo (mes- wrongly + faire do, from Latin facere to perform); for suffix see -ANCE.

misgiving n. 1601, formed from earlier misgive to cause to feel doubt (1513) + *-ing*¹.

misshap n. Before 1250, bad luck; formed from mis- + hap luck.

mismatch n. About 1475 mysse-masche; probably imitative reduplication of *mash*¹ soft mixture, possibly influenced by misbad (see MIS-). Compare German Mischmasch mishmash, from reduplication of mischen to mix.

misnomer n. 1455 misnourer mistake in naming; borrowed from Middle French mesnourer to misname (mes- wrongly + nourer to name, from Latin nōmināre nominate); for suffix see *-ER*³.

misogamy n. 1656, borrowed from New Latin misogamia, formed from Greek misos hatred + gamos marriage; for suffix see -GAMY and *-Y*³.

misogyny n. 1656, borrowed from Greek misogynīā, from misogynēs woman hater (misos hatred + gynē woman); for suffix see *-Y*³. Also possibly a back formation in English from earlier misogynist. —misogynist n. 1620, formed from Greek misogynēs woman hater + English -ist.

misprision n. 1425, borrowed through Anglo-French misprision, Old French mesprison, from mespris, past participle of mesprendre to mistake or act wrongly (mes- wrongly + prendre take, from Latin prēndere, contracted from prehendere seize); for suffix see -ION.

miss¹ v. fail to hit, attain, etc. Probably before 1200 missen fail to obtain, discover to be absent, lack; developed from Old English missan fail to hit (about 725, in Beowulf) and probably from Old Icelandic missa to miss or lack. The Old English and Old Icelandic forms are cognate with Old Frisian missa to miss, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch missen, Old High German missan (modern German missen), from Proto-Germanic missijanan*, formed from a noun missan* (whence Old English miss loss). —n. Probably about 1175 mis loss, lack; developed from Old English missan and from Old Icelandic missa to miss; from the verb. The meaning of a failure to hit, is first recorded in 1555 (an earlier form mis-yengen to miss the mark with an arrow, is recorded about 1250). —missing adj. 1530, absent; formed from *miss*¹ + *-ing*². Earlier as a noun with the meaning of absence (before 1325); formed from missen *miss*¹ + -ing *-ing*¹.

miss² n. girl, young woman. 1645, prostitute or concubine, shortened form of MISTRESS. The meaning of young unmarried woman, girl, is first recorded in 1666–67.

missal n. Probably before 1300 messel book of the Mass; later missale (before 1400); borrowed from Old French messel and directly from Medieval Latin missale, from Late Latin missa MASS.

missile n. 1656, borrowed from French missile, and directly from Latin missile weapon that can be thrown, from neuter of missilis, adj., capable of being thrown, from missus, past participle of mittere to send. The meaning of a self-propelled rocket or bomb, is first recorded in 1738.

mission n. 1598, act of sending on some special work; errand; borrowed from Middle French mission, and directly from Latin missiōnem (nominative missiō) act of sending, from mittere to send; for suffix see -SION. The sense of diplomatic mission or religious mission is first recorded in 1622, and that of a headquarters of a mission, in 1769. —missionary n. 1656, from the earlier adjective, sent on a mission (1644); borrowed from New Latin missionarius pertaining to a mission, from Latin missiōnem (nominative missiō) mission; for suffix see -ARY.

missive n. 1501, from the earlier adjective, sent by a superior authority (1444); borrowed from Medieval Latin missivus for sending, sent, from Latin missus, past participle of mittere to send; for suffix see -IVE.

mist n. Old English mist dimness, mist (875); earlier, in compounds misthleothu misty cliffs, wælmist the mist of death (about 725); cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch mist mist, modern Icelandic mistur, Norwegian mist, and Swedish mist, from Proto-Germanic miHstaz*. —v. Before 1300 misten; developed from Old English (about 1000) mistian to grow dim, mist, from mist, n. —misty adj. About 1325 mysty; developed from Old English mistig (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from mist mist + -ig *-y*¹.

mistake v. Before 1338 mistaken to transgress; later, misunderstand (before 1393); borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic mistaka take by mistake, miscarry (mis wrongly + taka TAKE). —n. 1638, from the verb.

mister n. 1447–48 as abbreviated form Mr.; later unaccented variant of MASTER (1551).

mistletoe n. Probably about 1125 mistelta; later mistelto (probably before 1425); developed from Old English (about 1000) mistiltān (mistel mistletoe + tān twig); earlier mistel (about 700) is cognate with Old Saxon mistil mistletoe, Old High German mistil (modern German Mistel), modern Dutch mistel, and Old Icelandic mistilteinn (Swedish mistel, Norwegian misteltein, and Danish mistelten) mistletoe, from Proto-Germanic miH-stilaz*.

mistral n. 1604, borrowing of French mistral, from Provençal mistral, n., literally, the dominant wind, from mistral, adj., dominant, from Latin magistrālis dominant, from magister master; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

mistress n. Probably before 1300 maistresse woman at the head of a household; borrowing of Old French maistresse, feminine of maistre master.

mite¹ n. tiny animal. 1373 myte; developed from Old English (about 1000) mīte; cognate with Middle Dutch mite mite (modern Dutch mijt), Middle Low German mite, and Old High German mīza mite, from Proto-Germanic mītōn* “the cutter.”

mite² n. Before 1375, little bit or jot; borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German mite tiny animal, *MITE*¹.

miter¹ n. tall folded cap worn by bishops. About 1303 mytyr, later mitre (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French mitre, and directly from Latin mitra, from Greek mītrā headband or turban.

miter² n. miter, as in miter joint, square, etc. 1678, perhaps a special use of MITER¹, in reference to the joining of the two peaks in a bishop's miter (also known in mitrum square for making mitered joints, perhaps as early as the 1100's), or perhaps ultimately adapted from Greek mītos a thread of the woof, joined at right angles to the thread of the warp in weaving. —v. 1731 mitigate v. Probably before 1425, relieve pain, abate; borrowed from Latin mītigātus, past participle of mītigāre make mild or gentle, from a lost adjective mītigus* making mild, formed from mītis gentle, soft + -igus, from the root of agere do, make, act; for suffix see -ATE¹.

In some instances Middle English mitigate is probably a back formation from earlier mytygacioun mitigation. —mitigation n. Before 1376 mytygacioun; borrowed probably from Old French mitigation, and directly from Latin mītigātiōnem (nominative mītigātiō) soothing, from mītigāre; for suffix see -ATION.

mitosis n. 1887, New Latin; formed from Greek mītos warp thread + New Latin -osis act or process; so called because the chromatin of the cell nucleus appears as long threads in the first stage of mitosis.

mitt n. 1765, shortened form of MITTEN. The meaning of a baseball glove, is first found in 1902.

mitten n. About 1390 miteyn; earlier in a surname Mytayn (1248), and mytten (probably 1440); borrowed from Old French mitaine mitten, half-glove, from Old French mīte mitten; and blending with Medieval Latin mītta, perhaps from Middle High German mittemo, Old High German mittamo middle, midmost in the sense of half-glove.

mix v. 1538, developed as a back formation from earlier myxte mixed (probably before 1425); borrowed through Anglo-French mixte, learned borrowing from Latin mixtus, past participle of miscēre to mix, which was borrowed early by certain Germanic languages (compare Old English miscian and Old High German miskan). —n. About 1586; from the verb. —mixer 1611, person who mixes; later a machine for mixing (1876). —mixture n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French mixture, mixture, and directly from Latin mixtura, from mixtus, past participle.

mizzen n. 1413–20 mesan (as in mesan mast); later myson (1466–67); borrowed from Middle French misaine foresail, foremast, alteration (influenced by Italian mezzana mizzen) of Old French migenne, from Catalan mitjana, from Latin mediānus of the middle, MEDIAN.

mnemonic adj. 1753, either a back formation from earlier mnemonics, or borrowed from Greek mnēmōnikós of or pertaining to memory, from mnēmōn (genitive mnēmōnos) remembering, mindful, from mnāsthai remember; for suffix see -IC. —mnemonics n. 1721, borrowed from New Latin mne- monica, from Greek mnēmōniká, neuter plural of mnēmōnikós mnemonic; for suffix see -ICS.

moan n. Probably before 1200 man complaint, lamentation; later mon, mone (before 1250); developed from Old English mān* complaint (from Proto-Germanic main-*), related to mānan complain, moan; also, tell, intend; whence obsolete English *mean*¹ complain. The meaning of sound of suffering is first recorded in 1673. —v. About 1250 monen to lament, mourn; developed from mon lamentation. The meaning of make a mournful sound is first recorded in 1724.

moat n. 1300 mote mound or embankment; later, ditch surrounding a castle (before 1376); borrowed from Old French mote or Medieval Latin mota mound, fortified height; of uncertain origin.

mob n. 1688, disorderly crowd or rabble, shortened form of earlier mobile (pronounced mob'ilē) the common people, the populace, rabble (1676); borrowed from Latin mōbile vulgus fickle common people; mōbile, neuter of mōbilis fickle, movable, MOBILE. —v. 1709, from the noun. —mobster n. 1917, from mob, n. + -ster.

mobile adj. 1490, borrowing of Middle French mobile, learned borrowing from Latin mōbilis movable, shortened form of movibilis*, from movēre to MOVE. —n. Probably before 1430, outermost sphere of the universe; borrowed from Latin mōbilis. 1549, a prime mover (in philosophical works); later, a body in motion (before 1676); borrowed from Middle French mobile and reborrowed from Latin mōbilis. The meaning of a mobile sculpture (mō'bēl), is first recorded in 1949; from the adjective, influenced by mobile sculpture (1936). —mobility n. Probably before 1425 mobilitē capacity for motion; borrowed from Middle French mobilité, from Latin mōbilitātem (nominative mōbilitās) capacity to move, from mōbilis mobile; for suffix see -ITY.

mobilize v. 1838, put into circulation; borrowed from French mobiliser, from mobile movable, MOBILE; for suffix see -IZE. The meaning of call (troops) into active service, is first recorded in 1853. The sense of put (forces, energy, resources) into service, is found in 1871. —mobilization n. 1799, a putting into circulation; borrowed from French mobilisation, from mobiliser mobilize; for suffix see -IZATION.

moccasin n. 1612, borrowed from Algonquian, probably of a Virginia tribe (compare Powhatan mākāsīn shoe, Ojibwa makisīn). French moccasin was borrowed from English.

mocha n. 1773, in allusion to Mocha, a seaport in Southern Yemen from which mocha was originally exported. The meaning of a mixture of coffee and chocolate, used as a flavoring, is first recorded in 1849.

mock v. Probably before 1430 mokken to deceive; later mocken to make fun of (probably about 1450); borrowed from Middle French mocquer deride, jeer, from Old French, of uncertain origin (sometimes said to represent a Vulgar Latin muccāre* to wipe the nose in the sense of a derisive gesture; others suggest comparison with Germanic forms, such as Middle Dutch mocken to mumble, Middle Low German mucken to mumble, grumble; perhaps ultimately of imitative origin). —adj. 1548, adjective use of earlier mokke, n., act of mocking, jest, trick (about 1425); from the verb. —mockery n. Probably before 1430 mokerye; borrowed from Middle French moquerie, from Old French, from moquer to mock; for suffix see -ERY.

modal adj. 1569, (in logic) involving affirmation of a proposition; borrowed from Middle French modal, and directly from Medieval Latin modalis of or pertaining to a mode, from Latin modus measure, manner, MODE. The meaning of pertaining to mode or form, is first recorded in 1625; the sense in grammar first appears in 1798. —modality n. Before 1617, quality of being modal; borrowed from French modalité, or directly from Medieval Latin modalitatem (nominative modalitas) a being modal, from modalis modal, see MODAL; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of a particular mode, method, or procedure, is first recorded in 1957.

mode¹ n. manner. About 1380 moedes, pl., melodies, songs; later mode grammatical mood; *MOOD*² (about 1450); borrowed from Latin modus measure, rhythm, song, manner; related to meditārī to think or reflect upon, consider. The meaning of manner in which a thing is done, is first recorded in 1667.

mode² n. current fashion. About 1645; borrowed from French mode, learned borrowing from Latin modus manner, *MODE*¹. —modish adj. 1660, formed from English *mode*² + -ish.

model n. 1575, a likeness made to scale; borrowed from Middle French modèle, from Italian modello a model, mold, from Vulgar Latin modellus*, diminutive of Latin modulus measure, standard, diminutive of modus manner, measure, *MODE*¹. The meaning of a thing or person to be imitated is first recorded in 1639, suggested in the earlier sense of a person or thing that is the likeness of another (1593). —v. 1604, to present as in a model; borrowed from French modeler, or developed from the noun in English. —adj. 1844, from the noun.

modern n. device used in telecommunications to convert digital signals to analog form and vice versa. 1961, formed from mo(dulator) + dem(odulator).

moderate adj. 1392 moderat, borrowed from Latin moderātus, past participle of moderārī to regulate, from a pre-Latin stem medes-* (compare modestus MODEST); for suffix see -ATE¹. —v. Probably before 1425 moderaten, probably from moderate, adj., by influence of Latin moderātus, past participle. The meaning of regulate or preside over (a debate, etc.), is first recorded in 1577. —n. 1794, from the adjective. —moderation n. Probably before 1425 moderacioun quality of being moderate; borrowed from Middle French modération, from Latin moderātiōnem (nominative moderātiō), from moderārī; for suffix see -ATION. —moderator n. Before 1398 moderatur, borrowed from Latin moderātor, from moderārī; for suffix see -OR².

modern adj. 1500–20, now existing, extant; later, of present and recent times (1585); borrowed from Middle French mod- erne, and directly from Late Latin modernus, (probably patterned on hodiernus of today) from Latin modo just now, in a (certain) manner, from modō, ablative case of modus manner, *MODE*¹. —n. 1585, from the adjective. —modernism n. (1737) Use of modernism as a cover term for the movement or style away from classical or traditional modes in art, architecture, literature, etc. is first recorded in 1929. —modernistic adj. (1909) —modernize v. (1748) modest adj. 1565, probably a back formation from modesty, and in some instances borrowed from Middle French modeste, or directly from Latin modestus modest, moderate, in due measure, from a pre-Latin stem medes-*; related to modus measure, manner, *MODE*¹. —modesty n. 1531, moderation; also, the quality of being modest (1553); borrowed from Middle French modestie, or directly from Latin modestia moderation, from modestus moderate; for suffix see -Y³.

modicum n. About 1470 (Scottish), borrowing of Latin modicum, neuter of modicus moderate, from modus measure, manner, *MODE*¹.

modify v. About 1385 modifyen to alter, amend; borrowed from Old French modifier, learned borrowing from Latin modificāre to limit, restrain, from a lost adjective modificus* regulating, forming according to rule (modus measure, manner, *MODE*¹ + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY. —modification n. 1502, a bringing into a particular mode; borrowed from Middle French modification, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin modificātiōnem (nominative modificātiō) a measuring, from modificāre; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of a partial alteration is first recorded in 1774.

modular adj. 1798, (in mathematics) borrowed from New Latin modularis, from modulus small measure; see MODULE; for suffix see -AR. The meaning of having to do with interchangeable units, is first recorded in 1936.

modulate v. 1615, probably a back formation from modulation, perhaps influenced by Latin modulātus, past participle of modulārī regulate, measure rhythmically. —modulation n. Before 1398 modulacioun act of making music, air or melody; borrowed from Old French modulation, or directly from Latin modulātiōnem (nominative modulātiō) rhythmical measure, singing and playing, melody, from modulārī; for suffix see -ATION.

module n. 1586, scale or allotted measure; later, standard for measuring (before 1628); borrowed through Middle French module, or directly from Latin modulus small measure, diminutive of modus measure, manner, *MODE*¹; for suffix see -ULE. The meaning of any interchangeable part, is first recorded in 1955.

mogul¹ n. powerful person. 1678, from Mogul Mongol, as conqueror of India (1588); borrowed from Persian and Arabic mughal, mughul, alteration of Mongol member of an Asiatic people.

mogul² n. elevation on a ski slope. 1961, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian muge, mugje, feminine muga a heap or mound); the form suggests influence of English *mogul*¹.

mohair n. 1619, alteration (by association with hair) of earlier mocayare (1570); borrowed from Middle French mocayart, and from obsolete Italian mocaiarro, both from Arabic mukhayyar cloth of goat hair; literally, selected or choice, from khayyara he chose.

moire n. 1660, watered mohair, later, watered silk; borrowing of French moire fabric having a wavelike appearance, especially watered mohair; earlier mouaire, probably alteration of English MOHAIR.

moist adj. 1373, borrowed from Old French moiste damp, alteration (influenced by Latin musteus juicy from mustum fresh, MUST²) of Vulgar Latin mucidus* moldy, altered from Latin mucidus slimy, moldy, musty, from mucus slime, MUCUS. —moisten v. 1580 (implied in moistened); formed from English moist + *-en*¹. Middle English moisten (about 1325, borrowed from Old French moistir and enmoistir) would have developed into the form moist in modern English, but was replaced after 1500 with a new formation based on the adjective. —moisture n. About 1350 moysture; borrowed from Old French moisture, moistour, from moiste moist; for suffix see -URE. —moisturize v. 1945, formed from moisture + -ize.

mol n. See MOLE⁴.

molar¹ n. tooth for grinding. About 1350, borrowed from Latin molāris dēns grinding tooth, from mola millstone; for suffix see -AR. —adj. 1626, from the noun.

molar² adj. one mole or gram molecule of a substance. 1902, formed from English MOLE⁴ + -ar.

molasses n. 1582 melasus, borrowed from Portuguese melaço, from Late Latin mallaceum new wine, MUST², from Latin mel (genitive mellis) honey. The spelling with o in the form molasses, is unaccounted for.

mold¹ n. hollow shape for casting. Probably before 1200 molde fashion, form, nature, character; later mold pattern on which something is made (before 1300); borrowed from Old French molde, molle mold, measure, from Latin modulus measure, model, diminutive of modus manner, MODE¹. —v. About 1350 molden to form, knead (dough) into shape; from the noun. —molding n. 1327, kneading, shaping; later, architectural ornamentation (1643).

mold² n. fungus growth. Before 1400 molde, probably developed from mouled, moulde, past participle of moulen to grow moldy (about 1390; earlier muhelin, before 1200); cognate with Old Icelandic mygla (Swedish mögla, Danish mugle) grow moldy; possibly related to mugga drizzle; see MUGGY. —v. Probably before 1500 moulden; from the noun; replacing moulen (about 1390). —moldy adj. 1570, formed from mold, n. + *-y*¹; replacing mowly (before 1398); formed from moulen grow moldy + *-y*¹.

mold³ n. loose earth. Old English (before 725) molde earth, soil, dust; cognate with Old Frisian molde earth, soil, Middle molder v. 1531, probably a frequentative form of *mold*³ loose earth.

Dutch monde, Old High German molta, Old Icelandic mold (Swedish mull, Norwegian mold), and Gothic mulda, from Proto-Germanic muldō*. —moldboard n. 1508, formed from *mold*³ + board, n.; replacing earlier moldebredd (1343); formed from molde *mold*³ + bredd board.

mole¹ n. spot on the skin. 1373 moyle stain; later mole spot on the skin (before 1398); developed from Old English māl spot, mark, mole (about 1000); cognate with Old High German meil spot or mark (modern German Mal), and Gothic mail wrinkle, from Proto-Germanic mailan*.

mole² n. burrowing mammal. 1362 mol; later molle, molde (about 1400), probably related to Old English molde earth, soil; see MOLD³ loose earth. Corresponding forms are found in Old Frisian moll mole, Middle Low German mol, mul, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch mol. The sense of an intelligence agent entrenched in legitimate activities before spying, is first recorded in 1976. —molehill n. (about 1450) mole³ n. pier or breakwater. Before 1548, borrowed from Middle French môle breakwater, from Italian molo, from Medieval Greek mōlos from Latin mōlēs mass, massive structure, barrier.

mole⁴ or mol n. molecular weight. 1902, borrowed from German Mol, shortened form of Molekül, from French molécule, from New Latin molecula MOLECULE.

molecule n. 1794, borrowed from French molécule (1674), from New Latin molecula a molecule, diminutive of Latin mōlēs mass, barrier. New Latin molecula is recorded in English contexts as early as 1678. —molecular adj. 1823, formed perhaps through influence of French moléculaire, from New Latin molecula molecule + English -ar.

molest v. About 1385 molesten, borrowed from Old French molester, and directly from Latin molestāre to disturb, trouble, annoy, from molestus troublesome, related to mōlēs trouble or barrier. —molestation n. Probably about 1400 molestacioun, borrowed from Old French molestation from molester molest, and directly from Medieval Latin molestationem (nominative molestatio), from Latin molestāre; for suffix see -ATION.

moll n. 1567, feminine personal name; later, a prostitute (1604), and a female companion of a thief (1823); developed as a shortened form of Molly.

mollify v. 1392 mollifien to soften; borrowed from Old French mollifier, or directly from Late Latin mollificāre make soft, mollify, from mollificus softening (Latin mollis soft + the root of facere make); for suffix see -FY.

mollusk n. 1783 mollusque, borrowing of French mollusque, learned borrowing from New Latin Mollusca, an order in biological classification, from Latin mollusca, neuter plural of molluscus thin-shelled, from mollis soft. The spelling mollusk is first recorded in English in 1839.

mollycoddle n. 1849, from Molly, proper name + coddle. —v. 1870, from the noun.

molt v. 1591, alteration of Middle English mouten (before 1400); developed from Old English -mūtian (as in bemūtian to exchange), from Latin mūtāre to change. The modern spelling with -l- developed on the analogy of words like assault and fault, in which the l was inserted to attaining supposedly correct spelling. —n. 1815, from the verb.

molten adj. About 1150 molten dissolved by water; later molten made liquid by heat (about 1300), from past participle of melten to MELT.

molybdenum n. 1816, silver-white metallic chemical element, New Latin, alteration of earlier molybdena any of several ores of lead (1693), from Latin molybdaena, from Greek molybdaina, from molybdos lead.

mom n. 1894, shortened form of earlier momma (1884), alteration of MAMMA¹. —mommy n. 1902, alteration of earlier MAMMY. British has similar formations in mum (1823) and mummy (1839).

moment n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French moment, or directly from Latin mōmentum movement, movement of time, instant, moving power, consequence, importance, contraction of movimentum*, from movēre to MOVE; for suffix see -MENT. —momentarily adv. 1654–66, for a moment; formed from English momentary + *-ly*¹. The meaning of at any moment, is first recorded in 1928. —momentary adj. About 1460 momentare; borrowed from Latin mōmentārius, from mōmentum moment; for suffix see -ARY. —momentous adj. 1656, formed from English moment importance + -ous. An earlier meaning of having momentum, is first recorded in 1652.

momentum n. 1699, borrowing of Latin mōmentum movement, moving power.

mon- a form of mono- before a vowel, as in monaural.

monarch n. Probably before 1439 monarke; later monarcha (before 1449; borrowed from Middle French monarque, or directly from Late Latin monarcha, from Greek monárchēs, mónarchos (mónos alone, single + árchein to rule). —monarchy n. Probably before 1350 monarchie; borrowed from Old French, from Late Latin monarchia, from Greek monarchiā absolute rule, from monárchēs, mónarchos monarch; for suffix see -Y³.

monastery n. About 1400 monasterye; borrowed from Old French monastere, and directly from Late Latin monastērium, from Late Greek monastērion a monastery, from Greek monázēin to live alone + -tērion place for (doing something).

monastic adj. About 1449 monastike; borrowed from Middle French monastique, or directly from Late Latin monasticus, from Late Greek monastikós solitary, pertaining to a monk, from Greek monázēin to live alone; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1632, from the adjective. —monasticism n. 1795, formed from monastic + -ism.

Monday n. Probably before 1200 monedæi; developed from monetary adj. 1802–12, borrowed, perhaps through influence of French monétaire, from Late Latin monētārius pertaining to money; originally, of the mint, from Latin monēta mint, coinage; see MONEY; for suffix see -ARY. —monetarism n. 1969, from monetarist, on the analogy of such pairs as capitalist, capitalism; for suffix see -ISM. —monetarist n. 1963, formed from English monetary + -ist. Earlier, found as adjective, meaning “of a monetary character or on a monetary basis” (1914).

Old English (about 1000) mōnandæg, mōndæg, literally, day of the moon (mōnan, genitive of mōna MOON + dæg DAY), corresponding to Old Frisian mōnadei Monday, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch mānendach (modern Dutch Maandag), Old High German mānetag (modern German Montag), and Old Icelandic mānadagr (Swedish måndag, Danish, and Norwegian manadag), all translations of Latin lūnae diēs day of the moon.

money n. About 1250 moonay; later mone (about 1300), and moneie (before 1325); borrowed from Old French moneie, from Latin monēta mint, coinage, from Monēta a cult title of the goddess Juno in whose temple at Rome money was coined; hence any place used as a mint. —moneyed adj. 1457 monyed; formed from the past participle of earlier monien to supply with money (1450), from moneie money. —monies n. pl. About 1300 mones coins. The meaning of sums of money is first recorded in 1625.

monger n. Before 1200 mangare; later mongere (1274); developed from Old English (before 975) mangere; borrowed from Latin mangō (genitive mangōnis) trader, dealer, from Greek mángōn* related to márganon contrivance, means of enchanting; for suffix see -ER¹. The combining form -monger (as in fishmonger, newsmonger) is found in Middle English, as early as 1193 (haymonger). —v. 1928, in the figurative sense of spread (gossip or other evil); from the noun.

mongoose n. 1698, borrowed from an Indic language (compare Marathi mangūs mongoose), apparently ultimately from Dravidian (compare Telugu mangisu mongoose, Kanarese mungisi).

mongrel n. About 1460, heraldic term for a kind of dog, probably one of mixed breed, developed from earlier mong mixture (probably before 1200), and mange (about 1175); developed from Old English (about 700) gemang, gemong mingling; for suffix compare PICKEREL. —adj. 1576, from the noun.

monition n. About 1400 monicioun warning, borrowed from Old French monition, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin monitiōnem (nominative monitiō) warning, reminding, from monēre to warn; see MONITOR; for suffix see -TION.

monitor n. 1546, borrowing of Latin monitor one who reminds, admonishes, or checks, from monēre admonish, warn, advise, related to memini I remember, I am mindful of, and mēns MIND; for suffix see -OR². —v. 1818, to guide; from the noun. —monitory adj. 1586 monitorie, developed from earlier noun monytorie letter of admonition (1437); borrowed from Medieval Latin monitoria admonition, from Latin mon- itōrius admonishing, from monēre admonish; for suffix see -ORY.

monk n. Before 1121 munc; later munk (probably before 1220), and monk (before 1300); developed from Old English munuc (before 899); borrowed from Late Latin monachus monk; originally, a religious hermit, from Late Greek monachós monk, from Greek, adj., individual or solitary, from mónos alone, single.

monkey n. 1530, possibly borrowed from Middle Low German Moneke (a term conceivably introduced by itinerant German entertainers), perhaps developed as an allusion to Moneke, son of Martin the Ape in the medieval beast epic Reynard the Fox; or perhaps borrowed directly from Italian monna or Spanish mona monkey + -key, a probable diminutive form. —v. 1859, to mimic; later, to fool, play (1881); from the noun.

mono- a combining form meaning one, sole, single, occurring in words adopted from existing Greek compounds, such as monogram, monologue, monopoly; also used to form words in English, mostly of a technical or scientific character, such as monosyllable, monopetalous, and often combined (instead of uni-) with a Latin element, as in monocellular. Borrowed from Greek mono-, from mónos single, alone.

monochrome n. 1662, borrowed from Medieval Latin monochroma, from Greek monóchrōmos of a single color (mono- single + chrōma, genitive chrōmatos, color, complexion, skin). —adj. 1849, from the noun.

monocle n. 1886, borrowing of French monocle, learned borrowing from Late Latin monoculus one-eyed (mono- one, single, from Greek + oculus EYE).

monogamy n. 1612, borrowed from French monogamie, learned borrowing from Late Latin monogamia, from Greek monogamíā, from monógamos marrying only once (mono- single, one + gámos marriage); for suffix see -GAMY.

monogram n. 1696, borrowed through French monogramme, or directly from Late Latin monogramma, from Late Greek monógrammon a character of several letters in one design, from neuter of monógrammos, adj., consisting of a single letter (mono- one, single + grámma letter, something written).

monograph n. 1821, formed from English mono- single + graph something written, replacing monography (1773), formed from English mono- + -graphy.

monolith n. 1848, borrowed from French monolithe, learned borrowing from Latin monolithus, adj., consisting of a single stone, from Greek monólithos (mono- single + lithos stone). The sense of a rigid or unyielding political state, party, or organization, is first recorded in 1940, perhaps suggested by the earlier use of this sense in monolithic. —monolithic adj. 1825, consisting of a monolith, probably formed in English from French monolithe + English -ic. The sense of like a monolith, massive, and unyielding, is first recorded in 1920.

monologue n. 1668, a dramatic soliloquy; borrowing of French monologue, from Late Greek monólogos speaking alone (mono- alone, single + lógos speech, word). The general sense of a long speech or harangue, is first recorded in 1859.

monomer n. 1914, formed from English mono- one, single + suffixal -mer, as in polymer.

monomial n. 1706, formed from English mon- single + -omial, abstracted by a false division of binomial as if from bin- (as in binary, binocular, and Latin binī two at a time) + -omial. —adj. 1801, from the noun.

mononucleosis n. 1920, formed in English from mononuclear having one nucleus (1886, mono- one + nuclear) + New Latin -osis abnormal condition.

monoplane n. 1907, formed from English mono- single + (aero)plane.

monopoly n. 1534, borrowed from Latin monopólium, from Greek monopólion right of exclusive sale (mono- single + pólein to sell). —monopolistic adj. 1883, formed from English monopolist (1601) + -ic. —monopolize v. 1611, formed from English monopoly + -ize.

monotheism n. 1660, formed from English mono- single + the- god (variant of theo-) + -ism. —monotheist n. 1680, derived from English monotheism, on the pattern of such pairs as atheism, atheist. —monotheistic adj. (1846) monotony n. 1706, borrowed, perhaps through French monotonie (1671), from Greek monotonía, from monótonos monotonous, of one tone (mono- one + tónos TONE). —monotone n. 1644, borrowed from Greek monótonos monotonous. —monotonous adj. 1778, borrowed from Greek monótonos; for suffix see -OUS.

monoxide n. 1869, formed from English mon- one + oxide.

Monseigneur or monseigneur n. 1610, French title of honor equivalent to my lord (mon my + seigneur lord); see SENIOR.

Monsignor or monsignor n. 1670, title given to certain dignitaries in the Roman Catholic Church; borrowed from Italian monsignore, formed after French monseigneur MONSEIGNEUR with Italian signore lord.

monsoon n. 1584, borrowed through early modern Dutch monsoen, from Portuguese monção, from Arabic mawsim appropriate season (for a voyage, pilgrimage, etc.), from wasama he marked.

monster n. Before 1325 monstre abnormal or malformed animal; borrowed from Old French monstre, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin mōstrum monster, monstrosity, omen, portent, sign; perhaps related (as from earlier monistrom*) to monēre to warn. Related to DEMONSTRATE. —monstrosity n. 1402 monstruosité; later monstrosity (1555); borrowed, probably from Middle French monstruosité, from Medieval Latin monstruositas, from Latin mōnstruōsus monstrous; for suffix see -ITY. —monstrous adj. About 1380 monstruous unnatural, hideous; later monstrous (probably before 1430); borrowed from Old French monstruos, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin mōnstruōsus (in Late Latin mōstrōsus), from mōnstrum; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of huge, enormous, is first recorded in 1500–20, and that of outrageously wrong or absurd, in 1573–80.

montage n. 1929, borrowing of French montage a mounting, from Old French monter to go up, MOUNT¹.

month n. Before 1110 monthe, also moneth (probably before 1200 through the 1600's); developed from Old English (probably about 750) mōnath; mōnath cognate with Old Frisian mōnath month, Old Saxon mānoth, Middle Dutch mānet modern Dutch maand), Old High German mānōd (modern German Monat), Old Icelandic mānadr (Swedish månad, Norwegian and Danish måned), and Gothic mēnōths; from Proto-Germanic mēnōth-* (related to mēnōn-moon, developing out of the calculation of a month's duration from full moon to full moon). —monthly adv. (1533–34), adj. (1572); formed from English month + *-ly*¹ (adv.) and *-ly*² (adj.).

monument n. About 1280, tomb or memorial; borrowed, perhaps through Old French monument, and directly from Latin monumentum monument, something that reminds, from monēre to remind, warn; for suffix see -MENT. —monumental adj. 1604, formed from English monument + *-al*¹.

mooch v. 1440 mychyn to pilfer, steal; later mowchen (before 1460); borrowed from Old French muchier, mucier to hide, conceal, of uncertain origin. It is also possible that mooch developed from Middle English muchen to hoard, be stingy (1303); probably originally, keep coins in one's nightcap, from mucche nightcap; borrowed from Middle Dutch muste cap or nightcap; ultimately from Medieval Latin almucia, of uncertain origin.

The meaning of sponge off others is first recorded in 1857, probably from the sense of loaf, sneak (1851).

mood¹ n. state of mind or feeling. Probably about 1150 mōd mind, heart as governing thoughts; later mood (about 1250); developed from Old English mōd mind, heart, spirit, courage (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon mōd mind or thought, Middle Dutch moet mood or emotion (modern Dutch moed courage or spirit), Old High German muot (modern German Mut), Old Icelandic mōðr anger or grief (Swedish and Danish mod, Norwegian mot courage), and Gothic mōths anger or courage from Proto-Germanic mōdā-*. —moody adj. Before 1200 modi brave, proud, high-spirited; developed from Old English mōdig (about 725, in Beowulf), from mōd spirit, courage + -ig *-y*¹. The meaning of often having gloomy moods is first recorded in 1593.

mood² n. form of a verb 1573, alteration (influenced by *mood*¹) of Middle English mode form of a verb (about 1450); borrowed from Old French mode, and directly from Latin modus; see MODE¹ manner.

moon n. Before 1135 mone; later moone (about 1380); developed from Old English mōna (before 725); cognate with Old Frisian mōna moon, Old Saxon māno, Middle Dutch māne moor¹ v. put or keep (a ship, etc.) in place. Probably before 1200 moren to take root; later, to fix or fasten (about 1380), probably related to Old English mārels mooring rope, and possibly māeran* to moor, which would correspond with Middle Dutch māren, mēren to tie up, moor (modern Dutch meren), Old High German marawan to join, Low German vermoren to moor, and Old Frisian mere strap. —mooring n. 1420 moring process of making a ship secure, from gerund of moren to moor. —moorings n. pl. 1774, place where a ship is moored.

(modern Dutch maan), Old High German māno (modern German Mond), Old Icelandic māni (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian måne), and Gothic mena, from Proto-Germanic mēnōn*. —v. 1601, expose to moonlight; later, pass (time) idly (1836), and move listlessly (1848); from the noun. —moonbeam n. (1590) —moonlight n. About 1300 Mone lith; later as a surname Monelight (1337); formed from mone moon + lith light. —v. 1957, back formation from moonlighter one who holds a second job, especially at night (1954), or moonlighting practice of a moonlighter (1955). —moonshine n. 1500, moonlight; later, smuggled or illicit alcoholic liquor (1785); and illicitly distilled whiskey (1875).

moor² n. open land. 1150 mor-, in compound morsecge sedge from a marsh; later mor wasteland or marshland (probably before 1200); developed from Old English mōr (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon moer swamp, Middle Low German mōr (modern German Moos), Middle Dutch moer, Old High German muor swamp or sea, from Proto-Germanic mōra-*. Related to MERE² lake.

Moor n. Before 1393 More, borrowed from Old French More; later Maure, or directly from Medieval Latin Mōrus, from Latin Maurus, from Greek Μαῦρος inhabitant of Mauritania, an ancient country in North Africa.

From the Middle Ages through the 1600's, Moors were commonly supposed to be black or very dark in color, and hence the word is often found as a substitute for "Negro."

moose n. 1613, borrowed probably from Algonquian (compare Narragansett moos, apparently from moosu he strips off, in reference to the habit of stripping bark as food).

moot n. Before 1121 mot; developed from Old English (probably about 750) gemōt meeting (to discuss judicial and political affairs); from Proto-Germanic (za-)mōtan*, cognate with Old Saxon and Old Icelandic mōt meeting, Old High German muoz; see MEET¹, v. The modern spelling with -oo- is found before 1475. The meaning of a discussion of a hypothetical case by law students is first recorded in 1531. —adj. Before 1650 moot point, from earlier attributive use of the noun, as in moot case hypothetical case used in a law-student discussion (1577–87).

mop n. 1496 mappe bundle of yarn, cloth, or wool for cleaning or spreading pitch on a ship's planking; borrowed through dialectal French (Walloon) mappe napkin, or directly from Latin mappa napkin; see MAP. The spelling mop is first recorded in 1665; however, if it is implied in moppet rag doll, it is found in moppe (1440). —v. 1709 mop up; from the noun.

mope v. 1568, implied in moping wandering aimlessly; later, be sad or spiritless (about 1590); perhaps of imitative origin, as found in Low German mopen to sulk, and Dutch moppen to grumble or grouse.

moped n. 1956, borrowing of Swedish moped, acronym formed from mo(tor) + ped(al).

moppet n. 1601, formed from Middle English moppe little child, baby, doll (1440) + -et, diminutive suffix. Middle English moppe also meaning simpleton or fool (about 1330), is perhaps cognate with Low German mop, mops simpleton.

moraine n. 1789, borrowing of French moraine, from dialectal French (Savoy) morēna mound of earth, from Provençal morre snout, muzzle, from Vulgar Latin murrum* round object, of uncertain origin.

moral adj. About 1340, borrowed from Old French moral, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin mōrālis of morals or manners, from mōs (genitive mōris) one's disposition, in plural mōrēs customs, manners, morals; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. Before 1500, from the adjective. The plural morals is first recorded about 1613. —moralistic adj. 1865; formed from English moralist + -ic. —moralize v. About 1375 moralizee instruction in morals; borrowed from Old French moralité, and from Late Latin mōrālītātē (nominative mōrālītās) manner, character, from Latin mōrālis. —moralize v. Probably before 1400 moralizen; borrowed from Old French moraliser, from moral moral, and directly from Medieval Latin moralizare, from Latin mōrālis; for suffix see -IZE.

morale n. 1752, moral principles or practice; borrowed from French morale morality or good conduct, from feminine of Old French moral MORAL.

The meaning in regard to confidence (especially of military troops), is first recorded in 1831, and derived from French morale morality, by confusion with moral mental or moral condition, from Old French moral, adj.

morass n. 1655, reborrowing from Dutch moeras marsh or fen, alteration (influenced by Middle Dutch moer MOOR²) of Middle Dutch maras, marasch, from Old French marais marsh, and Old Provençal maresc, from Frankish; possibly representing West Germanic marisk-, from Proto-Germanic mariskaz like a lake, like the sea, from mari* sea. West Germanic marisk-* is the form from which also developed Medieval Latin mariscus, and now obsolete English marish marsh.

Modern English morass replaced earlier mareis marshland, swamp (recorded before 1338, and earlier as a proper name, 1130, 1189); borrowed from Old French marais, mareis.

moratorium n. 1875, legal authorization to delay payments, New Latin moratorium, from neuter of Late Latin mōrātōrius tending to delay, from Latin mōrārī to delay, from mora pause, delay; originally, a standing there thinking.

morbid adj. 1656, of disease, diseased; borrowed through French morbid, or directly from Latin morbidus, from morbus disease. —morbidity n. 1721, formed from English morbid + -ity.

mordant adj. 1474 mordent, borrowed from Middle French mordant, present participle of mordre to bite, from Vulgar Latin mordere*, from Latin mordēre to bite or sting.

more adj. About 1125 mare; later more (before 1250); developed from Old English (before 725) māra greater or more, used as the comparative of micel great, MUCH, and related to mā more (adv. and adj.).

Old English māra and mā (originally adverbs) are cognate with Old Frisian māra more, adj. and mā, mē more, adv.; Old Saxon mēro, adj. and mēr, adv.; Middle Dutch mēre, adj. and mee, adv. (modern Dutch meer); Old High German mēro, adj. and mēr, adv. (modern German mehr); Old Icelandic meiri, adj. and meir, adv. (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish mer); and Gothic maiza, adj. and mais, adv. —the adjective from Proto-Germanic maizōn*, —the adverb from mais*. —adv. Before 1129 mare; later more (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 1000) māre, from neuter of māra, adj. —n. 1128 mare; later more (about 1250); developed from late Old English (before 1100) māre, from neuter of māra, adj.

mores n. pl. 1907, borrowing of Latin mōrēs customs, manners, morals; see MORAL.

morganatic adj. 1727–41, borrowed through French morganatique, or directly from New Latin morganaticus of the morning, from the Medieval Latin phrase matrimonium ad morganaticam, literally, marriage of the morning, in which the word morganaticam probably derives from Old High German morgangeba* (found in morganegiba), in Middle High German morgengābe morning gift (corresponding to Old English morgengifu morning gift). The gift is traditionally the wife's only share in her husband's possessions.

morgue n. 1821, borrowed from French Morgue, building in Paris where bodies were exposed for identification; originally, place where new prisoners were viewed for establishing their identification among keepers (probably French morgue haughtiness; originally, a sad expression, solemn look, from Old French morguer look at solemnly, from Vulgar Latin murricāre* to make a face, pout, from murrum* muzzle, snout).

moribund adj. 1721, borrowed from French moribund, learned borrowing from Latin moribundus dying, subject to death, from morī to die; see MURDER.

Mormon n. 1830, in allusion to Mormon, prophet and author of the Book of Mormon, last leader of the Nephites (one of certain ancient peoples in America).

morn n. About 1175 maregen morning; later morewen, morn (about 1250); developed from Old English margen, dative mārne (in Mercian, before 830); earlier morgen, dative morgne (about 725, in Beowulf).

The Old English forms margen (from Proto-Germanic marjanaz*), and morgen (Proto-Germanic murjanaz*) are cognate with Old Frisian morgen, mergen (Proto-Germanic marjanaz*) morning, Old Saxon morgan, Middle Dutch morgen (modern Dutch morgen), Old High German morgan (modern German Morgen), Old Icelandic morginn, morgunn (Swedish morgon, Norwegian and Danish morgen).

morning n. About 1250 morning, morewening; later morning (about 1330); formed from Middle English morn, morewen MORN + *-ing*¹; on the same pattern as evening. —adj. 1535, from the noun.

morocco n. 1727–41, in allusion to Morocco, country in northwestern Africa, where it was first made.

moron n. 1910, originally a technical term; borrowing of Greek (Attic) mōron, neuter of mōros, Greek mōros foolish or dull. —moronic adj. 1926, formed from moron + -ic.

morose adj. 1565, borrowed from Latin mōrosus morose, peevish, fastidious, from mōs (genitive mōris) habit or custom; see MORAL; for suffix see *-ose*¹.

morpheme n. 1925, borrowing of French morphème, from Greek morphē form; patterned on French phonème phoneme.

morphine n. 1828, borrowing of French morphine or German Morphin, in allusion to Latin Morpheus the Roman god of dreams; so called from the drug's sleep-inducing properties; for suffix see *-ine*². Morphine replaced the earlier New Latin morphia (1818), also formed from Latin Morpheus.

morphology n. 1830, borrowed from German Morphologie, formed from Greek morphē form + German -logie -logy.

morris dance 1458 moreys daunce; earlier morys Moorish (1434); borrowed from Old French morris, earlier moreis MOOR.

morrow n. About 1250 morewe; later morwe (about 1300); shortened variant of morewen morrow, MORN.

morsel n. About 1280, borrowing of Old French morsel small bite, diminutive of mors a bite, from Latin morsus (genitive morsus) biting or bite, from mordere to bite.

mortal adj. About 1370, causing death, deadly; also, grievous; later, subject to death (about 1380); borrowed from Old French mortal, mortel destined to die, and directly from Latin mortalis subject to death, from mors (genitive mortis) death; for suffix see *-al*¹. —n. 1526, mortal thing or substance; from the adjective. —mortality n. About 1400 mortalite, borrowed from Old French mortalité, learned borrowing from Latin mortalitatem (nominative mortalitās) state of being mortal, from mortalis mortal; for suffix see -ity.

mortar¹ n. mixture of cement. About 1250 morter cement; later mortar (1367); borrowed from Old French mortier, from Latin mortarium bowl for mixing or pounding. —mortar-board n. 1854, academic cap, resembling a square mason's board for carrying mortar, formerly known as mortar cap (1686, and morter 1604), probably developed from the French mortier a cap once worn by high French officials.

mortar² n. bowl for pounding. About 1150 morter; later mortar (1381); in part developed from Old English (about 1000) moretere, and in part borrowed through Old French mortier; both forms from Latin mortarium bowl for mixing or pounding, and the material prepared in it.

mortar³ n. short cannon. 1558, found in morter piece; borrowed from Middle French mortier short cannon, from Old French, bowl for mixing or pounding, from Latin mortarium bowl for mixing or pounding.

mortgage n. Before 1393 morgage a pledge, also, a pledge of property (about 1400); borrowed from Old French morgage and mort gaige, literally, dead pledge (mort dead + gaige pledge; so called because the debt becomes void or "dead" when the pledge is redeemed). Old French mort derived from Vulgar Latin mortus* dead, from Latin mortuus, past participle of mori to die. —v. 1530, from the noun. The t was introduced in English by writers aware of the Latin origin.

mortician n. 1895, American English; formed from mort(uary) + -ician (as in physician).

mortify v. Before 1382 mortefien to kill; later mortifien to subdue (bodily desires) by abstinence; borrowed from Old French mortifier from Late Latin mortificāre cause death, from mortificus producing death (Latin mors, genitive mortis, death + the root of facere to make). The meaning of humiliate, is implied in mortification (1645). —mortification n. About 1390 mortificacioun suppression of bodily desires; borrowed from Old French mortification, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin mortificatiōnem (nominative mortificatiō) a killing, destruction, from mortificāre to kill; for suffix see -ation. The meaning of humiliation is first recorded in 1645.

mortise n. About 1390 morteys; later mortaise (before 1450); borrowed from Old French mortaise, possibly from Arabic murtazz fastened, past participle of razza cut a mortise in. —v. Before 1450 morteysen; from the noun.

mortuary n. Probably 1383 mortuarie gift to a parish priest from a deceased parishioner; earlier, in a Latin context (1330); borrowed through Anglo-French mortuarie, Old French mortuaire, and directly from Medieval Latin mortuarium, from neuter of mortuarius pertaining to the dead, from Latin mortuus, past participle of mori to die; for suffix see -ary. The place where bodies are kept until burial is first recorded in 1865.

mosaic n. Probably before 1400 musycke process of making a mosaic; borrowed from Old French mosaïque, mosaïque mosaic work, from Italian mosaico, mosaico, from Medieval Latin mosaicum mosaic work, work of the Muses, neuter of mosaicus of the Muses, from Latin Musa MUSE; so called from the medieval mosaics dedicated to the Muses. Late Greek mouseion, and Late Latin mūsvum mosaic work, influenced formation of Medieval Latin mosaicum.

Mosaic adj. 1662, of Moses or the laws attributed to him in the Bible; borrowed, perhaps through French Mosaïque (1542), or directly from New Latin Mosaicus, from Latin Mōsēs Moses, from Greek Mōsēs; for suffix see -ic.

mosey v. 1829, of uncertain origin (perhaps an alteration abstracted from dialectal English mose about go about in a dull, stupid manner).

mosque n. 1717, alteration of earlier muskee, moskee, borrowed from Middle French mosquée, from Italian moschea, moscheta, from Spanish mezquita, from masjid temple, a transliteration from Arabic, from sajada he worshiped. The Middle English moseak and moseache (probably before 1425), are of obscure development.

mosquito n. About 1583, borrowed from Spanish mosquito little gnat, diminutive of mosca fly, from Latin musca fly.

moss n. Probably about 1125 mose; later mosse (1350–51); in part developed from Old English (975) mos bog, related to mēos moss; and in part, borrowed from: 1) a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic mosi moss, bog) and 2) Medieval Latin mossa moss, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German mos moss, bog). Old English mos from Proto-Germanic musan* is cognate with Middle Low German mos moss, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch mos, Old High German mios, mos moss (modern German Moos moss), and Old Icelandic mosi moss, bog (Danish and Norwegian mose, Swedish mossa).

most adj. Probably about 1175 mest; later moste, most (before 1250); developed from Old English (about 950) māst greatest number, amount, or extent; earlier mæst (before 725); cognate with Old Frisian māst most, Old Saxon mēst, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch meest, Old High German and modern German meist, Old Icelandic mestr (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish mest), and Gothic maists; from Proto-Germanic mais-taz*, corresponding to a superlative form derived from the Germanic root that is the source of Old English mā, māra MORE. —adv. Probably about 1200 mest; later most (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 893) māst, mæst; from the adjective.

—most a suffix forming superlatives of adjectives and adverbs, and meaning greatest in amount, degree, or number, as in foremost, inmost, topmost. Middle English, alteration (influenced by most) of -mest; found in Old English -mest, a so-called double superlative formed from -mo, -ma + -est superlative suffixes.

mote n. About 1300 mote, mot speck; developed from Old English (about 1000) mot; cognate with Middle Dutch mot sand or dust (modern Dutch mot peat dust), and Frisian mot, of unknown origin.

motel n. 1925, blend of motor and hotel.

moth n. About 1225 mohthe; later mothe (1373); developed from Old English (about 1000 moththe, and mohthe about 950); perhaps cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch motte, mutte moth (modern Dutch mot), Middle High German motte (modern German Motte), and Old Icelandic motti; or perhaps related to Old English matha MAGGOT.

mother¹ n. female parent. About 1125 moder; later mother (probably before 1425); developed from Old English (before 725) mōdor; cognate with Old Frisian mōder mother, Old Saxon mōdar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch moeder, Old High German muoter (modern German Mutter), and Old Icelandic mōðhir (Swedish, Danish, Norwegian moder, mor), from Proto-Germanic mōðær*.

As with father, the spelling -ther (≠FHER) for Middle English -der dates from the beginning of the 1500's, though the pronunciation with (ʦH) probably existed earlier. —adj. Probably about 1200 moder; from the noun. —v. 1542, be the mother of; from the noun. The meaning of take care of is first recorded in 1863. —motherly adj. About 1220 moderliche, Old English (about 1000) mōdorlic; adv., moderly, about 1433; from the adjective.

mother² n. sticky substance found in vinegar. 1538, dregs or scum; probably a special use of *MOTHER*¹, found in parallel French phrase mère de vinaigre and the German Essigmutter. It is also possible that this word was influenced by, if not borrowed from, Middle Dutch modder mud or mire; cognate with Middle Low German modder mold, decay, sludge, and modde thick mud (in ditches); see MUD.

motif n. 1848, borrowing of French motif dominant idea, theme, motive, from Old French, see MOTIVE.

motile adj. 1864, back formation from motility. —motility n. 1835–36, borrowed from French motilité capability of moving (1827), from Latin mōt- (past participle stem of movēre MOVE) + -ilitē, as in mobilité mobility.

motion n. About 1385 mocioun suggestion, proposal; later, process of moving (before 1398); borrowed from Old French motion, learned borrowing from Latin mōtiōnem (nominative mōtiō) a moving, an emotion, from movēre to MOVE; for suffix see -TION. —v. 1476, to request, petition, propose; from the noun. The meaning of make a movement (as in motion for silence) is first recorded in 1747.

motivate v. 1863, formed from English motive, n. + *-ate*¹, perhaps after French motiver; compare also German motivieren. —motivation n. 1873, formed from English motivate + -ion.

motive n. Before 1376 motif something moved or brought forward as an argument or assertion; later, reason for acting (before 1439); and motive (before 1443); borrowed from Old French motif, n., from motif (feminine motive), adj., moving, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin motivus moving, impelling, from Latin mōtus, past participle of movēre to MOVE. —adj. 1392 motif, motive; borrowed from Old French motif, adj., and directly from Medieval Latin motivus, adj.

motley adj. About 1380 motley variegated; possibly borrowed from Anglo-French motteley, probably from Old English mot speck, MOTE. —n. 1371 motle cloth of more than one color; later motley (1394); from the same source as the adjective.

motor n. 1447 motour controller or prime mover, in reference to God; borrowed from Latin mōtor mover, from movēre to MOVE; for suffix see *-OR*². The meaning of an agent or force that produces mechanical motion is first recorded in 1664, and that of a machine that supplies motive power in 1856. —adj. 1824, from the noun. —v. 1896, take in an automobile; 1897, travel by automobile; from the noun.

mottle v. 1676, implied in mottled, adj.; probably back formation from motley, adj., but found in earlier motleyd, adj., clothed in motley. —n. 1676, probably back formation from motley, n.

motto n. 1589, legend attached to a heraldic design; borrowed from Italian motto a saying or motto, from Late Latin mutum grunt or word, from Latin mutire to MUTTER.

mound v. 1515, to fence in; later, to enclose with an embankment (1600, probably from the noun); of uncertain origin. The meaning of heap up is first recorded in 1859. —n. 1551, fence or hedge; probably from the verb. The sense of an embankment was probably influenced by association with MOUNT² and from that meaning developed the sense of a heap of earth or stones (1726).

mound¹ v. ascend. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French monter, munter, from Vulgar Latin montāre*, from Latin mōns (genitive montis) mountain, MOUNT². The meaning of to set or place in position is first recorded in 1539. —n. 1739, something on which a thing is mounted, a support; later, a horse for riding (1856); from the verb. An obsolete meaning amount (about 1390) may be borrowed from Old French munt.

mound² n. mountain. Before 1300 mount; in part borrowed through Anglo-French mount, Old French mont mountain; and in part developed from Old English (probably about 750 munt mountain); both Old French and Old English borrowed from Latin mōns (genitive montis) mountain.

mountain n. Probably before 1200 montaine, mountayne; borrowed from Old French montaigne mountain, from Vulgar Latin montānea* mountain or mountain region, from feminine of montāneus* of a mountain, mountainous, from Latin montānus mountainous, from mōns (genitive montis) mountain, MOUNT²; for suffix see -AN. —adj. 1373, from the noun. —mountaineer n. 1610, formed from English mountain + -er. —mountainous adj. About 1384, formed from mounteyne mountain + -ous; perhaps by influence of Old French montagneux.

mountebank n. 1577, peddler of quack medicine; traditionally thought of as standing on a wagon or platform to appeal to his audience; borrowed from Italian montambanco, montimbanco, contracted form of monta in banco mountebank; literally, mount on bench (monta, imperative of montare to mount and banco, variant of banca bench). The sense of charlatan, quack is first recorded in 1589.

mourn v. Probably before 1200 mornen, murnen; later mournen (about 1250), developed from Old English (before 725) murnan to mourn; also, be anxious, be careful; cognate with Old Saxon mornian to mourn, Old High German mornēn, Old Icelandic morna, and Gothic mairnan, from Proto-Germanic murnanan*. —mourner n. About 1395 mournere; formed from mournen mourn + -er *-er*¹. —mournful adj. Probably before 1450, formed from morne, n., mourning, grief (before 1300) + -ful -ful.

mouse n. About 1325 mous; earlier, in surname Mous (about 1280), and Muse (1154–63); developed from Old English (before 700) mūs; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon mūs mouse, Middle Dutch muus (modern Dutch muís), Old High German mūs (modern German Maus), and Old Icelandic mūs

(Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian mus), from Proto-Germanic mūs*. See also MUSCLE. The plural mice is found in Middle English myse (1373), earlier myys (about 1303); developed from the Old English plural (before 900) mȳs (compare Old High German mūsi, miuse, Old Icelandic mýss). —v. Probably about 1150 musen; later mowsyn (1440); from the noun. —mousetrap n. (about 1475) —mousy adj. (1812) mousse n. 1892, borrowing of French mousse, from Old French, froth, scum, from Late Latin mulsa mead, from Latin mulsum honey wine, mead, from neuter of mulsus mixed with honey, related to mel honey. The meaning of a preparation for the hair is first recorded in the 1970's.

moustache n. See MUSTACHE.

mouth n. About 1250 mouth; developed from Old English mūth (before 830); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon mūth mouth, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch mond, Old High German mund (modern German Mund), Old Icelandic mudhr, munnr (Swedish mun, Danish mund, Norwegian munn), and Gothic munths, from Proto-Germanic munthaz*. —v. Before 1325, mouthen; later mouthen (about 1378); from the noun.

move v. About 1275 moven; borrowed through Anglo-French movir, Old French moveir, moivre, from Latin movēre move. —n. 1656, the right or the time to move in a game; from the verb. The meaning of an act of moving is first recorded in 1827. —movable or moveable adj. About 1380 moveable causing motion; also, capable of movement (before 1382); formed from moven move + -able. —movement n. About 1380 moevement, borrowed from Old French movement, mouvement, from moveir to move; and formed from Middle English meven, v. + -ment.

movie n. 1912 (but referred to in the reports of social workers as early as 1908), shortened and altered form of moving picture (1896); for suffix see -IE. —adj. 1913 movie actor, attributive use of the noun.

mow¹ v. cut down. Probably about 1150 mowen cut down (grass); later, destroy at a sweep (before 1400); developed from Old English māwan (before 899); cognate with Middle Low German meien, meigen to mow, Middle Dutch maeyen (modern Dutch maaien), and Old High German māen (modern German māhen), from Proto-Germanic māwanan* (or māwanan*). —mower n. Before 1325 mouwer, formed from mouen + *-er*¹; but found earlier as a surname Mawere, formed from Old English māwan.

mow² n. place where hay is stored. Probably before 1300, stack of hay or grain; developed from Old English (about 1000) mūga, mūwa a heap; earlier mūha (before 800), from Proto-Germanic mūzōn*, and cognate with Old Icelandic mūgi, mūgr crowd or heap (dialectal Norwegian muge heap or pile, dialectal Swedish moa to crowd together), Middle High German moche lump.

moxie n. 1930, courage, nerve, energy, initiative, in allusion to earlier Moxie, a trademark for a bitter-tasting nonalcoholic drink that originated as a patent medicine about 1876, advertised as a drink "that will build up your nerve."

Mr. pl. Messrs. 1447–48, abbreviated form of maister master. The plural is a borrowing and abbreviated form of French messieurs, plural of monsieur.

Mrs. pl. Mmes. 1615, abbreviated form of mistress. The plural is a borrowing and abbreviated form of French mesdames, plural of madame.

Ms. pl. Mses. or Ms.'s 1949, considered a blend of Miss and Mrs.

much adj. Probably before 1200 muchē; also miche (about 1200), shortened forms of muchel, michel much; developed from Old English (before 725) micel great in amount or extent; cognate with Old Saxon mikil great or large, Middle Low German michel, Old High German mihhil, Old Icelandic mikill (Swedish mycken, Danish meget, Norwegian my(kj)e), and Gothic mikils, from Proto-Germanic mekilaz*. —adv. Probably about 1200 muchē; later miche (before 1382), from muchel, adj. —n. Probably before 1200 muchē; later miche (before 1382), from muchel, adj.

mucilage n. 1392 mussillage gummy substance; also muscillage (before 1400); borrowed from Medieval Latin musculago, micilago, from Late Latin mūcillāgō musty or moldy juice, from Latin mūcēre be moldy or musty, from mūcus MUCUS. The sense of an adhesive is first recorded in 1859. —mucilaginous adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin musculaginosus, from Late Latin mūcillāgīnōsus, from mūcillāgō mucilage; for suffix see -OUS.

muck n. About 1250 muc filth, manure; later muk (probably before 1325); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic myki, mykr cow dung). —v. About 1375 (Scottish) mukken to remove manure, clean out; from muk, n. The sense of make dirty, is first recorded in 1832. The idiom muck about (or around) is first recorded in 1856.

muckluck or mukluk n. 1868, sealskin; later, sealskin boot (1898); borrowed from Eskimo maklak large seal, sealskin boot. Since the 1960's the word has acquired the meaning of canvas boots and also slipper socks.

muckraker n. 1906, formed from muckrake + *-er*¹. Muckrake a person who seeks to find scandal (1872) is an allusion to use in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, 1684, in which a man pursues worldly gain by raking filth. Theodore Roosevelt used Bunyan's metaphor in a speech in 1906, also possibly conscious of the meaning of muckrake, to describe persons who seek to expose corruption. —muckrake v. 1910, back formation from muckraker.

mucus n. 1661, replacing earlier musilage, mussillage (1392), and borrowed from Latin mūcus, mucosus slime, mucus, mold, related to ēmungere sneeze out, blow one's nose, and mūcēre be moldy or musty. —mucous adj. 1646, replacing musilaginous; borrowed from Latin mūcōsus slimy, moldy, from mūcus mucus; for suffix see -OUS.

mud n. 1340 mudde, in the surname Muddepenyng; probably borrowed from Middle Low German mudde and Middle Dutch modde thick mud; cognate with Middle High German mot bog, peat, Swedish modd mud, mire, from Proto-Germanic muð-*. —muddy adj. 1330 mody, in the place name Modyputte muddy pit; formed from English mud + *-y*¹. The sense of obscure, vague, is first recorded in 1611.

muddle v. 1596, to mottle or obscure colors, stir up sediment; perhaps a frequentative form of MUD or possibly borrowed from early modern Dutch moddelen to make water muddy, a frequentative form of modden make muddy, from modde mud. The sense of make confused is first recorded in 1687. —n. 1818, from the verb.

muff¹ n. covering for keeping both hands warm. 1599, borrowed from Dutch mof a muff, from French moufle mitten, from Old French moufle thick glove, from Medieval Latin muffula a muff; of uncertain origin.

muff² v. to bungle. 1841 (implied in muffling), from earlier muff awkward person (1837), perhaps from *muff*¹, in the sense of "one who keeps his hands in a muff."

muffin n. 1703, possibly borrowed from Low German muffen, plural of muffe small cake, from Middle Low German.

muffle v. Probably before 1425 muffelen to conceal; perhaps borrowed from Middle French mofler to stuff, from Old French mofle, moufle thick glove, MUFF¹ (compare Old French enmoufle wrapped up). The meaning of wrap in something to soften the sound is first recorded in 1761. —n. 1570, thing that muffles; from the verb. The meaning of a muffled sound is first recorded in 1886. —muffler n. 1535–36, a covering for the face and neck; formed from English muffle, v. + *-er*¹. The meaning of something to deaden sound is first recorded in 1856 and specifically that of an automobile muffler in 1895.

mufti¹ n. Muslim judge. 1586 muphtie official head of the state religion in Turkey; also, Muslim official who assists a judge; borrowed from Arabic as a transliteration mufti judge, active participle of afā to give, conjugated form of fatā he gave a (legal) decision.

mufti² n. ordinary clothes, not a uniform. 1816, perhaps a special use of *mufti*¹, in reference to the informal clothing worn by off-duty officials, as suggested by the costume formerly traditional to the stage role of a mufti, consisting of dressing gown, cap, and slippers.

mug n. 1570, bowl, pot, jug; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish mugg mug, jug, Norwegian mulge pitcher). The sense of a person's face is first recorded in 1708, possibly alluding to drinking mugs in the shape of a grotesque human face. —v. 1818, to strike the face; from the noun sense of face. The meaning of attack, is first recorded in 1846, and that of attack to rob, in 1864. The sense of exaggerate one's facial expressions is found in 1855. —mugger n. 1865, formed from English mug to attack and rob (1864) + *-er*¹.

muggy adj. 1731, probably developed from mugen to drizzle (probably about 1390); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian mugg drizzle, mildew, mold, Old Icelandic mugga drizzle, mist, related to njúkr soft); for suffix see -Y¹.

mugwump n. 1832, an important person; borrowed from Algonquian (Natick) transcribed as mugquomp great man (1633); a Republican who refused to support the party candidate, James G. Blaine, for President; hence, a self-important person who stays aloof from party politics.

mulatto n. 1595, borrowed from Spanish and Portuguese mulato, literally, young mule, from mulo mule, from Latin mūlus (feminine mūla) MULE¹; so called possibly in allusion to the hybrid origin of a mule.

mulberry n. Before 1300 murberie; later mulbery (about 1350); in part developed from Old English mōrberie, and in part borrowed from Middle High German mül-beri, alteration of mūr-beri. Both English and German forms were formed from Latin mōrum mulberry + either Old English berie or Old High German beri BERRY.

mulch n. 1657, probably a noun use of Middle English molsh soft, moist (probably 1440), variant of earlier melsche, melissche (before 1398); developed from Old English melsc, milisc mel-low, sweet. —v. 1802, from the noun.

mulct v. 1611, borrowed from French and Middle French mulcter to fine or punish, learned borrowing from Latin multāre, false archaism for multāre punish or fine, from multa penalty or fine. Modern English mulct replaced multen (in use probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin multāre. The sense of defraud, is first recorded in 1748.

mule¹ n. offspring of a donkey and horse. About 1150 mule, in part developed from Old English mūl (before 830), and in part borrowed from Old French mul (feminine mule); both from Latin mūlus (feminine mūla) a mule. —muleteer n. 1540–41, borrowed from Middle French muletier, from mulet, diminutive of Old French mul MULE¹; for suffix see -EER. —mulish adj. (1751) mule² n. loose slipper. 1562, borrowed from Middle French, from Latin (calceus) mulleus red high-soled shoe (worn by Roman patricians).

mull¹ v. ponder. 1873, perhaps a figurative use developed from Middle English mullyn grind to powder, pulverize (1440), from earlier molle dust, ashes, rubbish (before 1400); mul (about 1303); probably borrowed from Middle Dutch mul grit, loose earth; cognate with Middle Low German mul (modern German Müll) dust, and Old Icelandic mylja to crush, related to mylna MILL² machine for grinding grain.

mull² v. make (wine, beer, etc.) into a sweetened and spiced hot drink. 1607 (implied in mulled, past participle of mull); perhaps borrowed from obsolete Dutch mol a kind of white, sweet beer, related to Flemish molle a kind of beer.

mullah n. 1613, Muslim religious teacher or scholar; borrowed from Turkish molla, in Persian and Hindu mullā, from a transcription of Arabic mawlā master.

mullein or mullen n. 1373 molay, moleyne; borrowed through

Anglo-French moleine, perhaps from Old French mol soft, from Latin mollis, see MELT.

mullet n. 1440 molett; earlier, in Anglo-French context, 1393; borrowed from Old French mulet and directly from Medieval Latin mulletus, from Latin mullus red mullet, from Greek mýllos a marine fish.

mulligatawny n. 1784, borrowed from Tamil milagutanṇi, literally, pepper water (milagu pepper + tanṇir cool water, itself a compound of taṇ cool + ṇir water).

mullion n. 1567, alteration by metathesis of n and l in Middle English moyniel (1330–32); later moniel (1379–80), munell (1426–27); borrowed from Anglo-French moinel, noun use of moienel, meienel, adj., middle, from Old French meien intermediate, MEAN³. From the 1500's to the middle 1800's existence of the variant munion shows a long-standing uncertainty about form.

multi- a combining form meaning: 1 many or several, as in multicolored, multilingual. 2 many times, as in multimillionaire. Middle English; borrowed from Latin multi-, from multus much or many.

multifarious adj. 1593, reborrowing of Latin multifārius manifold, from multifāriam in many places or parts (multi- many + -fāriam parts, as in bifāriam in two parts, in two ways); for suffix see -OUS.

Earlier and separate borrowings in Middle English from Latin include the forms multiplarie, adj. (before 1449); borrowed from Latin multifārius, adj., and multiplary, adv. (1436); borrowed from Late Latin multifāriē, probably also from Latin multifārius, adj.

multiple adj. 1647, involving many parts; borrowing of French multiple, from Late Latin multiplus manifold (Latin multi- many + -plus -FOLD). —n. 1685, from the adjective.

multiply v. Probably about 1150 multeplier to cause to increase; later multiplen to perform arithmetical multiplication (before 1398); borrowed from Old French multiplier, from Latin multiplicāre to increase, from multiplex (genitive multiplicis) having many folds, many times as great in number (multi- many + -plex, related to plicāre to fold). —multiplication n. Probably about 1350 multiplicatione; borrowed from Old French multiplication, from Latin multiplicātiōnem (nominative multiplicātiō), from multiplicāre; for suffix see -ATION. —multiplicity n. About 1454 multiplicitate; borrowed from Middle French multiplicité, from Late Latin multiplicitās manifoldness, from Latin multiplus; for suffix see -ITY.

multitude n. About 1340, borrowed from Old French multitude, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin multitūdō (genitive multitudinis) a great number, crowd, from multus much, many; for suffix see -TUDE. —multitudinous adj. 1629, formed from Latin multitudin- (in multitudinis, genitive of multitūdō) multitude + English suffix -ous.

mum adj. 1521, developed from Middle English mum, n., inarticulate sound made with closed lips (about 1405); earlier mom (before 1376); of imitative origin. —interj. hush!

silence! 1568, probably from the adjective. The expression mum's the word is first recorded before 1704.

mumble v. About 1325 momelen (perhaps meaning to talk with one's mouth full); later, to speak indistinctly (about 1350); probably of imitative origin, similar to Middle Dutch mommen to mumble. —n. 1902, from the verb.

mumbo jumbo 1896, from earlier Mumbo-Jumbo idol supposedly worshiped in Africa (1738); borrowed perhaps from Mandingo mama ancestor + dyumbo pompom-wearer.

mummer n. About 1405 mummer one who conceals the truth in silence; later, actor in a pantomime (1429); probably a fusion of: 1) a borrowing from Middle French momeur mummer, from momer mask oneself, from momon mask; and 2) development in Middle English mommen to mutter, be silent (about 1390), from or related to mum, adj.; for suffix see -ER¹.

mummy n. 1392 mummie medicinal preparation made from bone or tissue of mummies; borrowed from Medieval Latin mumia, from Arabic, transcribed as mūmiyāh embalmed body from Persian mūmiyā asphalt, from mūm wax. The meaning of embalmed body is first recorded in 1615.

mumps n. pl. 1598, from the plural of obsolete mump a grimace (1592), of uncertain origin, but probably connected with the sense of grimace caused by swelling of the face, and mum because soreness of the throat makes speaking difficult.

munch v. Before 1325 mocchen to eat greedily, chew audibly; later muchten (about 1385); perhaps influenced by mangen to eat; borrowed from Old French mangier, from Latin manducare to chew. —munchies n. pl. 1959, food or snack; formed from munch, n. + -ie + -s. mundane adj. Probably about 1451 mondayne of this world, earthly; borrowed from Middle French mondain, learned borrowing from Latin mundānus belonging to the world, from Latin mundus universe, world; for suffix see -ANE.

municipal adj. About 1540, of the affairs of a state; later, of a city or town (1600); borrowed from Middle French municipal, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin municipālis of a citizen or free town, from municipes (genitive municipis) citizen, inhabitant of a town (mūnus office, duty + -ceps, related to capere assume, take); for suffix see -AL¹. —municipality n. 1790, borrowed from French municipalité, from Middle French municipal; for suffix see -ITY.

munificence n. About 1425 munyficence, borrowed from Middle French munificence, learned borrowing from Latin mūnificentia, from the comparative stem mūnificent- of mūnificus generous (mūnus, genitive mūneris, gift or service, duty, office + -ficus, related to facere perform); for suffix see -ENCE. —munificent adj. 1583, from munificence, patterned on magnificence, magnificent; for suffix see -ENT.

munition n. Before 1533, monysyon fortification; also, provision as (in monysyons of warre); earlier municion a right or privilege (1448); borrowed from Middle French municion fortification, and directly from Latin mūnitiōnem (nominative mūnitiō) a defending, fortification, from mūnīre to fortify, from moenia defensive walls; related to mūrus wall; for suffix see -TION.

muon n. 1953, elementary atomic particle, shortened form of earlier mu-meson; (1952), formed from Greek mu letter of the Greek alphabet (u) + English meson.

mural adj. Probably before 1439, borrowed from Latin mūrālis of a wall, from mūrus wall; for suffix see -AL¹. Latin mūrus is probably from Old Latin moerus, moirus, related to moenia defensive walls. —n. 1921, shortened form of mural painting, from mural, adj.

murder n. Probably before 1200 morthre; later murthre (before 1250), and murdre (before 1300); developed from Old English morthor secret killing of a person, unlawful killing (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Gothic maúrth murder, from Proto-Germanic murthran*. A synonymous word from the same root as the source of Old English morthor is found in Old English, Old Frisian and Old Saxon morth murder, Middle Dutch moort (modern Dutch moord), Old High German mord (modern German Mord), and Old Icelandic mordh, from Proto-Germanic murtha-*.

The spelling with d in Middle English murdre, probably developed from the influence of Anglo-French murdre, from Old French mordre, and Medieval Latin murdrum, from Germanic. —v. Probably before 1200 murthren; later murden (before 1300); from the noun. —murderer n. 1340, developed from earlier murtherer (before 1325); probably in part borrowed from Old French mordre, murdeour and Medieval Latin murdrarius, and in part developed from the verb.

murk n. About 1303 myrke, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic myrkr darkness, from myrkr dark; cognate with Old English mirce, mierce dark, and Old Saxon mirki). The spelling murk is first recorded in 1601. —murky adj. (1340) murmur n. About 1380 murmure continuous noise, grumbling; borrowed from Old French murmure and directly from Latin murmur a humming, muttering, rushing, probably of imitative origin. Similar formations are found in Old High German murmurōn, murmūlōn to murmur, and German murmeln, reduplicated forms of an imitative root (represented by Old Icelandic murra to murmur, Middle Low German murren, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch morren, and Old English murcian to complain, grieve). —v. Before 1325 murmuren; borrowed from Old French murmurer and directly from Latin murmurare, from murmur, n.

muscatel n. 1535, variant of muskadell (probably before 1400); borrowed from Medieval Latin muscatellum, muscadellum, probably from Provençal muscat with the fragrance of musk, musky, from musc musk, from Late Latin musculus musk.

muscle n. 1392 mucell; later muscle (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin mūsculus a muscle; literally, little mouse, diminutive of mūs MOUSE; so called from the resemblance between some muscles and the shape of a mouse; also, sometimes referred to the rippling motion of a muscle and that of a mouse. —v. 1913, use muscles or strength; from the noun. —muscular adj. 1681, formed from Latin mūsculus muscle + English -ar.

mouse v. 1340 musen, borrowed from Old French muser to ponder or loiter; literally, stay with one's nose in the air, from mouse muzzle, from Gallo-Romance mūsa* snout, of uncertain origin.

Muse n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French Muse, and directly from Latin Mūsa, from Greek Mōīsa.

museum n. 1615, in reference to the university building erected by Ptolemy in Alexandria; later, a study (about 1645); borrowing of Latin Mūsēum library or study, from Greek Mouseion place of study, library or museum; originally, a seat or shrine of the Muses, from Mōīsa Muse. Early use in English was in the sense of a library, study, or place of learning (until 1973 the British Museum included an active library). The meaning of a building to display objects, is first recorded in Ashmolean Museum in Oxford (opened 1683).

mush¹ n. boiled corn meal. 1671, variant of *mash*¹ soft mixture. —mushy adj. (1839)

mush² v. travel through snow, usually with a dog sled. 1862 mouche, perhaps from the command mush on!; possibly an alteration of French marchons! let us advance, imperative of marcher to MARCH¹.

mushroom n. 1440 muscheron; later musseroun (about 1450); borrowed through Anglo-French musherun, Old French moisseron, from Late Latin musirionem type of mushroom, of uncertain origin. —adj. 1599, from the noun. —v. 1747, from the noun. The spelling mushroom is first recorded in English in 1563.

music n. About 1250 musike, borrowed from Old French musique, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin mūsica, from Greek mousikē téchnē art of the Muses, from Mōīsa Muse; for suffix see -ic. The spelling music is first recorded in 1633. —musical adj. Probably about 1421; borrowed from Middle French musical, and directly from Medieval Latin musicalis, from Latin mūsica music; for suffix see *-al*¹. —n. About 1500, musical instrument; later, musical performance (1579); from the adjective. —musician n. About 1380 musicyen, borrowed from Old French musicien, from musique music; for suffix see -ian.

musicale n. 1872, borrowed from French musicale, shortened form of soirée musicale musical evening (party). An earlier appearance of the meaning as the English form musical, n., is recorded in 1823.

musk n. 1394 muske; borrowed from Old French musc, and directly from Late Latin musculus, from Late Greek mōschos, from Persian, transliterated as mushk, from Sanskrit mūśkā-s testicle, formed from the ancient oblique-case form mus-* of mūs MOUSE. —musky adj. About 1610, formed from English musk + *-y*¹.

muskellunge n. 1789 masquenongez, borrowed from Canadian French masquinongé, a transcription of Algonquian (Ojibwa) māskinonjē, literally, big fish. Different spellings include muskinunge (1798), maskinonge (1891), and muskellunge (1884).

musket n. About 1587, borrowed from Middle French mousquette, from Italian moschetto arquebus, arrow for a crossbow; originally, a kind of hawk that looks as if speckled with flies, diminutive of mosca fly, from Latin musca; for suffix see -et.

Old guns were often named after animals; for example falcon and falconet (1496, 1559, light cannons), basilisk (1577, a large cannon), serpentine (about 1450, ship's gun). The word appears in such a context in English as the name of the sparrow hawk, before 1398. —musketeer n. 1590, re-formed later from English musket + -eer; but originally borrowed from Middle French mousquetaire, from mousquette musket; for suffix see -eer.

muskrat n. 1607 (erroneous muskat); later muskrat (1688), alteration (by association with musk and rat) of earlier musquash; a transcription of Algonquian (probably Powhatan) muscascus, literally, it is red; so called because of the animal's color.

Muslim or Moslem n. 1615, borrowed from a transliteration of Arabic, a believer in the Mohammedan faith; literally, one who submits (to the faith), from the root of aslama he resigned; see ISLAM. Related to SALAAM.

muslin n. 1609 Muslina a kind of linen cloth, said to be brought to Aleppo from Musola, later Muzlin (1682); borrowed from French mousseline, from Italian mussolina, from Mussolo Mosul, a city in Iraq where muslin was made, also a name for the cloth; from Arabic transcribed as Mausil; for suffix see *-ine*².

muss v. 1837, possibly a variant of mess, in the sense of a disturbance or row; or an extension of earlier muss a scramble or scrambling (1591).

mussel n. 1298–99 moscle; 1307 muscle, also muskel (1307); developed from Old English (before 1000) muscle, musle; earlier musscel (before 850); borrowed from Vulgar Latin muscula*, from Latin mūsculus mussel, (also) MUSCLE.

The spelling mussel, differentiated from muscle, is first recorded in 1610, but was not fully established before the 1870's.

must¹ v. have to. Before 1131 moste (past tense of moten); later muste (about 1250); developed from Old English mōste (about 725, in Beowulf), past tense of mōtan have to, be able to; cognate with Old Frisian mōta have to, Old Saxon mōtan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch moeten, Old High German muozan (modern German müssen), from Proto-Germanic mōtanan*. —n. 1892, from the verb. —adj. 1912, obligatory, from the noun.

must² n. new wine. Old English must (before 899); borrowed from Latin vīnum mustum fresh wine, neuter of mustus fresh or new.

must³ n. musty condition, mold. 1602, perhaps back formation from MUSTY.

must⁴ n. 1878, dangerous excitement or frenzy, as that of a male elephant; noun use of earlier must, adj. (1871); borrowed from Hindi, transcribed as mast intoxicated, in rut, from Persian.

mustache or moustache n. 1585, borrowed from French moustache, from Italian mostaccio, mostachio, from Medieval Greek moustákeion, diminutive of Doric Greek mýstax (genitive mýstakos) upper lip, mustache.

The meaning is recorded earlier in English mustachio, n. (1551) as a borrowing directly from Italian mostachio mustache.

mustang n. 1808, borrowed from Mexican Spanish mestengo animal that strays, from earlier Spanish mestengo wild, stray, ownerless; literally, of the mesta, from mesta association of cattle ranchers who divided strays or unclaimed animals, from Latin mixta mixed, feminine past participle of miscere to MIX.

mustard n. 1190 Mustard, in a surname; also mostard (1289); borrowed from Old French mustarde, mostarde, from moust, from Latin mustum MUST² new wine (so called because the condiment was originally prepared by adding must to ground seeds of the plant).

muster v. Before 1325 musteren to display, reveal, appear, be present; later, to assemble, in reference to troops (1440); borrowed from Old French mostrer, from Latin mōnstrāre to show, from mōnstrum omen, sign. —n. assembly, collection. About 1378 moustre and mustre (before 1425) display, collection; also mostre (about 1400) assembling of troops; borrowed from Old French mostre, from mostrer, v.

musty adj. 1530, perhaps a variant of earlier moisty moist or damp (1398); also, new, in reference to ale (about 1390); formed from English moist + -y¹.

mutable adj. About 1380, borrowed, possibly by influence of Old Provençal mutable, from Latin mūtābilis changeable, from mūtāre to change; for suffix see -ABLE.

mutagen n. 1946, formed from Latin mūtāre to change + English -gen thing that produces.

mutant n. 1901, borrowed from Latin mūtāntem (nominative mūtāns) changing, present participle of mūtāre to change. —adj. 1903, from the noun.

mutation n. About 1380 mutacion act or process of changing; borrowed from Old French mutacion, and directly from Latin mūtātiōnem (nominative mūtātiō) a changing, from mūtāre to change; for suffix see -ATION.

Application in biology to change which results in new genetic characteristics, is first recorded in 1894. —mutate v. 1818, to change; later, to undergo genetic mutation (1913); a back formation from mutation, though use in 1818 is a borrowing from Latin mūtātus, past participle of mūtāre.

mute adj. About 1385 muwet, mewet silent, speechless; later muet (about 1408); borrowed from Old French muet, diminutive of mut and mu, and directly from Latin mūtus silent, dumb. —n. About 1378 mute, from the adjective. —v. 1883, from the adjective.

mutilate v. 1534, probably, in part, developed from mutilate, adj., mutilated (1532), borrowed from Latin mutilātus; and in part, borrowed directly from Latin mutilātus, past participle of mutilāre to cut or lop off, from mutilus maimed; for suffix see -ATE¹. —mutilation n. 1525, act of disabling or wounding in a limb; borrowed perhaps from Middle French mutilation, and directly from Late Latin mutilātiōnem (nominative mutilātiō), from Latin mutilāre; for suffix see -ATION.

mutiny n. 1567, discord or contention; later, open rebellion (1579), formed from obsolete English mutine to revolt + -y³. Early modern English mutine was borrowed from Middle French mutiner to revolt, from mutin, meutin rebellious, from meute, muete a revolt, movement, from Vulgar Latin movita* a military rising or revolt, from feminine past participle of movēre to MOVE. —v. 1584, from the noun. —mutineer n. 1610, borrowed from French mutinier, from Middle French mutin rebellious. The term finally replaced earlier mutine (1581, in this sense) 1595. —mutinous adj. 1578, either formed from English mutin mutiny + -ous; or borrowed from Middle French mutineus, from mutin rebellious, for suffix see -OUS.

mutt n. 1901, a stupid or foolish person; later, a dog, especially a mongrel (1906). The meaning of a stupid person is probably a shortened form of muttonhead (1803); that of a mongrel dog, may be of independent derivation.

mutter v. Before 1333 moteren to mumble; later muttren (probably before 1450); borrowed from Latin muttūre to mutter. —n. 1634, from the verb.

mutton n. Probably before 1300 motoun; later mutton (about 1450); borrowed from Old French moton, mouton ram, wether, sheep, and from Medieval Latin mul-tonem, from Gallo-Romance multōnem* ram, probably from the accusative of Gaulish multō* (compare Old Irish molt wether, Middle Breton mout, and Welsh mollt).

mutual adj. 1539, borrowed from Middle French mutuel, from Latin mūtūus reciprocal; related to mūtāre to change, exchange.

muzzle n. About 1385 mosel a halter for an animal; later, snout (about 1410), and musel (probably before 1421); borrowed from Old French musel, from mouse muzzle, from Gallo-Romance mūsa* snout, of unknown origin.

The meaning of end of a firearm, is first recorded in 1566. —v. Probably before 1430 moselyn; later musellen (before 1450); from the noun. The sense of force to keep quiet, is first recorded in 1611.

my adj. Probably about 1200 mī belonging to me; variant form before consonants of mīn MINE¹. —interj. exclamation of surprise. 1825, probably a shortened form of my God!

my- the form of myo- before a vowel, as in myalgia a muscular pain.

mycelium n. 1836, New Latin, from Greek mýkēs mushroom, fungus + New Latin -lium, as in epithelium.

mycology n. 1836, borrowed from New Latin mycologia study of fungi, from Greek mýkēs fungus + connective -o- + -logiā -logy.

myna or mynah n. 1769, borrowed from Hindi mainā a starling, from Sanskrit madana-s love or passion, with numerous special senses, one of which is "bird," found only in lexicons.

myo- a combining form meaning muscle, as in myocardium the heart muscle, myoneural having to do with muscle and nerve. Borrowed from Greek myo-, combining form of mýs, genitive mýs mouse, muscle.

myopia n. 1727–52, New Latin, from Late Greek mŷōpiā near-sightedness, from mŷōps near-sighted (mŷein to shut + ōps, genitive ōpós EYE). —myopic adj. near-sighted. 1800, formed from English myopia + -ic.

myriad n. 1555 myriade ten thousand; borrowed from Middle French myriade, from Late Latin mýrias (genitive mýriadis) ten thousand, from Greek mýriás (genitive mýriádos) ten thousand, from mýrios innumerable, countless. —adj. Before 1800, from the noun.

myrrh n. About 1150 mirra; developed from Old English myrre (before 830); borrowed from Latin myrrha, from Greek mýrrha, from a Semitic source (compare Akkadian murrā myrrh, Hebrew mōr, and Arabic murr).

myrtle n. 1392, Middle English mirtille fruit of the myrtle, borrowed from Old French mirtile, from Medieval Latin myrtillus, diminutive of Latin myrtus myrtle tree, from Greek mýrtos, from the same (Semitic) source as Greek mýrrha MYRRH.

mystery¹ n. secret. Before 1333 mysterye secret or hidden thing, religious doctrine beyond human understanding; borrowed from Latin mystērīum, from Greek mystērion secret rite or doctrine, from mýstēs one who has been initiated, from mŷein to shut the eyes (only those initiated were permitted to witness secret rites). The detective story is first recorded in English in 1908. —mysterious adj. 1616, probably borrowed from French mystérieux, from mystère mystery, from Latin mystērīum; for suffix see -OUS.

mystery² n. Archaic. craft, trade. About 1390 mysterye ministry, service; later mystrie an art, handicraft (before 1400); borrowed from Medieval Latin misterium, alteration of Latin ministerium office, MINISTRY by influence of Latin mystērīum MYSTERY¹. The medieval mystery plays were so named because they were often performed by members of craft guilds.

mystic adj. Before 1382 mistike spiritually symbolic; borrowed from Old French mistique, and directly from Latin mysticus, from Greek mystikós secret, mystic, from mýstēs one who has been initiated; see MYSTERY¹ secret. The meaning of pertaining to occult practices, is first recorded in 1615. —n. 1679, from the adjective. An earlier sense of symbolic meaning or interpretation, is recorded before 1333. —mystical adj. About 1471 mystical enigmatic, obscure, symbolic; formed from English mystic, adj. and n. + -ical. The meaning of having a spiritual significance or value, is first recorded in 1529. —mysticism n. 1736 formed from English mystic, adj. and n. + -ism.

mystify v. 1814, borrowed from French mystifier (mistique mystic, from Latin mysticus mystic + -fier -fy). —mystification n. 1815, borrowing of French mystification, from mystifier mystify; for suffix see -IFICATION.

mystique n. mystic quality or air. 1891, borrowing of French mystique, n., a mystic; from the adjective, from Latin mysticus MYSTIC.

myth n. 1830, in part borrowed through French mythe (1818), and directly from New Latin mythus, from Greek mýthos speech, thought, story, myth; and in part probably a back formation from earlier mythology and perhaps mythical. The earlier form mythus, never became established in English but gave way to the popular myth. —mythical adj. 1678, formed in English from Late Latin mýthicus legendary, from Greek mýthikós, from mýthos myth + English -AL¹. —mythological adj. 1614, formed from English mythology + -ical. —mythology n. Before 1420 methologie the exposition or interpretation of myths; later mythologie (about 1450); borrowed through Middle French mythologie, and directly from Late Latin mýthologia, from Greek mýthologíā legendary lore, from mýthos myth; for suffix see -LOGY. The meaning of a body of myths, is first recorded in 1781.

N

nab v. 1686, variant of earlier nap (1673), as in kidnap; possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian nappe to catch, snatch, Swedish nappa, and Danish nappe to pinch, pull), and perhaps reinforced by Middle English napand grasping, greedy (before 1460).

nabob n. 1612, Anglo-Indian, borrowed from Hindi nabāb, from Arabic, transliterated as nuwūb, plural of nā'ib deputy.

nacre n. 1598, mollusk yielding mother-of-pearl; borrowed from Middle French, from earlier Italian naccaro, possibly borrowed from Arabic, transliterated as nāqūr hunting horn, which the mollusk resembles in shape.

nadir n. 1391, borrowed from Medieval Latin (and possibly Old French) nadir, from Arabic, transliterated as nazīr opposite to (the zenith).

nag¹ v. annoy by complaints. 1825, to nibble; 1828, annoy; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic nagga to complain, Icelandic nagg grumbling, dialectal Norwegian and Swedish nagga to nibble, irritate).

nag² n. old horse. Probably before 1400 nagge small riding horse or pony, of uncertain origin (corresponding to Dutch negge small horse, perhaps related to Middle Dutch nijgen, nighen to neigh).

nail n. Probably before 1200 nail; probably about 1200 neil; developed from Old English -negl metal peg, found in scōhnegl shoe nail, before 800; earlier nægel fingernail, toenail (before 725); both cognate with Old Frisian neil nail, Old Saxon nagal, Middle Dutch nāghel (modern Dutch nagel), Old High German nagal (modern German Nagel), and Old Icelandic nagl fingernail (Swedish nagel, Danish negl), from Proto-Germanic nazlaz*. —v. Probably before 1200 neilen, nailen; developed from Old English næglian (about 950); cognate with Old Saxon neglian to nail, Old High German negilen, Old Icelandic negla (Swedish nagla, Danish nagle), and Gothic ganagljan, from Proto-Germanic 3a-nazlijanan*.

naive adj. 1654, borrowing of French naïve, feminine of naïf, from Old French naïf native or natural, from Latin nātivus rustic, NATIVE. —naiveté n. 1673, borrowing of French naïveté, from Old French naïveté native disposition.

naked adj. Probably before 1200 naked; developed from Old English nacod (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Fri-ian naked naked, Middle Dutch nāket (modern Dutch naakt), Old High German nackot, nackat (modern German nackt), Gothic nagaths, from Proto-Germanic nakwaðaz*, and Old Icelandic nøkkevidhr, from Proto-Germanic nakweðaz*.

namby-pamby adj. 1745, weakly simple or sentimental, from the earlier nickname Namby Pamby, in allusion to Am-brose Philips, English poet ridiculed in a farce of that name (1726) for verses addressed to infants. —n. Before 1764, from the adjective.

name n. About 1125 name, developed from Old English nama (about 725, in Beowulf); also noma (before 725); both forms cognate with Old Frisian nama name, Old Saxon namo, Middle Dutch nāme (modern Dutch naam), Old High German namo (modern German Name), Old Icelandic nafn (Swedish namn, Danish navn), and Gothic namō, from Proto-Germanic namōn*. —v. About 1200 namen; developed from Old English (about 1000) namian; from the noun. —namely adv. Probably before 1200, chiefly or especially; also, that is to say; formed from Middle English name + liche -ly¹.

nanny n. 1795, children's nurse, earlier in nanny-house a brothel (before 1700); probably from the name Nanny, a nickname of Anne.

nanny goat 1788, from Nanny, a nickname of Anne.

nano- or nanno- a combining form meaning: 1 one billionth, as in nanoequivalent, nanosecond, nanometer. 2 very small, dwarf, as in nanoplankton, nannofossil. Borrowed from Greek nānos, nānnos dwarf.

nap¹ v. take a short sleep. Probably before 1200 nappen; developed from Old English (before 900), hnappian to doze, sleep lightly; hneappian (before 830); cognate with Old High German hnaffazan to nap (modern German dialect nafzen), and Norwegian napp nap, of unknown origin. —n. About 1353 nappe, from the verb.

nap² n. surface of cloth. 1440 nopepe; borrowed from Middle Dutch nope nap, tuft of wool; cognate with Middle Low German nope tuft of wool, Old Swedish niupa to pinch, Gothic dishniupan to tear, and Old English hnoppian to pluck, āhnēopan pluck off. The spelling nap appeared in 1589, perhaps influenced by Middle French nape tablecloth, from Old French (see NAPKIN).

napalm n. 1942, formed from English na(ph)thene + palm(itic) acids; so called because the aluminum salts of these acids are used in the manufacture of the chemical that thickens gasoline. —v. 1950, from the noun.

nape n. Probably before 1300, of uncertain origin (perhaps related to Old French hanap a goblet, with reference to the concavity at the base of the skull).

naphtha n. 1572, borrowing of Latin naphtha, from Greek náphtha, originally, an inflammable liquid issuing from the earth. The word is also recorded in Middle English (about 1384), as napte, but was borrowed through Old French napte, from Latin naphtha; however, this form did not survive in English.

napkin n. 1384–85 napkein, napekin; formed in Middle English from Old French nape tablecloth (from Latin mappa napkin) + Middle English -kin -kin.

narc or narco n. 1960 narco, 1967 narc, shortened form of narcotics agent; earlier as a shortened form of narcotics hospital (1955) and of narcotics addict (1958).

narcissism n. 1905, borrowed from German Narzissismus, from Narziss Narcissus, the beautiful youth in Greek mythology who fell in love with his own reflection in a spring and was changed into the plant narcissus; for suffix see -ISM. —narcissist n., adj. 1930, formed from English narcissism + -ist. —narcissistic adj. 1916, formed from English narcissism on the analogy of such pairs as egotism, egotistic and optimism, optimistic; for suffix see -IC.

narcissus n. 1548, borrowing of Latin narcissus, from Greek nárkissos, probably from a pre-Greek Aegean word, but associated by folk etymology (from the plant's sedative effect) with Greek nárkē numbness; see NARCOTIC.

narcolepsy n. 1880, borrowed from French narcolepsie, formed in French from Greek nárkē numbness + lēpsis seizure.

narcosis n. 1693, New Latin narcosis; formed from Greek nárkōsis, from narkōn to benumb; for suffix see -OSIS.

narcotic n. About 1385 narcotik, borrowed through Old French narcotique, n., from narcotique, adj., and directly from Medieval Latin narcoticum, from Greek narkōtikós making stiff or numb, narcotic, from narkōn to benumb or make unconscious, from nárkē numbness, cramp; for suffix see -IC. —adj. 1601, borrowed through French narcotique, or possibly German narkotisch (1525), and directly from Medieval Latin narcoticus, narcoticum.

narrate v. 1656, probably a back formation from narration, possibly influenced in formation by Latin narrātus, past participle of narrāre; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —narration n. Probably before 1425 narracioun; borrowed from Old French narration and directly from Latin narrātiōnem (nominative narrātiō), a relating, narrative, from narrāre relate, recount, explain; for suffix see -ATION.

narrative adj. About 1450 narratyf; borrowed from Middle French narratif, from Late Latin narrātīvus suited to narration, from Latin narrāre NARRATE; for suffix see -ATIVE. —n. 1561; probably from the adjective, and in some instances borrowed from Middle French narrative, originally feminine of narratif, adj.

narrow adj. 1137 nareu; later narow (before 1400); developed from Old English nearu (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon narū narrow, Dutch naar, Old High German narwa (modern German Narbe) scar, from Proto-Germanic narwaz*. —n. Probably before 1200 nearewe narrow part, place or thing; later narwe (probably about 1300); from the adjective. —v. Before 1338 narwen, developed from Old English (before 1000) nearwian, from nearu, adj.

narwhal n. 1658 Narh whale; later Narwhale (1747); alteration (by association with English whale) of Danish and Norwegian narhval or Swedish narval, related to Icelandic náhvallur, from Old Icelandic náhvallr (nā corpse + hval WHALE from resemblance of the whale's whitish color to that of a corpse).

nary adj. 1746, alteration and further contraction of ne'er a, a shortened form of never a. An earlier form of ne'er a is recorded in Middle English ner a (about 1325).

nasal adj. 1656, probably borrowed from French nasal; formed from Latin nāsus nose + French -al *-al*¹; or adopted from Medieval Latin nasalis, from Latin nāsus NOSE; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The word may also have survived in English medical terminology from Middle English nasale (probably before 1425); borrowed from Medieval Latin nasalis. —n. 1669, nasal sound, from the adjective; earlier, nosepiece on a helmet (probably about 1300), borrowed nasal, nasel, from Old French nes nose, from Latin nāsus, but this meaning probably remained separate, and the sense of a nasal sound was created from later use of the adjective.

nascent adj. Before 1624, borrowed, perhaps by influence of earlier French naissant, from Latin nāscēntem (nominative nāscēns), present participle of nāscī be born; for suffix see -ENT.

nasturtium n. About 1150 nasturcium; borrowing of Latin nasturtium, nasturtium; perhaps a compound, by popular etymology in reference to the plant's somewhat pungent smell, of nāsus NOSE + torquēre to twist.

Earliest use referred to a plant of the mustard family, such as watercress. The plant with showy flowers is first recorded in 1704.

nasty adj. About 1390 nasti dirty, foul, probably an alteration of Old French nastre bad, strange, shortened from earlier villenastre infamous, bad, formed from vilein VILLAIN + -astre pejorative suffix (from Latin -aster; compare POETASTER); for suffix see *-Y*¹.

Possibly nasty was reinforced by a borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare the stem nasc-* possibly in Swedish dialect naskug dirty, nasty).

natal adj. About 1385 natal, borrowed from Latin nātālis pertaining to birth or origin, from nātus, past participle of nāscī be born; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

nation n. Probably before 1300 nacioun a country under one government, group of people of common descent; borrowed from Old French nation, and directly from Latin nātiōnem (nominative nātiō) nation, stock, race; also, birth, from nāscā be born; for suffix see -TION. —national adj. 1597, borrowed from Middle French national, from Old French nation nation; for suffix see -AL¹. It is also probable that in some instances national was formed from English nation + *al*¹. The noun meaning “citizen of a nation” is first recorded in the plural (1887). —nationalism n. 1836, doctrine of divine election of nations; later, devotion to one’s own nation (1844); formed from English national + -ism; and, in some instances possibly borrowed from French nationalisme (national + -isme -ism). —nationalist n. 1715, formed from English national + -ist. —nationality n. 1691, national quality or character; later, condition of membership in a particular nation (1828); formed from English national + -ity, and in some instances possibly borrowed from French nationalité (national + -ité -ity).

native adj. About 1385 natif innate, natural, belonging to a person because of his birth; later native born in bondage (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French natif (feminine native), and directly from Latin nātīvus innate, produced by birth, natural, from nāscā, gnāscā be born, related to gignere beget; for suffix see -IVE. —n. About 1460 natife person born in bondage, from the adjective. In some instances the noun was borrowed from Medieval Latin nativus, noun use of Latin nātīvus innate. The meaning of a person born in a certain place is first recorded in 1535, and that of a person who lives in a place, as opposed to visitors and foreigners (1603).

nativity n. Probably before 1200 nativite the birth of Christ; later nativite (about 1400); borrowed from Old French nativité birth, from Late Latin nātivitātem (nominative nātivitās) birth, from Latin nātīvus born, NATIVE; for suffix see -ITY. The word also appears as nativiteith (1105), borrowed from Old French nativited, from Late Latin nātivitātem (nominative nātivitās).

natter v. 1829, northern English dialect, variant of earlier gnatter to chatter, grumble (1806–07); earlier, to nibble away (1747); of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ER⁴. —n. 1866, from the verb.

natty adj. 1785, perhaps alteration of earlier nettie neat, natty (1573), from Middle English net pure, fine, elegant (see NET²) + -ie -y¹.

natural adj. About 1250, borrowed from Old French naturel, natural, and directly from Latin nātūrālis, from nātūra NATURE; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. Before 1325 naturel a natural ability or capacity; from the adjective. The meaning of a person with a natural gift or talent is first recorded in 1925. —natural history (1587) —naturalism n. Before 1641, action arising from natural instincts; later, close adherence to nature or reality in art and literature (before 1850); formed from English natural + -ism. —naturalist n. 1587, one who studies natural rather than spiritual things; formed from English natural + -ist. The meaning of a student of natural history is first recorded in 1600. —naturalize v. 1559, implied in naturalized; formed from English natural + -ize, and perhaps, in some instances, borrowed from Middle French naturaliser, from Old French natural, naturel natural + -iser -ize. —natural law (probably about 1425) —natural science (before 1393)

nature n. About 1275, bodily processes, restorative powers of the body; later, innate character or disposition (about 1380), and inherent creative power or impulse (about 1385); borrowed from Old French nature, and directly from Latin nātūra birth, character, from nāscā be born; see NATIVE.

The meaning of the features and products of the earth is first recorded in 1662. Nature in the sense used in human nature is found in 1526.

naught or nought pron. 1123 naht; 1175 noht; later noght (before 1325), nought (about 1385), naught (about 1390); developed from Old English nōwiht, n. (literally) no thing (about 830), a compound of nā, nō NO + wiht thing, creature, being (see WIGHT). Similar compounds appear in Old Saxon neowiht nothing, Old High German niwihit, neowihit, and Gothic ni waihts nothing. —n. Before 1325 noght; later naught (about 1380); developed from Old English nōwiht.

naughty adj. About 1378 naughty needy, having nothing, also noghty evil, immoral (1380); formed from Middle English noght nothing, evil, NAUGHT + -y -y¹. The meaning of not obedient is first recorded before 1633, and the milder sense of somewhat improper in 1536.

nausea n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin nausea seasickness, from Ionic Greek nausīē seasickness, nausea, disgust (compare Attic Greek nautiā), from naútēs sailor, from naūs ship. —nauseate v. 1640, to feel nausea; later, to cause nausea (1654); formed from English nausea + -ate¹, after Latin nauseāre to be seasick, from nausea; for suffix see -ATE¹. —nauseous adj. 1604, inclined to nausea; later, causing nausea (1612); probably formed from English nausea + -ous, after Latin nauseōsus, from nausea; for suffix see -OUS.

nautical adj. 1552, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French nautique, from Latin nauticus pertaining to ships or sailors, from Greek nautikós, from naútēs sailor, from naūs ship; for suffix see -ICAL.

nautilus n. 1601, borrowed from Latin nautilus a kind of marine snail, from Greek nautiflos, originally, sailor, from naútēs sailor, from naūs ship.

naval adj. Probably before 1425 nauall pertaining to a ship or ships; later naval of a navy (probably before 1439); borrowed perhaps from Old French naval, and directly from Latin nāvēlis pertaining to a ship or ships, from nāvis ship.

nave¹ n. long, narrow main part of a church. 1673, borrowed from Medieval Latin navis nave of a church, from Latin nāvis ship. The semantic connection between a ship and a church is uncertain.

nave² n. hub of a wheel. Before 1325, developed from Old English nafu, nafa (before 899); cognate with Middle Dutch nave, naef hub (modern Dutch naaf), Old High German naba, napa (modern German Nabe), Old Icelandic naf (Swedish naf, Danish nav), from Proto-Germanic naþō*.

navel n. Probably about 1200 navele; developed from Old English nafela (before 900); earlier nabula (before 800); cognate with Old Frisian navla navel, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch nāvel (modern Dutch navel), Old High German nabalo (modern German Nabel), Old Icelandic nafl (Swedish and Danish navle), from Proto-Germanic nabalan*.

navigate v. 1588, probably a back formation from navigation, and in part, borrowed from Latin navigātus, past participle of navigāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. —navigable adj. 1464, borrowed from Old French navigable, and probably directly from Latin navigābilis pertaining to sailing, from navigāre. —navigation n. 1533, borrowed through French navigation, or directly from Latin navigātiōnem (nominative navigātiō), from navigāre to sail, sail over, go by sea, sail or steer a ship, from a lost adjective navigus* steering or driving the ship, from nāvis ship + the root of agere to drive; for suffix see -ATION. —navigator n. 1590, borrowed from Latin navigātor a sailor, from navigāre; for suffix see -OR².

navvy n. 1832–34, a laborer on an artificial waterway, such as a canal, or on a railway; an altered and abbreviated form of earlier navigator a laborer employed in excavating a canal or artificial waterway (1775).

navy n. Before 1338, borrowed from Old French navie fleet or ship, from Latin nāvigia, plural of nāvīgium vessel, boat, from nāvis ship.

nay adv. Before 1325 nai; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic nei, a compound of ne not + ei ever, AY¹). —n. Probably before 1300 nay, from the same source as the adverb.

Nazi n. 1930, borrowing of German Nazi, a shortened and altered form of Nationalsozialist National Socialist, German Workers' Party, led by Hitler from 1920. —adj. 1930, from the noun. —Nazism n. 1934, formed from English Nazi + -ism, perhaps by influence of French Nazisme (1930).

Neanderthal adj. 1861, borrowed from German Neanderthal, Neandertal Neander valley, a gorge near Düsseldorf, western Germany, where the first fossils of these humans were identified in 1856. —n. 1923, from the adjective.

neap adj. 1479 neep; developed from Old English (about 725) nēp-, as in nēpflōd neap flood. —n. 1584, from the adjective.

near adv. Probably before 1200 neor close by, near; later ner (about 1250); developed from Old English nēar closer, nearer (about 725, in Beowulf), comparative of nēah, nēh NIGH. Cognate comparatives of Old English nēar include Old Frisian nīar nearer, Old Saxon and Old High German nāhōr, Middle Dutch naer, modern German näher, Old Icelandic nær, and Gothic nēhwis.

In Middle English near came to be used as a positive form, from which the new comparative nearer developed in the 1500's possibly influenced by the Old Icelandic comparative nær, as in ganga nær go nearer (to), standa nær stand nearer (to), in which "nearer" can also be translated as "near." —adj. About 1300 ner, from the adverb. —v. 1513, from the adverb or adjective.

neat¹ adj. tidy. 1542, free of impurities; 1546, trim or smart, later, tidy (1577); borrowed from Anglo-French neit, Old French net clear, pure, from Latin nitidus gleaming, from nitēre to shine. The informal sense of very good, pleasant, attractive, is first recorded in 1934 in American English.

neat² n. pl. or sing. cattle, oxen (found now in neat's-foot oil, 1579). Probably before 1200 net, nete; developed from Old English (before 830) nēat; cognate with Old Frisian nāt cattle, Old Saxon nōt, Old High German nōz, and Old Icelandic naut, from Proto-Germanic nautan*.

nebula n. Before 1449 nebule cloud or mist; borrowed from Latin nebula cloud or mist; 1661, film covering the eye, a reborrowing of Latin nebula; cognate with Greek nephelē, néphos cloud. The astronomical meaning of a cloudy cluster of stars, gases, etc. was first recorded in 1727–38. —nebular adj. 1837 nebular hypothesis the theory that the solar system developed from a nebula; later, consisting of or relating to a nebula (1856); from the noun; for suffix see -AR. —nebulous adj. Probably before 1425, cloudy or foggy, borrowed from Latin nebulōsus cloudy, misty, foggy, from nebula mist; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of vague or indistinct, is first recorded in 1831. A variant nebulose is recorded as early as 1440, but never achieved wide use.

necessary adj. About 1380, necessarie needed, required, essential; borrowed, perhaps in some instances through Old French nécessaire, and directly from Latin necessārius, from necesse unavoidable, indispensable, necessary; originally, no backing away (ne- not + pre-Latin cessis* withdrawal, an abstract noun to cēdere withdraw); for suffix see -ARY. —n. About 1340 (plural necessaris needs); borrowed from Latin necessāria, from neuter plural of necessārius, adj. The singular form necessarie is first recorded probably before 1425. —necessitate v. 1628, borrowed perhaps by influence of French nécessiter, from Medieval Latin necessitatus, past participle of necessitare to compel, from Latin necessitātem (nominative necessitās) necessity, necesse necessary; replacing earlier Middle English necesseden, necessen (1380); borrowed from Late Latin necessāri to be made necessary, from Latin necessārius, adj.; for suffix see -ATE¹. —necessity n. About 1380 necessite, borrowed from Old French necessité, learned borrowing from Latin necessitātem (nominative necessitās) compulsion, need for attention; for suffix see -ITY.

neck n. Probably about 1225 nekke; later necke (about 1250); developed from Old English hnecca neck, back of the neck (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian hneke neck, back of the neck, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch necke (modern Dutch nek), from Proto-Germanic Hnekkōn*, earlier kneknōn*; also cognate with Old High German hnac neck (modern German Nacken neck, Genick nape), and Old Icelandic hnakki, hnakker neck, nape (Danish nakke, Swedish acke). —v. 1825, originally northern English dialect, to clasp around the neck, fondle; from the noun. —neckerchief n. About 1384, neckercheuys or necke couercheues neckerchieves; later nekyrchefe (1483); formed from Middle English nekke neck + kerchef, koverchief kerchief. —necklace n. About 1590, formed from English neck + lace cord, string.

necrology n. 1727–38, borrowed from New Latin necrologia, from Greek nekros dead body + Latin -logia -logy.

necromancy n. 1550, alteration of Middle English nygro-maunce (probably before 1300); also about 1303 nygromauncy; borrowed from Old French nigramancie, nigremance, and directly from Medieval Latin nigromantia, from Late Latin necromantia divination from an exhumed corpse, from Greek nekromantēla (nekros dead body + mantēla divination, oracle, from mantēlesthai to prophesy, from mantis prophet); for suffix see -Y³.

The spelling (nigro-) developed from association with Latin niger black, necromancy being the black art. The modern spelling was an attempt to "correct" the spelling by returning to Late Latin necromantia.

necrosis n. 1665, borrowed probably from Greek nekrosis, from nekroōn make dead, from nekros dead body.

nectar n. 1555, borrowing of Latin nectar the drink of the gods in mythology, from Greek néktar (often taken to be a compound, formed from nek- death + -tar overcoming). The sweet liquid found in many flowers, is first recorded in 1609.

nectarine n. 1664, earlier nectrine (1657), and nectarya (1616), noun use of earlier nectarine, adj., of or like nectar (1611); formed from English nectar + *-ine*¹.

need n. Probably about 1200 nede want, necessity; developed from Old English nied necessity, compulsion, want (before 901, West Saxon), earlier nēd (probably about 750, Mercian); cognate with Old Frisian nēd need, want, Old Saxon nōd, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch nood, Old High German nōt (modern German Not), Old Icelandic naudhr (Norwegian naud/nød, Danish nød, Swedish nöd), and Gothic nauths (genitive naudais), from Proto-Germanic naudis*. —v. Probably about 1200 neden, developed from Old English (about 960) nēodian be necessary, from nēd need. —needs adv. 1131 nedes, from nede; found in Old English nēde, nēd. —needy adj. Before 1225 nedy needing or wanting things, poor; formed from Middle English nede need + -y -y¹.

needle n. Probably about 1200 nedle instrument used for sewing; developed from Old English naethlae, nethle, nedlæ (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian nēdle, nēlde needle, Old Saxon nāthla, Middle Dutch naelde (modern Dutch naald), Old High German nādala, nālda (modern German Nadel), Old Icelandic nāl (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian nål), and Gothic nēthla, from Proto-Germanic nēthlō*, from the base nē-* to sew, as in Middle Low German neien to sew, Middle Dutch naeyen (modern Dutch naaien), and Old High German nājan (modern German nähen). —v. Before 1715, to sew or pierce with or as with a needle, from the noun. The meaning of provoke to anger, goad, is first recorded in 1881, probably developed from the sense of haggle in making a bargain (1812). —needlework n. (before 1382) nefarious adj. 1609, borrowed from Latin nefarius wicked, abominable, from nefas crime, wrong, impiety, something not according to divine law (ne- not + fas right, lawful, divine decree, related to fari speak); for suffix see -OUS.

negate v. 1623, probably a back formation from negation; and borrowed from Latin negātus, past participle of negāre deny, say no, from Old Latin neg-, variant of nec not (as in nec-opināns unsuspecting), related to nē not, NO; for suffix see -ATE¹.

—negation n. Probably before 1425 negacioun denial; borrowed from Old French negacion, and directly from Latin negātiōnem (nominative negātiō) denial, from negāre; for suffix see -ATION. —negative adj. Probably about 1400 negatyff; later negative (about 1445); probably borrowed through Old French negatif (feminine negative), and directly from Latin negātivus, from negāre; for suffix see -ATIVE. —n. Probably about 1383, negative command, prohibition; borrowed through Old French negatif, n. and adj., and directly from Latin negātivus. The photographic film image is first recorded in 1853. —adv. no. 1955, originally used for clarity in radio communication.

neglect v. 1529, borrowed from Latin neglēctus, past participle of neglegere, variant of neglegere (Old Latin nec not + legere pick up, select).

The word also occurs in Middle English as a verbal adjective neglecte ignored, neglected (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French neglect, or directly from Latin neglēctus. This form disappeared after 1724, replaced by neglected (1600). —n. act of neglecting. 1588, from the verb.

negligee n. 1756, a kind of loose gown worn by women in the 1700's; borrowing of French négligée, from feminine past participle of négliger to neglect, from Latin neglegere to NEGLECT.

Modern use is a revival first recorded in 1930.

negligence n. About 1340 negligens; later negligence (1351, borrowed from Old French negligence), and negligence (about 1386, borrowed from Latin neglegentia). Latin neglegentia, neglegentia carelessness, heedlessness, are from neglegentem (nominative neglegēns), present participle of neglegere to NEGLECT; for suffix see -ENCE. —negligent adj. Before 1382 negligent; also negligent (probably 1383, borrowed from Latin neglegentem, nominative neglegēns, neglegēns), and negligent (probably before 1400; borrowed from Old French negligent). Latin neglegēns, neglegēns are forms of the present participle of neglegere to NEGLECT; for suffix see -ENT.

negligible adj. 1829, formed from English neglig(ence) or negli(gent) + -ible. French négligeable, earlier négligible (1834), is probably a borrowing from English.

negotiate v. 1599, probably a back formation from negotiation; for suffix see -ATE¹. —negotiable adj. 1758, legally transferable; later, that can be talked over (1794); probably borrowed from earlier French négociable (1675), but also formed from English negotiate + -able. —negotiation n. 1425 negociacion a dealing with people; borrowing of Old French negociacion, and borrowed directly from Latin negōtiātiōnem (nominative negōtiātiō), from negōtiārī carry on business, from negōtium business (neg- not + Latin ōtium ease, leisure); for suffix see -ATION.

Negro n. 1555, black-skinned person from Africa or of African descent; borrowed from Spanish or Portuguese negro black, Negro, from Latin niger black. —adj. 1594, from the noun.

neigh v. Probably before 1300 nayghen; later neighen (before 1382); developed from Old English hnægan (about 1000); probably of imitative origin. —n. 1513, from the verb.

neighbor n. 1117 nehhebuere, later neighebuore (about 1390); developed from Old English, West Saxon nēahgebūr nearby dweller (before 899), and Anglian nēahgebūr (about 950). Old English nēahgebūr (nēah near, NIGH + gebūr dweller) corresponds to Middle Dutch nāghebuur, nābuur neighbor (modern Dutch nabuur), Old Saxon nābūr, Old High German nāhgibūr, Middle High German nāchbūr (modern German Nachbar), and Old Icelandic nābúi (Danish and Norwegian nabo); Old English gebūr is related to būr dwelling; see BOWER. —v. Before 1586, from the noun. —neighborhood n. Probably before 1425 neighboreheed, neighborhood friendly relations between neighbors; formed from Middle English neighebuore neighbor + -hode -hood.

neither conj. About 1150 næther not either; later, neither (about 1200); developed from Old English nāwther (before 899), contraction of nāhwæther not of two (nā NO + hwæther which of two; see WHETHER). The spelling neither was patterned on either. —pron. About 1250 neither, developed from Old English nāwther, pron. and conj. —adj. Probably before 1350 nethyr; later neither (about 1400); probably from the pronoun.

nematode adj. 1861, borrowed from New Latin Nematoda the class or phylum name, from the stem of Greek nēma (genitive nēmato) thread + -ode, in the nature of. —n. 1865, from the adjective.

Nemesis or nemesis n. 1597 Nemesis, in allusion to Nemesis the Greek goddess of retribution or vengeance (1576); borrowed from Greek Nēmesis, related to nēmein distribute, allot.

neo- a combining form meaning new, recent, as in neoclassical, neocolonialism. Borrowed from Greek neo-, combining form of néos NEW.

neodymium n. 1885, New Latin; formed from neo- new + (di) dymium; so called because the supposed element didymium was found to consist of two elements; for suffix see -IUM.

neolithic or Neolithic adj. 1865, formed from English neo- new + -lith stone + -ic.

neologism n. 1800, borrowed from French néologisme (néo- new + log-, from Greek lógos word + French -isme -ism). It is possible that neologism was also formed in English from neolog-, found in earlier formations as neological (1754), neologist (1785), and neology (1797).

neon n. 1898, New Latin; borrowed from Greek néon, neuter of néos NEW.

neophyte n. Before 1400 neophite a new convert, novice; borrowed from Late Latin neophytus, from Greek neóphytos, literally, newly planted (néos NEW + -phytos planted, from phýein cause to grow, beget, plant).

nephew n. Before 1250 neweu kinsman; later neveu nephew, grandson (about 1300), and nephew (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French neveu grandson, descendant, from Latin nepōtem (nominative nepōs) sister's son, grandson, descendant.

The native word neve nephew (developed from Old English nefa nephew, grandson) is attested throughout the Middle English period and is last recorded about 1540. It is cognate with Old Icelandic nefi nephew, relative, Old High German nevo (modern German Neffe) nephew, Middle Dutch nēve (modern Dutch neef), Old Saxon nebo, and Old Frisian neva, from Proto-Germanic nēfōn*.

nephritis n. 1580, borrowed from Late Latin nephritis, from Greek nephritis, from nephros kidney + -itis inflammation; earlier, Middle English nefresis (before 1398); borrowed from Medieval Latin nefresis, from Late Latin nephritis.

nepotism n. 1662, privileges of a pope's nephew; borrowed from French népotisme, from early modern Italian nepotismo, from nepote nephew, learned borrowing from Latin nepōtem (nominative nepōs) grandson, NEPHEW.

neptunium n. 1941, New Latin; formed from Neptune the planet + -ium (chemical suffix); so called because neptunium follows uranium in the periodic table as the planet Neptune follows Uranus in the solar system.

nerd n. 1965 (but in oral use before 1955), probably an alteration of earlier slang nert stupid or crazy person (1940's), itself an alteration of NUT.

nerve n. About 1385 nef sinew, tendon; later nerve a nerve (before 1400); borrowed from Old French nef sinew, tendon, nerve, and directly from both Medieval Latin nervus nerve and Latin nervus sinew, tendon. Latin nervus, with metathesis rv for ur of a pre-Latin neuros*, is cognate with Greek neûron sinew or tendon; later, nerve.

The sense of strength, vigor is first recorded in the plural nerves in 1603, that of courage, boldness in 1809, and that of impudence or cheek in 1887. —nervous adj. 1392, of or related to the nerves, containing nerves or sinews; borrowed from Latin nervōsus sinewy, from nervus sinew; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of suffering from a disorder of the nerves is first recorded in 1734, and that of restless, agitated in 1740.

-ness a suffix forming nouns meaning: 1 quality, state, or condition of being, as in blackness, preparedness. 2 action or behavior, as in carefulness. 3 an instance of being or involving some quality or condition, as in kindness. Middle English -ness, -nes, developed from Old English -ness, -nes, -nyss, -nys; cognate with Old Frisian -nesse, -nisse, Old Saxon -nesse, -nissi, -nussi, Middle Dutch -nisse, -nesse (modern Dutch -nis), and Old High German -nissa, -nassi, -nussi (modern German -nis).

The initial n in the suffix was originally part of the stem of the preceding word as found in Gothic where the suffix is -assus, as in ibnassus evenness (ibn even + -assus -ness).

nest n. Old English nest bird's nest, snug retreat (probably about 750); cognate with Middle Low German nest bird's nest, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch nest, and Old High German nest (modern German Nest), from Proto-Germanic nistaz*. —v. Probably before 1200 næstien; later nesten (probably before 1300); from the noun; replacement of Old English (before 830) nistan; cognate with Middle Dutch, Old High German, and modern German nisten to nest, from Proto-Germanic nistjanan*.

nestle v. About 1300 nestlen build a nest, settle; developed from Old English (about 1025) nestlian build a nest, from nest NEST, and cognate with Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, and Middle Low German nestelen to build a nest.

The meaning of settle comfortably or snugly is first recorded in 1687, and that of press or lie close, as if in a nest, about 1696.

nestling n. About 1399, probably formed from English nest + -ling.

net¹ n. mesh. Old English (before 830) net; cognate with Old Saxon netti net, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch net, Old High German nezzi (modern German Netz), Old Icelandic net (Danish net, Norwegian nett, Swedish nät), Gothic nati, from Proto-Germanic natjan*, related to nōt*- whence Old Icelandic nōt trawling net. —v. Before 1425 netten; from the noun.

net² adj. remaining after deductions. Probably before 1300 net worthy, pure, fine, elegant; borrowed from Old French net clean, pure, bright. The meaning of remaining after deductions is first recorded in 1418, probably borrowed from Italian netto remaining after deductions. —v. 1758, from the adjective. —n. 1910, from the adjective.

nether adj. About 1200 nether lower; developed from Old English (before 971) neothra, earlier niothera (before 830); from nither, niothor (adv.) down, downwards (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian nithera (adj.), nither (adv.) down, downwards, Old Saxon nitheri (adj.), nithar (adv.), Middle Dutch nēder (adv.), modern Dutch neder, neer, Old High German nidari, nidaro (adj.), nidar (adv.), modern German nieder (adj. and adv.), and Old Icelandic nedhri, nedharri (adj.), nidhr (adv.), from Proto-Germanic nitheraz*.

nettle n. Before 1200 netle; later nettle (before 1300); developed from Old English (before 800) nete; cognate with Old Saxon netela nettle, Middle Dutch nētel (modern Dutch netel), Old High German nezzila (modern German Nessel), and Norwegian nesle, netle, from Proto-Germanic natilōn*, diminutive of natōn*, the source of Old High German nazza nettle. —v. Probably before 1400 netlen irritate, provoke, sting with nettles; from the noun.

neur- the form of neuro- before vowels, as in neural, neuritis.

neural adj. 1839–47, formed from English neur- + *-al*¹.

neuralgia n. 1822–34, New Latin neuralgia, formed from Greek neûron nerve + álgos pain.

neuritis n. 1840, formed from English neur- + -itis.

neuro- a combining form meaning nerve, nerve tissue, or nervous system, as in neurobiology, neuromuscular. Borrowed from Greek neuro-, combining form of neûron nerve.

neurology n. 1681 neurologie, borrowed from New Latin neurologia, from neuro- nerve + -logia -logy.

neuron n. 1891, borrowed from German Neuron, from Greek neûron sinew, cord, (later) nerve.

neuropterous adj. 1802, borrowed from New Latin Neuroptera the order name, formed from Greek neûron vein, tendon, nerve + pterón wing; for suffix see -OUS.

neurosis n. 1776–84, disorder or disease of the nervous system; New Latin neurosis, formed from Greek neûron nerve + New Latin -osis abnormal condition.

The meaning of a mental disorder is first recorded in 1871.

neurotic adj. 1775, acting upon the nerves; later affected by neurosis (1887); formed in English from Greek neûron nerve + English -otic, as in hypnotic, erotic. —n. 1896, from the adjective; earlier, a drug having an effect on the nervous system (1661).

neuter adj. Before 1398 neutir, neutre; borrowed through Old French neutre, and directly from Latin neuter (ne- not, no + uter either), probably a loan translation of Greek oudéteros neither, neuter. —n. About 1450 neutre, from the adjective. —v. 1903, from the noun or adjective.

neutral adj. 1471 neuteral composed of contrasting elements; borrowed through Middle French neutal, or directly from Latin neutrālis of neuter gender, from neuter NEUTER; for suffix see -AL¹.

The meaning of on neither side in a quarrel or war is first recorded in English in 1549, probably adopted from Medieval Latin. The sense in chemistry of having neither acid nor alkaline properties, is first recorded in 1661; and that in electricity of neither positive nor negative in charge, in 1837. —n. About 1449, probably from the adjective. —neutrality n. About 1475, neutral position; borrowed from Middle French neutralité, or directly from Medieval Latin neutralitatem (nominative neutralitas) a neutral condition, from Latin neutrālis of neuter gender, neutral; for suffix see -ITY. —neutralize v. Before 1665, remain neutral; (implied in neutralizer 1628); borrowed from French neutraliser, from neutre neuter, from Latin neuter; for suffix see -IZE.

neutrino n. 1934, borrowed from Italian neutrino, formed from neutrone neutron + -ino (diminutive suffix).

neutron n. 1921, from English neutr(al) + -on, as in electron, proton. Much earlier (1899) it was used to mean “combination of a normal electron and a hypothetical positive electron.”

never adv. 1137 nevre, later never (probably about 1150); developed from Old English (before 725) næfre, a compound of ne not, no + æfre ever. —nevermore adv. (1123) —nevertheless adv. (before 1325) new adj. Probably about 1200 new; developed from Old English nēowe, nīowe (before 830); earlier nūwe (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian nie, nī new, Old Saxon niuwī, Middle Dutch nieuwe, nūwe, nīe (modern Dutch nieuw), Old High German niuwī (modern German neu), Old Icelandic nȳr (Swedish and Danish ny), and Gothic niujis; from Proto-Germanic newjaz*. —adv. About 1307 newe recently; earlier nywe again, anew (about 1280); developed from Old English niwe recently (before 971), from the Old English adjective. —newly adv. Before 1325 newli; developed from Old English niwlice (before 899), from niwe, adj. + -liche. —new moon (Old English, about 1000) —New Testament (before 1398) —New World the Americas (1555). —New Year (probably about 1200, in New Yeres Day)

newel n. 1362 nowell, borrowed from Old French novel, noel knob, newel, from Vulgar Latin nōdellus* little knot, diminutive of Latin nōdulus, itself diminutive of nōdus knot.

newfangled adj. Possibly before 1470 neufanglyd very fond of novelty; from earlier neufangel (about 1250), formed from Middle English neu NEW + -fangel (a form occurring only in this compound), from the root of Old English fōn to capture (see FANG). Newfangled in the sense of lately come into fashion, novel, is first recorded before 1533.

news n. Before 1382 newes new things; plural of earlier new, newe new thing (about 1200); from new, adj., NEW. The meaning of tidings is first recorded probably before 1437. —newspaper n. (1670) newt n. Before 1425 newte, from the misdivision of an ewte as newte. Ewte is a variant of Middle English evete EFT.

newton n. 1904, named after the English mathematician and physicist Isaac Newton.

next adj. Probably before 1200 nexte, nexte nearest or closest; developed from Old English nēht- (about 725); nēhta, nȳhta (about 725, West Saxon, in Beowulf), nēsta (before 830, Anglian); superlative forms of West Saxon nēah, Anglian nēh NIGH; see -EST. Cognate superlatives include Old Frisian nēst nearest, Old Saxon nāhist, Middle Dutch naest (modern Dutch naast), Old High German nāhost, nāhisto (modern German nächst), and Old Icelandic næstr (Danish næst, Norwegian nest, Swedish näst). —adv. Probably before 1200 nest most recently, just, and nexte, in the nearest position, soonest, last; developed from Old English (before 900) nēht, nēht nearest, next, last; superlative forms of nēah, nēh NIGH; and reinforced in Middle English by development from the adjective. —prep. Probably before 1200 nest nearest to; later next (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (before 900) nēht, nēht, from the adverb, and reinforced in Middle English by development from the adverb.

nexus n. 1663, connection, link, borrowing of Latin nexus (genitive nexūs), from nectere to bind.

niacin n. 1942, formed from ni(cotinic) ac(id) + -in². Niacin was coined, principally as a commercialism, to replace the term nicotinic acid.

nib n. 1585, beak or bill; originally Scottish variant of neb (about 700, in Old English); cognate with Middle Low German nebbe beak, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch nebbe, and Old Icelandic nef, Danish næb, Swedish näbb, Norwegian nebb, from Proto-Germanic nabjan*. The meaning of point of a pen appeared in 1611.

nibble v. 1500–20, from nebyllen to peck at, nibble at (before 1460); perhaps borrowed from Low German nibbeln or knibbeln to nibble, gnaw. —n. 1658, act of nibbling; later, small bite (1838); from the verb.

nice adj. Probably before 1300 nyce foolish or ignorant; borrowed from Old French nice silly, from Latin nescius ignorant (ne- not; see NO + scire know). Several other senses occur in Middle English, including: timid (before 1300), fussy or fastidious (probably about 1380), dainty, delicate (about 1405). The extended meanings of precise, careful, punctilious, are first recorded in the 1500's and the current popular meanings of agreeable or delightful, in 1769, and that of kind or thoughtful in 1830.

nicety n. 1369 nicete foolishness, borrowed from Old French niceté (nice silly + -ité -ity). The meaning of minute distinction, subtle point (usually plural in form), is first recorded in 1589, and that of precision or accuracy in 1660.

niche n. 1611, borrowing of French niche, from Italian nicchia niche, nook, from nicchio seashell, probably from Latin mitulus mussel (the change from m to n has not been fully explained).

The figurative meaning of a place or position for which a person is suited is first recorded in 1726. The ecological meaning of a place of an organism or species within a community is first recorded in 1927.

nick n. Probably before 1450 nik; of uncertain origin, but possibly influenced by Middle French niche niche. The figurative expression in the nick of time, is first recorded in 1643. —v. 1523, from the noun.

nickel n. 1755, borrowing of Swedish nickel, shortened form of kopparnickel the copper-colored ore from which nickel was first obtained. Swedish kopparnickel was a half-translation of German Kupfernickel, literally, copper demon (Kupfer COPPER¹ + Nickel demon, goblin, rascal). The ore was called "copper demon" because it resembled copper but yielded none; compare the etymology of COBALT.

The meaning of a coin made partly of nickel appeared in 1857 but was not applied to a five-cent piece before 1881.

nickelodeon n. 1888, motion-picture theater, a blend of nickel (the coin) and -odeon, as found in Melodeon music hall (1840, ultimately from Greek ōideion building for musical performances); also applied to a jukebox that played a record for a nickel (1938).

nickname n. 1440 neke name, from a neke name, misdivision of original an eke name, literally, an additional name. Middle English eke addition or increase, developed from Old English (894) ēaca an increase, related to ēacian to increase, EKE. —v. 1536, to misname; later, give a nickname to (1567–69); from the noun.

nicotine n. 1819 nicotin; later nicotine (1839); borrowing of French nicotine, from New Latin Nicotiana the tobacco plant, from Jean Nicot, French ambassador to Portugal who introduced tobacco into France about 1560; for suffix see -INE². —nicotinic adj. 1873, shortened from nicotinic acid formed when nicotine is oxidized; formed from nicotine + -ic + acid, as a loan translation of German Nikotinsäure.

nictitate v. 1822–34 to wink, in nictitating membrane inner eyelid (1713); borrowed from Medieval Latin nictitatus, past participle of nictitare, frequentative form of Latin nictāre wink, blink; for suffix see -ATE¹. An earlier nictate (1691, borrowed from Latin nictāre) is now heard in place of nictitate.

niece n. About 1300 nece; borrowed from Old French niece; earlier niepce, from Latin neptia, from neptis granddaughter, niece, related to nepōs grandson, NEPHEW. Niece replaced native Middle English nifte niece; developed from Old English nift, from Proto-Germanic neftiz*.

nifty adj. 1868, perhaps a shortened and altered form of magnificent; for suffix see -Y¹.

niggard n. About 1384 nygard; possibly from earlier nig stingy (about 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hnögr stingy, from Proto-Germanic Hnauw-jaz*); for suffix see -ARD. Old Icelandic hnögr is cognate with Old English hneaw stingy, niggardly, which did not survive in Middle English, and with Middle High German nouwe careful, exact (modern German genau), Middle Low German nouwe small, tight, narrow, and Middle Dutch nauwe (modern Dutch nauw), from Proto-Germanic Hnauwaz*. —adj. Probably before 1400 nygard, from the noun. —niggardly adj. 1561, formed from English niggard, n. + -ly².

niggle v. 1619, possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian nigla be busy with trifles, perhaps related to the source of English NIGGARD).

The meaning of criticize, nag, annoy, is first recorded in 1886, and earlier in the specific sense of complain of trifles from ill temper or bad humor (1844).

The participial adjective nigging is first recorded in 1599, and may imply a verb form before 1619.

nigh adv., adj. Probably before 1200 nih; later neigh (before 1325); nygh (1369); developed from Old English, West Saxon nēah, (about 725, in Beowulf), and Anglian nēh (about 830), of which the comparative form was nēar NEAR, and the superlative form was nēhst NEXT. Phonetic changes obscured the relationship of the comparative and the superlative forms of nigh, so that new forms, nigher and nighest, developed in the late 1300's.

Cognates of Old English nēah, nēh include Old Frisian nei, nī nigh, Middle Dutch na, nae (modern Dutch na), Old Saxon and Old High German nāh (modern German nah), Old Icelandic nā- (in combinations like nā-būi neighbor), and Gothic nēhu, nēhwa.

night n. Before 1250 nigt nigt; later night (about 1300); developed from Old English niht, which shows replacement of the vowel of older West Saxon neah, Anglian neht, neht by that of oblique cases (genitive nihte, dative niht). Cognates of Old English neah, neht include Old Frisian, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch nacht night, Old Saxon and Old High German naht (modern German Nacht), Old Icelandic nätt, nött (Norwegian and Swedish natt, Danish nat), and Gothic nahts. For development of the spelling with -ght, see FIGHT.

nightingale n. About 1250 nigtingale, later nyghtyngale (about 1380); alteration of nyhtegale (probably before 1250); developed from Old English (about 700) naectigalæ; cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German nahtagala, nahtigala (modern German Nachtigall), and Middle Dutch nachtegale, nachtegaal (modern Dutch nachtegaal), from Proto-Germanic naht-* night + galōn* to sing, related to Old English giellan YELL. The appearance of the medial -n- has no etymological significance.

nightmare n. About 1300 nigt-mare an evil female spirit afflicting sleepers with a feeling of suffocation; later nytmare (about 1350), and nyghte mare (1440) a compound of nigt night + mare goblin that causes nightmares, incubus, found in Old English mare, developed from mera, mære (before 700); cognate with Middle Dutch mare, maer incubus, Old High German mara, Middle High German mar, mare (dialectal modern German Mahr nightmare), and Old Icelandic mara incubus (Swedish mara nightmare, Danish and Norwegian mare incubus, nightmare), from Proto-Germanic marōn*.

The sense of any bad or frightening dream is first recorded in 1829, and that of a very distressing experience, in 1831.

nihilism n. Before 1817, borrowed from German Nihilismus, formed from Latin nihil nothing, NIL + German -ism -ism.

-nik a suffix used to designate a person associated with or characterized by a thing or expression, usually with a jocular or derisive intent, as in beatnik, folkenik (folk-song devotee), no-goodnik, peacenik. Borrowed from Yiddish -nik, as in nudnik a bore, from Russian -nik, a common personal suffix, as in kolkhoznik member of a kolkhoz.

nīl n. 1833, borrowing of Latin nīl, contraction of nihil, nihilum nothing (ne- not + hilum small thing, trifle).

nimble adj. Before 1325 nemel; later nymyl (before 1440), and nymbyll (1496); developed probably from Old English (about 1000) nāemel quick to grasp (related to niman to take), and from Old English (before 1000) numol, from the participial stem num- of niman; for suffix see -LE². Old English niman is cognate with Old Frisian nima to take, Old Saxon niman, Old High German neman (modern German nehmen), Old Icelandic nema, and Gothic niman, from Proto-Germanic nemanan*. The b in nimble is analogous to the b in bramble.

nimbus n. 1616, bright cloud surrounding a god; borrowing of Latin nimbus cloud, perhaps related to nebula cloud, mist. The meaning of a halo is first recorded in 1727–38. The meteorological sense of a kind of rain cloud is first recorded in 1803.

nincompoop n. 1706, alteration (probably influenced by ninny) of earlier nicompoop (before 1676); of uncertain origin.

nine adj. Probably before 1200 nihene; later niene (before 1250), nine (before 1300); developed from Old English (about 840) nigen; cognate with Old Frisian nigun, niugun nine, Old Saxon nigun, Middle Dutch nēghen (modern Dutch negen), Old High German niun (modern German neun), Old Icelandic nīu (Swedish nio, Danish and Norwegian ni), and Gothic niun, from Proto-Germanic niwun*. —nineteen adj. About 1300 nintene, later nynetene (before 1338); developed from Old English (before 1000) nigontēne (nigon nine + -tēne -teen, from tēn TEN). —ninety adj. About 1250 nigenti; later ninty (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) nigontig (nigon nine + -tig group of ten, -TY¹). —ninth adj. About 1300 nynthe; developed from Old English nigonthe (nigon nine + -tha -TH²); for suffix see FIFTH and -TH.

ninny n. 1593, perhaps derived from a misdivision and shortening of an inno(cent) as a ninny; for suffix see -Y².

niobium n. 1845, New Latin niobium, from Latin Niobē (from Greek Niōbē Niobe, daughter of Tantalus) + New Latin -ium; so called because niobium occurs in nature with the element tantalum.

nip¹ v. to bite suddenly. Probably before 1387 nyppen; probably borrowed from Middle Low German nīpen to nip; cognate with Middle Dutch nīpen to pinch (modern Dutch nippen), and Old Icelandic hnippa to prod. —n. 1549, from the verb.

nip² n. small drink of alcohol. 1796, a shortened form of earlier nipperkin small measure of spirits (1671, possibly of Dutch or Low German origin), reinforced by the sense of a fragment or bit pinched off (1606, perhaps mistakenly associated with *nip*¹). —v. 1887, from the noun.

nipple n. 1538, alteration of earlier neble (1530), probably diminutive of neb (probably about 1200, bill, beak, or snout; found in Old English, about 725).

nirvana or Nirvana n. 1836, borrowing of Sanskrit nirvāṇa -a blowing out or becoming extinguished, extinction, disappearance (nir-, nir- out + rana blowing).

nit n. About 1350 nete; later nit (1373); developed from Old English (about 700) hnutu; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch nete nit (modern Dutch neet), and Old High German hniz, (modern German Nisse), from Proto-Germanic Hnitō*. —nit-pick v. 1962, search for petty faults; back formation from earlier nitpicker (1951).

niter n. About 1400 nitre sodium carbonate; borrowing of Old French nitre, learned borrowing from Latin nitrum, from Greek nítron, from Egyptian ntr. The meaning "saltpeter" appeared in the 1600's. —nitrate n. 1794, borrowed from French nitrate, from nitre; for suffix see -ate²; and probably in some instances formed from English nitric + -ate². —nitric adj. 1794, borrowed from French nitrique, from Old French nitre niter; for suffix see -ic; and in some instances formed from English niter + -ic. —nitrous adj. 1601, reborrowed, perhaps through influence of French nitreux, from Latin nitrōsus, from nitrum niter; for suffix see -OUS. An earlier form nitrose is found in Middle English, probably before 1425; borrowed from Latin nitrōsus.

nitrogen n. 1794, borrowing of French nitrogène, formed from Greek nítron NITER + French -gène -gen, producing; the French word elements translate as "niter-producing," because nitrogen was discovered in the analysis of nitric acid. The term was coined in 1790, though the gas had been first produced from air in 1772 and named "mephitic air."

nitroglycerin or nitroglycerine n. 1857, formed from English nitro-, combining form for nitric acid + glycerin.

nitty-gritty n. 1961 knitty-gritty; American English (said to be originally used chiefly by black jazz musicians), of uncertain origin (perhaps ultimately connected with nit and grits finely ground corn). —adj. 1966, from the noun.

nitwit n. 1922, probably formed from earlier nit nothing (1895, from dialectal German or Yiddish nit, from Middle High German; see NIX¹ nothing) + wit; perhaps influenced in meaning by nit.

nix¹ n. nothing, none. 1789, probably a borrowing of German nix, dialectal variant of nichts nothing, from Middle High German nihtes, from genitive of niht, nit nothing, from Old High German niwiht (ni, ne no + wiht thing, creature); compare NAUGHT. —adv. 1909, from the noun. —v. 1903, from the noun.

nix² n. water fairy in German legends. 1833, borrowing of German Nix, from Old High German nihhus water spirit, water monster; cognate with Middle Dutch nicor (modern Dutch nikker) malevolent water spirit, Old Icelandic nykr water goblin, hippopotamus, and Old English nicor monster, water spirit, hippopotamus. —nixie n. 1816, borrowed from German Nixe (Old High German nihhussa), feminine of Nix.

no adv. About 1150 no; developed from Old English (before 725) nā never, no (ne not, no, + ā ever). Old English ne is cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Old High German ne, ni not, Old Icelandic ne, nē, and Gothic ni, from Proto-Germanic ne*. Compounds similar to Old English nā are found in Old Frisian nā, nō never, no, Old Saxon and Old High German neo, nio (modern German nie) never, Old Icelandic nei no. —adj. Before 1131 no, variant of Middle English non, developed from Old English nān, adj.; see NONE. As an adjective, the form no was originally used only before consonants. —n. Probably before 1300, from the adverb; later 1588, readapted from the adverb. —nowhere adv. Probably before 1200 nowher, developed from Old English nāhwær (971), nōhwær (before 1050). —n. 1831.

nobelium n. 1957, New Latin nobelium, formed from the name Nobel + -ium in reference to Alfred Nobel, and to the Nobel Institute for Physics, where work on the element was done.

nobility n. Probably about 1350 nobelte honor, majesty; later nobilite noble birth, rank, or character, also people of the noble class (before 1387); borrowed from Old French nobilité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin nōbilitātem (nominative nōbilitās), from nōbilis well-known, prominent, NOBLE; for suffix see -ITY.

noble adj. Probably before 1200 noble; borrowed from Old French noble, learned borrowing from Latin nobilis; earlier gnōbilis renowned, well known, noble, related to nōscere, gnōscere to come to KNOW.

The extended sense of worthy of honor or respect is first recorded probably before 1300.—n. About 1300, from the adjective.—nobleman n. Probably before 1200 noble man man of noble birth; later, nobleman (about 1300).

nobody pron. About 1303 nobody no person, no one (no, adj., not any + bodi body).

nock n. Before 1398 nokke; probably related to Middle Dutch nocke projection, point, tip (modern Dutch nok yardarm), Low German nock tip of a sail, and Old Icelandic hnykill knot, swelling (Swedish nock pin, peg, Norwegian nokke and Icelandic hnykur peak).

nocturnal adj. 1485, borrowed from Middle French nocturnal, or directly from Late Latin nocturnālis, from Latin nocturnus belonging to the night, from nox (genitive noctis) night; for suffix see -AL¹.

nocturne n. 1862, borrowed from French nocturne, noun use of Old French nocturne nocturnal, learned borrowing from Latin nocturnus NOCTURNAL.

The term nocturne was coined about 1814 by John Field, who wrote nocturnes to which those of Chopin are said to owe much in form and spirit, though Chopin's works popularized the term.

Nocturne, nocturn also appears in Middle English, probably before 1200, with the meaning of a group of Psalms used in the nocturns (a division of the office of matins); borrowed from Medieval Latin nocturna, from Latin nocturnus; see NOCTURNAL.

nod v. About 1390 nodden nod the head in drunkenness, sleepiness, gloominess, etc.; later, make a quick bow of the head in salutation, assent, etc. (1440, implied in the gerund noddynge); of unknown origin, but perhaps cognate with Old High German hnotōn to shake, (from Proto-Germanic Hnūdōjanan*), Middle High German notten move about, and Old Icelandic hnjóðha to push, hit, rivet.—n. 1440, from the verb.

node n. Probably before 1425, a knot or lump in the flesh; borrowed from Latin nōdus knot. The meaning of point of intersection is first recorded in 1665.—nodal adj. 1831, formed from English node + -al¹.

nodule n. Probably before 1425, a knot or lump in the flesh; later, small lump of some mineral (1695); borrowed from Latin nōdulus small knot, diminutive of nōdus knot.

Noel n. Probably about 1390 Nowel feast of Christmas; about 1395, cry of joy at the birth of Christ, especially in carols of the Annunciation and Nativity; earlier, in the surname Noel (1130); borrowed from Old French noel the Christmas season, variant of earlier nael, from Latin nātālis natal, in reference especially to the natal day of Christ, from nātus, past participle of nāscī be born. A later form (1811) was borrowed separately from modern French noël, from Old French noel.

noggin n. 1630, a small cup or mug; later, a small drink of liquor (1693); of unknown origin. Connection with nog a kind of strong ale (now chiefly in the compound eggnog) is possible.

The informal meaning of the head, is first recorded in 1866.

noise n. Probably before 1200 noise sound of a musical instrument; later nowse loud speech, outcry (about 1225), and noyse loud or unpleasant sound (about 1300); borrowed from Old French noise uproar or brawl, possibly from Gallo-Romance nausea* annoyance, discomfort, from Latin nausea disgust.—v. About 1380, noysen to praise; from the noun.—noisy adj. 1693, formed from English noise, n. + -y¹, and gradually replacing noiseful, first recorded before 1382.

noisome adj. Before 1382 nozesum harmful, troublesome; later noyesom, noysom (probably before 1425); formed from Middle English noye harm, misfortune (shortened form of anoi annoyance, from Old French, from anoier ANNOY) + -som -some¹.

nomad n. 1555 Nomades, wandering groups in Arabia; later Nomad member of a tribe that wanders in search of pasture (1587); borrowed possibly from Middle French nomade, and directly from Latin Nomas (genitive Nomadis), from Greek nomás (genitive nomádos) roaming, roving, grazing, related to nomós pasture.—nomadic adj. 1818, probably borrowed from Greek nomadikós pastoral, from nomás (genitive nomádos) roaming; also probably formed from English nomad + -ic.

nomenclature n. 1610, name; later, set of names (1664); borrowed from French nomenclature, or directly from Latin nōmenclātūra, from nōmenclātor namer (nōmen name + -clātor caller, from calāre call out); for suffix see -URE.

nominal adj. Before 1500 nominalle of nouns; later, of names (1620); borrowed from Latin nōminālis pertaining to a name or names, from nōmen (genitive nōminis) name; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of being so in name only, is first recorded in 1624.

nominate v. 1545, to name; later, to name as a candidate for office (1560); probably a back formation from nominatōn, and a shift in function from nominate named, called (about 1450), past participle; borrowed from Latin nōminātus, past participle of nōmināre to name, from nōmen (genitive nōminis) name; for suffix see -ATE¹.—nominatōn n. About 1412 nominatōn mention of a name; later nominatōn act of naming as a candidate (1430); borrowed from Middle French nominatōn, and directly from Latin nōminatōnem (nominative nōminatō), from nōmināre to name; for suffix see -ATION.—nominative adj. Before 1387 nominatyf, borrowed from Old French nominatif, learned borrowing from Latin nōminatīvus, from nōmināre to name; for suffix see -ATIVE.—nominee n. 1664, person named for something; later, person named as a candidate for office (1688); formed from English nomin(ate) + -ee.

non- a prefix meaning: 1 not or lack of, as in nonalcoholic, nonaggression, nonswimmer, non-European. 2 not real, sham, pretended, as in nonart, nonbook, nonevent. Non- is found in Middle English probably before 1200 with the meaning "not," in such formations as non-kinnes (none cunnes) no kind of, non- power (about 1378), nonsute (1308–9, in law); developed from Middle English non, adj., from Old English nān, and borrowed through Anglo-French noun-, Old French non-; both from Latin nōn-, from nōn not, not a, from unaccented Old Latin noenum, ne oinom not one (ne not, and oinom, neuter of oinos one).

nonagenarian n. 1804, formed in English from Latin nōn-āgenārius containing ninety (in Late Latin, n., a person ninety years old, from nōnāgenī ninety each, nōnāginīā ninety, from nōnus ninth) + English suffix -ian. —adj. 1893, from the noun.

nonagon n. 1688, formed irregularly in English from Latin nōnus ninth + English -agon, as in pentagon.

nonce n. Probably before 1200 for the nones, alteration by misdivision of for then anes for the one, in reference to a particular purpose or occasion. —adj. 1884, from the noun.

nonchalant adj. 1813; earlier, as two words non chalent (before 1734); borrowed from French nonchalant, from present participle of nonchaloir be indifferent to, have no concern for (non- not + chaloir have concern for, care for); for suffix see -ANT. —nonchalance n. 1678, borrowed from French nonchalance, from nonchalant nonchalant; for suffix see -ANCE.

nonconformity n. 1618, formed from English non- + conformity. —nonconformist n. (1619) nondescript adj. 1683, formed from English non- + Latin dēscriptus, past participle of dēscribere DESCRIBE. —n. 1693, from the adjective.

none pron. Probably about 1150 non; later none (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (probably about 750) nān not one, not any (ne not; see NO + ān one compare NONCE). —adv. Before 1200 non; later none (about 1300); from the pronoun.

nones or Nones n. pl. Probably before 1430, plural of none the fifth canonical hour, originally fixed for the ninth hour after sunrise, or about 3 P.M. (before 1225), and earlier non the office of nones (probably before 1200). The two forms are also recorded in the sense of midday: non, probably before 1200, and nones, about 1378; see NOON.

nonpareil adj. About 1450 nounparale, borrowed from Middle French nonpareil (non- not + pareil equal). —n. 1593, from the adjective. The meaning of a kind of candy is first recorded in 1697.

nonplus n. 1582, a state of perplexity; borrowed from Latin nōn plūs no more, no further. —v. 1591, from the noun.

nonresidence n. Probably about 1378 noun residence; later non residence (1425); probably borrowed from Medieval Latin non-residentia (non- + residentia; see RESIDENCE). —nonresident n. 1425; formed from English non- + resident.

nonsense n. 1614, formed, perhaps by influence of French nonsens, from English non- + sense. —nonsensical adj. 1655, formed from English nonsense + -ical.

noodle¹ n. ribbonlike dough. 1779; borrowed from German Nudel, of uncertain origin.

noodle² v. to improvise on a musical instrument. 1937, from the noun. —n. 1926, probably in allusion to *noodle*¹ from the suppleness of noodles in the reference to “fancy figures in saxophone, such as triple trills [that] often crowd out the melody” (Paul Whiteman, Jazz).

nook n. Probably about 1300 nok recess, corner, angle; later nok (probably about 1380); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian nok hook, bent figure).

The adjective nooked having (so many) corners or angles, is found probably before 1200; for suffix see *-ED*².

noon n. 1140 non midday, 12 o'clock in the daytime; later none (probably before 1200); developed from Old English nōn the canonical hour of nones, or 3 P.M. (about 725, in Beowulf); borrowed from Latin nōna hōra ninth hour (of daylight by Roman reckoning, or about 3 P.M.); nōna, feminine singular of nōnus ninth.

The meaning shifted from 3 P.M. to 12 o'clock when the time of church prayers changed from the ninth to the sixth hour. The spelling noon first appears about 1280.

noose n. About 1450 nose; probably borrowed from Old Provençal nous knot, from Latin nōdus knot. The spelling noose is first recorded about 1600.

nope adv. 1888, spelling representation of an emphatic form of no, adv., the letter p probably representing a sound of the closing of the lips after pronouncing the vowel. Compare YEP.

nor conj. About 1250, contraction of unaccented Middle English nauther, nouthur NEITHER; compare Old Frisian nander, nor neither; also sometimes said to be from ne, adv., and or, conj.

Nordic adj. 1898, borrowed probably from French nordique, from nord north, from Old French north, from Old English north NORTH; for suffix see -IC. It is also possible that the term in French and English was influenced by German Nordisch, from early modern High German nortisch (1534). —n. 1901, from the adjective.

norm n. 1821, reborrowed from French norme, from Old French, from Latin norma carpenter's square, rule, pattern, of uncertain origin. Modern English also had an earlier form norme (1635) which was a borrowing of French norme; and the Latinate norma (before 1676).

normal adj. Before 1500, typical, common (of a verb), borrowed from Late Latin normālis in conformity with rule, normal, from Latin, made according to a carpenter's square, from norma carpenter's square, rule, NORM. The sense in English of usual, regular (also in Late Latin), was surely in use before its first appearance in the record in 1828. —normalcy n. 1857, mathematical condition of being at right angles; later, general condition of being normal or usual (1893); formed from English normal + -cy. —normality n. Before 1849, probably formed from English normal + -ity, perhaps by influence of earlier French normalité (1834). —normalize v. 1865, formed from English normal + -ize.

normative adj. 1880, probably borrowed from French normatif (feminine normative), from Latin norma rule, NORM; for suffix see -ATIVE.

Norse n. 1598, probably borrowed from earlier modern Dutch Noorsch, adj., Norwegian (now Noors), from noordsch (now noords) northern, from noord NORTH; also perhaps in some instances borrowed from modern Danish or Norwegian norsk.

A parallel form Northman has existed in English since the time of Alfred (before 899), appearing in Old English until about 1000 and then reappearing in 1605. In Middle English the form was altered to northern man, appearing before 1200. —adj. 1768, from the noun.

north adv. Old English north (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon north north, Middle Low German nort, Middle Dutch nort, noort (modern Dutch noord), Old High German and modern German nord, and Old Icelandic nordhr (Norwegian and Swedish nord), from Proto-Germanic nurthra-*.

The word for north in the Romance languages came ultimately from English: French Nord was a borrowing of Old English North, and Spanish Norte and Italian Nord were borrowed from French. —adj. 1131, found in Old English north- (about 725, in Beowulf), from north, adv. —n. Probably before 1200, from the adverb. —northerly adj. 1551, situated toward the north; from north, adj., on the pattern of westerly, easterly; for suffix see *-LY*². —adv. 1596, in a northern position or direction; for suffix see *-LY*¹. —northern adj. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (about 890) northerne (north north + -erne, suffix denoting direction); cognate with Old High German nordrōni northern, and Old Icelandic norðrœnn, nordhrœnn Nordic. —northward adv. About 1300, developed from Old English (about 1016) northweard (north north + -weard -ward).

nose n. About 1150 nose; developed from Old English nosu (before 899, from Proto-Germanic nusūs*) and cognate with Old Frisian nose nose, Middle Dutch nōse (modern Dutch neus), and Middle Low German noster nostril (modern German Nüster); and probably related to a similar Old English form, nasu nose (from Proto-Germanic nasuz*), cognate with Middle Low German nāse nose, Middle Dutch nāse, Old High German nasa (modern German Nase), Old Icelandic nǫs. —v. 1577–87, perceive the smell of (something); later, pry or search (1648); from the noun.

nosh v. 1957, borrowed from Yiddish nashn nibble, from Middle High German naschen, from Old High German hnas-cōn, nascōn to nibble, from Proto-Germanic Hnaskwōjanan*. —n. 1917, restaurant or snack bar, perhaps developed in English from a borrowing of Yiddish nash, from nashn, v.

nostalgia n. 1770, severe homesickness, New Latin nostalgia and Modern Greek nostalgia, both formed from Greek nóstos homecoming + algos pain, grief, distress.

The transferred sense of wistful yearning for a past or earlier time, is first recorded in 1920. —nostalgic adj. 1806, caused by nostalgia; later, affected with nostalgia (1869); formed from English nostalgia + -ic.

nostril n. Before 1387 nostrille, developed from Old English (about 1000) nostryrl (nosu nose + thyrl hole). An earlier formation is found probably about 1200, from nase, nese, nose nose + thril hole.

nostrum n. 1602, patent medicine; borrowed from Latin nostrum remedium our remedy; presumably prepared by the person presenting it. Latin nostrum is the neuter form of noster our, ours, from nōs we. The meaning of special or favorite remedy, panacea, is first recorded in 1749.

nosy or nosey adj. 1620, having a prominent nose; later, inquisitive (1882); formed from English nose, n. + *-y*¹. An independent formation nasee having a big nose (before 1338) was borrowed through Anglo-French, from Old French nasé, ultimately from Latin nāsus nose.

not adv. About 1250 not; later nat (1303); unstressed variants of noht, naht not, in no way, NAUGHT.

notable adj. About 1340 notabile, notabil worthy of notice; later notable (about 1390); borrowed from Old French notable and directly from Latin notābilis noteworthy, extraordinary, from notāre to note; for suffix see -ABLE. —n. notable person. About 1447, probably from the adjective in English.

notary n. About 1303 notarye secretary; later, notary or clerk; borrowed probably through Old French notarie, and directly from Latin notārius shorthand writer, clerk, secretary, from nota shorthand character, letter, NOTE; for suffix see -ARY. —notarize v. 1935, formed from notary + -ize.

notation n. 1570, explanation of a word; later, note or annotation (1584); borrowed through Middle French notation, and directly from Latin notātiōnem (nominative notātiō) a marking, notation, explanation, from notāre to NOTE; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of representation of quantities, or values by symbols or signs, is first recorded in 1706.

notch n. 1577, probably alteration (by a misdivision of an otch as a notch) of Middle French oche notch, from Old French ochier, oschier to notch; of uncertain origin. —v. 1597, cut (hair) unevenly; later, make notches in (1600); from the noun. A Middle English verb ochen to cut or slash, corresponding to the noun form och* or otch*, is recorded probably before 1400 and was borrowed from Old French ochier, oschier.

note n. Probably before 1300 note musical note; also, mark or sign (about 1380); borrowed from Old French note, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin nota a mark, sign, letter, note, very possibly an alteration of Old Latin gnata* under the influence of gnōscere to recognize (Latin nōscere come to know). The meaning of a record of the gist or substance of something, is first recorded probably before 1400. It is also possible that in some instances, the noun developed from the earlier verb use. —v. Probably before 1200 noten to take mental note of; later, to record in writing (before 1325); borrowed from Old French noter to notice, from Latin notāre to mark, remark on, note, from nota a note.

—noted adj. Probably about 1380, formed from noten note + -ed *-ed*¹.

nothing n. Probably about 1175 nothing; later nothing not any thing (probably before 1200); found in Old English (about 1000) nāthing, nān thing (nān not one, see NONE + thing THING). The sense of an insignificant thing, trifle, is first recorded in 1601. —adv. Probably before 1200 nothing; later nothing (about 1250); from the noun. —adj. 1961, insignificant, worthless; from the noun.

notice n. About 1412 notise acquaintance; also 1415 notice knowledge, information; borrowed from Middle French notice, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin nōtitia a being known, fame, knowledge, from nōtus known, past participle of nōscere come to KNOW. —v. About 1410 notisen notify, proclaim; probably from the noun. The meaning of observe, perceive is first recorded in 1757.

notify n. About 1385 notifien take notice of, observe; also, about 1390, inform or indicate; borrowed from Old French notifier make known, from Latin nōtificāre make known, from a lost adjective nōtificus* making known, from nōtus known, see NOTICE + the root of facere make; for suffix see -FY. —notification n. About 1380 notificacioun, borrowed from Old French notification, from Medieval Latin notificationem (nominative notificatio), from Latin nōtificāre make known, notify; for suffix see -ATION.

notion n. Before 1398 nocioun concept, conception; later notien inclination, desire (1450); borrowed from Latin nōtiōnem (nominative nōtiō) concept, from nōscere come to KNOW; for suffix see -TION. —notional adj. 1597, formed from English notion + *-al*¹; also recorded in Middle English notional (before 1398); borrowed from Medieval Latin notionalis, from Latin nōtiōnem (nominative nōtiō).

notorious adj. 1548–49, borrowed from Medieval Latin notorius well-known, commonly known, from Latin nōtus known, past participle of nōscere come to KNOW; for suffix see -OUS. —notoriety n. 1592, borrowed through Middle French notoriété, or directly from Medieval Latin notorietatem (nominative notorietas) condition of being well-known, from notorius well-known; for suffix see *-TY*².

notwithstanding prep. Probably about 1378 not-withstandinge not prevented by, in spite of (not + withstanding, present participle of withstand prevent, oppose; loan translation of Medieval Latin non obstante being no hindrance). —adv. 1425 notwithstanding; from the preposition. —conj. although. Before 1420, from the preposition.

nougat n. 1827, borrowing of French nougat, from Provençal nougat cake made with almonds, from Old Provençal nogat, from noga, nuga nut, from Vulgar Latin nuca*, from Latin nux (genitive nucis) NUT.

nought pron., n., adj., adv. See NAUGHT.

noun n. Before 1398, borrowed through Anglo-French noun name, noun, Old French nom, non, from Latin nōmen name, noun.

nourish v. Probably before 1300 norisshen to bring up (a young person), to raise; also about 1300 norischen to feed; borrowed from Old French norris- (found in norrissement), stem of norrir, nurrir, from Vulgar Latin nutrire*, from Latin nūtrire to feed, nurse, foster, support, preserve; for suffix see *-ISH*².

—nourishment n. Probably before 1300 norisement nurture, fostering; later nurshement fuel (before 1382) and norisschement food, sustenance (1413); borrowed from Old French norrissement, from norris-, stem of norrir nourish; for suffix see -MENT.

nova n. 1877, New Latin, from Latin nova, feminine singular of novus NEW, used with stēlla star (a Latin feminine noun). The original use of nova in English was to denote a new star or nebula not previously recorded.

novel¹ adj. new. About 1450 novel new, young; later novell recent, strange (before 1500); borrowed from Middle French novel new, fresh, recent, from Old French, learned borrowing from Latin novellus new, young, recent, diminutive of novus NEW. —novelty n. About 1384 novelte newness, innovation; borrowed from Old French noveleté newness, from novel new; for suffix see *-TY*².

novel² n. story. 1566, one of the tales or short stories in a collection; later, long work of fiction (1639); borrowed from Italian novella short story news, from Latin novella new things, neuter plural or feminine of novellus NOVEL¹. —novelist n. 1728, formed, probably by influence of Italian novellista, from English *novel*² + -ist.

November n. Probably about 1200 novembre, borrowed from Old French novembre, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin November, from novem NINE (ninth month of the Roman calendar, which began with March; see DECEMBER). The Old English name was Blōtmōnath month of sacrifice (for time when early Saxons made provision for winter by sacrificing many animals they then butchered).

novena n. 1853, borrowing of Medieval Latin novena, feminine of Latin novēnus ninefold, from novem NINE.

novice n. 1340 novice, novis beginner, probationer in a religious order; borrowed from Old French novice, novisse, from Medieval Latin novicius, noun use of Latin novicius (of a slave) newly imported, inexperienced, from novus NEW. —novitiate n. 1600, borrowed from French noviciat, from Medieval Latin noviciatus, from novicius novice; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

novocaine or novocain n. 1905, originally a trademark; formed in English from Latin novus new + English -caine, abstracted from cocaine.

now adv. Probably before 1200 now; later now (about 1250); developed from Old English (before 725) nū; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon nū now, Middle Dutch nū (modern Dutch nu), Old High German nū, nu (modern German nun), Old Icelandic nū (Swedish nu), and Gothic nu. —conj. About 1250 now, now; developed from Old English (before 725) nū; from the adverb. —adj. About 1385 now current; from the adverb. Probably before 1300 now, from the adverb.

nowadays adv. Before 1376 nowadayes, (now NOW + *adaye*s during the day).

noxious adj. Before 1500 noxius, borrowing of Latin noxius hurtful, injurious; later noxious (1612); re-borrowed from Latin noxius, from noxa hurt, damage, related to nocēre to hurt, and nex slaughter; for suffix see -IOUS.

nozzle n. Before 1450 noselle socket on a candlestick, diminutive of nose NOSE; for suffix see -LE¹. The meaning of small spout is first recorded in 1683.

nth adj. 1852 to the nth to the utmost, figurative use of the mathematical term indicating an indefinite number; formed from n, abbreviation for number + -th².

nuance n. 1781, borrowed from French nuance, slight difference, shade of color, from nuer to shade, from nue cloud, from Gallo-Romance nūba*, from Latin nūbēs cloud, related to obnūbere to veil; for suffix see -ANCE.

nub n. 1594, husk of silk; later, knob, lump (1727); variant of dialectal knub (1570), probably variant of KNOB. The figurative meaning of a point or gist of anything is first recorded in 1834.

nubbin n. 1692, stunted ear of corn, diminutive of NUB. The sense of a small piece is first recorded in 1857.

nubile adj. Before 1642, borrowed from French nubile, or directly from Latin nūbilis marriageable, from nūbere take as a husband.

nuclear adj. 1846, of or like the nucleus of a cell, formed from English nucleus + -ar, probably by influence of French nucléaire. The use of nuclear in physics with reference to an atomic nucleus or nuclei is first recorded in 1914.

nucleic acid 1892, probably a translation of German Nukleinsäure (Nuklein substance obtained from cell nuclei + Säure acid). English nucleic was formed from nucleus + -ic.

nucleo- a combining form meaning nucleus, as in nucleoplasm, or nucleic acid, as in nucleoprotein. Adapted from New Latin nucleus nucleus, from Latin nucleus kernel.

nucleon n. 1923, a proton; formed from nucle-, abstracted from nucleus + -on, as in electron. The meaning of any nuclear particle was first recorded from 1939. —nucleonics n. 1945, a blend of nucleon and -onics, probably abstracted from electronics; for suffix see -ICS.

nucleus n. 1708, part of the head of a comet; later, central part, core (1762); re-borrowed from Latin nucleus, nuculeus kernel, formed from nucula little nut, diminutive of nux (genitive nucis) NUT. The word also appeared in Middle English as nucle kernel (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin nucleus.

The first recorded reference to the nucleus of a cell is found in 1831. The meaning in physics, "part of an atom," is first recorded in 1844; however, the sense of a positively charged central part of an atom was introduced in 1912.

nude adj. 1531, (in law) unsupported, not formally attested; later, mere, plain, simple (1551); borrowed from Latin nūdus NAKED. The meaning "unclothed, uncovered" is recorded in 1611. —n. 1708, loan translation of French nu, from Latin nūdus naked. —nudism n. 1929, borrowed from French nudisme (Latin nūdus naked + French -isme -ism). Nudist appeared at the same time, borrowed from French nudiste or formed from English nude, nud(ism) + -ist. —nudity n. 1611, borrowed from French nudité, or directly from Late Latin nūditatem (nominative nūditās), from Latin nūdus nude; for suffix see -ITY.

nudge v. 1675, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian nugge and nyggje to jostle, rub, Icelandic nugga to rub, massage, and Swedish gnaga to nibble, GNAW). —n. 1836, from the verb.

nugatory adj. 1603, worthless; also 1605, invalid; borrowed from Latin nūgātorius worthless, futile, from nūgātor (genitive nūgātōris) jester, trifler, from nūgārī to trifle, from nūgae (genitive nūgārum) trifles.

nugget n. 1852, lump of native gold, perhaps from dialectal nug lump, of uncertain origin.

nuisance n. About 1400 nusaunce injury, trouble; later, nuy-sance annoyance or inconvenience (1412); borrowed through Anglo-French nusaunce, from Old French nuisance, noisance (formed after Medieval Latin nocentia an injury, hurt), from Old French nuis-, stem of nuire to harm, from Vulgar Latin nocere*, corresponding to Latin nocēre to hurt; for suffix see -ANCE.

null adj. 1563–67, borrowed through Middle French null, and directly from Latin nullus not any, none (ne- not, no + ūllus any, diminutive of ūnus ONE).

nullify v. 1595, borrowed from Late Latin nullificāre to make nothing, from a lost adjective nullificus* making null (from Latin nullus not any; see NULL + the root of facere make); for suffix see -FY. —nullification n. 1798, action taken by a state to nullify a federal law; borrowed from Late Latin nullificātiōnem (nominative nullificātiō) a making as nothing, from nullificāre; for suffix see -ATION. An earlier meaning "reduction to nothing" is found in 1630.

numb adj. Before 1400 nomme deprived of motion or feeling, paralyzed; later nomyn (1440) and nome (before 1460); from the past participle of nimen to take, seize, developed from Old English niman; see NIMBLE. Though the form numb (with b added to conform to such spellings as comb, limb, and dumb) is recorded as early as 1642, it did not become established till the 1700's. The old spelling num is retained in the compound numskull. —v. 1553, formed after participial nummed (num, adj. + -ed²).

number n. Probably before 1300 noumbre sum, total, amount, number; later numbre (about 1300) and number (about 1475); borrowed through Anglo-French noumbre, Old French nombre, and directly from Latin numerus a number, quantity. —v. Probably before 1300 noumbren to count, ascertain the number of; later numberen (about 1425); borrowed from Old numeral adj. Before 1398, of or expressing a number; borrowed from Late Latin numeralis of or belonging to a number, from Latin numerus number; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1530, word expressing a number; later, figure standing for a number (1686); from the adjective.

French nombrer, numbrer, from Latin numerāre, from numerus a number.

numerate v. 1721, developed from earlier numerate numbered, counted (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin numeratus, past participle of numerare to number; for suffix see -ATE¹. —numerator n. 1575, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French numérateur, from Late Latin numerator counter, numberer, from Latin numerare to number; for suffix see -OR².

numerical adj. 1628, of a number or numbers; formed in English, perhaps by influence of French numérique, from Latin numerus number + English -ical.

numerous adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin numerōsus, from numerus number; for suffix see -OUS.

numismatics n. 1829–32, from earlier numismatic, adj., of coins (1792); borrowed from French numismatique, from Late Latin numisma (genitive numismatis) coin, currency; for suffix see -ICS. Late Latin numisma, a variant of nomisma, was influenced in development of meaning by Latin nummus coin, money, from Greek nomimos customary, legal; but the Late Latin form nomisma derives from Greek nomisma current coin, usage, anything approved by usage, from nomizein have in use, from nomos custom. —numismatist n. 1799, formed in English from Late Latin numisma (genitive numismatis) coin, currency + English -ist.

numskull or numbskull n. 1717, the head; later, blockhead (1724); formed from English num, NUMB + skull.

nun n. Probably before 1200 nunne; later nonne (about 1300) and nun (before 1450); found in Old English nunne (before 899); borrowed from Late Latin nonna nun, tutor (feminine of nonnus monk), originally a term of address to elderly persons, possibly from children's speech, reminiscent of English nana and its variants. In Middle English and through the 1500's the form nonne was common, borrowed from Old French nonne, from Latin nonna. —nunnery n. Probably about 1280 nonnerie nunhood; also nunnerie convent of nuns (before 1300); formed from Middle English nonne, nunne nun + -erie -ery.

nuptial adj. 1490 nupcyalle, borrowed from Middle French nuptial, or directly from Latin nuptiālis pertaining to marriage, from nuptiae wedding, from nupta, feminine past participle of nūbere take as a husband. —nuptials n. pl. About 1555, from the adjective.

nurse n. Before 1382 nurse foster parent, tutor; contraction of earlier nurice wet nurse, person who takes care of a young child (probably before 1200), also nurice, norice (about 1250); borrowed from Old French norrice, nurice, from Vulgar Latin nutricia*, from Late Latin nutricia* nurse, governess, tutoress, from Latin, feminine of nūtricius that suckles, nourishes, from nūtrix (genitive nūtriciis) wet nurse, from nūtrire to suckle, NOURISH. The meaning of a person who takes care of the sick is first recorded in English in 1590. —v. 1526 nourse to bring up (a child); later nurse to suckle (1535); alteration of Middle English nurshen nourish (before 1382), norischen (probably before 1300); see NOURISH. The meaning of foster, promote, is first recorded before 1542 and that of take care of (a sick person), in 1736.

nursery n. Probably about 1300 noricerie room set apart for young children with their nurse; later norserie (before 1400); borrowed from Old French nourricerie, formed from Old French norrice, nurice nurse + -erie -ery. The meaning of a place where young plants are raised, is first recorded in 1565.

nurture n. Probably before 1300 norture; later nurture (about 1330); borrowed from Old French norture, nurture, partially a learned development adapted from Late Latin nūtritura a nursing, suckling, from Latin nūtrire to nourish, suckle; for suffix see -URE. —v. Probably before 1400, implied in past participle nurtrid; later norturen (about 1410); from the noun.

nut n. Probably about 1125 nute, developed from Old English (about 700) hnutu; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch not nut (modern Dutch noot), Old High German nuz, hnuz (modern German Nuss), and Old Icelandic hnót (Norwegian nøtt, Swedish nöt), from Proto-Germanic Hnut-*.

The meaning of a small piece of metal with a threaded hole to attach to a bolt, is first recorded in 1611. The meaning of a crazy person or crank is first recorded in 1903. —nuts adj. 1846, crazy, from earlier be nutts upon be very fond of (1785), possibly from earlier nuts, n. pl., any source of pleasure (1617). —nutty adj. Probably about 1421 notty nutlike, formed from Middle English nute, note nut + -y -y¹. The meaning of crazy is first recorded in 1898, probably by influence of nuts crazy.

nutmeg n. Probably before 1300 notemuge; later notemege, nutmuge (about 1450); alteration and partial translation of Old North French or Anglo-French noiz mugue*, Old French nois muguete, alteration of nois muscade nut smelling like musk (nois nut, from Latin nux).

It is also probable that the formation in English was influenced by, or in some instances a loan translation and alteration of Medieval Latin nux maga, nux mugata.

nutrient adj. 1650, borrowed from Latin nūtrientem (nominative nūtriens), present participle of nūtrire nourish; for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1828–32, from the adjective.

nutrition n. Probably before 1425 nutricioun, nutricion; borrowed through Old French nutrition, and directly from Latin nūtritiōnem (nominative nūtritiō) a nourishing, from nūtrire nourish, suckle; see NOURISH; for suffix see -TION. —nutritious adj. 1665, borrowed from Latin nūtricius, from nūtrix (genitive nūtriciis) a nurse, from nūtrire nourish; for suffix see -OUS. —nutritive adj. 1392 nutritif, nutritive of nutrition, giving nourishment; borrowed from Old French nutritif (feminine nutritive), and directly from Late Latin nūtritivus, from Latin nūtrire nourish; for suffix see -IVE.

nuzzle v. Probably about 1425 noselen to bend down, grovel, bring the nose towards the ground; probably a back formation from earlier noselyng on the nose, prostrate, formed from Middle English nose + -ling.

The meaning of burrow with the nose is first recorded in 1530, and that of lie snug, appeared in 1597, influenced by nestle.

nylon n. 1938, coined as a generic term. According to Du Pont the word is a formation of nyl- + English -on, as in rayon and cotton.

nymph n. About 1385 nympe or nimpe (before 1393); borrowed from Old French nimpe, and directly from Latin nympha nymph, bride. The sense of a young woman, girl is first recorded in 1584, probably by influence of similar meanings of Greek nýmphē.

nymphomania n. 1775, New Latin; formed from Greek nýmphē nymph + manía madness, mania; perhaps influenced by earlier French nymphomanie.

O

o or O interj. See OH.

-o- a connecting vowel used to join parts of a compound, as in ethnic and language names such as Anglo-Saxon, and Franco-American; in scientific terms, such as oceanography, odontology, and lobotomy; and in various new and nonce formations, such as industrio-political, meritocracy, laundromat, etc. Formed on the analogy of Greek compounds, in which the combining stem usually ended in -o, as in acropolis, democracy, mythology and in similar adaptations in Latin.

Because it often appears before -logy, this form is often considered to be -ology. The same analysis is made of -cracy, -meter, etc., producing plutocracy and galvanometer.

oaf n. 1625 oph, earlier auf or aulf (1621), but also oaf- in oafish (1610); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic álfr silly person; see ELF).

oak n. Before 1200 oc, later ok, ooc (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 700) āc oak tree; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon ēk oak tree, Middle Dutch eike (modern Dutch eik), Old High German eih (modern German Eiche), and Old Icelandic eik (Swedish ek, Norwegian eik, ek, Danish eeg), from Proto-Germanic aikes*. —adj. Probably before 1300 ok, oc, from the noun. —oaken adj. 1393 oken, formed from ok oak + *-en*².

oakum n. 1422–23 okam, okom, developed from Old English (about 1000) ācumba flax fibers separated by combing (ā- out + cemban to comb, from camb a COMB); cognate with Old High German āchambi, Middle High German akambe, from Proto-Germanic us-kambōn*.

oar n. Before 1300 or, ore pole for rowing; developed from Old English ār (897); cognate with Old Icelandic ār oar (Swedish åra, and Danish åre), from Proto-Germanic airō*. —oarlock n. 1350 orlok, formed from or oar + lok lock¹.

oasis n. 1616 Oasis fertile area in the Libyan desert; borrowed from French oasis, and directly from Late Latin oasis, from Greek Óasis, probably from Hamitic (compare Coptic wahe, ouahe dwelling place, oasis, from Egyptian wh'-t kettle-shaped depression).

oat n. Before 1250 ote (plural otes, oten) the cereal plant or its grain; developed from Old English (about 1000) āte grain of the oat plant (plural ātan), of unknown origin. The common Germanic name of this cereal is Habran-*, appearing in Middle English as haver (probably borrowed from Scandinavian) and not found in Old English. —oatmeal n. 1393 otemele, formed from ote oat + mele meal².

oath n. About 1300 oth solemn promise or affirmation, act of swearing; later, profane oath, curse (probably about 1350); developed from Old English āth (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon ēth oath, Middle Dutch eet (modern Dutch eed), Old High German eid, Middle High German eit, eid (modern German Eid), Old Icelandic eidhr (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish ed), and Gothic aiths, from Proto-Germanic aithaz*.

ob- a prefix meaning: 1 against, hindering, as in obliterate, obdurate; 2 toward, to, by, as in obtrude, obvert; 3 on, over, as in obtuse, obduct; 4 down, away, as in obese, obituary. Borrowed from Latin ob- from ob, prep., against, toward, before. In combination ob- also becomes oc- before c, as in occupy; of- before f, as in offend; and op- before p, as in oppress.

In opposite terms ob- assumes the sense “inversely” or “in the opposite direction,” apparently ob- of New Latin obverse obversely.

obdurate adj. About 1450; borrowed from Latin obdūrātus, past participle of obdūrāre harden (ob- against + dūrāre harden); for suffix see -ATE¹. —obduracy n. 1597, formed from English obdurate + -cy.

obedient adj. Probably before 1200; borrowed from Old French obedient, learned borrowing from Latin oboedientem (nominative oboediens), present participle of oboedire OBEY; for suffix see -ENT. —obedience n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French obedience, learned borrowing from Latin oboedientia (nominative oboediens), present participle of oboedire; for suffix see -ENCE.

obeisance n. Before 1382 obeisance obedience, deference, respectful bow; borrowed from Old French obeissance obedience, from obeissant, present participle of obēir obey, from Latin oboedire OBEY; for suffix see -ANCE.

obelisk n. 1569 obelisk, borrowed probably from Middle French obélisque, and directly from Latin obeliscus obelisk, small spit, from Greek obelískos, diminutive of obelós a spit, pointed pillar.

obese adj. 1651, a back formation from earlier obesity, but in some instances borrowed from Latin obēsus fat, that has eaten itself fat, stout, from past participle of obedere* devour (ob- away + edere EAT). —obesity n. 1611 obesity, borrowed from French obésité, and directly from Latin obēsītās, from obēsus obese; for suffix see -ITY.

obey v. Probably before 1300 obeyen; borrowed from Old French obēir, from Latin oboedire give ear, pay attention to, obey (ob- to + audire listen, hear).

obfuscate v. 1536, developed from earlier obfuscate, adj. (1531) and borrowed from Latin obfuscātus, past participle of obfuscāre (ob- over + fuscāre darken, from fuscus dark); for suffix see -ATE¹. —obfuscation n. 1608, formed from English obfuscate + -tion, and borrowed from Latin obfuscātiōnem (nominative obfuscātiō), from obfuscāre obfuscate; for suffix see -ATION.

obit n. Before 1382, obite, probably before 1400 obit death, day of death; borrowed from Old French obit, or directly from Latin obitus death; see OBITUARY.

In modern usage obit is popularly regarded as a clipped form of obituary.

obituary n. 1706, borrowed, perhaps through influence of French obituaire, from Medieval Latin obituarium, from Latin obitus (genitive obitūs) a going to meet, encounter, death, from stem obi- of obire go to meet, as in mortem obire meet death (ob- against + ire go); for suffix see -ARY. Compare OBIT.

object n. Before 1398 object tangible thing; borrowed from Old French object, and directly from Medieval Latin objectum thing put before (the mind or sight), neuter of Latin objectus, past participle of obicere to present, oppose, cast in the way of (ob- against + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw).

The meaning of a thing aimed at, purpose, goal, is first recorded probably before 1425.—v. Probably about 1400 objecten; borrowed from Old French objecter, objeter, and directly from Latin objectāre to cite as grounds for disapproval, frequentative form of obicere to oppose.

objection n. Before 1387 objection, borrowed from Old French objection, and directly from Medieval Latin obiecōnem (nominative obiecō), from Latin obicere to oppose, OBJECT.

—objectionable adj. 1781, formed from English objection + -able.

objective adj. 1620, formed in English from object + -ive, patterned on Medieval Latin objectivus, from objectum OBJECT. The meaning of impersonal, unbiased is found in 1855, probably influenced by German objektiv.—n. 1738, something objective to the mind. The meaning “goal or aim” is first recorded in English in 1881, probably influenced by objective point, as a military term (1864), and reinforced by French objectif (1869).—objectivity n. 1803, formed from English objective + -ity.

oblade¹ adj. flattened at the poles. 1705, New Latin oblatus stretched, carried toward; fashioned from Latin ob- and lātus, as abstracted from Latin prōlātus lengthened (lātus, past participle of ferre bring).

oblade² n. person devoted to religious work. 1864, borrowed from Medieval Latin oblatus, noun use of Latin oblātus, a form serving as past participle of Latin offerre to OFFER; for suffix see -ATE³.

oblation n. Before 1400 oblacion; borrowed from Old French oblacion, and directly from Late Latin oblātiōnem (nominative oblātiō) an offering, presenting, gift, from Latin oblātus, see OBLATE²; for suffix see -ATION.

oblige v. 1541, to pledge as security; later, bind morally or legally (1668); developed from Middle English oblige, adj., bound, obliged (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin obligātus, past participle of obligāre (ob- to + ligāre to bind); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also possibly a back formation from obligation.

—obligation n. About 1300 obligacion binding pledge; borrowed from Old French obligacion, and directly from Latin obligātiōnem (nominative obligātiō) a bond, pledge, from obligāre to bind, oblige; for suffix see -ATION. —obligatory adj. About 1400 obligatorie creating an obligation; borrowed from Old French obligatoire, and directly from Late Latin obligatōrius binding, from Latin obligāre; for suffix see -ORY.

oblige v. Probably about 1280 oblegen bind by a promise, contract, duty, etc.; also obligen (about 1300); borrowed from Old French obligier, learned borrowing from Latin obligāre OBLIGATE.

oblique adj. Probably before 1425 oblique, oblīque slanting; figurative, indirect; borrowed from Middle French oblique, and directly from Latin oblīquus (ob- against + root liqu-, lic- to bend, as in liquis oblique, licinus bent upward).

obliterate v. 1600, borrowed from Latin obliterātus, oblitterātus, past participle of obliterāre, oblitterāre cause to disappear, efface (ob- against + littera, littera letter), abstracted from the phrase oblitterās scribere write across letters, strike out letters; for suffix see -ATE¹. The borrowing from Latin may have been influenced by Middle French oblitérer, from Latin obliterāre.

oblivion n. Before 1393, borrowed from Old French oblivion, and from Latin obliviōnem (nominative obliviō) forgetfulness, from oblīvīscā forget; originally, even out, smooth over (ob- over + the root of lēvis smooth); for suffix see -ION. —oblivious

adj. About 1450 oblyvuous, borrowed from Latin obliviōsus forgetful, from obliviō oblivion; for suffix see -OUS.

oblong adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin oblongus somewhat long (ob- to or toward, functioning as an intensive + longus LONG¹, adj.). —n. Before 1608, from the adjective.

obnoxious adj. 1581, subject to authority; later, subject to something harmful (1597); borrowed from Latin obnoxiosus, from obnoxius subject, exposed to harm (ob- to, toward + noxa hurt, harm, punishment); for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of offensive or hateful (1675), influenced by noxious.

oboe n. 1724; borrowing of Italian oboe, from Middle French hautbois (found as hautboy, hautboiz, in English, 1575) a compound of haut high + bois wood; so called from the instrument's high notes and wooden construction.

obscene adj. 1593, disgusting, foul; borrowed from Middle French obscène, learned borrowing from Latin obscēnus offensive, especially to modesty; originally, boding ill; perhaps a back formation from obscēnāre* to bring filth upon (ob- onto + cēnum* filth, compare caenum filth). —obscenity n. 1589, borrowed from French obscénité, from Latin obscēnitatem (nominative obscēnitās) moral impurity, from obscēnus offensive; for suffix see -ITY.

obscure adj. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French obscur, oscur dark, dim, not clear, and directly from Latin obscurus covered over, dark, obscure (ob- over + -scūrus covered). —v. Probably before 1425 obscuren, from the adjective. —obscurity n. About 1477 obscuryte dimness, condition of being imperfectly comprehended or known; borrowed from Middle French obscurité, variant of Old French oscurté, from Latin obscuritatem (nominative obscuritās), from obscurus obscure; for suffix see -ITY.

obsequious adj. About 1477 compliant, obedient (implied in obsequyousnesse); borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French obsequieux, from Latin obsequiosus compliant, obedient, from obsequium compliance, dutiful service (ob- after + sequi follow); for suffix see -OUS.

observance n. About 1250 observaunce precept, rule, custom; borrowed from Old French observance, or directly from Latin observantia act of keeping customs attention, from observantem (nominative observāns), present participle of observare OBSERVE; for suffix see -ANCE. —observant adj. 1594, quick to notice; probably formed from English observe + -ant, after observance, modeled on the pattern of importance, important, and reinforced by Latin observantem (nominative observāns), present participle of observare.

observation n. Before 1382 observacioun act of keeping customs, performance of religious rites; later, act of seeing and noting (1557); borrowed from Old French observation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin observātiōnem (nominative observātiō), from observare OBSERVE; for suffix see -ATION.

observatory n. 1676, borrowed from French observatoire, from observer, from Old French observer to OBSERVE; for suffix see -ORY.

observe v. About 1390 observeen follow in practice, keep to; borrowed from Old French observer, from Latin observare watch over, look to, attend to, guard (ob- over + servare to watch, keep). The meaning "see and note omens" appeared in 1391, but the sense "watch, perceive, notice" was not common until the mid 1500's. —observer n. 1555, formed from English observe + *-er*¹.

obess v. 1503, besiege; later, beset, haunt, harass (1531); borrowed from Latin obessus, past participle of obsidere besiege, occupy; literally, sit opposite to (ob- against + sedere SIT). —obsession n. 1513, act of besieging; later, a being beset or haunted (1605); persistent influence or idea (1680); borrowed from Middle French and modern French obsession, learned borrowing from Latin obsessiōnem (nominative obsessiō), from obsess-, past participle stem of obsidere besiege; for suffix see -ION. —obsessive adj. 1911, formed from English obess + -ive.

obsidian n. 1656, borrowed possibly from earlier French obsidiane (1600), and directly from Latin obsidiānus, misreading of obsidiānus lapis stone of Obsius, a Roman alleged by Pliny to have found this or a similar rock in Ethiopia.

obsolescent adj. 1755, borrowed from Latin obsolescentem (nominative obsolescens), present participle of obsolescere fall into disuse; for suffix see -ESCENT. —obsolescence n. Before 1828, formed from English obsolescent, on analogy of evanescent, evanescence, etc.; for suffix see -ESCENCE.

obsolete adj. 1579, borrowed from Latin obsoletus, past participle of obsolescere fall into disuse (probably ob- away + -solēscere*, formed on solēre to be used to, be accustomed).

obstacle n. About 1340 obstakel; later obstacle (about 1385); borrowed from Old French ostacle, obstacle hindrance, or directly from Latin obstaculum, from obstare stand opposite to, block, hinder (ob- against + stare to STAND); for suffix see -CLE.

obstetrics n. 1819, midwifery; formed from English obstetric + -s (plural suffix), after Latin obstetricia (neuter plural) midwifery, from obstetrīx (genitive obstetricis) midwife; literally, one who stands opposite to (the woman giving birth), from obstare stand opposite to; see OBSTACLE; for suffix see -ICS. —obstetric adj. 1742, borrowed from Latin obstetricius pertaining to a midwife, from obstetrīx midwife; for suffix see -IC. —obstetrician n. 1828, formed in English on the pattern of physician.

obstinate adj. Probably 1387 obstinat; borrowed from Latin obstinātus, past participle of obstinare persist, stand stubbornly (ob- by + -stinare, earlier -stanare*, related to stare to STAND); for suffix see -ATE¹. —obstinacy n. Before 1393 obstinacie, borrowed from Medieval Latin obstinacia, obstinatia, from Latin obstinātus, past participle; for suffix see -ACY.

obstreperous adj. About 1600, borrowed from Latin obstrep- erus clamorous, from obstrepere drown with noise, oppose noisily (ob- against + strepere make a noise); for suffix see -OUS.

obstruct v. 1611, block or close up, probably a back formation from obstruction. The sense of hinder is first recorded in English in 1647, probably to correspond to the same sense in obstruction (1601). —obstruction n. 1533, fact of blocking a passage; borrowed from Latin obstructionem (nominative obstructio), from obstruere, past participle stem of obstruere block up, hinder (ob- against + struere to pile, build); for suffix see -ION.

obtain v. About 1412 opteenen get or acquire; later obteynen (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French optenir, obtenir, or directly from Latin optinere, obtinere hold, acquire (ob- to + tenere to hold).

obtrude v. About 1555, borrowed from Latin obtrudere thrust into, press upon (ob- toward + trudere to thrust). —obtrusive adj. 1667, formed from Latin obtrusus, past participle stem of obtrudere obtrude + English -ive.

obtuse adj. Probably before 1425; later, stupid (1509), borrowed from Middle French obtus (feminine obtuse), learned borrowing from Latin obtus blunted, dull, past participle of obtundere to beat against, dull (ob- against + tundere to beat).

obverse adj. Before 1656, turned toward the observer, frontal; borrowed from Latin obversus, past participle of obvertere to turn toward or against (ob- toward + vertere to turn). The sense of being a counterpart to something is found in 1875. —n. 1658, from the adjective.

obviate v. 1598, borrowed from Late Latin obviatus, past participle of obviare act contrary to, go against, from Latin obvius that is in the way, that moves against; for suffix see -ATE¹.

obvious adj. 1586, frequently met with or found; borrowed from Latin obvius that is in the way, presenting itself readily, commonplace, from obviam, adv. in the way (ob against + viam, accusative of via way); for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of plainly clear is first recorded in English in 1635.

oc- a form of the prefix ob- before c in words of Latin origin, as in occupy. The form is due to assimilation of b to the following consonant (c).

ocarina n. 1877, borrowing of Italian ocarina, diminutive of oca goose (so called from its shape), from Vulgar Latin avica*, back formation from Latin avicula small bird, diminutive of avis bird.

occasion n. Before 1382 ocasyoun, occasion opportunity, favorable juncture, cause; borrowed through Old French occasion, or directly from Latin occāsiōnem (nominative occāsiō) opportunity, favorable moment, from occāsum, past participle of occidere fall down, go down (oc- down, away + cadere to fall); for suffix see -SION. The meaning of a particular time or event is first recorded in 1568. —v. About 1445 occasionen; from the noun. —occasional adj. Before 1398 ocasyonal, formed from Middle English ocasyoun, occasion + -al¹, possibly by influence of Late Latin occāsiōnālīter occasionally.

Occident n. About 1375, part of the sky or the world in which the sun sets, the West; borrowed from Old French occident, or directly from Latin occidentem (nominative occidēns) part of the sky in which the sun sets; originally, adj., setting, present participle of occidere fall down, go down; for suffix see -ENT. Compare ORIENT. —Occidental adj. About 1400, westerly or western; borrowed from Old French occidental, or directly from Latin occidentālis of the West, from occidentem, present participle; for suffix see -AL¹.

occipital adj. 1541, borrowed from Middle French occipital, from Medieval Latin occipitalis, from Latin occiput (genitive occipitis) back of the skull (oc- against, behind + caput HEAD); for suffix see -AL¹.

occlude v. 1597, borrowed from Latin occludere shut up, close up (oc- against, up + cludere to shut, CLOSE¹). —occlusion n. About 1645, borrowed from Latin occlūsiōnem, from occludere occlude; for suffix see -SION.

occult adj. 1533, concealed, kept secret; later, beyond ordinary knowledge (1545); from the verb in English, also borrowed from Middle French occulte, and directly from Latin occultus hidden, past participle of occulere cover over, conceal (oc- over + -culere, related to cēlāre to hide). —occultation n. Probably before 1425 occultation; borrowed from Latin occultātiōnem (nominative occultātiō), from occulare hide, conceal, frequentative form of occulere cover over; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of concealment of one celestial body by another is first recorded in 1551.

occupant n. 1596, one who takes possession of something having no owner; probably borrowed from Middle French occupant, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin occupantem (nominative occupāns), present participle of occupare OC-CUPY; for suffix see -ANT. —occupancy n. 1596, condition of being an occupant; probably formed from English occupan(t) + -cy, simultaneously with occupant on the pattern of militant, militancy.

occupation n. Before 1325 occupacioun act of holding or possessing lands or goods; later, business, employment (probably 1348); borrowed from Old French occupation, from Latin occupātiōnem (nominative occupātiō) a taking possession, business, employment, from occupare OCCUPY; for suffix see -ATION.

occupy v. Before 1325 occupien keep busy; also, take possession of, hold (implied in occupation); irregular borrowing from Old French occupere, or directly from Latin occupare take over, seize, possess, occupy (oc- over + -capare*, intensive form of capere to grasp, seize; see CAPTIVE).

The final -ien in Middle English (which developed into -y in modern English) cannot be explained from the Old French occupere. It is possible that the change took place in Anglo-French (which has occupiours for occupiers) but this may be itself a borrowing from English.

occur v. 1527, meet with, encounter; also, happen (1538); borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French occurre, occurrir happen unexpectedly, from Latin occurrere run to meet, run against, befall, present itself, occur (oc- against, toward + currere to run). —occurrence n. 1539, probably borrowed from Middle French occurrence unexpected happening, from occurrir happen unexpectedly; for suffix see -ENCE.

ocean n. About 1300 ocean the main or great sea; borrowed from Old French ocean, ocean, learned borrowing from Latin oceanus, from Greek ōkeanos the great stream or river supposed to surround the disk of the earth. —oceanic adj. 1656 oceanick, probably borrowed from French océanique, from ocean ocean + -ique -ic.

oceanography n. 1859, formed from English ocean + -o- + -graphy. French océanographie occurred in Middle French in 1584 but was rare before 1876.

ocelot n. 1775, borrowing of French ocelot, from Nahuatl ocelotl jaguar.

ocher or ochre n. 1296 ocre; later ocra (before 1398); borrowing of Old French ocre and Late Latin ōcra; both from Latin ōchra, from Greek ōchrā, from ōchros pale yellow.

-ock a suffix forming diminutives, as in bullock, hillock, etc. Middle English -ok developed from Old English -oc, -uc.

o'clock About 1720, contraction of earlier of the clock (1647), from Middle English of the clokke (1389).

oct- or octa- variants of OCTO-, as in octet, octagon. Borrowed from Greek okt-, okta-, from oktō EIGHT.

octagon n. 1660, borrowed from Latin octagōnos, from Greek oktágōnos (okta- eight + gōnía angle, related to góny KNEE). Another form octogon (1656) was borrowed from French octogone. —octagonal adj. 1812–16, formed from English octagon + -al.

octane n. 1872, formed from English oct- eight + -ane, as in methane. The reference to eight in octane pertains to the number of carbon atoms (C₈) in the hydrocarbon.

octave n. Probably before 1425 (plural) octaves period of eight days after a festival, the eighth day of this period; borrowed from Middle French octave, or directly from Medieval Latin octava, from Latin octāva diēs eighth day, feminine of octāvus eighth, from octō EIGHT. An earlier Middle English form, utaves (before 1325), came by way of Anglo-French from Old French oitieve, from Latin octāva.

The meaning in music is first recorded in 1656, borrowed perhaps from French and replacing the English eighth, n., Middle English eyghte (before 1450).

octet or octette n. 1880 octet, formed from English oct- eight + -et, patterned on duet, quartet, etc.

octo- a combining form of Latin octō and sometimes of Greek oktō EIGHT, as in octopus and octosyllable. Also, oct- before vowels. The Greek form is more frequently okta- octa-.

October n. Old English (about 1050) october, borrowed from Latin Octōber, from octō EIGHT, this being originally the eighth month of the ancient Roman calendar; for the ending -ber see DECEMBER. The Julian calendar (46 B.C.) changed October to the tenth month.

octogenarian n. 1815, formed with the English ending -an from French octogénaire aged eighty, learned borrowing from Latin octogēnārius containing eighty, from octogēni eighty each, from octō EIGHT.

octopus n. 1758, New Latin Octopus the genus name, from Greek oktōpous eight-footed (oktō EIGHT + pous FOOT).

ocular adj. About 1503, borrowed from Late Latin oculāris of the eyes, from Latin oculus EYE; for suffix see -AR. The borrowing was perhaps influenced by Middle French oculaire, from Late Latin oculāris. —n. 1835, from the adjective. —oculist n. 1615, borrowed from French oculiste, formed from Latin oculus eye + French -iste -ist.

odd adj. About 1280 odde left over, single, unique; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic oddi third or odd number; also genitive odda in oddadadr third or odd man). Old Icelandic oddi is related to oddr point of a weapon, and cognate with Old High German ort angle, point (modern German Ort place), Middle Dutch ort point, edge (modern Dutch oord place), Old Saxon and Old Frisian ord point or tip (also found in Old English ord, which did not survive), from Proto-Germanic uzdaz* pointed upwards.

The sense of peculiar or strange is first recorded in 1588.

—oddy n. 1713, formed from English odd + -ity.

—odds n. pl. 1796, formed from English odd + -ments, plural of -ment. —odds n. pl. 1500–20, formed from English odd, adj. (taken as a noun) + -s, plural suffix.

ode n. 1588, borrowed from Middle French ode, learned borrowing from Late Latin ōdē lyric song, from Greek ōidē, Attic contraction of aoīdē, from aeidein sing; probably by dissimilation from earlier a-we-wd-ēen*, related to audē voice, tone, sound.

odious adj. Before 1382 odious, borrowed from Old French odieux, or directly from Latin odiōsus hateful, from odium hatred, ODIUM; for suffix see -OUS.

odium n. 1602, borrowed from Latin odium ill-will, hatred, offense, related to ōdī I hate (infinitive ōdisse).

odometer n. 1791, borrowed from French odomètre, from Greek hodōmetron (hodōs way + mētron MEASURE).

odontology n. 1819, borrowed from French odontologie, formed from Greek odont- (stem form of Ionic odōn TOOTH) + French connective -o- + -logie -logy, study of.

odor n. Before 1300 odur, odour; later odor (before 1325); borrowed from Old French odor, odur, and directly from Latin odor smell, scent, related to olēre to smell of, emit a smell, earlier odēre*. —odoriferous adj. Probably before 1475, formed in English from Latin odōrifer odoriferous (odor odor + -fer bearing, from ferre to BEAR² carry) + English suffix -ous. —odorous adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin odorosus, from Latin odōrus having a smell, from odor smell; for suffix see -OUS.

of prep. 1100 of of, from; later off (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 700) of, unstressed form of æ, prep. and adv., away or away from; cognate with Old Frisian of, af, prep. and adv., from, Old Saxon af, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch af off, Old High German aba away, away from (modern German ab off, from), Old Icelandic and Gothic af, from Proto-Germanic aba*. Related to OFF and AB-¹.

of- a form of the prefix ob- before f in words of Latin origin, as in offer. The form is due to assimilation of b to the following consonant (f).

off adv. Before 1121 of off, of; later offe (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 971) of, adv., away; see OF.

Off was originally the same word as of. In the 1100's, however, it began to appear as off, offe, a variant spelling which came to be used as the emphatic form, that is, as the adverb, while of was retained in the weakened senses, in which the preposition is usually without stress and becomes (əv). —prep. 1100 of away from; developed from Old English (before 855) of. The meaning "not on" is first recorded in 1688. —adj. 1666, farther; later, not at work (1826); from the adverb. —n. 1599, shortened form of offing (not recorded before 1627); also before 1669, from the adjective.

offal n. Before 1398 offall, a blended compound of off + fall, n., in the sense of that which falls off (the butcher's block). Compare German Abfall and Dutch afval, with the same meaning as offal.

offend v. Probably 1350–75 offendien sin against, displease, do wrong; later offenden (about 1378); borrowed from Old French ofendre, and directly from Latin offendere strike against, stumble, commit a fault, displease (of- against + -fendere to strike). —offender n. 1472–75, lawbreaker, criminal; formed from Middle English offenden offend + *-er*¹, and in part an alteration of offendour (about 1412); probably borrowed from Anglo-French.

offense n. Probably 1350–75 offens; later offence (about 1380); borrowed from Old French ofense injury, wrong, annoyance, and directly from Latin offensa an offense, injury, from feminine past participle of offendere OFFEND. —offensive adj. 1547–64, used for attack; later, annoying or insulting (1576); borrowed through Middle French offensif (feminine offensive), and directly from Medieval Latin offensivus, from past participle stem of Latin offendere offend; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1720, position or attitude of attack; from the adjective.

offer v. Before 1121 offren to present as a sacrifice, bestow in worship; later offeren (before 1325); developed from Old English ofrian (before 830); borrowed from Late Latin offerre present in worship, from Latin offerre present, bestow, bring before (of- to + -ferre bring, carry). Other early borrowings in Germanic of Late Latin offerre include Old Frisian offria present as a sacrifice, Old Saxon offrōn, Middle Dutch offeren, and Old Icelandic offra.

The general sense of present or proffer (before 1420) was reinforced by Old French offrir, from Latin offerre. —n. 1433 offre, borrowed from Old French ofre, offre, from offrir to offer, from Latin offerre.

offertory n. About 1350 offertori verses sung or chanted during the offertory; borrowed from Medieval Latin offertorium place where offerings were brought, from Latin offerre to OFFER; for suffix see -ORY.

The meaning of a part of a religious service is first recorded in 1539 and that of a collection of money in 1862.

office n. About 1250 offiz official post or employment; later office duty, function, service (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French office, or directly from Latin officium service, duty, function, business, alteration of opo-fakyom* (opus work + facere perform). The meaning of a place for conducting business is first recorded about 1395.

officer n. Before 1338, person holding a public, church, or government office; later, agent, minister (1384); borrowed from Old French officier, from Medieval Latin officiarius an officer, from Latin officium service, OFFICE; for suffix see -ER¹. The meaning of a person who commands others in the armed forces is first recorded about 1565.

official n. About 1330, church officer, earlier, in surname (1252); borrowing of Old French official, and directly as a learned borrowing of Latin officiālis attendant to a magistrate, public official, noun use of officiālis, adj., of or belonging to duty, service, or office, from officium duty, service, OFFICE; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of a person in charge of some public work or duty (as a municipal official), is first recorded in 1555. —adj. 1392, performing a service; borrowed from Old French official, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin officiālis. The meaning of pertaining to an office or post is first recorded in 1607.

officiate v. 1631, perform (a religious service); later, perform the duties of a church official (1641); borrowed from Medieval Latin officiatum, from past participle of officiare perform religious services, from Latin officium service, OFFICE; for suffix see -ATE¹.

official adj. About 1720, borrowed from French official, from New Latin officialis, literally, of or belonging to an officina storeroom for medicines and necessities, from Latin officina workshop, contraction of opificina, from opifex (genitive opificis) worker, maker, doer (opus work + -fex, -ficus one that does, from facere perform); for suffix see -AL¹.

officious adj. 1565, eager to please, obliging, dutiful; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French officieux, from Latin officiōsus dutiful, from officium duty, service, OFFICE; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of excessively eager to offer services, meddlesome, is first recorded in 1602.

offing n. in the offing in the making, impending. 1779, in the distant future, from earlier nautical term offing the more distant part of the sea as seen from the shore (1627); formed from English off, adv. + *-ing*¹. The modern sense of impending, on hand, is first found in 1914.

offspring n. Old English (about 949) ofspring children or young collectively, descendants; literally, those who spring off someone (of OFF + springan to SPRING). The singular use is first recorded in 1712.

oft adv. (in adjective compounds, as oft-told). Probably about 1175 ofte, developed from Old English (before 725) oft; cognate with Old Frisian ofta oft, Old Saxon oft, ofto, Old High German ofto (modern German oft), Old Icelandic opt (modern Icelandic oft, Swedish ofta, Danish and Norwegian ofte), and Gothic ufta.

often adv. About 1250 often, extended from ofte OFT, probably by influence of Middle English selden seldom (Old English seldan).

ogle v. 1682–87, probably borrowed from Low German oeglen, frequentative form of oegen look at, from oeg eye; cognate with Middle Dutch oghe EYE.

ogre n. 1786 (earlier found as Hogre, 1713); borrowed from French ogre, perhaps from Old French orc*, from Latin Orcus Hades or possibly formed ogre on an Italian dialect orgo*, alteration of orgo*, variant of Italian orco demon, monster, from Latin Orcus.

oh or Oh interj. Before 1548 Oh, spelling alteration of Middle English O, o (probably before 1200); found in Old French ô, oh and Latin ô, ôh, interj., found also in Greek as ô, ô. In Old English, Latin ô was rendered by lā or ēalā.

ohm n. 1867, alteration of earlier ohma (1861), in allusion to the German physicist Georg S. Ohm.

-oholic a combining form meaning one having an addiction or avid devotion to a thing or a practice; abstracted from alcoholic; so spelled in random examples (bloodoholic, cokeoholic, jogoholic) but almost entirely replaced by the spelling -AHOLIC.

-oid a suffix meaning: like, like that of, as in Mongoloid, ameboid; thing like a —, as spheroid, opioid. Borrowed from New Latin -oides, contraction of Greek -oeidēs (-o-, stem vowel + -eidēs in the form of, from eidos form, related to idein to see, and eidēnai to know).

oil n. Probably before 1200 eoile, eoli olive oil; later oille (probably about 1225), and olie (about 1250); borrowed from Anglo-French olie and Old French oile, oille, and directly from Latin oleum oil, olive oil, from Greek elaiwōn* (dialectal variant of elaion), from elatiwā* OLIVE. The Middle English form displaced Old English ele, earlier æle; cognate with Old High German oli, from Latin oleum.

The meaning of any fatty or greasy substance (extracted from animals, vegetables, and parts of plants) is first recorded about 1303. The specific sense of petroleum, is first recorded in 1526.—v. Before 1425 oylen anoint; from the noun.—oily adj. 1528, formed from oil, n. + *-y*¹. An example is found in Middle English oylei (1392), from oile oil + -i *-y*¹.

ointment n. About 1280 oynement; later oignement (about 1300); borrowed from Old French oignement, oingnement, from Vulgar Latin unguimentum*, variant of Latin unguentum UNGUENT.

O.K. or OK adj., adv. 1839, originally an abbreviation of oll korrekt, one of many similar abbreviations (such as K.G. no go as if spelled know go) that arose during a vogue for using abbreviations in 1838 and 1839 in Boston and New York City. The abbreviation was further popularized as the election slogan of the “O.K. Club,” a Democratic club of New York City formed in 1840 by supporters of Martin Van Buren, in allusion to his nickname “Old Kinderhook,” Van Buren having been born at the village of Kinderhook, New York.—n. 1841, from the adjective.—v. 1888, from the noun.

The form okay, representing the pronunciation of O.K., appeared in 1929, replacing the earlier spelling okeh (1919).

okra n. 1679 ocra, later okra (1696); borrowed from a West African language (compare Akan ŋkrūmā okra); see also GUMBO.

-ol¹ a suffix meaning: 1 containing, derived from, or like alcohol, as in phenol. 2 phenol, or phenol derivative, as in thymol (phenol obtained from oil of thyme). Abstracted from (alcoh)ol.

-ol² a variant form of the suffix -OLE, as in cholesterol.

old adj. Probably before 1200 old, olde; developed from Old English (before 725), found in Anglian ald and West Saxon eald; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon ald old, Middle Dutch out (modern Dutch oud), Old High German and modern German alt, and Crimean Gothic alt old, from Proto-Germanic aldās*, originally a past participle formation from the verb stem al-* found in Old Icelandic ala to nourish, bring up, Old English alan, and Gothic alan grow, nourish. Related to ALDERMAN, ELDER¹.—n. Before 1393, from the adjective. Also about 1250 olde, from earlier ealde (before 1150), from the Old English adjective.—olden adj. Before 1400, formed from old, olde + *-en*².—old-fashioned adj. (1596) —Old Testament (about 1350 olde testament)

-ole a chemical suffix denoting: 1 containing a five-part ring, as in pyrrole (liquid compound obtained mostly from coal tar). 2 belonging to the ethers, as in anisole (compound used in perfumes). Abstracted from Latin oleum OIL.

oleaginous adj. oily. 1634, borrowed from French oléagineux, from Latin oleāginus of the olive, from olea olive, alteration (influenced by oleum oil) of oliva OLIVE; for suffix see -OUS. This word is found once in Middle English (probably before 1425) oliaginose, borrowed directly from the Latin oleāginus.

oleander n. 1548, borrowed from Medieval Latin oleander, perhaps by influence of Middle French oléandre; probably an alteration of Late Latin lorandrum, a further alteration of Latin rhododendron RHODODENDRON by influence of Latin laurea laurel, from the resemblance of the leaves (supported by French laurier rose, meaning oleander). The initial olea- suggests the influence of Latin olea olive.

olein n. 1838, borrowing of French oléine, from olé- (from Latin oleum oil) + -ine *-ine*², patterned after glycerin.

oleomargarine n. 1873, borrowed from French oléomargarine (oléine olein + margarine), so called because it was regarded as a chemical combination of olein and margarine.

olfactory adj. 1658, borrowed from Latin olfactorius, from olfact-, past participle stem of olfacere to get a smell of, sniff, (olēre give off a smell of + facere make); for suffix see -ORY.

oligarchy n. 1577 oligarchie; borrowed through Middle French oligarchie, from Greek oligarchiā government by the few (oligoi few + árchein to rule). Also found in oligracie (before 1500); borrowed from Old French olygrachie, variant of oligarchie oligarchy. —oligarch n. Before 1610 olygarche; later oligarch (1821); borrowed through Middle French olygarche; later oligarque, from Greek oligárchēs an oligarch (oligoi few + árchein to rule).

oligopoly n. 1895, borrowed from Medieval Latin oligopolium, from Greek oligoi few + -pōlium, from Latin monopōlium monopoly.

olive n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French olive, or directly from Latin olīva, from Greek elafwā*, dialectal variant of elafā olive tree, olive, probably borrowed from the same (Aegean, perhaps Cretan) source as Armenian ewī oil. —adj. 1657, from the noun. —olive branch Before 1325, branch of an olive tree; later token of peace (before 1338).

-ology a combining form meaning study or science of, originally used in jocular nonce words such as insectology (1803), commonsensology (1805), but now treated as a variant of -LOGY, with connective -o- as in sexology, terminology. 1803, abstracted from such words as geology, mythology, philology, in which the -o- is considered a connective, though it belonged to the preceding element as a stem-final or thematic vowel.

Olympiad n. 1614, a celebration of the Olympic Games, back formation from Middle English Olympiades, pl. (before 1422); borrowed from Middle French olimpiade, from Latin Olympiadem (nominative Olympias), from Greek Olympiās, from Olympia (Greek Olympiā) site of the Olympic Games. The form Olympias (from Latin) appears in Middle English before 1387.

Olympic Games Before 1603, replacing the earlier Olympian Games (1593), in reference to Olympia (Greek Olympiā), town in ancient Greece where the contests were held.

-oma a suffix meaning a growth or tumor, as in carcinoma, lymphoma, melanoma, sarcoma. New Latin, borrowed from Greek -ōma (genitive -ōmatos), a suffix of some nouns taken from verbs in -ōein, -ōōn.

ombudsman n. 1959, borrowing of Swedish ombudsman, literally, commission man or commissioner, corresponding to Old Icelandic umbothsmadr (umboth commission, from um- around and bjōdha to offer + madr man).

omega n. About 1400, borrowed from Medieval Greek δ μέγα big o (although the name was Classical, not Medieval); so called because the vowel was long in ancient Greek.

omelet or omelette n. 1611, borrowing of French omelette; earlier amelette, alteration of alemette, from alemelle blade of a knife or sword, probably from the misdivision of la lemelle, from Latin lāmella small, thin plate; so called from the omelet's flattened shape; for suffix see -ETTE.

omen n. 1582, borrowing of Latin ōmen foreboding.

omicron n. About 1400, borrowed from Medieval Greek δ micrōn small o (although the name was Classical, not Medieval); so called because the vowel was short in ancient Greek.

ominous adj. 1589, borrowed from Latin ōminōsus full of foreboding, from ōmen (genitive ōminis) foreboding, omen; for suffix see -OUS.

omission n. Probably 1348 omission neglect of duty, lack of action; borrowed from Late Latin omissionem (nominative omissio) an omitting, from Latin omiss-, past participle stem of mittere OMIT; for suffix see -ION.

omit v. Probably about 1422 ommitten, also omitten (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin omittere lay aside, disregard, let go (om- by, variant of ob- before m + mittere let go, send).

omni- a combining form meaning all, completely, as in omnipresent, omnirange, omnidirectional, omnifocal. Borrowed from Latin omni-, combining form of omnis all.

omnibus n. 1829, borrowed from French (voiture) omnibus common (conveyance), from Latin omnibus for all, dative plural of omnis all.

omnifarious adj. 1653, borrowed from Late Latin omnifārius of all sorts, from Latin omnifāriam on all places or parts (omni- all + -fāriam parts); for suffix see -OUS.

omnipotent adj. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French omnipotent, omnipotente, or directly from Latin omnipotentem (nominative omnipotēns) omni- all + potēns powerful, POTENT. —omnipotence n. Before 1460 omnipotens, borrowed from Middle French omnipotence, from Late Latin omnipotentia, from Latin omnipotentem omnipotent; for suffix see -ENCE.

omniscience n. 1612, borrowed from Medieval Latin omniscientia (Latin omni- all + scientia knowledge). —omniscient adj. 1604, borrowed from New Latin omniscientem (nominative omnisciens), from Medieval Latin omniscientia omniscience.

omnivorous adj. 1656, learned borrowing of Latin omnivorus (omni- all + -vorus, from vorāre devour, swallow); for suffix see -OUS.

on prep., adv. Old English (before 800) on, unstressed variant of earlier (about 700) an in, on, into; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon an on, Middle Dutch āne, aen (modern Dutch aan), Old High German ana (modern German an), Old Icelandic ā, and Gothic ana.

In Old English as a variant of an the word had a wider function than it does in modern English and took on much of the function of present-day in.

-on a suffix meaning: 1 elementary particle, as in neutron. 2 unit particle of energy, as in photon, fermion. 3 unit of genetic material, as in codon, operon. Abstracted from (i)on, (electr)on, (prot)on, etc.

onanism n. 1727–41, formed in allusion to Onan (Genesis 38:9, who spilled his semen on the ground rather than impregnate his deceased brother's wife) + -ism.

once adv. About 1250 ones one time, on one occasion; earlier anes (1131); formed from on, ane ONE + -es, genitive singular ending, used adverbially. This form replaced the Old English æne, adv., and finally displaced the Middle and early modern English enes about 1500.

As ones gradually lost a pronunciation in two syllables in late Middle English and with its final -s which represents a voiceless sound of s in sit the word began to be respelled with -ce, as in hence, to reflect spelling conventions. The development of the pronunciation with w (wuns) parallels ONE. —n. About 1300 ones one time; earlier anes (probably before 1200); from the adverb. —conj. Probably about 1300 ones once that; from the adverb. —adj. 1691, from the noun.

onco- a combining form meaning tumor, as in oncology, oncogenesis. New Latin adaptation of Greek ónkos mass or bulk.

oncogene n. 1969, formed from English onco- tumor + gene. —oncogenesis n. 1932, formed from English onco- tumor + genesis.

oncology n. 1857, formed from English onco- tumor + -logy science or study of.

oncornavirus n. 1970, formed from English onco- tumor + RNA (ribonucleic acid) + virus.

one adj., pron. About 1200 one; earlier on (probably about 1150), developed from Old English (before 725) ān, adj., pron., and n. (earlier in compounds, such as, ānmōd of one mind, resolute, about 700). Old English ān is cognate with Old Frisian ān one, Old Saxon ēn, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch een, Old High German and modern German ein, Old Icelandic einn (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish en), and Gothic ains, from Proto-Germanic ainaz*. —n. Probably about 1175 one; later on (probably before 1200) the number one, developed from Old English ān.

The now standard pronunciation (wun) developed in Middle English from ōn, oon, which by the 1400's had evolved (through ōn, uon, uōn, won, wun) an initial sound represented by w in southwestern and western England. This pronunciation appears only occasionally in the spelling and is first referred to by a scholar in 1701; earlier grammarians give to one the sound that it had in alone, atone, only. The same development occurred in once. See also AN.

-one a suffix used in names of chemicals to denote certain compounds containing oxygen, as in acetone, cortisone. Adapted from Greek -ōnē, a feminine suffix.

onerous adj. 1395, borrowed from Old French (h)onerous, onereux, and directly from Latin onerōsus, from onus (genitive oneris) burden, ONUS; for suffix see -OUS.

onion n. 1130 ungeon; later oinoin (1225), unyon (1356–57), and onyon (1381); borrowed from Old French oignon, and directly from Latin uniōnem (nominative uniō) a kind of onion.

only adj. Probably before 1200 anlich; later onelik (before 1338), and only (about 1386); developed from Old English ænlic, ānlic only, unique, solitary (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from ān ONE + -lic *-ly*². —adv. About 1250 on-like; later onliche (about 1280), and only (about 1303); from the adjective. —conj. About 1384, from the adjective.

onomastic adj. 1716 onomastick, borrowed from French onomastique, from Greek onomastikós of or belonging to naming, from onomázein to name, from ónoma NAME; for suffix see -IC. —onomastics n. 1936, formed from onomastic + -s, as in gymnastics, physics. An earlier form is recorded as onomastic, n. (1930).

onomatopoeia n. 1577, borrowing of Latin onomatopoeia the coining of words, from Greek onomatopoiā the making of a name or word, from onomatopoiós (ónoma, genitive ónomatos word, name + poiéin compose, make; see POET). —onomatopoeic adj. 1860, borrowed from French onomatopéique (onomatopée onomatopoeia + -ique -ic), and formed directly from Greek onomatopoiós + English -ic.

onset n. 1535, attack, assault; later, a starting up, beginning (1561); formed from English on + set, n.

onslaught n. Before 1625 anslaught, borrowed from Dutch aanslag attack, from Middle Dutch aenslach (aen ON + slach blow, related to slaen SLAY). The spellings anslaught, and particularly onslaught (1654) were influenced by the obsolete English noun slaught slaughter, going back to Old English sleht SLAUGHTER.

onto prep. 1581 on to to a position on (as in he stepped on to the stage); recorded as a closed compound onto in 1819.

ontogeny n. 1872, development of an individual organism, formed in English from Greek ón (genitive óntos) being, present participle of éinai to be + -généia origin, from -genēs born.

ontology n. 1721, borrowed from French ontologie, from New Latin ontologia, from Greek ón (genitive óntos) being + -logiā -logy.

onus n. About 1640, borrowed from Latin onus (genitive oneris) load or burden. Related to EXONERATE, ONEROUS.

onyx n. About 1250 oneche, later onix (before 1300); borrowed through Old French oniche, onix, and directly from Latin onyx (genitive onychis), from Greek ónyx (genitive ónychos) claw, fingernail, onyx; so called from the resemblance of this mineral to the color of a fingernail.

oocyte n. 1895, formed from English oo- (combining form of Greek oión EGG¹) + -cyte.

-oon The form -oon is an English suffixal type used especially from the 1500's to the 1700's to add emphasis to English borrowings of French nouns ending in -on stressed on the final syllable, and of Italian nouns in -one, such as balloon, bassoon, buffoon, cartoon, doubloon, macaroon. The form may have been influenced by apparently similar French use in pantaloon and perhaps dragoon. It probably also influenced the present-day spelling baboon, and perhaps even Japanese tycoon, and is found in English formations as spittoon. By imitation, -oon may also have been broadened in its general application to include the spellings of lagoon, typhoon, etc., just as it does pontoon and harpoon.

ooze¹ n. slow flow. 1340 wose juice, flowing liquid; developed from Old English (about 1000) wōs juice; cognate with Middle Low German wōs froth, juice, from Proto-Germanic wōsan*. The modern spelling ooze, came from a dialectal alteration first recorded in the late 1500's. —v. Before 1387 wosen, from woose flow. —oozy adj. 1714 (but implied in earlier ooziness, 1684).

ooze² n. soft mud or slime. 1340 wose; earlier waise (before 1338); developed from Old English (before 800) wāse mud, mire; cognate with Old Frisian wāse slime, mud, Old Icelandic veisa slime, stagnant pool, from Proto-Germanic waisōn*. The modern spelling ooze, is first recorded in the mid-1500's and was influenced by *ooze*¹. —oozy² adj. Before 1398 wosie; formed from Middle English *wose ooze*² + *-ie -y*¹.

op- a form of the prefix ob- before p in words from Latin, such as opponent (Latin oppōnentem, nominative oppōnēns). The form is due to the assimilation of b to the following consonant (p).

opacity n. 1560, darkness or obscurity of meaning; borrowed from French opacité, learned borrowing from Latin opacitatem (nominative opacitās) shadiness, shade, from opācus shaded, shady, dark, opaque.

opal n. 1598 opale, borrowed through French opale, opalle, learned borrowing from Latin opalus, supposedly from Greek opállios, possibly from Sanskrit ūpala-s gem, opal. Latin opalus is recorded in Middle English before 1398. —opalescence n. 1805–17; formed from English opal + -escence. —opalescent adj. 1813; formed from English opal + -escent.

opaque adj. Probably 1440 opake; borrowed from Latin opācus shaded, shady, dark. The current English spelling was influenced by French opaque, from Latin.

open adj. Old English open not closed down, raised up, open (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian epen, open open, Old Saxon opan, Middle Dutch ōpen (modern Dutch open), Old High German offan (modern German offen), and Old Icelandic opinn (Swedish öppen, Norwegian åpen, Danish åben); not recorded in Gothic; from Proto-Germanic upana-/upina-*, and related to up. —v. Probably before 1200 openen; developed from Old English (before 725) openian; cognate with Old Frisian epenia to open, Old Saxon opanōn, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch openen, Old High German offanōn (modern German öffnen), and Old Icelandic opna; derived from the Germanic source of Old English open, adj. —opener n. (1440) opera n. 1644, drama that is mostly sung; borrowing of Italian opera, literally, a work, from Latin opera work, effort; related to opus (genitive operis) a work; see OPERATE.

The term soap opera, originally referring disparagingly to daytime radio drama sponsored by soap manufacturers, appeared in 1939. —operatic adj. 1749, irregularly derived from opera, apparently on the analogy of drama, dramatic. —opereetta n. 1770, borrowed from Italian, diminutive of opera.

operable adj. 1646, formed from English operate + -able. The sense of capable of being treated by a surgical operation (as in an operable tumor) appeared in 1904.

operand n. 1886, borrowed from Latin operandum, neuter gerundive of operārī to work, OPERATE.

operant adj. 1602, borrowed from Latin operantem (nominative operāns), present participle of operārī to work, OPERATE; for suffix see -ANT. The meaning in psychology of involving spontaneous behavior that produces a reinforcing effect was coined in 1937 by the American psychologist B.F. Skinner. —n. 1700, from the adjective.

operate v. 1606, probably a back formation from earlier operation, and borrowed from Latin operātus, past participle of operārī to work, labor (in Late Latin, to have effect, be active, cause), from opera work, effort, related to opus (genitive operis) a work.

—operation n. 1391 operacioun action, performance, working; borrowed from Old French operation, and directly from Latin operātiōnem (nominative operātiō), from operārī to work; for suffix see -ATION. —operative adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French operatif, and directly from Late Latin operātivus creative, formative, from Latin operāt-, past participle stem of operārī to work, operate; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1809–10, worker, operator; noun use of operative, adj.

The meaning “private detective” is first recorded in 1905, probably introduced by the Pinkerton Detective Agency. In the 1930's operative was also applied to a secret agent or spy. —operator n. 1611, borrowed from Late Latin operātor worker, producer, from Latin operārī to work, OPERATE; for suffix see -OR².

operon n. 1961, borrowing of French opéron, from opér(ateur) operator, in the sense of the genetic segment that regulates the structural genes in an operon + -on (genetic unit).

ophthalmia n. Before 1398 obtalmia; later obtalmie (probably before 1425); borrowing of Medieval Latin obtalmia, and Old French obtalmie, from Late Latin ophthalmia, or directly from Greek ophthalmiā region of the eyes, from ophthalmós eye; originally, the seeing; related to ōps EYE. —ophthalmic adj. 1727–41, formed from English ophthalm(ia) + -ic, in imitation of Greek ophthalmikós of the eye. The earlier Middle English obtalmic (probably before 1425) had the restricted meaning of affected with ophthalmia; borrowed from Medieval Latin obtalmicus. —ophthalmology n. 1842 (but implied earlier in ophthalmologist, 1834); formed in English from Greek ophthalmós eye + English -ology.

opiate adj. 1543, of or containing opium, narcotic; borrowed from Medieval Latin opiatus, from Latin opium OPIUM; for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1603, from the adjective. A single example is recorded probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin opiatus.

opine v. About 1450 opynen; borrowed from Middle French opiner, and directly from Latin opinārī have an opinion, suppose, think, judge, perhaps related to optāre to desire, choose; see OPTION.

opinion n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French opinion what one thinks, supposition, judgment, belief, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin opiniōnem (nominative opiniō), related to opinārī think, judge, suppose, OPINE; for suffix see -ION. —opinionated adj. 1601, formed from earlier opinionate, adj. (1553, based on opinion, supposed; later, dogmatic, 1576, from opinion + -ate) + *-ed*².

opium n. 1392, borrowed from Latin opium, from Greek ópion poppy juice, poppy, diminutive of opós vegetable juice.

opossum n. 1610 apossoun, borrowed from Algonquian (Powhatan) ápásúm white animal. See also POSSUM.

The replacement of the original spelling with a by o is found in other words of American Indian origin, for example tobacco (from earlier tabaco).

opponent n. 1588, probably from the adjective. —adj. 1647, borrowed from Latin oppōnentem (nominative oppōnēns), present participle of oppōnere oppose, object to, set against (op- against + pōnere to put, set, place); for suffix see -ENT.

opportune adj. Probably about 1408, borrowed from Old French oportun (feminine oportune) timely, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin opportūnus favorable, from the phrase ob portum veniēns coming toward a port, in reference to the wind. —opportunism n. 1870; formed in English from opportune + -ism, by influence of Italian opportunismo, from opportuno opportune + -ismo -ism. The term was originally used in Italian politics, and later in French politics (opportunisme, 1869, which also influenced the formation in English). —opportunist n. 1881, borrowed from French opportuniste. —opportunistic adj. (1892) —opportunity n. About 1380 oportunyte good fortune; also, before 1387 opportunitate fitness, competency, favorable time, chance, occasion; borrowed from Old French opportunité, and directly from Latin opportunitātem (nominative opportunitās) fitness, suitability, favorable time, from opportūnus opportune; for suffix see -ITY.

oppose v. About 1380 opposen confront with objections; borrowed from Old French opposer, a blend of Old French poser to place, lay down, POSE and Latin oppōnere oppose, object to, set against. The meaning of hinder, resist, is first recorded in 1596. —opposable adj. 1667, formed from English oppose + -able.

opposite adj. 1391 opposyt, borrowed from Old French opposite, learned borrowing from Latin oppositus, past participle of oppōnere set against. The meaning of contrary, different, is first recorded in 1580. —n. About 1385 oposit, borrowed from Old French oposite, n., from oposite, adj. —prep. 1758, from the adjective, probably by omission of to in the phrase opposite to. —adv. 1817, from the adjective.

opposition n. About 1395 opposicioun the position of two heavenly bodies exactly opposite to each other; borrowed from Old French oposicion, opposition, or directly from Medieval Latin oppositionem (nominative oppositio), from Latin oppositiōnem (nominative oppositiō) act of opposing, from opposit-, past participle stem of oppōnere set against; for suffix see -ION.

The meaning of contrast is first recorded in 1581, and that of antagonism, in 1588. The meaning of a political party opposed to the party in power is found in 1704.

oppress v. About 1380 oppressen weigh down, burden; borrowed from Old French oppresser, from Medieval Latin oppressare, frequentative of Latin opprimere press against, crush (op- against + primere to PRESS¹ push). It is also possible that in some instances oppress is a back formation from earlier oppression.

The meaning of burden unjustly, is first recorded in 1382. —oppression n. 1334, borrowed from Old French oppression, oppression, from Latin oppressiōnem (nominative oppressiō), from oppress-, past participle stem of opprimere; for suffix see -ION. —oppressive adj. 1627–77, probably formed from English oppress + -ive, after French oppressif (feminine oppressive). —oppressor n. About 1400, also oppressour (1422); borrowed from Old French oppresseur, from Latin oppressor, from opprimere oppress; for suffix see -OR².

opprobrium n. 1656, reborrowing of Latin opprobrium, as a replacement of Middle English opprobry (probably before 1425), earlier borrowed from Latin opprobrium, from opprobriare to reproach, taunt (op- against + probrum reproach, infamy). —opprobrious adj. Before 1387, borrowed through Old French opprobrieux, and directly from Late Latin opprobriōsus, from Latin opprobrium; for suffix see -OUS.

opt v. 1877, borrowed from French opter to choose, learned borrowing from Latin optāre choose, desire.

optic adj. Probably before 1425 optik, obtic, borrowed from Middle French oblique, and directly from Medieval Latin opticus of sight or seeing, from Greek optikós of or having to do with sight, from optós seen, visible, from op-, root of ópsēthai be going to see, related to óps eye; for suffix see -IC. —optical adj. 1570, formed from English optic + *-al*¹, perhaps after Middle French optique or Medieval Latin opticus optic. —optician n. 1687, formed in English from optic(s) + -ian (as in physician), after French opticien, from Medieval Latin optica optics; for suffix see -IAN. —optics n. 1579 optikes, a plural of optik, optick, adj., used as a noun in place of Medieval Latin optica optics, neuter plural, borrowed from Greek tà optiká optical matters, optics, from neuter plural of optikós optic; for suffix see -ICS.

optimism n. 1782 Optimism; earlier Optimisme (1759) name given to the doctrine that the actual world is the best of all possible worlds; originally a borrowing of French optimisme (1737), from New Latin optimum (as used by Leibnitz to mean the greatest good), from Latin optimus the best; see OPTIMUM; for suffix see -ISM. —optimist n. 1766, formed from English optim(ism) + -ist, after French optimiste. —optimistic adj. 1848, formed from English optimist + -ic.

optimize v. 1 act as an optimist. 1844, back formation from English optimist + -ize. 2 make the best or most of. 1857, formed from Latin optimum + English suffix -ize.

optimum n. 1879, borrowing of Latin optimum, neuter singular of optimus best, probably related to ops power, resources. —adj. 1886, from the noun. —optimal adj. 1890, formed from English optimum, n. + *-al*¹.

option n. 1604, act of choosing, borrowed from French op- tion, learned borrowing from Latin optiōnem (nominative optiō) choice, free choice, related to optāre to desire, choose. The commercial sense of the right to buy or sell something at a certain price within a certain time, is first recorded in 1755. —optional adj. 1765, leaving something to choice; formed from English option + *-al*¹. The meaning of being a matter of choice, is first recorded in 1792.

optometry n. 1886, formed from English optometer (1737) + -ry, on the pattern of spectrometer, spectrometry; probably influenced by French optométrie, from opto- sight, from Greek optós seen, visible; also see -METRY. —optometrist n. 1903, formed from optometry + -ist.

opulent adj. 1601, probably, in part, a back formation from opulence, and, in part, borrowed from Middle French opulent, learned borrowing from Latin opulentus wealthy; see OPULENCE. —opulence n. About 1510, borrowed from Middle French opulence, learned borrowing from Latin opulentia, from opulentus wealthy, from ops wealth, power, resources.

opus n. 1809, borrowing of Latin opus a work.

or¹ conj. Probably about 1200 or, a reduced form (analogous to e'er from ever) of a fusion of: 1) other, conj. (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 1050) other or, from oththe, oththa; earlier eththa (probably before 725); and 2) outher (before 1121); developed from Old English (before 901) āhwæther, āther, pron.; originally the same as either, probably by association in such phrases of alternative condition as either...or (Old English āther...oththe), and whether...or (Old English hwæther...oththe). The Old English forms oththe, oththa are cognate with Old High German odo, odar; earlier eddo (modern German oder), Old Icelandic edha and Gothic aiþthau.

The ending -r appeared in late Old English perhaps through the influence of words like either, neither, and whether.

or² adv., prep., conj. before, variant of Middle English er; see ERE.

-or¹ a suffix meaning action or condition, especially in words from Latin, as in error, horror, favor, honor, behavior. Middle English -or, -our, borrowed from Old French -eor, -eur, from Latin -or, abstract noun suffix.

-or² a suffix meaning person or thing that does (something) as in conqueror, donor, actor, accelerator. Middle English -or, -our, borrowed through Anglo-French -our, -ur, and from Old French -eor, -eur, from Latin *-ātor*em (nominative -ātor) and other combinations of stem vowel and agent suffix -tor. In some cases, -or was acquired as part of -tor in words borrowed directly from Latin -ātor (stem -ā- + -tor) or adapted from French -eur in -teur in learned borrowings from Latin. The suffix is often found attached to verbs in *-ate*¹, as in demonstrator, illustrator, generator, etc., or to verbs in -it, as in depositor, auditor, or -t, as in instructor, corrector, etc. Occasionally it appears in the form -sor, as in confessor.

oracle n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French oracle, and borrowed directly from Latin orāculum, from orāre pray, plead.

—oracular adj. 1631, formed from Latin orāculum oracle + English -ar.

oracy n. 1965, formed from English or(al) + -acy, on the pattern of literacy.

oral adj. 1625, done with the mouth (but implied earlier in orally, 1608); perhaps later reinforced in English by French oral, but borrowed from Late Latin ōrālis, from Latin ōs (genitive ōris) mouth; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The meaning of spoken or verbal is first recorded in 1628. —n. 1876, shortened form of oral examination.

orange n. Probably about 1380 orenge an orange (fruit); earlier, as a surname (1296); orange (before 1425); borrowed from Old French orenge, in pome d'orange and in Medieval Latin pomum de orengē; alteration of Arabic nāranj, from Persian nārang, from Sanskrit nāraṅgā-s orange tree.

Loss of initial n- in early Old French was probably by absorption into the indefinite article in *une n'orange an orange; contrast Spanish naranja which retained the n-. The shift in spelling from orange to orengē may have been influenced by Old French or gold, in allusion to the color of the fruit, and perhaps by the name Orange town in southern France through which oranges were shipped north. —adj. 1542, from the noun (originally an attributive use, as in orange hue, but by 1620 used as an adjective, as in orange velvet).

orangutan n. 1699 Orang-Outang, borrowed from Dutch orang-outang (1631), from Malay orang utan, literally, man of the woods (orang man + utan, hutan woods).

orate v. About 1600, to pray; probably borrowed from Latin orātus, past participle of orāre pray, plead, speak before a court or assembly; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

The meaning of make a formal speech (1669) came into common use about 1860 in the U.S. as a back formation from oration.

oration n. Probably before 1375 oracion prayer; borrowed from Late Latin orātiōnem (nominative orātiō), from Latin orāre pray, plead, speak before a court or assembly; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of formal speech or discourse is first recorded in English in 1502.

orator n. About 1380 orateur spokesman or advocate; borrowing through Anglo-French orateur, variant of Old French orateur, learned borrowing from Latin orātor speaker, from orāre speak before a court or assembly, plead; for suffix see *-OR*².

oratory¹ n. formal public speaking. Before 1586, borrowed from Latin ars oratōria oratorical art, feminine of orātorius of speaking or pleading, from orāre speak before a court or assembly, plead; for suffix see -ORY. —oratorical adj. 1589, formed from English orator or oratory + -ical.

oratory² n. small chapel. Probably before 1325 oratorie; borrowed from Old French oratorie, oratoire, and directly from Late Latin orātōrium place of prayer (and specifically in reference to the Oratory of St. Philip Neri in Rome, where musical services based on older mystery plays were presented in the 1500's), from neuter of Latin ōrātōrius of or for praying, from ōrāre, see ORATORY¹.

orb n. About 1449 orbe orbit of a celestial body (possibly influenced by earlier orbiculer, 1440); borrowing of Middle French orbe, and borrowed directly from Latin orbis circle, disk, ring, probably related to orbita wheel track, rut, course, orbit. —v. 1600, from the noun.

orbicular adj. Probably 1440 orbiculer, borrowed from Middle French orbiculaire, or directly from Late Latin orbiculāris, from Latin orbiculus small orb, diminutive of orbis ORB.

orbit n. 1392 orbita eye socket; borrowing of Medieval Latin orbita; also, probably before 1425 orbite; borrowing of Old French orbite; both the Old French and Medieval Latin forms from Latin orbita wheel track, course, orbit. The meaning in astronomy was borrowed from Latin in 1696; application to an artificial earth satellite is first recorded in 1951. —v. 1946, from the noun. —orbital adj. 1541, of the eye socket; formed from English orbit + *-al*¹, probably after New Latin orbitalis, from Medieval Latin orbita eye socket, orbit. —orbiter n. (1954) orchard n. Probably before 1200 orchard; developed from Old English orċeard fruit garden (about 1000); alteration of earlier orċgeard orchard, garden (before 899); perhaps a reduced form of wortgeard, wyrġgeard (wort, wyrġ vegetable, plant, root + geard garden, yard¹), or as a compound corresponding to Gothic aúrġti-gards.

The Middle English spelling with h may have a connection by folk etymology with the Latin hortus garden.

orchestra n. 1606, borrowed from Latin orchēstra place where the senate sat in a theater, from Greek orchēstrā space where the chorus of dancers performed in the ancient Greek theater, from orchelsthai to dance, intensive form of ērchesthai to go, come.

The meaning of a group of musicians performing at a concert, opera, etc., is first recorded in 1720, and that of a part of a theater in front of the stage 1768. —orchestral adj. 1811, formed from English orchestra + *-al*¹. —orchestrate v. 1880, back formation from orchestration; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —orchestration n. 1864, borrowing of French orchestration, from orchestrer orchestrate + -ation -ation.

orchid n. 1845, borrowed from New Latin Orchideae, Orchidaceae the plant's family name, from orchid-, erroneously assumed as the stem of Latin orchis a kind of orchid, from Greek ōrchis (genitive ōrchēōs) orchid, testicle; so called from the shape of the plant's root.

ordain v. About 1250 ordeynen assign, decree, appoint, arrange; borrowed from Old French ordener, with the stems ordein-, ordeign-, and borrowed directly from Latin ordināre put in order, arrange, dispose, appoint, from ōrdō (genitive ōrdinis) ORDER.

ordeal n. About 1385 ordal a method of trial by physical test; developed from Old English (about 915) ordæl, ordāl, literally, judgment or verdict; cognate with Old Frisian ordēl, urdēl judgment or verdict, Old Saxon urdēli, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch oordeel, and Old High German urteili, urteil (modern German Urteil); derived from Proto-Germanic uzdailijan*, represented in Old English ādāelan to deal out, allot in shares, DEAL.

order n. Probably before 1200 ordre rank, class, sequence, arrangement; borrowed from Old French ordre, orde, from ordene, learned borrowing from Latin ordinem (nominative ōrdō) row, rank, series, arrangement. —v. Probably about 1200 ordren arrange, ordain; from the noun. —orderly adj. Before 1577, formed from English order + *-ly*¹, but earlier found as an adverb (about 1477). —n. 1800, military attendant who carries out orders; from the adjective, perhaps by influence of French ordonnance orderly.

ordinal adj. About 1410 ordinel orderly, proper, regular; borrowed from Old French ordinel, and directly from Late Latin ordinālis showing order, from Latin ōrdō (genitive ōrdinis) row, series, ORDER; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —n. Before 1325, borrowed from Medieval Latin ordinale, from Late Latin, neuter of ordinālis; see adjective.

ordinance n. Probably before 1300 ordinaunce decree, arrangement, regulation; borrowed from Old French ordenance, or directly from Medieval Latin ordinantia, from Latin ordinantem (nominative ordināns), present participle of ordināre put in order, ORDAIN; for suffix see -ANCE. The meaning of military supplies is first recorded about 1390, developed from the sense of preparation for war (1330); compare ORDINANCE.

ordinary adj. Before 1402 ordenarye having authority by ecclesiastical office; later ordinarie orderly, regular, usual, orderly (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French ordinarie, ordinaire, and directly from Latin ordinārius customary, regular, usual, orderly, from ōrdō (genitive ōrdinis) ORDER; for suffix see -ARY.

ordination n. Before 1400 ordynacyone divine decree; later ordinacioun a putting in order, the ordaining of an archbishop (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French ordination, or directly from Late Latin and Latin ordinātiōnem (nominative ordinātiō) a setting in order, ordinance, from ordināre arrange, ORDAIN; for suffix see -ATION.

ordnance n. Before 1548, cannon, artillery, shortened variant of ordinaunce military supplies (about 1390); see ORDINANCE.

ordure n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French ordure filth, from ord filthy, from Latin horridus dreadful, HORRID; for suffix see -URE.

ore n. Probably before 1200 or, developed in part from Old English ōra ore or unworked metal, and in part from Old English ār brass, copper, bronze. Old English ōra is related to ear earth, and cognate with Low German ūr iron-containing ore, modern Dutch oer, and Old Icelandic aurr gravel. Old English ār is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German ēr bronze (modern German ehern brazen), Old Icelandic eir bronze or copper, and Gothic aiz bronze, from Proto-Germanic ajiz-*.

Although Old English ār began to be identified in meaning with Old English ōra in early Middle English, the forms descending from both (or, oar, ore, from ār; oor, oure, ure from ōra) continued to develop until the 1600's, when the forms from ōra assimilated with those from ār. Thus modern ore appears to derive its meaning from Old English ōra, but its form from Old English ār brass, copper, bronze.

organ n. Probably before 1300 orgne a kind of stringed or wind musical instrument; later organ (before 1325); also, functional part of the body, organ (1392); developed from a fusion of Old English (about 1000) organe musical instrument, and of Old French orgene, organe musical instrument; both Old English and Old French forms are borrowed from Latin organa, plural of organum, from Greek ōrganon implement, musical instrument, organ of the body; related to ērgon WORK. It is also evident that, in some instances, the term was reborrowed in Middle English directly from Latin. —organist n. 1591, probably formed from English organ + -ist by influence of Middle French organiste or Medieval Latin organista. The term replaced Middle English organister (recorded probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French organistre, alteration of Medieval Latin organista.

organdy or organdie n. 1835, borrowed from French organdi, perhaps an alteration of Organzi, medieval form of Urgench, a city in Uzbekistan, where this kind of fabric was produced. Compare ORGANZA.

organelle n. 1924, borrowed from New Latin organella, diminutive from Medieval Latin organum organ of the body, from Latin organum instrument, ORGAN.

organic adj. Before 1400 organik having special functions, in reference to parts of the body; borrowed from Old French organique, organice, and directly from Medieval Latin organicus; later, serving as an organ or instrument (1517); reborrowed from Latin organicus, from Greek organikós, from ōrganon instrument, ORGAN; for suffix see -ic.

The meaning "of the bodily organs, structural" (as in an organic disease) does not again appear in the record of English before 1706, and may be another reborrowing from Latin. The sense "having organs or derived from organized living beings" (as in organic matter), is first recorded in 1778.

organism n. 1664, organic structure, organization; probably formed from English organize + -ism, on the model of symbolize, symbolism. The meaning of a system (as in society as an organism) is first recorded in 1768–74; the meaning of a living animal or plant, is first recorded in 1842.

organize v. 1413 organysen give structure to, provide with organs, borrowed through Middle French organiser, and directly from Medieval Latin organizare, from Latin organum instrument, ORGAN; for suffix see -ize. —organization n. Probably before 1425 organizacioun bodily structure or composition; borrowed from Middle French organisation, and directly from Medieval Latin organizationem (nominative organizatio), from organizare organize; for suffix see -ation. The meaning of condition of being organized is first recorded in 1790, and that of the action of organizing parts into a whole, in 1816. The meaning of a system, establishment, etc., is first recorded in 1873.

organza n. 1820, probably alteration of the name Organzi; see ORGANDY.

orgasm n. 1684, excitement or violent action in an organ or part; borrowed through French orgasme or New Latin orgasmus, from Greek orgasmós excitement, swelling, from ōrgan be in heat, become ripe for; literally, to swell, be excited; related to orgé impulse, excitement, anger.

orgy n. 1561 orgies, pl., secret rites in the worship of certain Greek and Roman gods; borrowed from Middle French orgies, learned borrowing from Latin orgia, and borrowed directly from Greek orgia, pl., secret rites; related to ērgon WORK. The singular form orgy is first recorded in English in 1665. —orgiastic adj. 1698, borrowed from Greek orgiastikós, from orgiasies one who celebrates orgies, from orgiázein to celebrate orgies, from orgia orgies; for suffix see -ic.

oriel n. 1360, porch, corridor, balcony, bay window; earlier, a room containing an oriel (1236); borrowed from Old French oriol, and perhaps from Medieval Latin oriolum, both of uncertain origin.

Orient n. About 1375 Orient, orient part of the sky or the world in which the sun rises, the East; borrowed from Old French orient, or directly from Latin orientem (nominative oriēns) part of the sky in which the sun rises; originally, adj., rising, present participle of oriiri to rise; for suffix see -ent. Compare OCCIDENT. —v. orient 1727–41, to place or arrange facing the east; borrowed from French orienter, from orient east (from Old French). The meaning of determine the bearings of, is first recorded in English in 1842. —Oriental adj. About 1386, borrowed from Old French oriental, and directly from Latin orientālis of the East, from orientem the East; for suffix see *-al*¹. —orientation n. 1839, arrangement of a building, etc., to face the east or any other specified direction; possibly borrowed from French orientation (orienter to orient + -ation -ation), or formed from English orient + -ation. The meaning "determination of one's bearings," is first recorded in English in 1868–70.

orifice n. Probably before 1425, the opening of a wound; borrowed from Middle French orifice, and directly from Latin ōrificium (ōs, genitive ōris mouth, opening + facere make).

origin n. Probably before 1400 origyne ancestry, derivation; borrowed possibly from Old French origine* (compare Middle French origine), and directly from Latin originem (nominative origō) beginning, source, birth, from oriiri to rise. The meaning of that from which anything arises, starting point, source, is first recorded in English in 1604. —original adj. Before 1325 origenal first in time, earliest; borrowed from Old French original, and directly from Latin originālis, from originem (nominative origō) origin; for suffix see *-al*¹. —n. About 1350, original sin; later, an original text (about 1386); borrowed from Medieval Latin originale. —originality n. 1742, formed from English original + -ity, probably after French originalité. —originate v. 1657–83, give rise to, probably a back formation from origination origin or derivation (1614); probably borrowed from Middle French origination, from Latin originātiōnem (nominative originātiō), from origināre* originate, from originem (nominative origō) origin; for suffix see -ATION.

—originator n. 1818, formed from English originate + -or² on the pattern of creator.

oriole n. 1776, borrowed from earlier French oriel (now loriel, from l'oriel), from Old French, from Latin aureolus golden.

ormolu n. 1765, borrowed from French or moulu, literally, ground gold (or gold, from Latin aurum, and moulu ground up, past participle of moudre to grind, from Latin molere to grind).

ornament n. Probably before 1200 urnement useful accessory, decoration, embellishment; later replaced by ornament (probably before 1350); learned borrowing from Latin ornamentum, Middle English urnement was borrowed from probable Anglo-French urnement*, Old French ornement, learned borrowing from Latin ornamentum equipment, trappings, embellishment, from ornare equip, adorn; see ORNATE; for suffix see -MENT.
—v. 1720, from the noun. Ornament, v. is a replacement in modern English for earlier ournen to adorn, ornament (recorded before 1382); borrowed from Old French orner, from Latin ornare. —ornamental adj. 1646, formed from English ornament + -al¹, and, probably in some instances, borrowed from Latin ornamentalis, from ornamentum.

ornate adj. Before 1400, seemingly, decorous; later, adorned, ornamented (about 1412); borrowed from Latin ornatus, past participle of ornare adorn, fit out, contracted from earlier ordinare*, formed from the stem ordin- of ordo ORDER (later reformed in Latin ordinare; see ORDAIN); for suffix see -ATE¹.

ornery adj. 1816, dialectal contraction of ORDINARY.

ornithology n. 1678, borrowed from New Latin ornithologia (1599), from Greek ornīs (genitive ornīthos) bird, also órneon; for suffix see -LOGY.

orotund adj. 1792–99, alteration of Latin ore rotundō in well-rounded phrases; literally, with round mouth (ore, ablative of os mouth; rotundō, ablative of rotundus round). The alteration of Latin ore rotundō by omission of -re in ore, adjacent to ro- of rotundō, is familiar in the borrowing process of English.

orphan n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Late Latin orphanus parentless child, from Greek orphanós deprived, orphaned. —adj. 1483, from the noun. —v. 1814, from the noun.

ortho- a combining form meaning: 1 straight or upright, as in orthodontics, orthopterous. 2 correct or proper, as in orthography, orthopedics. Borrowed through Middle French and Latin ortho-, from Greek ortho-, stem of orthós straight, right, true, correct.

orthoclase n. 1849, borrowed from German Orthoklas (formed from Greek ortho- straight + klásis cleavage, from klán to break; so called from its crystals having two cleavages at right angles to each other).

orthodontics n. 1909, formed in English from New Latin orthodontia (1849 ortho- straight + Greek odón, genitive odóntos TOOTH) + -ics, as in orthopedics.

orthodox adj. About 1454 ortodox, and 1456 orthodoxe; borrowed from Middle French orthodoxe, and directly from Late Latin orthodoxus, from Greek orthodoxos having the right opinion (ortho- right, true + dóxa opinion, praise; see DOXOLOGY).

Orthodox as the specific name of the Eastern Church is first recorded in 1772. In Jewry Orthodox is first recorded in 1904, from earlier orthodox strictly observant (1853). —orthodoxy n. 1630, borrowed from French orthodoxie, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin orthodoxia, from Greek orthodoxía right opinion (ortho- right, true + dóxa opinion); for suffix see -Y³.

orthography n. 1530 orthographie, alteration of ortographie (before 1460); borrowed from Middle French orthographie, learned borrowing from Latin orthographia, from Greek orthographiā (ortho- correct + root of gráphein to write).

orthopedic adj. 1840, borrowed from French orthopédique, from orthopédie orthopedic surgery (ortho- straight, correct + -pédie, from Greek paideiā rearing of children, from país, genitive paidós child); for suffix see -IC.

orthopterous adj. 1826, formed from English ortho- straight + Greek pterón wing; so called from their usually straight and narrow forewings.

orthotic adj. 1955, from New Latin orthosis, on the analogy of prosthesis, prosthetic, from Greek orthōsis a making straight, from orthoún set straight, from orthós straight; see ORTHO-.

-ory a suffix forming adjectives and nouns and meaning: 1 of or having to do with, as in illusory. 2 characterized by, as in compulsory. 3 serving to, as in preparatory. 4 tending to or inclined to, as in contradictory, conciliatory. 5 place or establishment for, as in depository, conservatory. Middle English -orie, borrowed from Old North French -ory, -orie, Old French -oir, -oire, from Latin -ōrius, -ōria, -ōrium. English -ory became the conventional ending in words borrowed or adapted from Latin with suffix -tōrius or -sōrius (-tor, -sor and adjective suffix -ius); the neuter in -tōrium, -sōrium furnished nouns such as dormitōrium dormitory.

oryx n. Before 1382 orix, borrowed from Latin oryx, from Greek oryx (genitive orygos) antelope with pointed horns.

os- a form of the prefix ob- in some cases before c and t in words of Latin origin, as in ostentation. The form developed from the loss of b (or p) from a prehistoric lengthened variant obs- (or ops-); compare abs-, which survives as a lengthened variant of ab- (as in abstract).

Oscar n. 1936, supposedly adopted from the remark, "He reminds me of my Uncle Oscar," made in 1931 by the secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences when she saw one of the statuettes; her uncle was Oscar Pierce, an American wheat and fruit grower.

oscillate v. 1726, probably a back formation of earlier oscillation, and perhaps in some instances borrowed from Latin oscillātum, past participle of oscillāre to swing, rock, from oscillum a swing; for suffix see -ATE¹. —oscillation n. 1658, action of oscillating; borrowed probably through French os- cillation, learned borrowing from Latin ōscillātiōnem (nominative ōscillātiō), from ōscillāre to swing; for suffix see -ATION.

-ose¹ a suffix meaning: 1 full of, having much or many, as in verbose, comatose. 2 inclined to, fond of, as in jocose. Borrowed from Latin -ōsus. Related to -ous. Also a frequent variant of -ous in Middle English.

-ose² a suffix used to form names of sugars and other carbohydrates, as in cellulose, fructose. Borrowed from French -ose, abstracted from glucose.

osier n. Probably before 1300 hosyer willow twig, switch of osier; later, an osier (1392); borrowed from Old French osier, osiere, and directly from Medieval Latin osera, osiera willow, of uncertain origin; also possibly developed from Old English oser, borrowed from Medieval Latin.

-osis a suffix meaning: 1 act or process of, or state or condition of, as in osmosis, hypnosis. 2 abnormal condition, as in neurosis, thrombosis. Borrowed from Latin -osis, and directly from Greek -ōsis; formed from the addition of the common verbal abstract suffix -sis to -o- (-ō-ein, contracted -oūn, as in sklērōsis hardening, from sklēro-ein, sklēroūn harden), or directly to the noun or adjective stem, as in thrombōsis clotting, from thrombos a clot).

osmium n. 1804, New Latin, from Greek osmē smell, odor + New Latin -ium; so called from the strong odor of one of the oxides of osmium.

osmosis n. 1867, Latinized form of earlier osmose (1854), shortened form of earlier endosmosis (1836–39), probably formed on endosmose inward passage of a fluid through a porous septum (1829); borrowed from French, from endo-inward + Greek ōsmós a thrusting or pushing, from ōthein to push, thrust. —osmotic adj. 1854, shortened form of earlier endosmotic of or involving endosmosis; formed on the pattern of sclerosis, sclerotic, etc.

osprey n. Before 1475 ospray; earlier hospray (about 1450); borrowed from Anglo-French ospriet (found as a surname, 1198), from Medieval Latin avis prede bird of prey, from Latin avis praedae.

osseous adj. Probably before 1425 ossous, ossuous bony; borrowed from Medieval Latin ossous, from Latin osseus; later, reformed in English (1682), perhaps by influence of French osseux, from Latin osseus bony, from os (genitive ossis) bone, earlier ost*; for suffix see -OUS.

ossifrage n. 1601, borrowed from Latin ossifraga sea eagle, osprey, feminine of ossifragus, literally, bone-breaker, from ossi-fragus, adj., bone-breaking (os, genitive ossis bone + -fragus breaking, from the root of frangere to break); probably so called from the bird's great strength or its habit of dropping bones from a great height to break them.

ossify v. 1713, probably a back formation of ossification, perhaps modeled on French ossifier, from Latin ossis (genitive of os bone); for suffix see -FY. —ossification n. 1697, possibly formed from English ossific becoming bone (1676) + -ation.

ossuary n. 1658, borrowed from Late Latin ossuārium receptacle for bones of the dead, charnel house, from neuter of Latin ossuārius of bones, from ossua bones (perhaps formed on the model of artua limbs), from os (genitive ossis) bone; for suffix see -ARY (def. 1).

ostensible adj. 1762–71, capable of being shown, presentable; borrowed from French ostensible, from Latin ostēnsus, past participle of ostendere to show; for suffix see -IBLE. The meaning of apparent, pretended, professed, is first recorded in 1771.

ostensive adj. 1605, borrowed from Late Latin ostēnsivus showing, from Latin ostēnsus, past participle of ostendere to show; for suffix see -IVE.

ostentation n. 1436 ostentacione portent, foreshadowing; later a showing off (before 1475); borrowed from Old French ostentation, and directly from Latin ostentātiōnem (nominative ostentātiō) vain display, from ostentāre to display, frequentative form of ostendere to show, stretch toward (os- toward + tendere to stretch); for suffix see -ATION. —ostentatious adj. 1658 (implied in ostentatiousness); formed from English ostentation + -ous.

osteology n. 1670 osteologie, borrowed from French ostéologie, from New Latin osteologia, from Greek ostéon bone; for suffix see -LOGY.

osteopathy n. 1891, said to be formed from Greek ostéon bone + English -pathy, but also probably influenced by earlier osteopathy disease of the bones (1857). —osteopath n. 1897, back formation from osteopathy.

ostomy n. 1957, abstracted from colostomy (artificial opening into the colon) and similar terms for surgical procedures, ultimately from New Latin stoma opening, orifice, from Greek stóma mouth.

ostracize v. 1649, formed on English ostracism + -ize, after Greek ostrakízein banish by ostracism, from ostrakon tile, potsherd, from an ancient stem ostr-* (found in óstreion oyster), related to ostéon bone. —ostracism n. 1588, method of temporary banishment in ancient Greece by popular ballot, cast by potsherds or tiles; borrowed, possibly through Middle French ostracisme, and directly from Greek ostrakismós, from ostrakízein to ostracize; for suffix see -ISM.

ostrich n. About 1225 ostrice; later ostriche (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French ostrice, ostrusce, and Medieval Latin ostrica, ostrigius; both the Old French and Medieval Latin from Vulgar Latin avis strūthiō* (avis bird, from Latin; strūthiō ostrich, from Late Latin, from Greek strouthiōn ostrich, from strouthōs megálē great sparrow).

other adj., pron. Old English ōther the second, other (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian ōther the second, other, Old Saxon āthar, ōthar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch ander, Old High German andar (modern German ander), Old Icelandic annarr, and Gothic anþar, from Proto-Germanic anþeraz*.

The sense of second in Germanic was replaced to avoid ambiguity (second in English, zweiter in German, etc.). The Old English, Old Saxon, and Old Frisian forms show a normal loss of n before fricatives.—adv. Before 1121, from the pronoun. —otherwise adv. Old English on ðihre wisan (before 899).

otiose adj. 1794, ineffective, futile; later, at leisure (1850), and superfluous or useless (1866); reborrowed from Latin ōtiosus having leisure or ease, not busy, from ōtium leisure.

An earlier form is found in English otious at ease, idle (1614); probably borrowed from Latin ōtiosus, but possibly a back formation from earlier otiosity (1483 ociosyte); borrowed from Middle French ociosité, from Old French ocios, from Latin ōtiosus; for suffix see -ITY.

otter n. Before 1300 oter, developed from Old English (before 700) otr, oter, otor; cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch otter otter, Old High German ottar (modern German Otter), and Old Icelandic otr (modern Icelandic otur, Norwegian oter, Danish odder, Swedish utter), from Proto-Germanic utraz*.

Ottoman adj. 1603, borrowing of French Ottoman, from Italian Ottomano, from Arabic ‘uthmāni of or belonging to ‘Uthman Othman, Osman, 1259–1326, founder of the Ottoman dynasty and empire. Earlier use is recorded in the noun form Othmann (1585).

ouch interj. 1837, probably a borrowing from Pennsylvania German autch, a cry of pain.

ought¹ v. be obliged. Before 1225 ahten, aghten, aughten, oughten be bound to, owe; earlier ahte, aghte, aughte, oughte owned, possessed, owed (before 1121), past tense of aghen, oughen, owen, owen to OWE; developed from Old English (about 950) āhte, past tense of āgan to own, possess, OWE.

Ought is an auxiliary verb that now has a present tense meaning but was originally confined to the past tense of owe expressing duty or obligation. In the past tense modern use is shown in The judge did not think the defendant ought to be kept in prison. In the present tense modern use is found in You ought to do it.

ought² n. naught, zero. 1844, alteration (possibly by misdivision of a nought as an ought) of nought. The meaning was probably also influenced by ought anything.

ounce¹ n. unit of weight. Before 1338 unce 1/2 of a pound in troy weight; later ounce (before 1382); borrowing of Old French unce, from Latin uncia one twelfth part (of a pound, foot, etc.), developed through numerous changes from earlier oiniciā*, built on oinos*, which itself developed into Latin ūnus ONE.

The Middle English forms borrowed from Old French replaced earlier ynsa, yntsa (1150), developed from Old English yndse, ynse (before 899); earlier ynce; borrowed from Latin uncia.

ounce² n. wild cat. Probably before 1300 unce; later, also Scottish once (about 1470); borrowed from Old French once, alteration of lonce (with l mistaken as the definite article in lonce), from Vulgar Latin lunceā*, from Latin lynx LYNX.

our adj. Probably before 1200 oure; later our (probably before 1300); developed from Old English ūre of us (about 725, in Beowulf), used as the genitive of wē we. Old English ūre is a variant of ūser, ūsser our; cognate with Old Frisian ūse our, Old Saxon ūsa, Middle Dutch onse (modern Dutch onze), Old High German unsēr (modern German unser), Old Icelandic vār, and Gothic unsar, derived from the Proto-Germanic source of Old English ūs US. —ours pron. About 1303 ours (also found as urs, before 1325; and oures, about 1390; and ouren, ourn, before 1382); all from the adjective.

—ous a suffix forming adjectives from nouns and meaning: 1 having, having much, full of, as in joyous, famous. 2 characterized by, as in zealous. 3 having the nature of, as in murderous. 4 of or having to do with, as in monogamous. 5 like, as in thunderous. 6 committing or practicing, as in bigamous. 7 inclined to, as in blasphemous. 8 in chemical terms -ous indicates the presence of an element in a compound or ion that is of a lower valence than indicated by the suffix -ic, as in ferrous or stannous. Middle English, borrowed from Old French -ous, -os, -eus, -eux, and directly from Latin -ōsus. Related to -OSE¹. See also -IOUS.

This suffix is also often used to represent the Latin adjective ending, -us, as in Latin omnivorus omnivorous, or the Greek adjective ending, -os, as in Greek anōnymos anonymous.

oust v. 1420 ousten to dispossess; borrowed through Anglo-French ouster, Old French oster put out, keep off, remove, avert, from Latin obstāre stand opposite to, block, hinder (ob-against + stāre to STAND). Related to OBSTACLE. —ouster n. 1531, ejection from a possession; noun use of Anglo-French ouster to oust.

out adv. Probably before 1200 out away, from, forth; developed from Old English (before 725) ūt; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon and Middle Low German ūt out, Middle Dutch uit (modern Dutch uit), Old High German ūz (modern German aus), Old Icelandic ūt (Swedish and Norwegian ut, Danish ud), and Gothic ūt. —adj. Probably before 1200 ut outside, outlying; later oute (about 1280); from the adverb. —prep. About 1250 out of, away from; from the adverb. —n. 1622, a being out of something; from the adverb. The informal meaning of a way out, defense, alibi, is also first recorded in 1919.

out- a prefix that has a range of uses with meanings which in part parallel the meanings of out as a separate word, especially: 1a adverbially with verbal nouns, as in outburst, outcry, outgrowth. b with participial adjectives, as in outgoing, outflung. c with adjectives, as in outbound. 2 with the finite verb as in outcrop, outpour. 3 adjectivally with nouns, as in outbuilding, outfield, outpatient, sometimes yielding an adjectival or adverbial compound, as in outboard. 4 prepositionally, as in outdate, outdoor, outlaw. 5 frequently forming transitive verbs meaning: a to do longer or more than, as in outlive, outsleep. b to surpass, to do better than, as in outdistance, outguess, outgeneral. For etymology, see OUT. —outhouse n. (before 1325, a shed; 1819, a privy) —outlandish adj. About 1300 outlandisse foreign, alien; developed from Old English (about 1000) ūtlandisc, from ūtland foreign land. —outlet n. a river mouth (about 1250). —outright adv. completely, entirely (about 1300); adj. direct, downright (1532).

outage n. period of interrupted service, as of electric power or gas. 1903, formed from out, adv. + -age, on the model of shortage.

outer adj. About 1380 outter, outer (1385), a new comparative formed from out + *-er*² (by analogy with inner) replacing utter (before 1325), and uttre (probably before 1200); developed from Old English ūterra, ūtera, comparative of ūt OUT. The new comparative was formed when Middle English uttre, utter ceased to show relationship to out and developed the meaning of complete or total (before 1400), resulting in English UTTER¹, adj. — outer space (1901) outlaw n. About 1300 outlawe; developed from Old English ūtlaga (about 1000); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ūtlagi outlaw, from ūtlagr, adj., outlawed, banished) — v. About 1300 outlawen; developed from Old English ūtlagian, from ūtlaga, n. — outlawry n. About 1395 outlawerie, alteration (influenced by outlawe) of Anglo-Latin utlagaria and Anglo-French utlagarie, both from Old English ūtlaga outlaw; for suffix see -RY.

outrage n. Probably before 1300, violent behavior, excess, extravagance; borrowing of French outrage (outr beyond + -age -age). Present-day use of outrage is popularly associated with rage, as if the word were formed from out + rage. — outrageous adj. About 1300 utrageous violent, unrestrained, excessive; later outrageous (about 1390); borrowed from Old French outrageus, from outrage outrage; for suffix see -OUS.

outside n. 1505, outer side (out, adv. + side). — adj. 1634, from the noun. — prep. 1826, from the noun. — adv. 1813, from the noun. The phrase outside of, meaning with the exception of (as in outside of art he has no interests), is first recorded in 1859. — outsider n. (1800) outward adj. Probably before 1200 utward; later outward (before 1382); developed from Old English ūteward (893); earlier ūtanward (before 725, a compound of ūte, ūtan outside, from ūt OUT + -ward -ward). — adv. Probably before 1200 utward; later outward (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 950) ūtaword; from the adjective.

ouzel or ousel n. Before 1325 osel; developed from Old English (about 700) ōsle blackbird, corresponding to Old High German amusla, ams(a)la blackbird (modern German Amsel) from Proto-West-Germanic amuslōn*.

oval adj. 1577, borrowed from Middle French ovale, or directly from Medieval Latin ovalis of or pertaining to an egg, from Latin ōvum EGG¹; for suffix see *-AL*¹. — n. 1570, borrowed from Middle French ovale, n., oval figure or ovale, adj., egg-shaped; both from Medieval Latin ovalis egg-shaped, oval.

ovary n. 1658, borrowed from New Latin ovarium ovary (in Medieval Latin ovaria the ovary of a bird), from Latin ōvum EGG¹, for suffix see -ARY.

ovation n. 1533, borrowed possibly from Middle French ovation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin ovā- tiōnem (nominative ovātiō) a triumph, rejoicing, from ovāre exult, rejoice, triumph; for suffix see -ATION.

oven n. Before 1200 oven; developed from Old English ofen furnace, oven (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch oven oven, Old High German ovan (modern German Ofen stove), Old Icelandic ofn, and Gothic aúhns* (accusative aúhn), from Proto-Germanic úHnaz*, a simplification of úHw naz*.

over prep., adv. 1135 over above, upon, throughout, across, beyond; over (after 1380); developed from Old English (before 725) ofer; cognate with Old Frisian over, uver (prep. and adv.) over, Old Saxon oþar, ubar, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch over, Old High German ubar, prep., ubiri, adv. (modern German über, prep. and adv.), from Proto-Germanic ubéri*; Old Icelandic yfir (Danish and Norwegian over, Swedish över), and Gothic ufar, prep., from Proto-Germanic úferi*. — adj. Probably before 1200 over, were upper, higher, outer; developed from Old English (before 899) uferra, comparative of ofer, adv.

over- a prefix meaning: 1 above, as in overhead. 2 higher in rank, as in overlord. 3 across, as in overseas. 4 too much, too, as in overcrowded, overburden. 5 above normal, as in oversize, overtime. 6 outer, as in overcoat. Middle English, developed from Old English ofer- (as in ofercuman overcome, oferdōn overdo, ofermicel overmuch), from ofer, prep. and adv. Old English ofer- (like its cognates Gothic ufar-, Old High German ubar-, and Old Icelandic yfir-) was used in combination with verbs, nouns, adjectives, adverbs, and derivatives of phrases. — overcast adj. (about 1300, of weather) — overdo v. (about 1000, Old English oferdōn) — overflow v. (before 899, Old English oferflōwan) — overgrown adj. Before 1398, from overgrouen; v. probably about 1390. — overlay v. (before 1325) — overlook v. (1369) — overlord n. (probably about 1200) — overnight adv. (about 1303) — override v. (probably before 1300) — overrun v. (about 1250); adj. (before 1349) — overseas adv., adj. (1583, from earlier oversea, 1104) — oversee v. (before 899, Old English ofersēon) — overseer n. (before 1382) — overshadow v. (about 725, Old English ofersceaduian) — oversight n. (before 1325) — overspread v. (probably before 1200) — overtake v. (about 1225) — overthrow v. (probably before 1300) — overturn v. (probably before 1200) overage n. 1945, formed from English over, adv. + -age, on the model (and as the opposite) of shortage.

overboard adv. Probably before 1300 over bord; developed from Old English (about 1000) ofor bord; ofer, ofer over; bord the side of a ship.

overcome v. Probably before 1200 ouercumen; later ouercome (about 1300); developed from Old English ofer-cuman (about 725, in Beowulf); also, to reach, overtake (before 800); formed from ofer- over + cuman come.

overt adj. About 1330 overt unfastened, open, evident, uncovered; borrowed from Old French overt, past participle of ovrir to open, from regional Vulgar Latin ōperire*, alteration of Latin aperire to open, uncover.

overture n. 1249–50 overture opening, aperture; later, proposal, offer (1427); borrowed from Old French overture opening, proposal, from Vulgar Latin ōpertūra*, alteration of Latin apertūra opening, from aperire to open, uncover; for suffix see -URE. The introductory orchestral piece, is first recorded in English in 1667.

overweening adj. Before 1338 overwenyng, present participle of overwenen be conceited, presume (about 1303); formed from over + wenen expect, think; for suffix see -ING².

overwhelm v. Before 1338 overwhelmen overthrow, overturn; formed from over + whelmen to turn upside down. The meaning of overcome in mind is first recorded in 1535.

oviduct n. 1757, borrowed from New Latin oviductus (ovi-, combining form of Latin ovum egg¹ + ductus, genitive ductūs, a leading; see DUCT).

oviparous adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin oviparus that produces eggs (ovum egg¹ + -parus, from parere bring forth); for suffix see -OUS.

ovoid adj. 1828, borrowed from French ovoïde (from Latin ovum egg¹ + French -oïde -oid).

ovulation n. 1848, formed from New Latin ovulum OVULE + English -ation. —ovulate v. 1888, back formation from ovulation; for suffix see -ATE¹.

ovule n. 1830, borrowed from French ovule, and directly from New Latin ovulum, literally, small ovum, diminutive of Latin ovum egg¹; for suffix see -ULE.

ovum n., pl. ova 1706, borrowing of Latin ovum egg¹.

owe v. Probably about 1200 aghen to possess, have, own, have to pay, have an obligation to; later owen (about 1250); developed from Old English (before 725) āgan (past tense āhte). Old English āgan is cognate with Old Frisian āga possess, have, Old Saxon ēgan, Old High German eigan, Old Icelandic eiga, and Gothic aigan, from Proto-Germanic aizanan*.

In the 1400's a new past tense owed replaced the earlier oughte (Old English āhte), which became English OUGHT¹.

owl n. Probably before 1300 oule; later owle (about 1385); developed from Old English (before 800) ūle; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch ūle owl (modern Dutch uil), Old High German ūwila (modern German Eule), and Old Icelandic ugla, derived from a word imitative of the owl's sound.

own¹ adj. of or belonging to oneself or itself. Probably about 1150 owen; later owne (probably before 1325); developed from Old English (before 725) āgen; cognate with Old Frisian ēgen own, Old Saxon ēgan, Middle Dutch eighen (modern Dutch eigen), Old High German eigan (modern German eigen), and Old Icelandic eiginn; all derived from Proto-Germanic aizanas*, past participle of aizanan* to possess, the source of Old English āgan to have, own, OWE.

own² v. possess. 1607, formed in part from OWN¹, adj., and in part a back formation from owner, earlier owener (1399), oghener (1340), formed from ahnien, ohnen take possession of, appropriate + -er¹. Middle English ahnien (probably before 1200) developed from Old English geāgnian (about 725); its cognates include Middle Dutch eigenen, egenen take or put in possession of, appropriate, own, Old High German eiginēn (modern German eigenen), and Old Icelandic eigna; related to eiginn OWN¹.

Though the original Middle English verb dropped from use about 1300, it was restored indirectly through back formation from the derivative owner, when the verb owe in its original sense "possess" was becoming obsolete. —ownership n. 1583, formed from English owner + -ship.

ox n. Probably before 1200 oxe (plural oxen); developed from Old English oxa (plural oxan), before 830; cognate with Old Frisian oxa ox, Old Saxon ohso, Middle Dutch osse (modern Dutch os), Old High German ohso (modern German Ochse), Old Icelandic oxi, uxi, and Gothic auhsa, from Proto-Germanic uHsōn*. —oxtail n. Old English oxan tægl (693) oxalic acid 1791, borrowed from French acide oxalique, from Latin oxalis sorrel² (plant with sour leaves), in which the acid is found, from Greek oxalis, from oxys sour, sharp; for suffix see -IC.

oxford n. About 1890, short for earlier Oxford shoes (1847), and Oxford-cut shoes (in 1721), from the name of the university town of Oxford, England.

oxide n. 1790, borrowing of French oxide (now oxyde), formed from French ox(ygène) oxygen + (ac)ide acid. —oxidation n. 1791, borrowing of French oxidation (now oxydation), from oxider oxidize, from oxide oxide; for suffix see -ATION. —oxidize v. 1802 (implied in oxidizable); formed from English oxide + -ize.

Oxonian n. About 1540, formed from Medieval Latin Oxonia + English -an. Medieval Latin Oxonia is a Latinized form of Middle English Oxford (probably about 1475); earlier Ocsenford (about 1190); developed from Old English (912) Oxnaford, literally, ford of oxen. —adj. 1644, from the noun.

oxygen n. 1790, borrowed from French oxygène, formed from Greek oxys acid, sharp + French -gène something that produces. The French word was intended to mean literally "acidifying principle, acid-producer," because oxygen was considered to be the essential element in the formation of acids. —oxygenate v. 1790, borrowed from French oxygéner, from oxygène oxygen; for suffix see -ATE¹.

oxymoron n. 1657, borrowing of Greek oxýmōron, noun use of the neuter of oxýmōros, adj., pointedly foolish (oxys sharp + mōros stupid).

oyez or oyes interj. About 1425 oyes; borrowed from Anglo-French oyez hear ye!, Old French oiez from the Latin subjunctive audiātis, plural imperative of oir, Anglo-French oier to hear, from Latin audire to hear.

oyster n. 1321, in the compound oystermonger, earlier in the place name Oystregate (1259); borrowed from Old French oistre, from Latin ostrea oyster, from the plural of ostreum oyster, from Greek óstreon, related to óstrakon hard shell, and ostíon bone.

ozone n. 1840, borrowed from German Ozon, from Greek ózon, neuter present participle of ózein to smell (so called from its pungent odor).

P

pabulum n. 1678, borrowed from Latin pābulum fodder, food.

pace n. About 1280 pas way of life, course of action; later, speed or gait (probably before 1300), and pace a step or a pace (probably 1348); borrowed from Old French pas, and directly from Latin passus (genitive passūs) a step, from pandere to stretch, spread out. —v. 1513, walk with regular steps, from the noun.

pachyderm n. 1838, borrowed from French pachyderme, from Greek pachýdermos thick-skinned (pachýs thick + dérma skin).

pacific adj. Before 1548 pacifique, borrowing of Middle French pacifique, learned borrowing from Latin pācificus peaceful, peace-making, from pāx (genitive pācis) peace + the root of facere make; for suffix see -FIC.

The spelling pacific (lower case) is implied in pacifiable, (1621), after the Latin form. The word in the form Pacificum (1555) for the name Pacific Ocean was borrowed from Medieval Latin Pacificum (from neuter of Latin pācificus pacific); so called by Magellan because at the time of his voyage he found it relatively free of violent storms. —pacification n. 1437, borrowing of Middle French pacification act of making peaceful, from Latin pācificātiōnem (nominative pācificātiō), from pācificāre PACIFY; for suffix see -ATION.

pacifism n. 1902, borrowed from French pacifisme, from pacifique pacific + -isme -ism. —pacifist n. 1906, borrowed from French pacifiste, from pacifisme + -iste -ist.

pacify v. Before 1475 pacifien, borrowed from Middle French pacifier, from Old French, make peace, learned borrowing from Latin pācificāre to make peace, pacify, from pācificus PACIFIC; for suffix see -FY. —pacifier n. 1533, formed from English pacify + *-er*¹. The nipple-shaped device for a baby is first recorded in 1904.

pack¹ n. bundle. Probably before 1200 packe, and 1228 pak; earlier, in a surname Pakbyndere (1191); possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch pac, pack bundle, Middle Low German pak, or early Middle Flemish pac (compare also Old Icelandic pakki), of unknown origin.

The meaning of a number of animals kept or hunting together is first recorded before 1450, and that of a set of playing cards, about 1597. —v. About 1378 packen; later packen (probably before 1387); from the noun, possibly influenced by Anglo-French empaker, Medieval Latin paccare, Middle Dutch packen, all meaning pack. —packer n. (1351, earlier in a surname Pakkere, 1254).

pack² v. conspire or plot. Before 1529, of uncertain origin (sometimes said to be an alteration of pact, enter into a pact, 1535; verb use of pact, n.).

package n. 1611, the packing of goods, later, bundle or parcel (1722); formed from English pack, v. + -age. —v. 1928, from the noun. —adj. 1952 package deal an offer or transaction agreed to as a unit, from the noun.

packet n. Probably before 1450 pekette a small package; earlier as a surname Paket (1176); probably formed from Middle English pak bundle + -et, -ette diminutive suffix, perhaps modeled on Anglo-French pacquet. French pacquet derives perhaps from Old French pacquet, from Germanic pak*, probably related to Middle Dutch pak.

pact n. 1429, borrowing of Middle French pacte agreement, treaty, compact, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pactum, from neuter past participle of paciāre to covenant or agree, related to pangere to fix, fasten.

pad¹ n. thick mass. 1554, bundle of straw to lie on; of unknown origin. The meaning of something soft, like a cushion, recorded before 1700, probably developed from the earlier sense of a soft, stuffed saddle (1570).

The writing or drawing pad of paper is first recorded in 1865. —v. 1827, from the noun.

pad² v. to walk. 1553, possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch paden walk along a path, make a path (cognate with Low German padjen to pad, and East Frisian padden), from pad, pat PATH (also found in Middle English pæd path).

paddle¹ n. short oar. 1407 padell spadelike implement with a handle; borrowed from Medieval Latin padela, padula, of uncertain origin, but compare Latin patella pan, plate (diminutive of patina); see PATEN.

The meaning "a short oar," is first recorded in 1624 and that of a flipper in 1835. —v. 1677, from the noun.

paddle² v. move about in water 1530; of uncertain origin, but probably cognate with Low German paddeln tramp about, from padjen to tramp, *PAD*²; for suffix see *-LE*³.

paddock n. 1622 paddock, variant of Middle English parrock (found as a place name, 1253) and parrok (1283); developed from Old English (about 700) pearroc, pearuc enclosed space, fence; probably cognate with Middle Low German perke, parke paddock, Middle Dutch parc, parric, and Old High German pfarrih, pferrih enclosed space, from Proto-Germanic parru-kaz*. It has also been suggested that Old English pearroc was borrowed from Medieval Latin parricus.

paddy n. 1623, rice in the husk (earlier batte, 1598); borrowed from Malay padi rice. The rice field is first found in paddy field (1762).

padlock n. 1478–79 padlokke, from pad (of uncertain meaning) + lokke, lok lock. —v. 1645, from the noun.

padre n. 1584, borrowing of Italian, Spanish, or Portuguese padre, from Latin patrem (nominative pater) FATHER.

paean n. 1592, a hymn or chant of deliverance in ancient Greece; later, song of praise, joy or triumph (1599); borrowing of Latin paean, from Greek paian hymn to Apollo, from Paian, a name of Apollo.

pagan n. Probably before 1400 paygan heathen; later pagan (probably before 1425); borrowed from Late Latin pāgānus pagan, from Latin, villager, rustic, civilian, from pāgus rural district, originally one limited by markers; related to pangere to fix, fasten.

The meaning "heathen" of Late Latin pāgānus may derive from the Latin meaning "villager," since ancient idol worship lingered on in rural areas after Christianity had been generally accepted in the towns and cities of the Roman Empire. —adj. 1422, borrowed from Late Latin pāgānus, adj.; and probably from the noun in English. —paganism n. 1433, formed from Middle English pagan + -ism.

page¹ n. sheet of paper. 1589, borrowed from Middle French page, reduced form of Old French pagine, pagene, learned borrowing from Latin pāgina page; related to pāgella small page and to pangere to fasten.

The form page replaced Middle English pagyn page, leaf of a book (before 1398), pagine a document (before 1250), and pagne (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French pagine, pagene, and directly from Latin pāgina. —v. 1628, from the noun.

page² n. boy servant. Probably before 1300, youth preparing to be a knight; later, a boy servant (about 1300); borrowing of Old French page, possibly from Italian paggio, Medieval Latin pagius servant, perhaps ultimately from Greek paidon boy, lad, diminutive of pais (genitive paidós) child.

pageant n. 1386–87 pagyn a play in a cycle of mystery plays; also 1392–93 pagent a wheeled platform as a stage for a mystery play; borrowed from Medieval Latin pagina, from Latin pāgina page¹ (of a book).

The sense development came through "a play in a cycle of mystery plays," possibly developed from the meaning of a manuscript page of a play, and from the meaning "a moveable platform," which can be related to Latin pangere to fasten. The meaning of showy parade, elaborate spectacle appeared in 1805. —pageantry n. 1608, pageants collectively; later, splendid show, pomp (1651); formed from English pageant + -ry.

paginate v. 1884, probably a back formation from earlier pagination; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —pagination n. 1841, probably borrowed from French pagination (Latin pāgina page + French -ation).

pagoda n. 1634, earlier pagode (1582); borrowing of Portuguese pagode, perhaps from Tamil pagavadi, from Sanskrit bhāgavati goddess, feminine of bhāgavant- blessed, from bhāga-s good fortune.

pail n. 1336–37 payle container; probably borrowed from Old French paielle, pæle warming pan, liquid measure, bath, possibly from Latin patella small pan or dish, diminutive of patina broad shallow pan; or perhaps from Medieval Latin pagella a measure from Latin, measure of a vineyard, a diminutive from Latin pāgina space a page or column of writing takes, originally, something fixed.

Since Old English pægel wine vessel, gill (about 1000) is far removed from the Middle English, no connection probably exists.

pain n. About 1280 peyne pain, punishment, penalty; also pain, paine (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French peine, from Latin poena punishment, penalty, from Greek poine punishment.

The plural form pains, in the sense of great care or effort is first recorded in 1528. —v. Probably about 1300 peynen to exert, strain, strive; later, to cause pain (about 1375); borrowed from Old French peinir, variant of pener, from peine pain. —painful adj. Before 1349 peynful, formed from Middle English peine pain + -ful. —painstaking adj. 1556 found in English phrase paynes taking.

paint v. Probably before 1200, implied in peintunge a painting; later peinten to paint, decorate (about 1250), and painten (before 1325); borrowed from Old French peintier, pointier, from peint, point, past participles of peindre, pointre to paint, from Latin pingere to paint. —n. 1290–91 peinte in peinteselde paint shop; from the verb.

painter¹ n. one who paints. 1220, in the surname Peintur, and 1240 Paintur; borrowed from Old French peintour, from Vulgar Latin pinctor*, alteration (influenced by Latin pingere to paint) of Latin pictor, from pingere to paint; for suffix see *-ER*¹.

painter² n. rope for tying a boat. 1336–37 peyntour, probably borrowed from Old French pentoir, penteur cordage for hanging, from pendre to hang, from Vulgar Latin pendere*, from Latin pendere; see PENDANT.

painter³ n. panther or cougar. 1764, alteration of Middle English panter PANTHER.

pair n. About 1250 peire; later pair (before 1325); borrowed from Old French paire, peire, and directly from Latin paria equals, neuter plural of pār (genitive paris) a pair, counterpart, equal; noun use of pār, adj., equal. —v. 1603, be a match for; also 1607, arrange in a pair; from the noun.

paisley or Paisley n. 1834, in allusion to Paisley, town in southwestern Scotland, where such cloth was originally made. —adj. 1900, from the noun.

pajamas n.pl. 1800 pai jamahs loose trousers tied around the waist, worn by Muslims and adopted by Europeans, especially for night wear; later pajamas (1845); alteration with -s, as in trousers; borrowed from Hindi pājāma, pāijāma, probably from Persian pāējāmah, literally, leg clothing (pāē leg + jāmah clothing).

pal n. 1681–82 pall, borrowed from Romany (of England) pal brother, comrade; variant of Romany (of continental Europe, especially Turkey) pral, plal, phral, probably from Sanskrit bhrātā brother. The l remains unaccounted for. —v. 1879, from the noun.

palace n. Probably about 1225 palais; later palace (about 1475); borrowing of Old French palais, pales, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin palacium a palace, also borrowed directly from Latin palātium, from Palātium the Palatine Hill in Rome, in reference to the house of Augustus Caesar situated there, and to the splendid residence later built there by Nero.

paladin n. 1592, one of the twelve knights in attendance on Charlemagne; borrowing of Middle French paladin a warrior, from Italian paladino, from Medieval Latin palatinus or from Latin palātinus palace official, noun use of Palātinus of the palace (see PALATINE).

palanquin or palankeen n. 1588, borrowed through Italian palanchino, and later probably directly from Portuguese palanquim, from Malay and Javanese palangki, ultimately from Sanskrit palyanka-s, paryanka-s couch, bed, litter (pari around + āncati it bends, curves, related to ankā-s a bend, hook, angle¹).

palate n. 1382 palet roof of the mouth; later palate sense of taste (before 1398); borrowed from Old French palat, palet, palé, and directly from Latin palātum roof of the mouth. —palatable adj. 1669, formed from English palate + -able. —palatal adj. 1828–32; borrowing of French palatal, from Latin palātum palate; for suffix see *-AL*¹; also possibly formed from English palate + *-al*¹.

palatial adj. 1754, borrowed from French palatial magnificent, and formed from Latin palātium PALACE + English suffix *-al*¹.

palatine adj. 1436, borrowed from Old French palatin, palantien, and directly from Medieval Latin and Latin palātinus of the palace, from palātium PALACE; for suffix see *-INE*¹.

—palatinate n. About 1580. a state of the Holy Roman Empire; formed from English palatine + *-ate*¹.

palaver n. Probably before 1735, borrowed from Portuguese palavra word, speech, talk, alteration (by metathesis of r and l) from Late Latin parabola speech, discourse, from Latin parabola comparison. The meaning of unnecessary or idle words, mere talk is first recorded in 1748. —v. 1733, from the noun, despite the earlier date, as there is no verb use in Portuguese.

pale¹ adj. wan. Before 1325, earlier in a surname Pail (1225, perhaps confused with Old French paile, 1100's); borrowed from Old French pale, paile, a book word from Latin pallidus pale, pallid, wan, from pallēre be pale. —v. About 1380 pale make pale, turn pale; probably borrowed from Old French paleir, palir, from pale, adj., and possibly also from the adjective in English.

pale² n. stake or picket. Before 1200 pal, later pale (before 1338); borrowed from Old French pal, pel, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pālus stake (earlier paclos*), related to pangere to fix or fasten; see PACT. —v. Before 1338, borrowed from Old French paler, from pal, n., and directly from Latin pālāre support with stakes, from pālus, n. —paling n. About 1390, decorating with stripes; later, enclosing with a fence (1469); from pale, v.

paleo- a combining form meaning old, ancient, especially in scientific terms referring to early, primitive phenomena, as in paleolithic, paleontology. Borrowed from Greek palaio-, combining form of palaíos old, ancient, from pálai long ago, far back.

paleography n. 1822, formed from English paleo- + -graphy, after French paléographie.

paleolithic or Paleolithic adj. 1865, formed from English paleo- + -lith stone + -ic.

paleontology n. 1838, probably borrowed from French palé-ontologie, formed from paléo- + Greek ón (genitive óntos) being + French -logie -logy. —paleontologist n. 1871, formed from English paleontology + -ist.

palette n. 1622, borrowing of French palette, from Old French palet small shovel or blade, diminutive of pale shovel, oar blade, from Latin pāla spade, shoulder blade, perhaps related to pālus stake, PALE²; for suffix see -ETTE.

palfrey n. Probably before 1200 palefrei, and palfrey (probably before 1300); earlier, as a surname Pallefrei (1166); borrowing of Old French palefrei, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin palafredus, formed by dissimilation of r to l in Late Latin paraverēdus post horse for outlying districts, originally extra horse (from Greek pará beside, secondary + Latin verēdus post horse).

palindrome n. About 1629, borrowed from Greek palíndromos a recurrence, literally, a running back (pálin again, back + drómos a running).

palisade n. 1600, borrowed from French palissade a palisade, from Provençal palissada, from palissa a stake or paling, from Gallo-Romance palicea*, from Latin pālus stake, PALE².

pall¹ n. cloth spread over a coffin. Probably before 1200 palle, pal a fine cloth or covering; later, shroud for a corpse or cloth for a coffin (about 1400); developed from Old English paell rich cloth, cloak, altar cloth (before 899); borrowed from Latin pallium cloak, covering, related to palla robe, cloak.

The sense of a dark, gloomy covering or mood (as in a pall of despair) is found in 1742. —pallbearer n. 1707 pall bearer one who holds the corners of the pall at a funeral; formed from English pall¹, n. + bearer.

pall² v. become tiresome. Probably before 1325 pallen become faint or grow feeble, possibly a shortened form of appallen to dismay, fill with horror or disgust; see APPALL. The meaning of make or become tiresome, is first recorded in 1700.

palladium¹ n. safeguard. 1600, figurative use of earlier Palladium sacred image of the Greek goddess Pallas Athena (1585), and Palladion (about 1385); borrowing of Latin Palladium, and Greek Palládion, neuter of Palládios of Pallas, from Pallás (genitive Palládos) Pallas Athena, whose statue was in the citadel of Troy and on which the safety of the city was supposed to depend.

palladium² n. metallic chemical element. 1803, New Latin, from Pallas, an asteroid discovered in 1802 and named after Pallas Athena, the Greek goddess of wisdom, from Greek Pallás (genitive Palládos); for suffix see -IUM.

pallet¹ n. bed of straw. 1370 palet; later paillet (about 1385); borrowed through Anglo-French paillet, paillete straw, bundle of straw, Old French paillete chaff, from paille straw, from Latin palea chaff.

pallet² n. flat blade. Probably before 1425 palet flat instrument for depressing the tongue; borrowed from Old French palette small shovel or blade, diminutive of pale shovel, from Latin pāla spade, related to pālus stake, PALE².

palliate v. Probably before 1425 palliaten to alleviate the symptoms of a disease; borrowed from Medieval Latin palliatus, from Late Latin, past participle of palliāre cover with a cloak, conceal, from Latin pallium cloak; for suffix see -ATE¹.

—palliative adj. 1425 palliatif; borrowed perhaps from Medieval Latin palliativus under a cloak, covert, perhaps a Latinization of Old French palliatif, or directly from Middle French palliatif, both forms from Late Latin palliātus, past participle of palliāre cover with a cloak, conceal; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1724, from the adjective.

pallid adj. 1590, borrowed from Latin pallidus pale, from pallēre be pale.

pallor n. About 1400 pallour; borrowed from Old French palar paleness, and directly from Latin pallor, from pallēre to pale; for suffix see -OR¹.

palm¹ n. inside of the hand. Probably before 1300 palme; later paume (about 1300); borrowing of Old French palme, paume, from Latin palma palm of the hand. —v. 1673, from the noun.

palm² n. tree. Before 1200 palm; reborrowed through Old French palme, paume; and developed from Old English palma palmate adj. 1760, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French palme, from Latin palmatus marked with the palm of the hand, from Latin palma PALM¹ (of the hand); for suffix see -ATE¹.

(before 830); both borrowed from Latin palma palm tree, palm of the hand (see PALM¹); so called from the shape of the tree's leaves.

palmetto n. 1583 palmito, borrowing of Spanish palmito a dwarf fan palm tree, diminutive of palma palm tree, from Latin palma PALM². The variant form palmeto 1624, was influenced by the Italian diminutive suffix -etto.

palmistry n. About 1450 palmestrie; formed from palme palm¹ of the hand + -estrie, of uncertain origin (probably a blend of -estre, as in Middle English webbestre weaver, and of -rie, -erie, as in Middle English archerie archery). The spelling of the suffix changed gradually to -istry, so that palmistry now looks misleadingly like a derivative of the modern palmist. —palmist n. 1886, probably a back formation from palmistry.

palomino n. 1914, borrowing of American Spanish palomino cream-colored horse, from Spanish, young dove, perhaps from Italian palombino dove-colored, from Latin palumbinus of wood pigeons, from palumba wood pigeon; the horse so called from its dovelike coloring.

palooka n. 1925, inferior or average boxer of uncertain origin; its coinage ascribed to Jack Conway, an American journalist. The sense of a big, but stupid or awkward person, possibly derives from Joe Palooka, brawny but naive and awkward boxing champion, hero of a comic strip (by cartoonist Ham Fisher).

palpable adj. About 1380, plain, evident, obvious; borrowed from Old French palpable, and directly from Late Latin palpabilis that may be touched or felt, from Latin palpare touch gently, stroke; for suffix see -ABLE.

The literal meaning "capable of being touched, tangible" is first recorded in 1387 after the appearance of the figurative sense.

palpate v. 1849–52, probably a back formation from palpation, perhaps by influence of Latin palpatus, past participle of palpare touch gently, stroke; for suffix see -ATE¹. —palpation n. 1483 palpacion, borrowed possibly through Middle French palpation, from Latin palpationem (nominative palpātiō) stroking, flattery, from palpare touch gently.

palpitate v. 1623, borrowed from Latin palpitātum, past participle of palpitare to throb or flutter, a frequentative form of palpare touch gently, stroke; for suffix see -ATE¹; also probably a back formation from palpitation. —palpitation n. Probably before 1425 palpitacioun; borrowed probably through Middle French palpitation, learned borrowing from Latin palpitationem (nominative palpitiō), from palpitare throb or flutter; for suffix see -ATION.

palsy n. About 1300 palasie; later palsie (before 1325); borrowed through Anglo-French parlesie, Old French paralisie, learned borrowing from Latin paralysis PARALYSIS.

palter v. 1601, of uncertain origin. Palter was popularized by Shakespeare, though earlier use is recorded in 1538, spelled paulter mumble, babble; in 1577, meaning shift or alter (in position); and in 1588, meaning jumble or patch up. The form of palter is that of a frequentative in -er (see *-ER*⁴), but no underlying verb to palt with a corresponding meaning has been found, and no adequate connection with paltry has been established.

paltry adj. 1570, probably attributive use of paltry worthless thing (1556); associated with dialectal palt, pelt trash (1567); cognate with Middle Low German and East Frisian palte rag, Middle Dutch palt broken or torn fragment, Danish pjalt, and Swedish palta rag; for suffix see -RY.

Alternatively, it has been suggested that paltry, adj., was borrowed directly from Low German or East Frisian paltrig ragged, torn, derived from palte rag.

pampas n. pl. 1704, borrowing of Spanish pampas, plural of pampa, from Quechua (Peru) pampa a plain.

pamper v. About 1390 pampren indulge, especially with food; later pamperen; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch (compare Flemish pamperen cram with food, overindulge, pamper, and dialectal German pampen to cram).

pamphlet n. About 1385 pamflet, borrowed from Anglo-Latin panfletus, pamfletus, probably a generalized use of Pamphilus, popular name of "Pamphilus, seu de Amore" (Pamphilus, or About Love, a short Latin love poem of the 1100's), from Greek pámphilos loved by all (pan- all + philos loving, dear); for suffix see -ET. The specific application of pamphlet to a brief work dealing with some question of current interest is first recorded in 1592. —pamphleteer n. 1642, formed from English pamphlet + -eer. —v. 1715, from the noun.

pan¹ n. dish. About 1150 panna; later panne (probably before 1300) and pan (1404); developed from Old English panne (before 899); earlier ponne (before 800, Mercian dialect), and -ponne, -panne (about 700, in compounds such as fyrponne, fyrpanne fire pan). Old English panne, ponne was inherited from West Germanic panna* (compare Old Frisian panne pan, Old Saxon panna, Old Icelandic panna, Old Low German panna and Old High German phanna), probably an early borrowing from Vulgar Latin patna*, from Latin patina shallow pan, dish. —v. 1839 pan out wash (gravel) in a pan to separate the gold; from the noun. The sense of yield results, turn out (as in let's see how things pan out) is first recorded in 1868, and that of criticize severely, in 1911. —pancake n. Before 1400 pankakus, a Latin-ate form; earlier as a surname Panecak, Panekake (1283).

pan² v. to follow with a camera. 1913, shortened from pan-oramic, especially in the term panoramic camera (1878). —n. 1922, from the verb.

pan- a combining form meaning all, whole, all-inclusive, as in Pan-American, panchromatic, pandemic. Borrowed from Greek pan-, combining form of Greek pás (neuter pán, masculine and neuter genitive panτός) all.

panacea n. 1548, borrowed from Latin panacēa an all-healing herb, from Greek panákeia cure-all, from panakēs all-healing (pan- all + -akēs, from ákos cure). An earlier use (probably about 1425) refers to the medicinal herb; borrowed from Latin.

panache n. 1553 pinnach, borrowed from Middle French pennache tuft of feathers, from Italian pennaccio, variant of pennachio, from Late Latin pinnāculum small wing, gable, peak; see PINNACLE.

The sense of display, swagger, verve, flamboyance, is first recorded in 1898, borrowed from French panache.

pancreas n. 1578 panchreas; later pancreas (implied in pancreatic, 1665–66); borrowed from Greek pánkreas sweetbread, pancreas (pan- all + kréas flesh). —pancreatic adj. 1665–66, formed from Greek pankreat- (stem of pánkreas pancreas) + English -ic.

panda n. 1835, a raccoonlike mammal of the Himalayas, lesser panda; borrowed from French panda, apparently from one of the names of this animal in Nepal. The first reference in English to the black-and-white bearlike mammal of Tibet and China (the Giant Panda) is found in 1901.

pandemic adj. 1666, formed in English from Greek pándēmos pertaining to all the people (pan- all + dēmos people) + English -ic, modeled on epidemic. —n. 1853, from the adjective.

pandemonium n. 1779, place of wild uproar; transferred use of New Latin Pandemonium, name of the palace built by Satan as the central part of hell (coined in 1667 from Greek pan- all + Late Latin daemonium evil spirit, from Greek daimōnion divine power, from daimōn lesser god); for suffix see -IUM.

pander n. 1598, spelling alteration (influenced by -erl) of earlier pandar (1530), from Middle English Pandare (about 1385); borrowed from Latin Pandarus, from Greek Pándaros a name used by Boccaccio (in the Italian form Pandaro) for the man who procured for Troilus the love of Cressida. An isolated example of a provider of pleasure is recorded about 1450. —v. 1602, from the noun.

pandowdy n. 1830, perhaps from obsolete dialectal English pandoulde custard, formed from English pan¹ + doulde, related to dialectal English dowl mix dough in a hurry.

pane n. About 1250 pane garment, such as a cloak; later, part of a garment (probably before 1300); side of a building, section of wall (about 1380), a window glass (1466); borrowed from Old French pan piece or panel, from Latin pannus piece of cloth, garment.

panegyric n. 1603, as attributive noun (1603), possibly from the adjective (a shortened form of panegyric, 1592–93), but also probably influenced by panegyre a eulogy (1603), and possibly by French panégyrique; borrowed from Latin panēgyricus, from Greek panēgyrikòs (lógos) (a speech) given in a public assembly, from panēgyris public assembly (pan- all + ágyris place of assembly, Aeolic form of agorá); for suffix see -IC.

panel n. Before 1325, saddle cloth, piece of cloth; borrowing of Old French panel saddle cushion, piece of cloth, from Vulgar Latin pannellus*, diminutive of Latin pannus piece of cloth.

From the sense in Latin and Old French of piece of cloth, Anglo-French developed the legal sense of piece of paper listing jurors, jury list, jury, which is also recorded in Middle English, about 1378. The meaning of part or division (about 1450) is found in the special application of distinct part of the surface of a wall, door, etc., in 1600. —v. 1451 panellen put on a jury list; from the noun. The meaning of furnish with panels is first recorded in 1633. —panelist n. 1952, American English; formed from panel, n. + -ist.

pang n. 1526, a brief sharp spasm of pain (in the phrase pang of death); of uncertain origin. The figurative meaning of a sudden sharp mental pain or anguish (as in the pangs of love) is first recorded in 1570.

panhandle v. 1903, back formation from earlier panhandler beggar (1897, pan + handler). —n. 1851, anything that suggests the handle on a pan, a geographical area; as formed from pan + handle.

panic n. 1627, contagious emotion supposedly induced by Pan; from the adjective. The meaning of unreasoning fear is first recorded in 1708. —adj. 1603, as found in panic fear, borrowed from French panique, from Greek Pānikós of Pan, from Pān Greek god causing contagious fear in herds and crowds. —v. 1827, from the noun. —panicky adj. 1869, formed from English panic, n. + *-y*¹.

panicle n. 1597, borrowed from Latin pānicula, diminutive of pānus swelling, ear of millet; for suffix see -CLE.

pannier n. 1290 paner a large basket; about 1300 panier, borrowed from Old French panier, panniere, from Latin pānārium bread basket, from pānis bread.

panoply n. 1576, borrowed from Greek panoplīā complete suit of armor, from pan- all + hōplā, pl., arms. First recorded use in English is in the sense of complete equipment or array. The meaning of any splendid array is first found in 1829.

panorama n. 1789 Panorama a picture of a landscape or other scene presented on a revolving cylindrical surface; formed from English pan- all + Greek hōrāma a view, from horān to look, see.

The sense of a comprehensive survey (as in the panorama of science and art) is found in 1801. —panoramic adj. 1813, formed from panorama + -ic.

pansy n. About 1450 pancy; later pensee (before 1475); borrowed from Middle French pensée, pense, panse a pansy; literally, thought, remembrance, from feminine past participle of penser to think, from Latin pēnsāre weigh, consider.

pant v. About 1350 panten breathe hard and quickly; borrowed perhaps as a shortened form from Old French pantaisier, probably from Vulgar Latin pantasiāre* be oppressed with a nightmare, struggle for breath during a nightmare, from Greek phantasiōn have or form images, subject to hallucinations, from phantasiā appearance, image, fantasy. —n. 1500–20, from the verb.

pantaloon n. 1661, a kind of tights, from an association with Pantaloun, Pantaloon (1590), a character in early Italian comedy shown wearing tight trousers. The name of this stage character came into English from Middle French Pantalón, from Italian Pantalone, Pantaleone, originally San Pantaleone Saint Pantaleon, a Christian martyr; for ending see -OON. By 1800 pantaloon was applied to any trousers, from French pantalón. The modern pants is a shortened form of pantaloon.

pantheist n. 1705, formed from English pan- all + the- god (variant of theo-) + -ist. —pantheism n. 1732, borrowed from French panthéisme (1712, formed from English pantheist + French -isme -ism). —pantheistic adj. 1732, formed from English pantheist + -ic.

pantheon n. 1549 Pantheon, alteration of earlier Panteon (before 1425, temple for all the gods, built in Rome by Agrippa); borrowed from Greek Pántheon (hierón) (shrine) of all the gods; pántheon, neuter of pántheios (pan- all + theíos of or for the gods, from theós god). The sense of any group of exalted persons or things (as in the pantheon of science) is first recorded in 1596.

panther n. Before 1250 panter leopard; borrowed from Old French pantere, and directly from Latin panthēra, from Greek pánthēr.

The spelling panthere (from which modern panther was formed) is found in 1484; probably borrowed from Latin panthēra.

panties n.pl. 1845, pair of drawers for men, diminutive of PANTS; for suffix see -Y². The underpants for women or children is first recorded in 1908.

pantograph n. 1723 pentograph; borrowed from French pentographe, pentographe, formed from Greek panto- all + French -graphe -graph.

pantomime n. 1615, a mimic actor, mime; probably influenced in form by French pantomime, but also found earlier as pantomimus (implied in plural pantomimi 1589); borrowing of Latin pantomimus mime, dancer, from Greek pantomimos imitator of all (panto- all + mimos imitator). The meaning of a drama or play performed without words is first recorded before 1735. —v. 1768, from the noun.

pantry n. 1275, as a surname Paneterie; later pantrie room in which bread and other provisions are kept (before 1325), and pantrye (about 1350); borrowed through Anglo-French panetrie, from Old French paneterie bread room, and directly from Medieval Latin panataria, panetrie office or room of a servant who has charge of the food (literally, bread), from Latin pānis bread; for suffix see -RY.

pants n.pl. 1840, formed by shortening of PANTALOONS. —pant n. 1893, back formation from pants. —pantsuit n. 1966; earlier pants suit (1964).

panzer adj. 1940, borrowed as a shortened form of German

Panzerdivision armored unit, from Panzer tank; literally, armor, from Middle High German panzier, from Old French panciere armor for the belly, from pance belly, from Latin pantex (genitive panticis) belly. —n. 1943, from the adjective.

pap n. Before 1399, borrowed from Old French papa watered gruel (also found in Middle Dutch pappe pap, Middle Low German pappe, Spanish and Portuguese papa, and Italian pappa); probably also borrowed from Medieval Latin pappa, from Latin pappa word in children's language for food. It is also possible the word is associated with pap a nipple of a woman's breast, found in Middle English pappe (probably before 1200); borrowed from Latin papilla nipple. The meaning of watered-down or oversimplified ideas is first recorded in 1548.

papacy n. Before 1393 papacie, borrowed from Medieval Latin papacia papal office, from Late Latin pāpa POPE; for suffix see -CY.

papal adj. Before 1393, borrowed from Old French papal, and directly from Medieval Latin papalis of the pope, from Late Latin pāpa POPE; for suffix see -AL¹.

paparazzo n., pl. paparazzi 1961, borrowing of Italian paparazzo, in allusion to the surname of a free-lance photographer in the Italian motion picture La Dolce Vita (1959).

papaw n. 1624 papaw, unexplained variant of PAPAYA. The word originally referred to the papaya fruit or tree; it was used in 1760 to designate the papaw tree.

papaya n. 1598, the fruit of a tropical American tree; later, the tree itself (1613); borrowed from Spanish papaya, probably from Arawakan (West Indies) papaya.

paper n. 1364 paper writing material; also 1389 papir; borrowed through Anglo-French paper, from Old French papier, learned borrowings from Latin papyrus paper; see PAPHYRUS. The meaning of a newspaper is first recorded in English in 1642. —adj. of paper. 1592, from the noun. —v. 1594, to put down on paper; also 1599, to cover with paper; from the noun.

papier-mâché n. 1753, borrowing of French papier-mâché (Old French papier PAPER + mâché compressed or mashed, from past participle of mâcher, literally, to chew, from Late Latin masticare MASTICATE).

papilla n. 1693, a nipple; later, small, nipplelike projection (1713); borrowing of Latin papilla nipple of the breast, diminutive of papula swelling, pimple.

papoose or pappoose n. 1634, borrowed from Algonquian (Narragansett) papoos child; literally, very young.

paprika n. 1896, borrowing of Hungarian paprika, from Serbo-Croatian pāpar pepper, from Latin piper PEPPER.

papyrus n. About 1395 papyrus, borrowed from Latin papyrus the paper plant, paper as a writing material made from it, from Greek pápyros any plant of the paper plant genus.

par n. 1622, equality of value between currencies; later, equality of value or standing, equal footing (1662); borrowed from Latin pār equal, (as noun) that which is equal. The meaning of average or usual amount, or condition (found in below par, up to par) is first recorded in 1767. The sense in golf is first recorded in 1898–1900 and is probably from the sense in finance, in par value meaning "value at par." —adj. 1861, from the noun.

par- the form of *para*¹ before vowels where the prefix is part of a borrowed word, as in parenthesis, paresis, and before h in parhelion, although in Greek (parēlion, from hēlios the sun) and in Latin (parēlion) the h was not written; but para- keeps its full form in recent compounds such as para-hydrogen and para-influenza.

para¹ a prefix meaning: 1 alongside of, beside, as in parathyroid. 2 closely related, as in paraldehyde. 3a resembling, as in paratyphoid. b supplementary or subsidiary, as in paramedical. c beyond, as in parapsychology. 4a alteration, change, as in paraphrase. b beside the mark, amiss, wrong, as in paresis. 5 comparison as in parabola. Borrowed from Greek para- (before vowels par-), from the preposition pará beside, near, from.

para² a combining form meaning: 1 defense or protection against as in parasol a protection against the sun, parachute a protection against a fall. 2 shortened form of parachute, as in paratroops. Borrowed from French, from Italian para-, stem of parare parry, protect against, from Latin parāre prepare, related to parere bear, beget.

parable n. About 1250 parabol a proverb; later, an allegory, comparison (about 1340), and parable (before 1382); borrowed from Old French parable, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin parabola comparison, from Greek parabolē a comparison, parable (para- alongside + bolē a throwing, casting, related to ballein to throw).

parabola n. 1579, New Latin; from Greek parabolē parabola, application; so called because a parabola is produced by "application" of a given area to a given straight line.

parachute n. 1785, borrowing of French parachute (para- defense against + chute a fall). —v. 1807, from the noun. —parachutist n. 1888, formed from English parachute + -ist.

parade n. 1656, display, assembling of troops for display borrowed from French parade display, show, military parade, from Middle French parade (influenced in meaning by parer arrange, prepare, adorn), from the meaning of the act of stopping a horse, borrowed from Spanish parada a stopping, from parar to stop, place, from Latin parāre prepare, provide; for suffix see -ADE. —v. 1686 (implied in parading), to assemble troops for display; from the noun.

paradigm n. 1483, borrowed from Late Latin paradigma pattern, example, from Greek parádeigma, from paradeiknynai show side by side, compare (para- beside + deiknynai to show). —paradigmatic adj. 1662, shortened form of paradigmatical (1577); formed in English from Greek paradeigmatikós serving as a pattern or example, from parádeigma + -ical.

paradise n. Before 1200 paradise, paradis the Christian heaven, place or condition of bliss; borrowed from Old French paradis, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin paradisus, from Greek parádeisos, from an Iranian source (compare Avestan pairīdāēza enclosure or park, a compound of pairi-around + dāēza-wall).

Greek parádeisos, used to describe an enclosed park, orchard, or hunting preserve in Persia, was later used in the Septuagint for the Garden of Eden, and in the New Testament (and by various early Christian writers) for heaven.

paradox n. 1540, statement contrary to common opinion; borrowed, perhaps through Middle French paradoxe, from Latin paradoxum paradox, from Greek parádoxon, from neuter of parádoxos contrary to expectation, incredible (para-contrary to + dóxa opinion, praise). The meaning of a statement that may be true but seems contradictory is first recorded 1569.

paraffin n. 1838, borrowed from German Paraffin, formed from Latin parum not very, too little + affinis associated with, bordering upon; so called from paraffin's low affinity for other substances.

The word is also found in Middle French paraffine resin, pitch, in the mid-1500's, and 1611 with the sense of "mineral resin," suggesting an earlier borrowing of the Latin elements, and an influence on the later form in German.

paragon n. Before 1548; borrowed from Middle French paragon a model, from Italian paragone, originally, touchstone to test gold, from paragonare to test on a touchstone, compare, from Greek parakonán to sharpen, whet (para- on the side + akónē whetstone).

paragraph n. Before 1500 paragraf distinct part of a composition, chapter, or book (originally marked by a division sign such as ¶ or ¶); later paragraph (1525); borrowed from Middle French parapgraphe, Old French paragrafe, and directly as a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin paragrapheus sign for a section of a discourse, etc., from Greek parágraphos short stroke (in the margin) marking a break in sense, from paragráphein write by the side (para-beside + gráphein to write). The forms paragraf, paragraph replaced earlier paraf (recorded about 1395), borrowed from Medieval Latin paraffus, paraphus, shortened form of paragrapheus. —v. 1601, to sign; later, write paragraphs about (1764), and divide into paragraphs (1799); from the noun.

parakeet n. 1621 borrowed from Spanish periquito, probably a diminutive of Perico, a diminutive of Pedro. An earlier parroket (1581) was borrowed from Middle French parroquet, perroquet, from Old French, perhaps a diminutive of Pierre Peter.

parallax n. 1580, borrowed from Middle French parallaxe, from Greek parállaxis change, alternation, inclination of two lines meeting at an angle, from parállassein to alter, make things alternate (para-beside + allássein to change).

parallel adj. 1549, borrowed from Middle French parallèle, and directly from Latin parallelus, from Greek parállēlos, from pará allēlois beside one another (pará beside and allēlois each other). —n. 1551, from the adjective. The sense of a counterpart, equal, is first recorded in 1599. —v. 1598, bring into comparison; from the adjective. The meaning of be a parallel to, is first recorded in 1601. —parallelogram n. 1570, borrowed from Middle French parallélogramme, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin parallēlogrammum, from Greek parallēlógrammon from neuter of parallēlógrammos bounded by parallel lines (parállēlos parallel + grammē line).

paralysis n. 1525, borrowing of Latin paralysis, from Greek parálýsis, literally, loosening, from paralyein disable, enfeeble (para-beside + lyein loosen, untie). —paralytic adj. Probably about 1380 parlatyk; later paralitik (before 1398); borrowed from Old French paralitique, from Latin paralyticus, from Greek paralytikós, from parálýsis paralysis; for suffix see -IC. —paralyze v. 1804, borrowed from French paralyser, from Old French paralisie paralysis, learned borrowing from Latin paralysis.

paramecium n. 1752, New Latin Paramecium the genus name, formed from Greek paramékēs oblong, oval (para-on one side + mēkos length, related to makrós long); for suffix see -IUM.

paramedic¹ n. medical corpsman who parachutes. 1951, formed from para-² parachute + medic.

paramedic² n. medical technician. 1970, back formation from earlier paramedical, adj., 1921, related to medicine in an auxiliary capacity (para-¹ + medical).

parameter n. 1656, a constant right line in a conic section; borrowed from New Latin parametrum, formed from Greek para-beside, subsidiary + métron MEASURE.

A meaning of a measurable factor which helps to define a particular system, is first recorded in the 1920's, and from this developed (partly by influence of perimeter) the widely used nontechnical sense of a boundary, limit, or characteristic factor, in the 1950's.

paramount adj. 1531, above others, supreme; borrowed from Anglo-French paramont, peramont above, formed from Old French par by + amont up, a mont upward.

paramour n. Before 1325, a term for Christ or the Virgin Mary; later, a term equivalent to darling, sweetheart (before 1375), and mistress, concubine, lover (about 1390); all noun uses of the adverbial phrase par amour passionately, with very strong love or desire (before 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French par amour, from Old French par amor by or through love (par, from Latin per by, through, and amour, from Latin amōrem, accusative of amor love).

paranoia n. 1891, New Latin; earlier paranea (1811); from Greek paránoia mental derangement, madness, from paránoos, paránous mentally ill, insane (para-beside, beyond + nóos, noús mind). —paranoid adj. 1904, formed from New Latin paranoia + English -oid.

parapet n. 1590, breast-high wall to protect soldiers; borrowed from Middle French parapet a breastwork, from Italian parapetto (para-defense + petto breast, from Latin pectus).

paraphernalia n. pl. 1651, a woman's property besides her dowry; borrowed from Medieval Latin paraphernalia, neuter plural of paraphernalis, adj., from Late Latin parapherna a woman's property besides her dowry, from Greek parápherna, neuter plural (para- beside + pherné dowry, related to phérein to carry). The meaning of equipment, apparatus, is found in 1791.

paraphrase n. 1548, expression of a statement in other words; borrowed from Middle French paraphrase, learned borrowing from Latin paraphrasis a paraphrase, from Greek paráphrasis, from paraphrázein to tell in other words (para- beside + phrázein to tell). —v. 1606, borrowed from French paraphraser, from Middle French paraphrase, n.

paraplegia n. 1657, New Latin, from Ionic Greek paraplēgíē paralysis of one side of the body, from paraplēssein strike at the side, paraplēssesthai be stricken on one side (para- beside + plēssein to strike). The New Latin form may have been modeled on Middle French paraplégie, from Greek. —paraplegic adj. 1822–34, formed from English paraplegia + -ic, as if borrowed from Ionic Greek paraplēgikós, from paraplēgíē. —n. 1890, from the adjective.

parasite n. 1539, person who lives on others, hanger-on; borrowed from Middle French parasite, learned borrowing from Latin parasitus, and borrowed directly from Greek parasitos person who eats at the table of another, noun use of adjective, feeding beside (para- beside + sitos food). The animal or plant that lives on another is first recorded in English in 1727–41. —parasitic adj. 1627, shortened form of parasitical (1577–87); borrowed from Latin parasiticus, from Greek parasitikós, from parasitos parasite; for suffix see -ICAL.

parasol n. 1616, borrowing of French parasol, from Italian parasole (para- para-², defense against + sole sun, from Latin sōlem, nominative sōl).

paratrooper n. 1941, formed from para-² parachute + trooper.

parboil v. 1381 parboilen to boil partially; later, to boil thoroughly (1440); borrowed from Old French parboillir, parbolir, parbouillir, and directly from Medieval Latin perbullire boil thoroughly (Latin per- thoroughly + bullire to boil¹). The meaning of boil partially was by mistaken association with part.

parcel n. About 1303 parcelle part, portion, division; later parcel (before 1376); borrowing of Old French parcelle, parcel a small piece, particle, parcel, from Vulgar Latin particella*, diminutive of Latin particula PARTICLE.

The meaning of a package is first recorded in English in 1465, and is preceded by the sense of bundle, about 1436. —v. 1584–85, from the noun.

parch v. Before 1338 parchen burn, lay waste; earlier in a surname Parchehare (1246–47); before 1382, to roast or dry; of uncertain origin (possibly from perchen, variant of perishen perish).

parcheesi or parchesi n. 1800 pachees, borrowed from Hindi pachīsī, from pachīs twenty-five (highest throw of the dice), from the compound of Sanskrit pāñca FIVE + viṃśati-s twenty. The common spelling was originally pachisi; the spelling parcheesi (with intrusive r) became more frequent as a trademark after 1892.

parchment n. About 1250 parchemyne skin of sheep, etc., prepared as writing material; earlier, in a surname Perchamunt (1200); borrowed from Old French parchemin, perchemin, alteration (with ch for g) of Late Latin pergamēnum, from Late Greek pergamēnōn, in allusion to Pérgamon Pergamum, Greek city where parchment was supposedly first made. It is also possible that a Gallo-Romance form particaminum* developed from a blend of Late Latin pergamēnum with Latin parthica in parthica pellis Parthian leather. The late Middle English parchement (1438, with added t) was influenced by Medieval Latin pergamēnum from Late Latin pergamēnum.

pard¹ n. Archaic. leopard, panther. Probably before 1300 perde later parde (before 1325); borrowed from Old French parde, and directly from Latin pardus, from Greek párdos male panther, from the same source (probably Iranian) as Sanskrit prāḍaku-s leopard, tiger, snake, and Persian palang panther. Also found in rare Old English pard.

pard² n. Dialect. partner. 1850, shortened form of earlier pardener, pardner (1795).

pardon v. 1433 pardonēn forgive; borrowed from Old French pardonēn, pardonner to grant, forgive, and directly from Vulgar Latin perdonāre* to give wholeheartedly (from Latin per- thoroughly + dōnāre give, present). —n. Probably before 1300 pardoun forgiveness; about 1300 pardon; borrowed from Old French pardon, from pardonēn to grant, pardon, and directly from Vulgar Latin perdonum*.

pare v. Probably before 1300 paren cut, trim, or shave off the outer part of; borrowed from Old French parer arrange, prepare, trim, and directly from Latin parare prepare; related to parere produce, bring forth, give birth to.

paregoric n. 1704, soothing medicine for intestinal upset, from earlier adjective, soothing (1684); borrowed perhaps through French parégorique, from Late Latin parēgoricus, from Greek parēgorikós soothing, from parēgoreîn speak soothingly to, from parēgoros consoling (para- beside + the root of agoreûein speak in public); for suffix see -IC.

parenchyma n. 1651, borrowed, perhaps through influence of French parenchyme, from Greek parénchyma anything poured in, from parencheîn pour in beside (para- beside + énchyma infusion, en- in + chýma what is poured, from cheîn to pour). It was formerly supposed that blood vessels poured into the tissues of organs.

parent n. Before 1410 parens, pl.; borrowed from Latin nominative parēns; later parent (1413), and as a surname Parent (1185); borrowing of Old French parent; from Latin parentem father or mother, ancestor, a noun use of past active participle of parere bring forth, give birth to, produce. —v. 1663, be a parent of, beget; from the noun. Use of the verbal noun, parenting is first recorded in the 1950's. —parentage n. descent from parents. 1490, probably borrowed from Middle French parentage; also possibly formed from Middle English parent + -age. —parental adj. 1623, formed from English parent + *-al*¹.

parenthesis n. 1550, explanatory or qualifying comment in a passage; borrowed, by influence of Middle French parenthèse, from Late Latin parenthesis addition of a letter or syllable in a word, from Greek parénthesis a putting in beside, from paréntithénai put in beside (para- beside + en- in + tithénai put, place). —parenthetical adj. 1624, from Medieval Greek parénthetos interpolated; for suffix see -ICAL.

parhelion 1647, in plural parhelies; 1648, New Latin parhelion (with h from Greek helios sun), from Latin parēllion, from Greek parēllion a mock sun (para- beside + hēlios sun).

pariah n. 1613, member of a low caste in southern India; borrowed from Portuguese pariá, or directly from Tamil paraiyar, plural of paraiyan drummer (the caste's hereditary duty at festivals), from parai large festival drum. The meaning of a social outcast is first recorded in 1819.

parietal adj. Probably about 1425, borrowed from Late Latin parietālis of walls, from Latin pariēs (genitive parietis) wall; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —n. Probably about 1425, noun use of Latin parietālis, adj.

pari-mutuel n. 1881, borrowing of French pari-mutuel mutual wager (pari wager, from parier to bet, from Latin pariāre to settle a debt, from pār, genitive paris equal + mutuel mutual, from Latin mūtūus MUTUAL).

parish n. About 1300 parochie district with its own church; also, members of that district; later parosshe (about 1325), and parish (about 1330); probably, in part, a back formation of earlier paroschien, parysshen parishioner; and, in part, borrowed from Old French paroisse, parroche, learned borrowing from Late Latin parochia a diocese, alteration of Late Greek paroikiā a diocese or parish, from confusion of Greek párochos provider to traveling officials, and pároikos a sojourner; earlier, neighbor (para- near + oikos a house); for suffix see -ISH. —parishioner n. 1465 parishioner, earlier parysshen member of a parish (about 1303), and paroschien (probably before 1200); formed from Old French paroissien, parrochien parishioner, from paroisse, parroche parish + Middle English *-er*¹.

parity n. 1572, equality of rank; borrowed from Middle French parité, or directly from Late Latin paritās equality, from Latin pār, adj. (genitive paris) equal; for suffix see -ITY.

park n. About 1300 parc, parke park, enclosed tract of land; earlier, in parkselver fee paid for maintaining enclosed land (1222); borrowed from Old French parc, possibly from West Germanic parrik* or parrak* (compare Old High German pfarrh, and Old English pearnuc enclosure). —v. 1526 (implied in parking) enclose in a park; from the noun. The meaning of put (a vehicle) in a certain place is first recorded in 1844.

parka n. 1813; earlier parki, pl. (1780); borrowed from Aleut parka, from Russian párka a pelt or jacket made from pelt, from Samoyed.

parlance n. 1579–80, speech, especially debate; borrowed from Middle French parlance, from Old French parlaunce, parlance, from parler to speak; see PARLEY.

parlay v. 1828 paralee, alteration of earlier paroli (1701); borrowed from French, of unknown origin. The meaning of exploit to advantage is first recorded in 1942.

parley n. Probably before 1449, conversation or discussion; later, conference (1581); borrowed from Middle French parlée, from feminine past participle of Old French parler to speak, from Late Latin parabolāre, from parabola speech or discourse, from Latin parabola comparison; see PARABLE. —v. 1570, to speak; later, discuss terms (1600); from the noun. Earlier parlen to speak, confer (about 1378), is probably a separate borrowing from Old French parler to speak.

parliament n. Probably before 1300 parlement formal council, lawmaking body; borrowing of Old French parlement, from parler to speak, see PARLEY; for suffix see -MENT. The spelling parliament, parliament (about 1400), was formed after Medieval Latin parliamentum, also found in Anglo-Latin. —parliamentary adj. 1616, formed from English parliament + -ary.

parlor n. Probably before 1200 parlur window through which to make confession or hold audience; sitting room (about 1378); borrowed from Old French parlur, parlëur, parlëor, from parler to speak see PARLEY; for suffix see *-OR*². The sense as in ice cream parlor, is first recorded in 1884. —adj. 1910, advocating views from a safe distance (as in a parlor radical), from the noun.

parochial adj. 1393 parochiell; 1400 parochial; borrowed from Anglo-French parochiel, and from Old French parochial, from Late Latin parochiālis of a parish, from parochia PARISH; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The sense of limited or narrow is first recorded in 1856.

parody n. 1598, borrowed from Latin parōdia parody, from Greek parōidiā burlesque poem or song (para- beside, parallel to + ōidē song, ODE); for suffix see *-Y*³. —v. Before 1745, from the noun.

parole n. Before 1616, promise given by a prisoner of war not to escape; borrowing of French parole word, speech, formal promise, from Gallo-Romance paraula* speech or discourse, from Latin parabola a comparison. The sense of conditional release of a prisoner before serving a full term is first recorded in 1908. —v. 1716, pledge one's word; later, put a prisoner of war or other combatant on parole (1853); from the noun.

paroxysm n. Probably before 1425 paroxism periodic attack of a disease; borrowed from Medieval Latin paroxysmus irritation, fit of a disease, from Greek paroxysmós, from paroxýnein to irritate, goad (para- beyond + oxýnein sharpen, goad, from oxýs sharp, pointed). The sense of any sudden attack, fit, is first recorded in 1604.

parquet n. 1816, borrowing of French parquet, parchet wooden flooring, compartment, enclosed portion of a park, diminutive of Old French parc PARK; for suffix see -ET. The noun in English was influenced by verb use. —v. 1678, borrowed from French parqueter, from parquet, n.

parricide¹ n. person who kills his parent or other near relative. 1554, borrowed from Middle French parricide, learned borrowing from Latin parricida, pāricida (pārus* relative + -cida killer).

parricide² n. the act of killing a parent or near relative. 1570, borrowed from Middle French parricide, learned borrowing from Latin parricidium, pāricidium (pārus* relative + -cidium killing).

parrot n. About 1525, perhaps borrowed from dialectal Middle French perrot, from a variant of the man's name Pierre Peter; see PARAKEET. —v. repeat without understanding. 1596, from the noun.

parry v. 1634, ward off a weapon or blow; borrowed from French parer imperative of parer ward off, from Italian parare, from Latin parāre make ready, prepare. The sense of evade, turn aside, is first recorded in 1718. —n. 1705, from the verb.

parse v. Before 1553, probably verb use of Middle English pars part of speech (probably before 1300); borrowed perhaps through Old French pars, plural of part part, and directly from Latin pars in the school question Quae pars orationis? What part of speech?

parsimony n. Probably before 1425 parcimony; borrowed from Latin parsimonia sparingness, frugality, from pars-, the stem of pari, perfect tense of parcere to spare, save + -mōnia, suffix signifying action, condition. —parsimonious adj. 1598, probably formed from English parsimony + -ous.

parsley n. Before 1300 persely, a fusion of Old English (about 1000) petersilie and Old French peresil, persil, from Medieval Latin petrosilium, altered from Latin petroselinum, from Greek petroselinon (pētros rock, stone + selinon celery). The Old English petersilie probably came from a West Germanic form (compare Old High German petarsile, Middle Dutch petersilie, borrowed from Medieval Latin petrosilium).

parsnip n. 1533 parsnepe; earlier persenepe (before 1500); alteration of pasnepe (1373); borrowed from Old French pasnaie, from Latin pastināca parsnip or carrot. In Middle English pasnepe, the ending was altered to nepe turnip, found in Old English (Anglian nēp, West Saxon nāp; borrowed from Latin nāpus turnip) because the parsnip was considered a kind of turnip.

parson n. About 1250 persone; earlier, in a surname Persun (1197); about 1300 parson; borrowing of Old French persone curate, parson, from Medieval Latin persona parson, and borrowed directly from Latin persōna PERSON.

Ecclesiastical use of Latin persōna parson may refer to a clergyman as the legal "person" holding property of the church; or a dignitary, in the role of the parish clergyman, ministerial duties being discharged by a resident vicar.

—parsonage n. About 1378 parsonage a benefice granted to a parson; also personage; borrowed from Old French personage, personnage benefice of a parson (persone parson + -age), and from Medieval Latin personagium parsonage, benefice. The meaning of a house for a parson is first recorded in English in 1486.

part n. About 1250 part division, portion; borrowed from Old French part, from Latin pars (genitive partis) part. Old English part part of speech, borrowed from Latin, is considered rare and did not survive. —v. Probably before 1200 parten to depart, separate oneself; later to divide into parts, separate (before 1300); borrowed from Old French partir, from Latin partire, from pars (genitive partis) part, n. —adj. 1597, from the noun. —adv. 1513, from the noun.

partake v. 1561, to share; later, to take or have a share (about 1585); back formation from partaker sharer, participant (1547); formed from Middle English part-taker (found in part takinge, about 1384), translation of Latin particeps participant; see PARTICIPATION.

partial adj. Before 1398 parcial not whole, incomplete; borrowing of Old French parcial, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin partialis divisible, solitary, partial, from Latin pars (genitive partis) PART; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The meaning of one-sided, biased (1425) is reflected earlier in parcialte partiality (1421). —partiality n. 1421 parcialte; later partialte (1461); borrowed from Middle French parcialité, parcialté, from Medieval Latin partialitatem (nominative partialitas), from partialis partial; for suffix see -ITY.

participate v. 1531, probably a back formation from participation; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —participant n. 1562, from participant, adj. (before 1470); borrowed from Middle French participant, from Latin participantem (nominative participāns), present participle of participāre participate; for suffix see -ANT. —participation n. About 1380 participacioun, borrowed from Old French participation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin participātionem (nominative participātiō), from Latin participāre participate, from particeps (genitive participis) partaker (pars, genitive partis part + the root of capere to take); for suffix see -ATION.

participle n. Before 1397, borrowed from Old French participle, variant of particeps, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin participium, literally, a sharing, partaking, from particeps partaker; see PARTICIPATION. —participial adj. 1591, borrowed from Middle French participial, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin participiālis, from participium participle; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

particle n. Before 1398 particle little bit, small unit of matter; borrowed from Latin particula little bit or part, diminutive of pars (genitive partis) PART; for suffix see -CLE.

particular adj. Before 1387 particuler distinct, partial; later, private, personal (1442); borrowed from Old French particuler, and directly as learned borrowing from Late Latin particulāris of a part, from Latin particula particle; for suffix see -AR. The meaning of precise, exacting, fastidious, is first recorded in 1814. —n. 1392 particuler body part; later, individual factor or circumstance (before 1425); from the adjective. —particularity n. 1528, detail, particular point; borrowed from Middle French particularité, from Late Latin particulāritatem (nominative particulāritās), from particulāris particular; for suffix see -ITY. —particularize v. 1588, formed from English particular + -ize.

particulate adj. 1871, formed from Latin particula PARTICLE + English *-ate*¹. —n. 1960, from the adjective.

partisan n. 1555, one who takes sides, adherent or supporter; borrowing of Middle French partisan, adaptation of dialectal Italian partezan, partisano, corresponding to Italian partigiano member of a faction, a partner, from parte part, from Latin partem (nominative pars) PART. The meaning of a guerrilla, is first recorded in 1692. —adj. 1708, pertaining to guerrillas or guerrilla warfare; from the noun. The meaning in politics is first recorded in 1842.

partition n. About 1400 partisoun a distinction or division; 1410 particioun division into parts; borrowed from Old French particion, learned borrowing from Latin partitiōnem (nominative partitiō) division or portion, from partire to PART; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of thing that separates is first recorded in 1465–66. —v. 1741, from the noun.

partitive n. 1530, word or phrase meaning a part of a whole; from partitive, adj. (before 1398); also partytyf (about 1450); borrowed from Middle French partitif, and directly from Medieval Latin partitivus, from Latin partire to PART; for suffix see -IVE.

partner n. About 1300 partiner; later partnuer (about 1415), alteration (influenced by part) of parciner one that shares (about 1300); borrowed from Old French parçener, parçonier, from parçon portion, from Latin partitiōnem (nominative partitiō) portion; see PARTITION; for suffix see -ER¹. —partnership n. 1576, formed from English partner + -ship.

partridge n. Probably before 1300 pertris; earlier, in a surname Pertriz (1176); about 1300 partrich; borrowed from Old French pertris, pertriz, perdriz, alteration of perdis (perhaps by influence of -tris, -triz feminine ending, from Latin -trix; see -ESS) from Latin perdicem (nominative perdix), from Greek pérđix the Greek partridge, probably related to pérdesthai to break wind (so called from the whirring noise of the bird's wings).

The spelling in -dge shows a change of final unaccented -ch as in knowledge from Middle English cnowleche, or cabbage from cabache.

parturient adj. 1592, borrowed from Latin parturientem (nominative parturiēns), present participle of parturire be in labor, formed from parere to bear; for suffix see -ENT.

parturition n. 1646, borrowed from Latin parturitiōnem (nominative parturitiō) travail, from parturire be in labor, from parere to bear, give birth to; for suffix see -TION.

party n. Probably before 1300 partie side, end, edge, division; also, an opposing force; about 1300, participant, litigant; borrowed from Old French partie a part or party, from feminine past participle of partir divide; see PART. The meaning of a gathering for social pleasure is first recorded in 1716. —v. Before 1639, to side with; later, to give or attend a party, have a good time (1922); from the noun.

parvenu n. 1802, borrowing of French parvenu, noun use of past participle of parvenir to arrive, from Latin pervenire (per-through + venire to come). —adj. 1828, from the noun.

parvovirus n. 1965, formed from Latin parvus small + English vinus.

paschal adj. Probably before 1425 paschalle; borrowed from Late Latin paschālis; also Middle English pascal (1442), borrowing of Middle French pascal, from Late Latin paschālis, from pascha Passover or Easter, from Greek páscha Passover, from Aramaic pashā pass over, corresponding to Hebrew pesah, from pāsah to pass over; see PASSOVER; for suffix see -AL¹. Middle English paschalle was also influenced in formation by Pasche Easter (1122); borrowed from Old French pasche and Latin pascha.

pass¹ v. move past. Probably before 1200 passen to die; later, go past (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French passer, from Vulgar Latin passāre* to step, walk, pass, from Latin passus (genitive passūs) step, pace. —n. About 1300 pas a journey; also pas passing, departure (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French pas, from passer to pass, and directly from Latin passus a step; originally, a stretch, related to passum, past participle of pandere spread out. —passable adj. (1413, that can be passed; 1489, that can pass; tolerable).

pass² n. narrow path. Probably before 1300 pas road, path, passageway; also pas road, path (about 1378); borrowed from Old French pas step, track, from Latin passus (genitive passūs) step, pace¹.

passage n. Probably about 1225 passage a road, pathway; borrowed from Old French passage, from passer to go by, PASS¹, from Latin passus step; for suffix see -AGE. The corridor or hall in a building is first recorded in English in 1611.

passel n. 1835, variant of PARCEL.

passenger n. 1337 passajour passenger ferry; also passager traveler; borrowed from Old French passageor, noun use of passagier, passager, adj., passing, fleeting, traveling, from passage PASSAGE.

In later Middle English the sound represented by n was added before -ger in passager forming passynger (probably 1421), and as is also found in harbinger and scavenger (compare MESSENGER).

The meaning of a traveler in a vehicle or vessel is first recorded in English in 1511.

passerine adj. 1776, of the perching birds. 1776, borrowed from Latin passerinus of a sparrow, from passer sparrow; for suffix see -INE¹. —n. 1842, from the adjective.

passion n. Probably before 1200 passiun suffering or affliction; later passioun (about 1280); borrowed from Old French passiōn, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin passiōnem (nominative passiō) suffering, enduring, from pass-, stem of Latin pati to suffer, endure; for suffix see -ION.

Latin passiō was chiefly a word referring to the sufferings of Christ, and was also the earliest meaning in Old French and Middle English. The sense of strong emotion or desire is first recorded before 1250, but that of sexual love is not recorded until 1588 and strong liking, enthusiasm (as in a passion for horses) 1638. —passionate adj. Before 1420 passionat angry, furious; also probably before 1425 passionate emotional; borrowed from Medieval Latin passionatus affected with passion, from Latin passiō (genitive passiōnis) passion; for suffix see -ATE¹.

passive adj. About 1385 passive producing upset by disease; later, not active, capable of being acted upon (1398), borrowed from Latin passivus; also before 1397 passif having a passive verb form in grammar, borrowed from Old French passif, from Latin passivus capable of feeling or suffering, from pass, stem of pati to suffer; for suffix see -IVE.

Passover n. 1530, formed from the verbal phrase pass over, a translation of Hebrew pesah (see PASCHAL), in reference to the Biblical account of the Lord "passing over" houses of the Israelites in Egypt when He killed the first-born of the Egyptians.

Modern English Passover replaced Middle English pasche (1122); borrowed from Old French pasche, from Latin pascha, a translation of Hebrew pesah.

passport n. Probably about 1500 pase-porte authorization to pass through a port or to leave or enter a country; borrowed from Middle French passeport (passe, imperative of Old French passer to pass + port port).

past adj. Before 1325 past gone by, ended, over; later passed (about 1380); from past participle of passen go by; see PASS¹. —n. Before 1500 passid, from the adjective.

paste¹ n. doughlike mixture. About 1303, moistened flour, dough; earlier, in a surname Paste (1166); borrowing of Old French paste, and directly from Late Latin pasta pastry cake, paste, from Greek pastá barley porridge (probably originally a salted mess of food), from neuter plural of pastós, adj., sprinkled, salted, from pássein to sprinkle. The meaning of a mixture used as glue is first recorded in English in 1440. —v. 1561–62, to stick with paste; earlier pasten to make a paste of something (probably before 1425); from the noun.

paste² v. hit hard. 1846, probably alteration of BASTE³ beat.

pastel n. 1662, chalklike pigments used in crayons; also, a crayon; borrowed from French pastel a crayon, from Italian pastello a pastel, literally, material reduced to a paste, from Late Latin pastellus dye from the leaves of the woad plant, diminutive of pasta PASTE¹. The meaning of a pale or light color is first recorded in 1899. —adj. 1884, from the noun.

pastern n. 1284 pastron shackle on the pastern of a grazing horse; later, the pastern of a horse (before 1450); borrowed from Old French pasturon, diminutive of pasture in the transferred sense of pastern, shackle for a horse in pasture, altered from pastoire* (compare Italian pastoia tether), from Vulgar Latin pastōria*, noun use of the feminine of Latin pastōrius of herdsman, from pastor shepherd, PASTOR. The shift in spelling to pastern (with metathesis of r and the originally following vowel) occurred in the 1500's.

pasteurize v. 1881, borrowed from French pasteuriser, formed in allusion to the name of Louis Pasteur, who invented the process; for suffix see -IZE. —pasteurization n. 1885, formed from English pasteurize + -ation.

pastiche n. 1878, borrowing of French pastiche, from Italian pasticio medley, pastry cake, from Vulgar Latin pasticium* composed of paste, from Late Latin pasta paste, pastry cake.

pastime n. About 1489 passee tyme recreation or diversion; replacement of pastance (recorded before 1500); formed after Middle French passee-temps, passetemps, passetans (passee, imperative of passer to pass + temps time).

pastor n. Before 1376 pastour shepherd; earlier, in a surname Pastur (1242); also pastor spiritual guide, pastor, (1387); borrowed from Old French pastur, pastor herdsman, shepherd, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pāstōrem (nominative pāstor) shepherd, from pāscere to lead to pasture, graze; for suffix see -OR². —pastoral adj. Probably before 1425 pastoralle; borrowed from Old French pastoral, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pāstōrālis, from pāstor shepherd; for suffix see -AL¹.

pastrami n. 1940, borrowed from Yiddish pastrame, from Rumanian pastrămă, possibly from modern Greek pastōnō I salt, from Classical Greek pastós sprinkled with salt, salted, from pássein to sprinkle; or the Rumanian word came from dialectal Turkish pastırma, variant of basdırma dried meat. The English spelling in -mi was probably influenced by salami.

pastry n. 1442 pastre; 1449 pastree, pastry- (as in pastre bowrde) food made of paste or dough, formed from Middle English *paste*¹ + -re, -ry; probably influenced by Old French pastaierie pastry, from pastoier pastry cook, from paste PASTE¹, and also borrowed from Medieval Latin pasteria pastry, from Latin pasta PASTE¹.

pasture n. Probably before 1300 Anglo-Latin pastura land on which animals graze; also, in Oxpasture (before 1300); borrowed from Old French pasture grass eaten by cattle, and directly from Late Latin pāstūra a feeding, grazing, from Latin pāst-, past participle stem of pāscere to feed, graze; for suffix see -URE. —v. Before 1393 pasturen to graze, forage; also pasturing (about 1390); borrowed from Old French pasturer, from pasture, n., and directly from Medieval Latin pasturare, from Late Latin pāstūra pasture.

pasty n. Before 1300 pastei; earlier Pastey (1269); probably before 1400 pasty; borrowed from Old French paste, earlier pastée, from Gallo-Romance pastāta* meat dish wrapped in pastry.

pat¹ n. light tap. About 1400, a blow, stroke; perhaps originally imitative of the sound made by patting, but disappearing from English until the meaning of a light tap with the hand (1804), and earlier, that which is formed by patting, small mass (as of butter), in 1754, perhaps re-formed from the verb. —v. 1567, to hit, throw; originally from the noun. The later meaning of tap or strike lightly, is first recorded in 1714.

pat² adv. aptly, suitably. 1578, perhaps a special use of PAT¹, in the sense of hitting the mark; and thus "opportunistically;" ready for any occasion. —adj. 1638, from the adverb.

patch n. Before 1382 patche piece of cloth, etc.; 1384 pacche piece of material used to mend a hole or tear; perhaps a variant of pece, pieche PIECE. —v. 1447 pacchen, from the noun.

pate n. Before 1325; earlier, as a surname Pate (1197); perhaps borrowed as a shortened form of Old French patene or Medieval Latin patena, patina pan, dish.

pâté n. 1706, borrowing of French pâté, from Old French paste; earlier pastée, from paste PASTE¹.

patella n. 1671, structure in the form of a shallow pan; later, kneecap (1693); borrowed from Latin patella pan, kneecap, diminutive of patina pan.

paten n. About 1300 pateyn; later paten (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French patene, and directly as a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin patena, patina, from Latin, pan or dish, from Greek patánē flat dish.

patent n. Before 1376 patent a papal indulgence, pardon; later, a document granting a right, title, property (about 1387–95); shortened from lettre patent; borrowed from Old French patente, adj., in lettre patente open letter; see adjective. —adj. Before 1387 patent, in lettre patent letter granting a right, title, etc., literally, open letter or document; borrowed from Old French lettres patentes; also, in Medieval Latin (litterae) patentes, both from Latin patentem (nominative patēns) open, lying open, present participle of patēre lie open, be open; for suffix see -ENT. Reference to lie flat and open is said to be because the original documents were written on open sheets, not closed or folded. The sense of open to view, clear, plain (as in a patent fact or a patent lie) is attested by 1508. —v. 1675, to obtain a patent right to land; from the adjective; later, patent for an invention (1822).

paternal adj. About 1433 paternal; borrowed from Old French paternal of a father, and perhaps directly from Medieval Latin paternalis, from Latin paternus of a father, from pater FATHER; for suffix see -AL¹. —paternalism n. (1881) —paternalistic adj. Before 1890, formed after such pairs as material, materialistic.

paternity n. Before 1449 paternity; earlier paternyte, used as a term of address to a bishop; borrowed from Middle French paternité, learned borrowing from Late Latin paternitatem (nominative paternitas) fatherly care, fatherhood, from Latin paternus of a father, from pater father; for suffix see -ITY.

paternoster n. Old English (before 900) Pater Noster, borrowing from Latin pater noster our father (from the first two words of the Lord's Prayer in Latin).

The later form paternoster is first recorded about 1175, and the later meaning of a rosary or set of rosary beads, about 1250.

path n. Old English path (about 725, with a instead of expected æ, by analogy with plural pathas); also paeth in compound ānpaeth narrow path, literally, one-by-one path (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian path path, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch pat, pad (modern Dutch pad), and Old High German phad, pfad (modern German Pfad), from Proto-Germanic patha-*.

—path a combining form associated with -pathy: 1 one suffering from the disorder named, as in psychopath. 2 a practitioner of the medical system named, as in osteopath. The first meaning is adapted from Greek -pathēs feeling, suffering; the second is a back formation from -pathy.

pathetic adj. 1598 pathétique moving, stirring, affecting; borrowed from Middle French pathétique, from Late Latin pathēticus, from Greek pathētikós sensitive, from pathētós liable to suffer, from path-, stem of páschein to suffer; see PATHOS; for suffix see -IC. The form pathetic replaced pathetical (1573), borrowed from Late Latin pathēticus + *al*¹.

The meaning of arousing pity, pitiful is first recorded in 1737.

pathogen n. 1880, back formation from pathogenic. —pathogenic adj. 1852, borrowed from French pathogénique, from Greek páthos disease + French -génique -genic, producing.

pathology n. 1611, borrowed from French pathologie, from New Latin pathologia (from Greek páthos suffering; see PATHOS + -logia -logy). —pathological adj. (1688) pathos n. 1668, borrowed from Greek páthos suffering, feeling, emotion, related to páschein to suffer, and pénthos grief or sorrow.

—pathy a combining form meaning: 1 feeling, suffering, emotion, as in sympathy. 2 disorder, disease, as in neuropathy. 3 a system of treatment of disease, as in homeopathy. Borrowed from Greek -pátheia act or quality of suffering, feeling, from pathēin feel, suffer, from páthos suffering, feeling; see PATHOS.

patient adj. About 1350 patient enduring calmly, bearing (pain, etc.); later, patient (before 1400); probably influenced in development by earlier patience, but also borrowed from Old French patient, adj., and later directly as a learned borrowing from Latin patientem (nominative patiēns), present participle of pati to suffer or endure; for suffix see -ENT. —n. About 1385 patient suffering or sick person under medical treatment; later patient (about 1400); borrowed from Old French patient, n. —patience n. Probably before 1200 patience calm endurance; also later pacience (before 1250); borrowed from Old French patience, pacience, and directly from Latin patientia, from patiēns, present participle; for suffix see -ENCE.

patina n. 1748, borrowing of Italian patina, perhaps from Latin patina dish, pan; so called from the incrustation on ancient dishes. The sense of refinement and cultural sophistication, is first recorded in 1933.

patio n. 1828, borrowing of Spanish patio inner court open to the sky, probably from Old Provençal patu, pati untilled land, communal pasture, from Latin pactum agreement, PACT. The terrace next to a building is first recorded in 1941.

patois n. 1643, borrowing of French patois a native or local speech, from Old French patoier handle clumsily, from pate paw, from Vulgar Latin patta*, perhaps of imitative origin.

patri- a combining form borrowed from Latin patri-, found in such forms as patrimōnium patrimony, from pater (genitive patris) father used in terms describing kinships with the father or the paternal line, as in patrilineal (1904). Contrasted with MATRI-.

patrial adj. 1629, borrowed from French patrial (now obsolete), from Latin patria fatherland, from pater FATHER; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of having the status of a native British citizen is first recorded in 1971. —n. 1971, person having the status of a native British citizen, probably from the adjective.

patriarch n. Probably before 1200 patriarche one of the Old Testament fathers; later patriark high-ranking bishop (about 1300); borrowed from Old French patriarche, and directly from Late Latin patriarcha, from Greek patriarchēs (patriā family, clan, from patēr father + archein to rule). —patriarchal adj. About 1450 patriarcal of an ecclesiastical patriarch; formed from Middle English patriarche + -al¹, and borrowed from Late Latin patriarchālis, from patriarcha patriarch; for suffix see -AL¹.

patrician n. Probably before 1425 patricion; borrowed through Middle French patricien, from Latin patricius noble, of the senators, from patrēs Roman senators, fathers, plural of pater father; for suffix see -AN. The Latin patrēs was a shortening of patrēs cōscriptī, a usual title of address of the senate of ancient Rome.

The sense of any person of noble birth or high social rank is first recorded in English in 1631. —adj. 1615, noble, aristocratic; from the noun.

patricide¹ n. Person who kills his father. 1593, borrowed probably through Middle French patricide, from Medieval Latin patricida, from Latin pater father + -cida -cide¹, killer. Medieval Latin patricida replaced the classical Latin parricida parricide¹.

patricide² n. Act of killing one's own father. 1625, borrowed from Late Latin patricidium, from Latin pater FATHER + -cidium -cide², a killing. Late Latin patricidium replaced the classical Latin parricidium parricide².

patrimony n. 1340 patremoyne the property of the Church, spiritual legacy of Christ; later patrimoyne inherited property (probably about 1384), and patrimony (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French patrimoine, and later directly as a learned borrowing from Latin patrimōnium a paternal estate or inheritance (pater, genitive patris father + -mōnium suffix signifying action, state, condition). —patrimonial adj. 1530, borrowed from Middle French patrimonial, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin patrimōniālis, from Latin patrimōnium patrimony; for suffix see -AL¹.

patriot n. 1596, fellow countryman; also 1605, person who loyally supports his country; borrowed from French patriote, and directly from Late Latin patriōta, from Greek patriōtēs fellow countryman, from patriā fatherland, from patēr (genitive patrōs) father, with the ending -ōtēs expressing a state or condition as of one's origin. —patriotic adj. 1653, of one's country; borrowed from French patriotique; later, loyally supporting one's country (1757), shortened form of patriotical (1691), and borrowed from Late Latin patriōticus, from Greek patriōtikós pertaining to descent or race, or to a fellow countryman, from patriōtēs fellow countryman; for suffix see -IC. —patriotism n. 1726, formed from English patriot + -ism.

patrol n. 1664, act of guarding against intrusion or disorder; borrowed from French patrouille a night watch, from patrouiller go the rounds to watch or guard, originally, paddle in mud, paw about in water, from Old French patouiller, variant of patouiller, patoiller paddle or dabble in water, probably from pate paw or foot, from Vulgar Latin patta*, perhaps imitative of the sound made by a paw. —v. 1691, possibly, in part, from the noun in English, and, in part, borrowed from French patrouiller.

patron n. About 1300 patron, patroun benefactor, bestower of a benefice; borrowed from Old French patron, and directly from Medieval Latin patronus patron saint, bestower of a benefice, lord or master, model or PATTERN, from Latin patrōnus defender, protector, advocate, from pater (genitive patris) father.

The meaning of one who frequents a store, regular customer, is first recorded in 1605. —patronage n. 1395, right to bestow a benefice; borrowed from Old French patronage, and directly from Medieval Latin patronagium advowson (right to select a person to a benefice), from patronus; for suffix see -AGE. The meaning of power to give jobs or favors appears in 1769, and that of regular business given by customers, in 1804. —patronize v. 1589, act as a patron toward; borrowed from Middle French patroniser, from Medieval Latin patronizare, from Latin patrōnus patron; for suffix see -IZE. The meaning of treat in a condescending way is first recorded in 1797, and that of give regular business to, in 1801.

patronymic n. 1612, borrowed from Late Latin patrōnymicus, from neuter of patrōnymicus derived from a father's name, from Greek patrōnymikós pertaining to one's father's name, from patrōnymos named from the father (patēr, genitive patrōs father + ōnyma name).

patroon n. 1744, borrowing of Dutch patroon, from French patron master or patron, from Old French; see PATRON; for ending see -OON.

patsy n. 1903, dupe, of uncertain origin (sometimes suggested as a possible alteration of Italian pazzo madman, or dialectal southern Italian paccio fool).

patter¹ v. make quick taps. 1611, frequentative form of *PAT*¹, v.; for suffix see -ER⁴. —n. 1844, from the verb.

patter² v. talk rapidly. Probably about 1395 patren to patter, mumble prayers rapidly; also pateren (about 1400), developed from earlier pater (probably about 1300), shortened form of PATERNOSTER, in reference to the rapid way in which the Lord's Prayer was repeated in church services. —n. 1758, jargon or lingo; later, rapid talk (1858); from the verb.

pattern n. 1324 patron outline, plan, model or pattern; later, model of behavior or appearance (before 1420); borrowed from Old French patron, and directly from Medieval Latin patronus PATRON. The extended meaning of decorative or artistic design, is first recorded in English in 1582.

The transfer of "patron" to "model, pattern" developed from a patron as a model to be imitated; originally used to denote a human model, and pattern and patron were not differentiated in form and sense until the 1700's. —v. 1581, to design, plan; later, make according to a pattern (1599); from the noun.

patty n. 1694, in patti-pan something baked in a small pan, small pasty or pâté; borrowed from French pâté PATE.

paucity n. 1392 pauceté fewness or thinness; later paucite (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French paucité, and directly from Latin paucitatem (nominative paucitās), from paucus little, few; for suffix see -ITY.

paunch n. 1373 pawnce belly or abdomen; earlier in a surname Panzeuot (1186); also paunche (about 1378); borrowed from Old French pance, panche, from Latin panticem (nominative pantex) belly, bowels, possibly related to pānus swelling.

pauper n. 1516, impoverished person, beggar; borrowing of Latin pauper poor, from pre-Latin pavo-pars* getting little (pau-, root of paucus little; and parere get, produce). Use in English originated in in fōrmā pauperis in the form of a pauper (on account of poverty allowed to sue in court without legal fees).

pause n. About 1426, a short stop or rest; borrowed from Middle French pause, and directly as a learned borrowing from pausa a halt, stop, cessation, from Greek paŭsis, from paŭein to stop. —v. 1440 pauson make a pause, stop, hold back; also pausen (about 1450); adopted from the noun, and in part borrowed from Middle French pauser, from Late Latin pausare to stop, cease, from Latin pausa a stop, pause.

pave v. About 1325 paven cover (a street, etc.) with stones, tiles, or other material; borrowed from Old French paver, from Latin pavire to beat, tread down; also possibly in some instances a back formation from pavement. The meaning of make smooth, prepare (as in pave the way) appeared before 1585. —pavement n. About 1250, paved surface of a street, etc.; borrowed from Old French pavement, paviment, and directly from Latin pavimentum beaten floor, from pavire to beat; for suffix see -MENT.

pavilion n. Probably before 1200 pavilun large, elaborate tent; later paviloun (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French paveillon, pavilloun, pavilun, from Latin pāpiliōnem (nominative pāpiliō) butterfly, tent (so called from the resemblance of a tent to a butterfly with outstretched wings).

paw n. Probably before 1300 powe foot of an animal having claws; later pawe (before 1350); borrowed from Old French powe, poe, from Gallo-Romance pawta*, usually referred to a pre-Celtic form that was also the source of Middle Low German pōte paw (modern German Pfote), and Middle Dutch pote (modern Dutch poof). —v. 1604, use the hands roughly, from the noun. The verb also is found in Middle English pawen touch or strike with the paw (probably 1404).

pawl n. 1626, bar to prevent the capstan of a ship from turning back; probably borrowed from Dutch pal pawl, or French pal stake, of uncertain origin (usually compared with Latin pālus stake).

pawn¹ n. something left as security. 1496 paun, borrowed from Middle French pan, pant pledge or security, from a Frankish word cognate with Old Frisian pand pledge or security, Old Saxon and Middle Dutch pant, and Old High German pfant (modern German Pfand), of unknown origin. —v. 1567, from the noun.

pawn² n. chess piece of lowest value. About 1369 poun; later paun (about 1400), and pawne (1474); borrowed through Anglo-French poun, Old French pēon, pāon, pon, from Medieval Latin pedonem foot soldier, from Late Latin pedōnem flat-footed person or one going on foot, from Latin pēs (genitive pedis) FOOT.

pay v. Probably before 1200 païen to please, satisfy, put money down; later, recompense, requite, appease (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French païer, from Latin pācare to appease, pacify or satisfy, especially a creditor, from pāx (genitive pācis) PEACE.

The meaning in Latin of pacify or satisfy developed through Medieval Latin into that of pay a creditor, and so to pay, generally but in French and English the sense of satisfy has become obsolete. —n. About 1300 pay satisfaction, liking, reward; later, compensation, wages (probably about 1380); borrowed from Old French paie, from païer to pay. —payday n. (1529) —payment n. Probably about 1375 payement a paying or the amount paid; borrowed from Old French païement (païer to pay + -ment -ment).

pea n. 1380 pease; earlier pese pea, pesen, pl. (about 1200); developed from Old English pise pea, pisan, pl. (West Saxon, about 1000); earlier piose pea, piosan and pisan, pl. (before 800, Mercian dialect; also later Mercian peose*, peosan*, pl.); borrowed from Late Latin pisa, variant of Latin pisum pea, from Greek ptōn, ptōs. Pea was a new singular form evolved from the earlier collective or singular pease the pea plant or a single pea, derived from the mistaken notion that pease, peases, or peas (collective nouns similar to wheat or corn) were plurals formed by adding the suffix -es or -s. The plural form peaes is recorded in 1611. —peanut n. 1807, formed from pea + nut; earlier called ground nut or ground pea (1769). —peanut butter (1903) peace n. Probably before 1140 pais; later pes (probably about 1200), and peace (1358); borrowed from Old French pais, peis, pes, from Latin pācem (nominative pāx) treaty of peace, tranquility, absence of war; related to pāciscā to covenant or agree; see PACT. Though the spelling peace is recorded in the mid-1300's, it was not the established form until the 1500's reflecting the shift in vowel pronunciation from so-called long a to long e.

The meaning of silence or quiet is first recorded in about 1250. —peaceable adj. Before 1338 pesyble, formed from pes peace + -ible; also borrowed from Old French paisible, peisable. In the 1500's the word was altered in spelling (and pronunciation) to conform to peace and to words ending in -able.

—peaceful adj. Before 1325 paisful; formed from pais peace + -ful. —peacemaker n. (before 1415) —peace pipe (1760) peach n. Before 1400 peche peach, peach tree; earlier, as a surname Pecche (1184–85); borrowed from Old French peche, pesche, peske, and directly from Medieval Latin pesca, from Late Latin persica, variant of persica peach, peach tree; from Latin Persicum mālum Persian apple, from Greek Persikōn mālōn, from Persis Persia.

peacock n. Probably about 1200 pococ the male of a peafowl pheasant; probably before 1400 pacok; formed from Middle English pō peacock + coc COCK¹ male bird; developed from Old English pāwa peafowl. Also found in pecok (probably before 1300), formed after Old English pēa peafowl (before 1000) + cok. Old English pēa, pāwa are borrowed from Latin pāvō peafowl, and are related to Old Saxon pāo peafowl, Middle Low German pāwe, Middle Dutch paeu, pau, Old High German pāwō (modern German Pfau), and Old Icelandic pāi.

pea jacket 1721 Pee-Jacket, borrowed by loan translation from North Frisian pijekkāt, from Dutch pijekkē (pij coarse woolen cloth + jekker jacket). The word pee was known in English from the late 1400's as a coat of coarse, thick wool, but is now found only as remnant in the altered spelling pea of pea jacket.

peak n. 1530, pointed or projecting part, variant of PIKE² sharp point. The meaning of a pointed top of a mountain is first recorded in 1634 paralleling the Middle English use of PIKE² in the sense of a mountain (probably 1400). The figurative sense of highest point or summit is first recorded in 1784. —v. 1577, rise to a peak; from the noun. The sense of reach the highest point is not recorded until 1958.

peaked adj. 1835–40, from past participle of earlier peak look sickly or thin (1605, peak and pine); of uncertain origin.

peal n. Probably about 1350 pel, pele summons to church by bell, generally considered a shortened form of apel, appel AP-PEAL. The meaning of loud ringing of bells is first recorded in 1511. —v. 1632, from the noun.

pear n. Probably before 1300 pere; later peare (before 1470); developed from Old English pere, peru (about 1000); borrowed from Vulgar Latin pira*, feminine singular use of Latin pira, plural of pirum pear. Old English pere is cognate with Middle Dutch pere pear and Old High German pira, bira, also borrowed from Vulgar Latin pira*.

pearl n. Before 1349 perle; earlier as a surname Perle (about 1258); before 1400 pearl; borrowed from Old French perle, and Medieval Latin perla; both from Vulgar Latin pernula*, diminutive from Latin perna ham, ham-shaped mollusk (sometimes yielding pearls).

peasant n. About 1410 passant countryman, rustic; later pais-saunt (probably about 1451); borrowed through Anglo-French paisant, Old French paisant, alteration with -ant of earlier paisenc, formed from pais, pays country or region, with the Frankish suffix -enc, -inc -ing. Old French pais is from Vulgar Latin pāgēnsis* territory of the district, from Late Latin pāgēnsis inhabitant of the district, from Latin pāgus country or rural district.

peat n. 1333 pete (found in Anglo-Latin in 1278 as peta); earlier in a place name Petepottes (about 1200); probably borrowed from Celtic pett-* (compare Cornish peyth, Welsh peth quantity, part, thing, Old Irish pet and Breton pez PIECE).

peavey n. About 1870, said to be named after a John Peavey, blacksmith at Bolivar, Allegheny County, New York, who was supposed to have invented the tool.

pebble n. About 1300 puble small smooth stone; later pobbel, pibbil (before 1382); developed from Old English (about 1000) papol-, popel-, found in the compound papolstān, popelstān pebblestone, found also in English place names Poppleford, Pap-plewick, etc. —v. 1605, to pelt with pebbles; later, to pave with pebbles (1835); from the noun.

pecan n. 1712 paccan the pecan tree or a related hickory; borrowed from Algonquian (compare Cree pakan hard-shelled nut).

peccadillo n. 1591, borrowed from Spanish pecadillo, diminutive of pecado a sin, from Latin peccātum a sin, from neuter past participle of peccāre to make a mistake, sin.

peccary n. 1613 pockiero, borrowed from Carib (Guiana or Venezuela) pakira, paquira. The spelling peccary is first recorded in 1697.

peck¹ v. pick with the beak. Probably before 1300 pechen (apparently a misspelling); later pekken (about 1330; in the phrase pekken mod to become angry); possible variant of picken to PICK¹, v.; perhaps, in part, borrowed from Middle Low German pekken to peck with the beak. —n. 1591, a mark made by pecking; from the verb.

peck² n. measure. About 1280 pek, later peck a dry measure (generally ¼ bushel), container holding a peck (1296); of unknown origin. Medieval Latin pecca, peccum, and Old French pek, were borrowings from English.

pectin n. 1838, borrowed from French pectine, from (acide) pectique pectic (acid), a constituent of fruit jellies. Pectique is the French form of Greek pēktikós curdling or congealing, from pēktós curdled or congealed, from pēgnýnai to make stiff or solid.

pectoral adj. 1576, good for diseases of the chest; 1578, of or on the chest; borrowed from Middle French pectoral, learned borrowing from Latin pectoralis pertaining to the breast, from pectus (genitive pectoris) breast, chest; for suffix see -AL¹; also the adjective in English is in part from the noun. —n. 1422 pectorall ornament worn on the breast; borrowing of Middle French pectoral, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pectorale breastplate, noun use of neuter of pectoralis, adj.

peculiar adj. About 1449, belonging exclusively to a person, special; borrowed from Latin peculiāris of one's own (property), from pecūlium money or property managed as one's own, from a lost adjective pecūlis* as one's own, from pecū cattle, flock (representing what is one's own); related to pecus cattle; for suffix see -AR.

The meaning of unusual is first recorded in 1608. —peculiarity n. 1610, exclusive possession; formed from English peculiar + -ity. The meaning of a special characteristic, is first recorded in 1646, and that of an oddity, in 1777.

pecuniary adj. 1502, borrowed perhaps through influence of Middle French pecuniaire from Latin pecūniarius pertaining to money, from pecūnia money, property, wealth, from pecū cattle, flock (representing property), related to pecus cattle; for suffix see -ARY.

pedagogue n. Before 1387 pedagogue teacher of children; borrowed from Old French pedagogue, pedagogien, from Latin paedagōgus a slave who escorted children to school and generally supervised them; later, a teacher, from Greek paidagōgós (país, genitive paidós child + agōgós leader, from agein to lead).

—pedagogical adj. 1619, formed from French pédagogique + English -al, or from English pedagogue + -ical, modeled on Greek paidagōgikós pedagogic, from paidagōgós teacher.

—pedagogy n. 1583, borrowed from Middle French pédagogie, from Greek paidagōglā education, from paidagōgós teacher; for suffix see -Y³.

pedal n. 1611, lever (on an organ) worked by the foot; borrowed from French pédale, from Italian pedale treadle or pedal, from Late Latin pedāle (thing) of the foot, from neuter of Latin pedālis of the foot, from pēs (genitive pedis) foot. —v. 1866, to work a pedal; from the noun.

pedant n. 1588, a teacher or tutor; borrowed from Middle French pédant, from Italian, or borrowed directly from Italian pedante teacher, schoolmaster, pedant. The meaning of a person who displays minor points of learning, is first recorded in 1596. The origin of Italian pedante is uncertain. —pedantic adj. About 1600, formed from English pedant + -ic. —pedantry n. 1612, formed from English pedant + -ry.

peddle v. 1532, implied in peddling; back formation from peddler. —peddler n. 1378 pedeler person who goes about with small goods for sale, also pedlere, and as a surname Pedelare (1307); probably alteration of earlier peoddere, peddere (probably before 1200); earlier as a surname Peddere (1166); of uncertain origin.

pederasty n. 1609 paederastie sexual intercourse between a man and a boy; borrowed from French pédérastie, or directly from Greek paiderastīā, from paiderastēs pederast (país, genitive paidós child + erastēs lover, from erasthai to love). —pederast n. 1730–36; borrowed from French pédéraste, from Greek paiderastēs.

pedestal n. 1563, borrowed from Middle French pedestal, from Italian pedistallo base of a pillar (piè foot + di of + stallo stall, place). The English spelling was influenced by Latin pedem foot.

pedestrian adj. 1716, (of writing) prosaic, dull; formed from Latin pedester (genitive pedestris) plain, prosaic + English suffix -ian. The meaning of on foot, going on foot, is first recorded in 1791, reflected in Latin pedester on foot (formed by analogy to equester on horseback), from pedes one that goes on foot, from pēs (genitive pedis) foot. —n. 1793, walker; from the adjective.

pediatric adj. 1880 paediatric; formed in English from Greek paid-, stem of pais child + iātrikós medicinal, medical, from iātrós physician, from iāsthai to heal; for suffix see -IC.

—pediatrician n. 1903, formed from English pediatric + -ian.

—pediatrics n. 1884, formed from English pediatric + -s, as in later geriatrics.

pedicel n. 1821, borrowed (perhaps through French pédicelle) from New Latin pedicellus, diminutive of Latin pediculus foot-stalk, itself diminutive of pēs (genitive pedis) foot.

pedigree n. 1410 pedicru genealogical chart or table, family tree; later pe-de-grew lineage, descent (before 1420); also pedegree (1425); probably borrowed from Anglo-French pe de gru, variant of Old French pie de grue foot of a crane; so called from the clawlike, three-branched mark used in genealogies to show succession (pie foot, from Latin pedem, nominative pēs foot; de of; grue crane, from Latin gruem, nominative grūs crane).

pediment n. 1664, alteration of earlier periment, peremint (1592); of uncertain origin (perhaps workmen's alteration of pyramid, in reference to its similarity to a triangular gable).

pedology n. 1924, probably borrowed from Russian pedolōgiya, from Greek pédon ground, earth + -logiā -logy, study of.

pedometer n. 1723, borrowed from French pédomètre, formed from Latin ped- (stem of pēs foot) + French -o- + -mètre -meter.

peduncle n. 1753, stalk, stem; borrowed from New Latin pedunculus, diminutive of Latin pēs (genitive pedis) foot; for suffix see -CLE.

peek v. About 1385 piken look quickly and slyly, of uncertain origin. The shift in pronunciation, reflected in the forms peke and peeke, begins in the 1500's.

It is not clear what the relationship is between the words keek, v. and peek, v. and their connection with peep, v. It is suggested that peek (piken about 1385) was formed by dissimilation of p and k from keek (kiken about 1390) and that keek or peek (both earlier spelled with i for e or ee) may be loan words from Middle Dutch kiesen, kijken, variants of kiken.

English peep, v. (about 1460) is parallel in its development complete with the form peep-bo (1837), also found in peek-bo (1599) and keek-bo (1791). —n. 1844, from the verb.

peel v. Probably before 1200 pilien, pilewin to remove the rind, shell, etc.; later pilen (probably about 1225), and pelen (about 1303); probably developed from Old English pilian to peel (and reinforced by Old French pillier); both borrowed from Latin pilāre to strip of hair, from pilus hair. The Middle English form pelen was probably further reinforced by Old French peler to strip of hair, to skin, also from Latin pilāre, with influence of Old French pel skin, from Latin pellis skin, hide. —n. 1583, rind, outer covering; developed from earlier pill rind, husk, skin (about 1450), pile (about 1300); from pilen, v.

peen n. 1683 pen, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian penn peen, Old Swedish pæna beat iron thin with the hammer).

peep¹ v. glance. Before 1460 pepen, perhaps alteration by assimilation of p for k in piken to PEEK, with the accompanying development in the pronunciation of the vowel. —n. 1530, the first appearance (of day); from the verb. The meaning of a furtive glance is first recorded in 1730.

peep² v. make a short, sharp sound. Probably 1420 pepen; alteration of earlier pipen to peep (about 1250). —n. Probably before 1437 pepe; from pepen to peep.

peer¹ n. person who is an equal. About 1250 pere an equal; probably before 1300 per; also, a nobleman (before 1338); borrowed through Anglo-French peir, and directly from Old French per, pier, from Latin pār equal. —peerage n. 1454 perage; formed from per peer + -age; probably on the model of Old French parage. —peerless adj. Probably about 1300 perles without equal, matchless; formed from per an equal + -less.

peer² v. look closely. 1591, probably reborrowed from East Frisian pīren to look, of uncertain origin, but influenced, especially in form, by peren (1375, later peeren, before 1425), shortened form of aperen to APPEAR. Also found in Middle English pīren to peer (before 1393; later peren, 1449, and continuing through about 1475); originally borrowed from East Frisian pīren.

peeve v. 1908, back formation from PEEVISH. —n. 1919 pet peeve, from the verb. —peevish adj. Probably before 1387 peyvesshe perverse, capricious; later pevish (probably before 1425); of uncertain origin (possibly modeled on Latin perversus reversed, perverse, past participle of pervertere to turn about, PERVERT). The meaning of cross, fretful, is first recorded about 1530.

peewee¹ n. See PEWEE.

peewee² adj. small, tiny. 1877, dialectal English, possibly a varied reduplication of WEE. —n. 1848.

peg n. 1440 pegge, borrowed from Middle Dutch pegge peg, of uncertain origin. —v. 1543, insert a peg into; later, fasten with or as if with pegs (1598); from the noun.

peignoir n. 1835, borrowing of French peignoir, from Middle French peignouer garment worn over the shoulders while combing the hair, from peigner to comb, from Latin pectināre, from pecten (genitive pectinis) a comb, related to pectere to comb.

pejorative adj. Before 1888, probably borrowed from French péjoratif (feminine péjorative), as if from Late Latin pejōrātīvus*, from Late Latin pejōrātus, past participle of pejōrāre make worse, from Latin pejor worse; for suffix see -ATIVE. It is also possible that pejorative was formed in English from pejorate to worsen (1653) + -ive. —n. 1882, borrowed from French péjoratif, n.

pekoe n. 1712, borrowed from Chinese (Amoy dialect) pe-kho, literally, white down; so called because the leaves are picked young with the “down” still on them.

pelf n. Probably about 1375, stolen goods, property, riches; borrowed through Anglo-French pelf, Old French pelfre booty, spoils, of unknown origin; related to PILFER. The meaning of money or riches, thought of as bad, is first recorded in 1500–20.

pelican n. Probably before 1200 pellican; developed from Old English (before 1050) pellicane; borrowed from Late Latin pelicānus, from Greek pelekán, related to pelekys ax; so called from the shape of the bird's bill. By 1425 the Middle English spelling was pelican, influenced by Old French pelican, and Late Latin pelicānus.

pellagra n. 1811, borrowed from Italian pellagra (pelle skin, from Latin pellis skin, hide + Italian -agra painful seizure, from Latin -agra, ultimately from Greek ágrā hunting, catch, related to agrein to take, seize).

pellet n. 1372–74 pelotte stone or metal ball used as a missile, small ball; earlier as a surname Pilet (1235); also pelet (about 1380); borrowed from Old French pelote, from Vulgar Latin pilotta*, diminutive of Latin pila ball.

pell-mell adv. 1579–80, borrowed from Middle French pele-mele, pelle-melle, from Old French pesle mesle, alteration of mesle-mesle, a reduplication of mesle, imperative of mesler, medler to mix, MEDDLE.

A similar adverb phrase nelly melly appears in Middle English (about 1450, and is recorded as late as 1601); borrowed from Middle French pelle melle. —adj. 1585, from the adverb.

pellucid adj. 1619, borrowed from Latin pellucidus, perlucidus transparent, from pellucēre, perlucēre shine through (per-through + lucēre to shine).

pelt¹ v. throw things at. Probably about 1225 pelten to strike, thrust at; variant of earlier piltēn to thrust, strike (probably before 1200), perhaps developed from Old English pyltan*, from Medieval Latin pultiare*, Latin pultāre to beat, strike, knock.

pelt² n. skin of an animal. 1303 pelt, probably contraction of earlier pelet (1298); borrowed from Old French pelete fine skin, membrane, diminutive of pel skin, from Latin pellis skin, hide.

pelvis n. 1615, borrowing of Latin pēlvīs, Old Latin pēlvīs basin.

pemmican n. 1791 pinmecon; later pemmican (1824); borrowed from Algonquian (Cree) pimikan, from pimikew he makes grease, from pimi grease.

pen¹ n. instrument for writing. Probably about 1280 penne writing instrument; later pen quill pen, feather (1373); borrowed from Old French penne, pene, paine, and directly from Latin penna feather. —v. 1490 pennen, from penne pen, n. —penknife (before 1425), so called because small pocketknives were originally used to sharpen quill pens.

pen² n. enclosure for animals. Probably about 1380 penne, pen; earlier in the place name Yppelpen (1172); developed from Old English (957) pen enclosure or pen, of uncertain origin. —v. Probably before 1200 pennen confine closely, shut in; probably developed from Old English pennian* (attested only in the participle onpennad unpenned, opened) from pen enclosure.

pen³ n. penitentiary. 1884, short for penitentiary; form influenced by *pen*².

penal adj. 1439, borrowed from Middle French peinal, and directly from Medieval Latin penalis, from Latin poenālis pertaining to punishment, from poena punishment; for suffix see -AL¹. —penalize v. 1868, formed from English penal + -ize. —penalty n. Probably 1462 penalté hardship or difficulty; borrowed from Middle French penalté, and directly from Medieval Latin poenalitatem (nominative poenalitas), from Latin poenālis PENAL; for suffix see -TY².

penance n. About 1280 penaunce penance (as a sacrament of the church), penitence; also penance (before 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French penaunce, penance, and directly from the corresponding Old French penance, penëance, penanche, from Latin paenitentia PENITENCE; for suffix see -ANCE.

penchant n. 1672, borrowing of French penchant, from present participle of Old French pencher to incline, from Vulgar Latin pendicare*, from Latin pendere to hang; for suffix see -ANT.

pencil n. About 1325 pinsel artist's paintbrush; pencil (about 1385); borrowed from Old French pincel, peincel paintbrush, alteration of Vulgar Latin pēnicellus*, variant of Latin pēnicillus paintbrush, pencil, literally, little tail, diminutive of pēniculus brush, itself a diminutive of pēnis tail.

The meaning of a writing implement made of graphite is first recorded in 1612, though pencil case for carrying graphite pencils is found in 1552. —v. About 1532, to draw or sketch with a brush; from the noun. The meaning of write or jot down with a lead pencil is first recorded in 1760–72.

pendant n. 1323 pendaunt; hanging ornament. earlier as a surname Pendant (1274); borrowed from Anglo-French pendaunt, pendant hanging, Old French pendant, noun use of present participle of pendre to hang; for suffix see -ANT. Old French pendre developed from Vulgar Latin pendere*, from Latin pendere to hang.

pendent adj. 1392 pendaunt hanging, overhanging; later pendant (about 1412); borrowed from Anglo-French pendaunt, Old French pendant hanging, present participle of pendre to hang; see PENDANT; for suffix see -ENT. The spelling pendent began to appear in English about 1600, influenced by Latin pendentem (nominative pendēns), present participle of pendere to hang.

pending prep. 1642, during, throughout the continuance of, in the process of; formed from French pend- in pendant hanging + English -ing. French pendant is the present participle of pendre to hang or suspend, and both English pending and this particular use of French pendant are patterned on Latin pendente hanging, not decided (as in pendente lite while the suit is pending), ablative case of pendentem (nominative pendēns), present participle of pendere to hang.

The meaning of while awaiting (as in pending completion of the new building) is first recorded in 1838.

Use of the present participle before nouns (as in pending the suit) caused it to be thought of as a preposition. —adj. 1797, remaining undecided, awaiting settlement; formed in the process of the preposition, but functioning as an adjective.

pendulous adj. About 1605, overhanging; later, hanging loosely (1656); borrowed from Latin pendulus hanging down, from pendere to hang; for suffix see -OUS.

pendulum n. 1660, New Latin pendulum, from neuter of Latin pendulus hanging down, from pendere to hang. The New Latin word is perhaps a Latinization of Italian pendolo from pendolo, adj., hanging down, from Latin pendulus.

penetrate v. 1530, borrowed from Latin penetrātus, past participle of penetrāre to put or get into, enter into; related to penitus (earlier penetos*) inmost, and penus innermost part of a temple, store of food; for suffix see -ATE¹. —penetration n. 1605, insight, shrewdness; borrowed perhaps through French pénétration, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin penetrātiōnem (nominative penetrātiō) a penetrating or piercing, from penetrāre penetrate; for suffix see -ATION. An isolated example is recorded in Middle English penetracioun a puncture, wound (probably before 1425), from Old French penetracion, learned borrowing from Latin (penetrātiōnem nominative penetrātiō).

penguin n. 1578, great auk of Newfoundland, later the birds now called penguins (1588); of unknown origin. Connection with Welsh is doubtful, as pen head and gwyn white, referring to the white headland of Newfoundland, where great auks abounded would yield penwyn. The alternate French pingouin is borrowed from English, and Breton pengouin is borrowed from French.

penicillin n. 1929, formed in English from New Latin penicillium (1867) mold from which penicillin was purified + English -in². Penicillium from Latin pēnicillus paintbrush is so called from the resemblance of the cells to small brushes.

peninsula n. 1538 probably borrowed directly from Latin paeninsula (paene almost + insula island). —peninsular adj. 1612, formed, by influence of French péninsulaire, from English peninsula + -ar.

penis n. 1676, borrowed perhaps through French pénis, or directly from Latin pēnis tail, penis.

penitence n. Probably before 1200, penance, contrition, repentance; borrowing of Old French penitence, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin paenitentia repentance, from paenitentem (nominative paenitēns) penitent, present participle of paenitere cause or feel regret; for suffix see -ENCE.

—penitent adj. 1341 penytente, borrowed from Old French penitent, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin paenitentem (nominative paenitēns) penitent; see PENITENCE; for suffix see -ENT. —n. About 1370, from the adjective.

—penitential adj. 1508, borrowed from Medieval Latin penitentialis, from Latin paenitentia penitence + -ālis -al¹.

—penitentiary n. Probably 1421, place of punishment for offenses against the church; borrowed from Medieval Latin penitentiaria, from feminine of penitentiarius, adj., of penance, from Latin paenitentia penitence; for suffix see -ARY. The meaning of a house of correction, is first found in penitentiary house in 1776.

pennant n. 1611, rope hanging from a ship's mast; probably a blend of pennon and pendant, in the nautical sense of a suspended rope.

The meaning of a flag on a warship is first recorded in 1698, and that of a flag for a sports championship, especially in baseball, in 1880, and by 1915 the word is recorded as applying to the championship itself.

pennon n. streamer. About 1380 penoun; later, penon (before 1393), and pennon (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French penon, pignon feather of an arrow, streamer, from penne feather, from Latin penna feather.

penny n. 1125 peni a silver coin equal to 1/2 of a shilling; later peny (1340); penny (before 1425); developed from Old English (before 725) pening, penig penny; also, a pennyweight; cognate with Old Frisian panning, penning coin (of a particular value), Old Saxon penning, Middle Dutch penninc (modern Dutch penning), Old High German pŕenning (modern German Pfennig), Old Icelandic penningr (Swedish penning coin, Danish penge). —peniless adj. About 1330 penyles, formed from Middle English peni, peny + -les -less. —pennyweight n. 1373 peny weyhte, from Old English penega zewiht.

penology n. 1838, formed from pen-, as in penitentiary, after Latin poena punishment, penalty + English -ology.

pensile adj. 1603, borrowed from Latin pēnsilis hanging down, from pēnsūm, past participle of pēndere to hang.

pension n. Before 1376 pencioun reward, payment out of a benefice; also pensioun tax (before 1387); later pension salary (1413); borrowed from Old French pension payment, rent, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pēnsiōnem (nominative pēnsiō) payment, rent, from pēndere pay, weigh; for suffix see -ION.

The meaning of regular payment in consideration of past services is first recorded in 1529. —v. 1702, from the noun. —pensioner n. 1487, borrowed from Anglo-French pensionner, variant of Old French pensionnier, from pension pension + -ier -er¹.

pensive adj. Before 1376 pensif thoughtful, contemplative borrowed from Old French pensif (feminine pensive), from penser to think, from Latin pēnsāre weigh, consider, a frequentative form from pēndere weigh; for suffix see -IVE.

pent adj. Before 1550, variant of penned, past participle of *pen*² confine closely.

penta- a combining form meaning five, as in pentagon, Pentateuch; in chemistry: containing five atoms or other units. Borrowed from Greek penta-, combining form of pēnte five. Also spelled pent- before a vowel, as in pentoxide.

pentagon n. 1570, borrowed from Middle French pentagone, or directly from Late Latin pentagōnum pentagon, from Greek pentágōnon, from neuter of pentágōnos five-angled (pēnte five + gōnlā angle).

pentameter adj. 1546, borrowed from Middle French pentametre, from Latin pentameter, from Greek pentámetros (pēnte five + mētron meter). —n. 1589, probably from the adjective.

Pentateuch n. About 1405 Penteteuke, borrowed from Late Latin pentateuchus, from Greek pentáteuchos (pēnte five + teúchos book; originally, case for the scrolls, implement, something made).

pentathlon n. 1852, borrowing of Greek péntathlon (pēnte five + áthlon, earlier áethlon prize, contest, of uncertain origin).

The Greek pentathlon consisted of jumping, sprinting, discus and spear throwing, and wrestling. The modern pentathlon, (1912) consists of horseback riding, fencing, shooting, swimming, and cross-country running.

Pentecost n. 1 the Seventh Sunday after Easter (before 1121 Pentecosten) 2 the Jewish festival of Shavuoth, fifty days after Passover (about 1384). Middle English Pentecost, developed from Old English (about 1000) Pentecosten, borrowed from Late Latin pentēcostē, from Greek pentēkostē hēmērā fiftieth day, feminine of pentēkostós, from pentēkonta fifty, from pēnte five. —

Pentecostal adj. 1904, formed from Pentecost + -al¹, in allusion to the day of the Pentecost (Acts 2) when "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues."

penthouse n. 1530, an attached building with a sloping roof; also, an awning; alteration by folk etymology (through association with Middle French pente slope, and English house) of earlier Middle English pentis a building attached to another and having a sloping roof (1364 pentys; earlier pendize, about 1300; borrowed through Anglo-French pentiz, and directly as a shortened form of Old French apentis attached building, appendage, from Medieval Latin appendiciūm, from Latin appendere to hang). The meaning of an apartment or small house built on the roof of a tall building is first recorded in 1921.

penult n. 1828, shortening of earlier English penultima (1589); borrowed from Latin paenultima (as in paenultima syllaba next-to-last syllable), feminine adjective (paene almost + ultimus last).

penultimate adj. 1677, formed from earlier penultima the next to the last syllable (of a word or verse) + -ate¹ on the model of proximate.

penumbra n. 1666, the partial shadow outside the complete shadow during an eclipse; New Latin penumbra (Latin paene almost + umbra shadow). The meaning of partial shade or shadow (as in a penumbra of holiness) is first recorded in 1801.

penury n. Before 1400 penurye, borrowed from Latin pēnūria want or need. —penurious adj. 1594, in a condition of penury; borrowed from Medieval Latin penuriosus, from Latin pēnūria penury; for suffix see -OUS. It is also probable that penurious was influenced by French penurieus, Italian penurioso and was a derived form of English penury. The meaning of stingy is first recorded in 1634.

peon n. 1 1609 peon a native foot soldier or footman in India or Ceylon; borrowed from Portuguese peão, and 1613 pion, borrowing of French pion; both Portuguese and French forms from Medieval Latin pedonem foot soldier. 2 1826, an unskilled worker or laborer; borrowing of Mexican Spanish peón, from Spanish, day laborer or pedestrian; originally, foot soldier, from Medieval Latin pedonem foot soldier; see PAWN². —peonage n. 1849, formed from peon (def 2) + -age.

peony n. About 1391, pyony earlier peonie (about 1150); developed from Old English pēonia (about 1000, a direct borrowing of Latin). Reintroduced later (1548); borrowed from Old North French pione, variant of Old French pioine, pionie; and in part directly as a learned borrowing from Latin paeōnia, from Greek paidōnīā, perhaps from Paion physician of the gods (supposedly because of the plant's use in medicine).

people n. About 1280 people the masses, populace; later, persons (probably before 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French people, peple, Old French peupel, pople, poeppe, puple, from Latin populus people. —v. 1450 peuplien, peoplen; from Middle French peupler, popler, poplier, from Old French peuple, n.

pep n. 1912, spirit, energy, vim; shortened from pepper (recorded about 1847 in this figurative sense). Compare GINGER in the figurative sense. —pep up v. 1925, instill spirit or energy in, from the noun. —peppy adj. 1922, full of pep formed from pep + *-y*¹.

pepper n. About 1150 piper; later pepir (probably before 1300), and peper (about 1378); developed from Old English (about 1000) pipor and probably (Anglian) pepor*; borrowing of Latin piper, from Greek pīperi, variant of pēperi, probably from Middle Indic pippari (compare Sanskrit pippalī long pepper). Old English pipor is cognate with other early Germanic borrowings of Latin piper, including Old Frisian piper pepper, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch pēper, Old High German pfeffar, and Old Icelandic piparr. —v. 1581, sprinkle with pepper; from the noun. The sense of sprinkle thickly, dot, is first recorded in 1612, and that of pelt with something, about 1644. —peppermint n. (1696) —peppery adj. (1699) pepsin n. 1844, borrowed from obsolete German Pepsine, (now) Pepsin, from Greek pēpsis digestion; originally, ripening, from pēssein, later pēptein soften or ripen.

peptic adj. 1651, borrowed from Latin pepticus, from Greek peptikós able to digest, from peptós cooked or digested, from pēssein, later pēptein to cook; for suffix see -IC.

per prep. 1588, by means of; later, for each, for every (1598); borrowed from Latin per through, during, by means of, on account of, as in per annum 1601, yearly. per capita 1682, for each person, (literally) by heads. per se 1572, by or in itself, intrinsically. See also per cent.

per- a prefix meaning: 1 through, throughout, completely thoroughly, utterly, very, as in perforate, perennial, pervade. 2 (in chemistry) a the maximum or a large amount of, as in peroxide. b having the indicated element in its highest or a high valence, as in perchloric acid. 3 to do away, away entirely, to destruction (the meaning usually deriving from the combination of the prefix and the verb), as in pervert, perdition, perish. Borrowed from Latin per-, from per, prep., through, during, by means of, on account of.

This prefix appears as par- in several Middle English words borrowed from Old French, as in parfit perfect, and parfourmen perform. Later in Middle English the distinction between par- and per- disappeared as the result of a shift in pronunciation of e before r and with alteration of par- by influence of the Latin form.

perambulate v. 1568, borrowed from Latin perambulāre (per- through + ambulāre to walk, amble); for suffix see -ATE¹. —perambulator n. 1611, traveler; borrowed from Medieval Latin perambulator, from Latin perambulāre traverse, go through; for suffix see -OR². The baby carriage (contracted to pram) is first recorded in 1856.

percale n. 1840, borrowing of French percale, perhaps from Persian pargālah rag. An earlier form, percallas, (1621) referred to a cloth imported from the East Indies.

perceive v. Probably before 1300 percyven to see or observe; also perceiven become aware or conscious of (probably about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French parceif, parceit, and parceivre*, Old French perceivre, percevoir, from Latin percipere obtain, gather, grasp with the mind, (per- thoroughly + capere to grasp, take).

per cent or percent n. 1568 per cent.; shortened form of New Latin per centum by the hundred (compare Italian per cento); Latin per by, through centum hundred. The form in English was perhaps also influenced by Middle French pour cent (for New Latin pro centum, like German Prozent). —percentage n. 1786–90, formed from English percent + -age. —percentile n. 1885, formed from English percent + -ile, patterned on quartile.

perception n. Before 1398 percepcioun act of perceiving; borrowed from Old French perception, and directly from Latin perceptionem (nominative perceptiō) perception, apprehension, a taking, from percipere PERCEIVE; for suffix see -TION. —perceptive adj. 1656, formed from Latin perceptus, past participle of percipere + English -ive.

perch¹ n. bar, etc. on which a bird can rest. 1208–09 perche a unit of linear measure; also, a measuring rod, a pole, bar (about 1300); borrowed from Old French perche, from Latin pertica pole, long staff, measuring rod. —v. About 1380 perchen; borrowed from Old French perchier, from perche, n.

perch² n. kind of fish. Probably before 1300 perche; borrowed from Old French perche, from Latin perca perch (fish), from Greek pérkē, related to perknós dark-colored.

perchance adv. Before 1338 perchaunce; later parchance, perchance (probably before 1350); borrowed from Old French par chance, literally, by chance. Compare Anglo-French par cheanse (1341–42).

percolate v. 1626, borrowed from Latin percolatus, past participle of percolare strain through (per- through + colare to strain); for suffix see -ATE¹; probably also a back formation from earlier percolation. — percolation n. 1613, borrowed from Latin percolationem (nominative percolatio), from percolare; for suffix see -ATION. — percolator n. 1842, formed from English percolate + -or².

percussion n. Probably before 1425, a striking, blow; borrowed from Middle French percussion, and directly from Latin percussio (nominative percussio), from percutere to strike (per- through + quater to strike, shake); for suffix see -SION. The sense in reference to musical instruments is first recorded in English in 1776. — percussive adj. 1793, formed from Latin percussus, past participle of percutere + English -ive.

perdition n. About 1340 perdition consignment to hell, damnation; later perdition destruction, complete ruin (before 1382); borrowed from Old French perdition, and directly from Late Latin perditionem (nominative perditio) ruin, destruction, from Latin perdere do away with, destroy (per- to destruction + -dere to put); for suffix see -TION.

peregrination n. Probably about 1425 peregrination journey; borrowed through Middle French périgrination, or directly from Latin peregrinatio (nominative peregrinatio) a journey, from peregrinari to journey or travel abroad, from peregrinus from foreign parts, foreigner; for suffix see -ATION. — peregrinate v. 1593, borrowed from Latin peregrinari sojourn or travel abroad.

peregrine n. 1555, large falcon shortened from faucon peregrin (about 1395); borrowed from Old French faulcon pelerin, and directly from Latin falcō peregrinus; found earlier in English adjective (1530, not native, foreign), borrowed from Middle French périgrin (feminine périgrine), or directly from Latin peregrinus from foreign parts, foreigner; for suffix see -INE¹.

peremptory adj. 1443 peremptorie (legal use) absolute, allowing no refusal; borrowed through Anglo-French peremptorie, from Middle French peremptoire, and directly from Latin peremptorius decisive, final, deadly, from peremptor destroyer, from perimere destroy, cut off (per- away entirely, to destruction + emere to take); for suffix see -ORY.

perennial adj. 1644, evergreen; formed in English from Latin perennis lasting through the year (per- through + annus year) + English -al¹.

The botanical meaning is first recorded in 1672–73, and the general meaning of enduring, permanent in 1750. — n. 1763, from the adjective.

perfect adj. About 1300 parfit fully formed, faultless; as a surname Parfet (1196); also parfit (before 1325); perfect (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French parfit, parfet, and later directly from Latin perfectus completed, past participle of perficere accomplish, finish, complete (per- completely + facere perform); also probably was influenced in later formation by perfection. — v. Before 1398 parfiten, from the adjective. — perfectible adj. 1635, formed from English perfect, v. + -ible, perhaps influenced by Italian perfettibile (1611). — per- fection n. Probably before 1200 perfectum; borrowed from Latin perfectio (nominative perfectio); later perfectioun (before 1333); borrowed from Old French perfection, from Latin perfectio (nominative perfectio), from perficere accomplish; for suffix see -TION. — perfectionist n. 1657–83, person who believes that moral perfection may be attained; formed from English perfection + -ist.

perfecta n. 1971, borrowed from American Spanish perfecta, shortening of quiniela perfecta perfect quiniela, from Spanish perfecta + American Spanish quiniela a game of chance, a bet in horse racing, formed from Old Spanish quina game of dice, from Latin quini (earlier quencnoi*) five each.

perfidy n. 1592, borrowed from Middle French perfidie, from Latin perfidia falsehood, treachery, from perfidus faithless, in per fidem (deceive) (to deceive) through trustfulness; per through; fidem accusative of fidēs faith; for suffix see -Y³. — perfidious adj. 1598, borrowed from Latin perfidiosus, from perfidia; for suffix see -OUS.

perforate v. 1538, make a hole through; possibly a back formation from earlier perforation, and also borrowed from Latin perforare bore or pierce through (per- through + forare to pierce); for suffix see -ATE¹. — perforation n. Probably before 1425 perforacioun, borrowed from Middle French perforation, or directly from Medieval Latin perforationem (nominative perforatio), from Latin perforare; for suffix see -ATION.

perform v. About 1300 parfourmen to do, go through or render; later performen (1376); borrowed through Anglo-French performir, and directly from Old French parformir, parformer. The Anglo-French form is an alteration (influenced by Old French forme form) of Old French parformir to do, carry out (par- completely + formir to provide). — performance n. About 1500, formed from English perform + -ance. — performer n. 1588–89, formed from English perform + -er¹.

perfume n. 1533, fumes from a burning substance; borrowed from Middle French parfum, from parfumer to scent, from dialectal Italian perfumare or Provençal perfumar (Latin per- through + fumare to smoke). The substance having a sweet smell is first recorded in 1542. — v. 1538, to fumigate; also, give a sweet scent to (1539); borrowed from Middle French parfumer to scent.

perfunctory adj. 1581 (implied in perfunctorily); borrowed from Late Latin perfunctorius careless, negligent; literally, like one who wishes to get through a thing, from perfungi discharge, get through (per- through + fungi perform); for suffix see -ORY.

perfusion n. 1574, borrowed from Middle French perfusion, and from Latin perfusionem (nominative perfusio) a pouring over, from perfundere pour out (per- throughout + fundere pour); for suffix see -SION.

perhaps adv. About 1475 perhappons possibly, by chances; plural form of earlier perhap (before 1464), parhap (probably 1350–75); formed from Middle English per, par by or through, and hap chance.

peri- a prefix used in Greek and quasi-Greek formations, having the meaning: 1 around or surrounding, as in perimeter = measure (meter) around, periscope = instrument (scope) for looking around, peristalsis = contracting or compressing around. 2 near, as in perihelion = near or nearest the sun (Greek hēlios). Borrowed from Greek peri, from the preposition peri around, about.

pericardium n. Probably before 1425 pericardium membranous sac enclosing the heart, from Medieval Latin, from Greek perikárdion membrane around the heart, neuter of perikárdios around the heart (peri- around + kardíā heart).
pericarditis n. 1799, formed from English pericardium + -itis.

pericarp n. 1759, borrowed probably through French péricarpe, and from New Latin pericarpium, from Greek perikárpion pod, husk (peri- around + karpós fruit).

perigee n. 1594, point in the orbit of a planet, comet, etc., at its closest distance to the earth or other celestial body about which it orbits; borrowed from French périgée, from New Latin perigeum, and directly from Late Greek perigeion, neuter of perigeios near the earth, from peri gēs (peri near, and gēs, genitive of gē earth). Compare APOGEE.

perihelion n. 1690, point of an orbit closest to the sun; borrowed from New Latin perihelium with the Greek ending -on. The earlier New Latin perihelium (1666) was coined by Johann Kepler, writing in Latin in 1596, and was formed from Greek peri near + hēliou, genitive of hēlios sun, prompted probably by the pattern of Greek perigeion PERIGEE; compare APHELION.

peril n. Apparently before 1200, chance of harm, danger; borrowed from Old French peril, from Latin periculum an attempt, risk, danger. —perilous adj. About 1300, dangerous, risky; borrowed from Old French perillous, perilleus, from Latin periculōsus dangerous, hazardous, from periculum; for suffix see -OUS.

perimeter n. Probably before 1425 perimetre outer boundary of a surface or figure; borrowed from Latin perimetros, from Greek perimetros circumference (peri- around + mētron measure).

perineum n. Probably before 1425 perineum area of the body between the thighs; borrowed from Medieval Latin perinaeon, Late Latin perinēum, from Greek perinaion, perinaios region of evacuation (peri- near + inān to carry off by evacuation).

period n. 1413 pariede course or extent of time; probably before 1425 periode; borrowed from Middle French periode, and directly from Medieval Latin periodus recurring portion, cycle, from Latin periodus a complete sentence; also, cycle of Grecian games, from Greek periodos rounded sentence, cycle, circuit; literally, a going around (peri- around + hodós a going, way, journey). The dot marking the end of a sentence is first recorded in English in 1609, borrowed from Medieval Latin periodus, and from earlier use in English referring to a full pause made at the end of a sentence (1587). See note under COMMA. —adj. 1905, from the noun. —periodic adj. 1642, shortened form of periodical (1603); formed in English (possibly by influence of French périodique) from Latin periodicus or from Greek periodikós recurring at intervals, from periodos cycle, period + -ical. Periodical a magazine that appears regularly (1798), from the adjective meaning of published at regular intervals (1766); also, writing for such magazines (1716). —periodicity n. 1833, borrowed from French périodicité, formed in French from Latin periodicus + French -ité -ity. —periodic table 1895; so-called because the elements are arranged according to a regular pattern of chemical properties, described earlier by the periodic law (1872, the law that the properties of the elements are periodic functions of their atomic weights, proposed by the Russian chemist Dimitri Mendeleev, 1868, and independently by the German chemist Julius L. Meyer in 1869).

peripatetic n. Before 1450 peripatetik disciple of Aristotle or his teachings; borrowed from Latin peripatēticus, n., disciple of Aristotle, from Greek peripatētikós given to walking about (peri- around + patein to walk); for suffix see -IC. The meaning of a person who wanders about (1617) from Aristotle's custom of walking about, while teaching in the walkways of the Lyceum at Athens. —adj. 1566, having to do with Aristotle's philosophy; later, walking about, traveling (1642, though in the sense of pacing up and down, 1631); from the noun on the model of Greek peripatētikós.

periphery n. Before 1393 periferie atmosphere around the earth; borrowing of Medieval Latin periferia, from Late Latin peripheria circumference, from Greek periphēreia circumference, outer surface, from periphērēs rounded, periphērein carry or move around (peri- around + pherein to carry). The outside boundary of rounded surface is first recorded in English in 1571, and that of any boundary in 1666. —peripheral adj. 1808, formed from English periphery + -al, replacing peripheral (1672–73) and peripherical (1690).

periphrasis n. 1533, borrowed from Latin periphrasis circumlocution, from Greek periphrasis, from periphrázein speak in a roundabout way (peri- around + phrázein to express). —periphrastic adj. 1805, probably borrowed through French périphrastique, and directly from Greek periphrastikós roundabout, from periphrázein; for suffix see -IC; also possibly formed in English on the model of Greek periphrastikós.

periscope n. 1899, formed from English peri- around + -scope instrument for viewing.

perish v. About 1275 perissen die, be destroyed; later perishen, perischen (about 1340); borrowed from Old French periss-, stem of perir, from Latin perire (per- to destruction + ire to go); for suffix see *-ISH*². —perishable adj. Before 1475 perryshaby; later perishable (1611); probably borrowed from Middle French périsable, and later re-formed from English perish + -able.

peristalsis n. 1859, New Latin peristalsis, formed after Greek peristaltikós contracting around + the ending -sis, on the model of English paralysis, paralytic. —peristaltic adj. 1655, borrowed from Greek peristaltikós contracting around, from peristéllein compress, wrap around (peri- around + stéllein send, place); for suffix see -IC.

peristyle n. 1612, borrowed from French péristyle row of columns surrounding a building, learned borrowing from Latin peristylum, from Greek peristýlon, from neuter of peristýlos surrounded with a colonnade (peri- around + stýlos pillar).

peritoneum n. Probably before 1425 peritonei; probably about 1425 peritoneum; borrowed from Late Latin peritonaeum, from Greek peritónaiōn abdominal membrane; literally, part stretched over, neuter of peritónaios stretched over, from perí-tonos stretched around (peri- around + telnein to stretch). —peritonitis n. 1776, New Latin, formed from Late Latin peritonaeum + New Latin -itis.

periwig n. 1579, alteration of perwyke (1529); borrowed from Middle French perruque PERUKE.

periwinkle¹ n. evergreen plant. Before 1475 pervynckle; as a surname Perivencle (1327); diminutive of parvink (probably about 1300); developed from Old English perwince (about 1000); borrowed from Late Latin pervinca, Latin vincapervinca.

periwinkle² n. kind of sea snail. 1530, alteration of Old English pīnewincle (probably influenced by Middle English pervinkle *periwinkle*¹). Old English pīnewincle was formed from pīne- (probably borrowed from Latin pīna mussel, from Greek pīnē, pīna) + -wincle, related to wincel corner.

perjure v. 1453, implied in the past participle perjured, influenced in its formation by perjury but modeled on Middle French parjurée, past participle of parjurer, learned borrowing from Latin perjūrāre swear falsely (per- away entirely + jūrāre to swear). —perjury n. Before 1393 perjurie; borrowed through Anglo-French perjurie, Old French parjuré, from Latin perjūrium false oath, from perjūrāre swear falsely; for suffix see *-y*³.

perk¹ v. raise briskly, act saucily. About 1485, make trim or smart (as a bird trims its plumage), possibly developed from earlier perken to perch, about 1390; from perk, n., probably about 1375, and perhaps borrowed from Old North French perquer to perch, from perque perch, from Latin pertica rod, perch. The meaning of act saucily is first recorded before 1550, and that of raise oneself briskly, before 1591. The phrase perk up become lively, is first recorded before 1656. —perky adj. 1855, formed from English perk + *-y*¹.

perk² n. perquisite. 1869, shortened form and spelling alteration of PERQUISITE.

perk³ v. percolate. 1934, shortened form and spelling alteration of PERCOLATE.

perm n. 1927, shortened from permanent wave (1909, wave in the hair). —v. 1928, from the noun.

permafrost n. 1943, formed from English perma(nent) + frost.

permanent adj. Probably before 1425, continuing without change, lasting; borrowed from Middle French permanent, and directly from Latin permanētem (nominative permanēns) remaining, present participle of permanēre stay to the end (per- through + manēre stay); for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1926, shortened from permanent wave (1909). —permanence n. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Middle French permanence, and directly from Medieval Latin permanētia, from Latin permanēns present participle; for suffix see -ENCE.

permeate v. 1656, formed in English, probably by influence of permeable, from Latin permeātus, past participle of permeāre pass through (per- through + meāre to pass) + English suffix *-ate*¹. —permeable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin permeābilis passable, from Latin permeāre; for suffix see -ABLE.

permission n. About 1410, permissioun a permitting, consent; borrowed from Middle French permission, from Latin permissiōnem (nominative permissiō), from permittere to PERMIT; for suffix see -SION. —permissible adj. Probably before 1430, borrowed from Middle French permissible, and directly from Medieval Latin permissibilis allowable, from Latin permissus, past participle of permittere to PERMIT; for suffix see -IBLE. —permissive adj. Probably before 1475, allowed, tolerated; borrowed from Middle French permissif (feminine permissive), from Old French, from Latin permittere to PERMIT; for suffix see -IVE.

permit v. 1429 permytten resign; later allow (about 1475); borrowed from Middle French permettre, and from Latin permittere give up, allow (per- through + mittere let go, send). —n. 1714, from the verb.

permutation n. Before 1376 permutacioun alteration or exchange; borrowed from Old French permutation, learned borrowing from Latin permutātiōnem (nominative permutātiō), from permutāre change thoroughly, exchange (per- thoroughly + mutāre to change); for suffix see -ATION. The mathematical meaning of variation of order or arrangement, is first recorded in 1570.

pernicious adj. Probably before 1425, harmful or fatal; borrowed from Middle French pernicios, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin perniciōsus destructive, from perniciēs destruction (per- completely + neāre to kill); for suffix see -IOUS.

pernickety adj. 1808–18 pernickitie, an extended form of Scottish pernickie, of uncertain origin. Compare PER-SNICKETY.

peroration n. 1447 peroracyoun; borrowed from Latin perōrātiōnem (nominative perōrātiō) the ending of a speech or argument of a case, from perōrāre argue a case to the end, bring a speech to a close (per- to the end, + ōrāre speak or plead); for suffix see -ATION. —perorate v. 1603, probably a back formation from peroration, and borrowed from Latin perōrātum, past participle of perōrāre; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

peroxide n. 1804, formed from English per- large amount + oxide.

perpendicular adj. About 1475 perpendiculere, adjective use of earlier adverb perpendicular (1391); borrowed from Old French perpendicular, learned borrowing from Latin perpendicularis vertical, as a plumb line, from perpendicularum plumb line, from perpendere balance carefully (per- thoroughly + pendere to weigh); for suffix see -AR. —n. 1571, from the adjective.

perpetrate v. 1547, developed from earlier perpetrat, adj., perpetrated, committed (1472–73); borrowed from Latin perpetrātus, past participle of perpetrāre perform (per- completely + patrāre carry out; originally, bring into existence, from pater father); for suffix see -ATE¹. — perpetrator n. 1570, borrowed from Late Latin perpetrator, from Latin perpetrāre; for suffix see -OR².

perpetual adj. About 1340 perpetuel; probably before 1350 perpetual; borrowed from Old French perpetuel, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin perpetuālis universal (in Medieval Latin, permanent), from perpetuus continuous, constant, universal, from perpetis, genitive of perpes lasting (per- through + root of petere to seek, go to, aim at); for suffix see -AL¹. — perpetuate v. 1530, perhaps a back formation from perpetuation or as a functional shift of perpetuate, adj., made perpetual (1503–04); borrowed from Latin perpetuātus, past participle of perpetuāre make continuous, from perpetuus; for suffix see -ATE¹. — perpetuation n. 1395 perpetuacioun; borrowed from Medieval Latin perpetuationem (nominative perpetuatio) continuation, from Latin perpetuāre; for suffix see -ATION. — perpetuity n. About 1380 perpetuyte; borrowed from Old French perpetuité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin perpetuitatem (nominative perpetuitas) continuity, from perpetuus continuous; for suffix see -ITY.

perplex v. 1593, probably a back formation from perplexed, perplexid, participial adjective, confused (1477), from perplex, adj., confused or puzzled (before 1425); borrowed from Middle French perplexe, and directly from Latin perplexus confused or involved (per- completely + plexus entangled, from past participle of plexere to twine). — perplexity n. Probably 1348 perplexite, borrowed from Old French perplexité, from Late Latin perplexitatem (nominative perplexitas) obscurity, perplexity, from Latin perplexus; for suffix see -ITY.

perquisite n. 1443 perquysite property acquired other than by inheritance; borrowed from Medieval Latin perquisitum thing gained or profit, from Latin perquisitum thing sought after, from neuter past participle of perquirere to seek, ask for (per- thoroughly + quaerere to seek). The meaning of any fee or profit received for work besides the regular wages is first recorded in 1565.

persecute v. 1450 persecuten pursue in order to harm, torment, oppress; earlier confused with prosecuten (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French persécuteur, pursue, torment, start a legal action; and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin persecūtus, past participle of persequi pursue, start a legal action (per- through + sequi follow); also, probably a back formation from persecution. — persecution n. About 1340 persecucioun; borrowed from Old French persecucion, persecution, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin persecutiōnem (nominative persecutiō) a following close after, chase, the start of a legal action, from persequi; for suffix see -TION. — persecutor n. Probably about 1425 persecutor; borrowed from Middle French persécuteur; for suffix see -OR², and later formed in English from persecute + -ER¹.

persevere v. About 1380, implied in the gerund of perseveren continue steadfastly, persist; borrowed from Old French perseverer, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin persevērāre continue steadfastly, persist, abide by strictly, from persevērus very strict or earnest (per- very + sevērus strict, earnest).

Usually pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, as in pəsev'ər until the late 1600's, this stress pattern continues in modern English perseverate and perseveration. — perseverance n. 1340, borrowed from Old French perseverance, and directly from Latin persevērantia (nominative persevērāns) steadfastness, persistence, present participle of persevērāre persevere; for suffix see -ANCE. — perseverate v. 1915, back formation in English from perseveration; for suffix see -ATE¹. — perseveration n. Before 1415 (and not recorded after 1658), persevering, perseverance; borrowed from Old French perseveracion, and directly from Latin persevēratiōnem (nominative persevēratiō), from persevērāre; but later re-formed in English from persevere + -ation (1901).

persiflage n. 1757, borrowing of French persiflage, from persifler to banter, formed from Latin per- through + French siffler to whistle, hiss, from Old French, from Latin sifilāre*, dialect variant of sibilāre to hiss; for suffix see -AGE.

persimmon n. 1612, borrowed from Algonquian (Powhatan) pasimenan fruit dried artificially, from pasimeneu he dries fruit.

persist v. 1538, borrowed from Middle French persister, from Latin persistere continue steadfastly (per- thoroughly + sistere come to stand, from stāre to stand). — persistence n. 1546, borrowed from Middle French persistance (persistere persist + -ance, variant of -ence). — persistent adj. 1826, borrowed from Latin persistens (nominative persistens), present participle of persistere persist; for suffix see -ENT.

persnickety adj. 1905, alteration of PERNICKETY.

person n. Probably before 1200 persone an individual; also, role or character; borrowed from Old French persone, persoune human being, and directly from Latin persōna human being; originally, character in a drama, mask, possibly borrowed from Etruscan phersu mask. — personable adj. Probably 1435, attractive, presentable; perhaps formed from Middle English persone + -able, and borrowed from Middle French personable, from Old French personable, persounable, from Latin persōna; for suffix see -ABLE. — personage n. About 1460, borrowed from Middle French personage, from Old French personage, persounage church dignitary from Latin persōna; for suffix see -AGE.

persona n. 1917, a person's outward or social personality; later, a literary character representing the voice of the author (1958); borrowed from Latin persōna PERSON.

personal adj. Before 1387, of a person, individual, private; borrowed from Old French personel, personal, from Latin persōnālis, from persōna PERSON; for suffix see -AL¹. — personality n. Before 1425, fact of being a person; borrowed from Middle French personalité, and directly from Medieval Latin personalitatem (nominative personalitas) character, from Latin persōnālis personal; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of a distinctive character is first recorded in 1795.

personify v. 1727–41, represent as a person; later, embody or exemplify (1803); borrowed from French personnifier, from Old French persone, personne PERSON + -fier -FY. —personification n. 1755, act of personifying; from English personify, on the pattern of pacify, pacification; for suffix see -ATION.

personnel n. 1857; borrowed from French personnel (as a contrastive term to matériel), a noun use of personnel, adj., personal, from Old French personel PERSONAL.

perspective n. Before 1387, optics, borrowed from Old French perspective, and directly from Medieval Latin perspectiva ars science of optics; perspectiva, feminine of perspectivus of sight, optical, from Latin perspect-, past participle stem of perspicere inspect, look through (per- through + specere look at); for suffix see -IVE.

The meaning of the appearance of distance or depth influenced by Italian prospettiva, from prospetto view, from Latin prospēctus PROSPECT; first recorded in English in 1598.

The sense of a view of things in the right relation (as in a lack of perspective) is first recorded in 1605 and that of a mental outlook, in 1762.

perspicacious adj. 1616–61, formed in English as an adjective to perspicacity, perhaps by influence of French perspicace, from Latin perspicāx (genitive perspicācis) sharp-sighted, penetrating, acute, from perspicere look through; for suffix see -OUS. —perspicacity n. 1548, keen judgment, discernment; borrowed from Middle French perspicacité, and directly from Late Latin perspicacitas sharp-sightedness, discernment, from Latin perspicāx sharp-sighted; for suffix see -ITY.

perspicuous adj. 1584, clear-sighted; borrowed from Latin perspicuus transparent, evident, from perspicere look through; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of clear, lucid is first recorded in English in 1586, but the sense of lucidity appears perspicuity by 1546.

perspire v. 1646, to evaporate, exhale; probably a back formation from earlier perspiration, and borrowed from French perspérer, from Latin perspirāre blow or breathe constantly (per- through + spirāre to breathe, blow). The meaning “to sweat,” developed from perspiration, appears in 1725. —perspiration n. 1611, a breathing out or through; later, sweating (1626); borrowed from French perspiration, from perspérer perspire; for suffix see -ATION.

persuade v. 1513, induce (a person) to believe or do something; borrowed from Middle French persuader, and directly from Latin persuādere (per- strongly + suādere to urge, persuade); also probably a back formation from persuasion, modeled on the Latin or French verb form. —persuasion n. About 1380, borrowed through Old French persuasion, and directly from Latin persuāsiōnem (nominative persuāsiō), from persuādere persuade; for suffix see -SION. —persuasive adj. 1589, borrowed from Middle French persuasif (feminine persuasive), from Medieval Latin persuasivus, from Latin persuādere persuade; for suffix see -IVE; also formed in English from persuas(ion) + -ive. By the late 1600's persuasive replaced persuasive (before 1400).

pert adj. About 1250, evident or unconcealed, shortened from apert open or frank; borrowed from Old French apert, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin apertus, past participle of aperire to open. The sense of saucy or bold is first recorded in English about 1390.

pertain v. Before 1325 portenen attach legally; later pertenen, partenen belong, associated with (probably before 1350); borrowed from Old French pertenir, partenir, and directly from Latin pertinēre to reach, stretch, relate (per- through + tenēre to hold).

pertinacious adj. 1626, formed from English pertinacy + -ous, from Latin pertinācia stubbornness, from pertināx (genitive pertinācis) very firm (per- very + tenāx TENACIOUS). —pertinacity n. 1504, borrowed from Middle French pertinacité, formed in Old French from pertinace obstinate, from Latin pertinācem (nominative pertināx) very firm, tenacious + -ité -ity. The older form pertinacy (recorded about 1390) was replaced by pertinacy in the 1700's.

pertinent adj. About 1390 suitable, appropriate; also, relevant, pertaining, apt (probably about 1408); borrowed from Old French partenant, and directly from Latin pertinentem (nominative pertinēns) pertaining, present participle of pertinēre to relate, concern, PERTAIN; for suffix see -ENT. —pertinence n. 1659, probably formed from English pertinent + -ence, as a noun to the earlier pertinent.

perturb v. About 1385 perturben disturb greatly; probably borrowed from Old French perturber, and directly from Latin perturbāre confuse, disorder, disturb (per- thoroughly + turbāre disturb, confuse, from turba turmoil, crowd). —perturbation n. About 1380 perturbacion, perturbacioun; borrowed from Old French perturbacion, and directly from Latin perturbātiōnem (nominative perturbātiō) confusion, from perturbāre; for suffix see -ATION.

peruke n. 1548, natural head of hair; borrowed from Middle French peruque, from Italian perucca head of hair, wig, of uncertain origin. The meaning of false hair, wig is first recorded in 1606.

peruse v. 1479 perusen examine, go through, use up; formed from Middle English per- completely or thoroughly + use to use. The meaning of read through carefully is first recorded in 1532 and the sense of read through quickly or casually probably as early as the 1800's. —perusal n. About 1600, formed from English peruse + *-al*².

pervade v. 1653, borrowed from Latin pervādere spread or go through (per- through + vādere go). —pervasive adj. About 1750, formed from Latin pervāsus (past participle of pervādere pervade) + English -ive.

perverse adj. 1369 pervers, borrowed from Old French pervers, perverse, parvers, and directly from Latin perversus turned away from what is right, contrary, askew, past participle of pervertēre to corrupt; see PERVERT. —perversity n. 1528, borrowed from Middle French perversité, from Latin perversitatem (nominative perversitās), perverseness from perversus, past participle of pervertēre; for suffix see -ITY.

pervert v. About 1380 perverten overthrow, lead or turn from what is right, misconstrue, misapply; borrowed from Old French pervertir, parvertir, and directly from Latin pervertere corrupt, turn the wrong way, turn about (per- away + vertere to turn). —n. 1661, corrupted person, apostate, from the verb. —perversion n. Before 1387, act or condition of perverting; borrowed from Old French perversion, and directly from Latin perversionem (nominative perversio) a turning about, from pervertere to pervert; for suffix see -SION.

pervious adj. Before 1614, borrowed from Latin pervius letting things through (per- through + via road); for suffix see -OUS.

pesky adj. 1775, perhaps a dialectal formation from pest + *-y*¹.

pessary n. 1392 pessarie a suppository inserted in an aperture of the body; borrowed from Late Latin pessarium, from Greek pessáron medicated tampon of wool or lint, diminutive of pessós pessary; earlier, oval stone used in games.

pessimism n. 1794, borrowed from French pessimisme, formed from Latin pessimus worst; originally, bottom-most + French -isme -ism; patterned on French optimisme optimism; for suffix see -ISM. —pessimist n. 1836, borrowed from French pessimiste, from pessimisme, on the pattern of optimisme, optimiste; for suffix see -IST. —pessimistic adj. 1868, formed from English pessimist + -ic.

pest n. 1568, plague or pestilence; borrowed from Middle French peste, from Latin pestis any deadly contagious disease, plague, pestilence. Appearance of the form pest in English was probably also influenced by earlier pestilence.

pester v. About 1536, to obstruct or encumber; probably shortened from Middle French empestrer, empaistrier place in an embarrassing situation, from Vulgar Latin impāstōriāre* to hobble (an animal); formed from Latin im- in + Medieval Latin pastoria (chorde) rope to hobble an animal, noun use of Latin pāstōria, feminine of pāstōrius of a herdsman, from pāstor herdsman, from pāscere to graze. The sense of annoy, trouble, is first recorded in 1586, influenced by pest.

pesticide n. 1939, formed from English pest + connective -i- + *-cide*¹, as in insecticide.

pestiferous adj. Probably before 1449 pestiferus, probably originally borrowed from Latin pestiferus that brings plague or destruction, variant of pestifer bringing plague (pestis plague + -fer bearing, from ferre carry). The spelling pestiferous was reformed from Latin pestifer + English -ous, and perhaps Latin pestis + English -ferous.

pestilence n. About 1303 pestelens; later pestilence (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French pestilence, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pestilentia plague, from pestilentem (nominative pestilēns) infected, unwholesome, noxious, from pestis any deadly disease, plague; for suffix see -ENCE. —pestilent adj. Before 1398, borrowed possibly through Old French pestilent, from Late Latin pestilentus infected, tending to produce infection, and directly from Latin pestilentem (nominative pestilēns) infected; for suffix see -ENT.

pestle n. 1349 pestell tool for pounding or crushing; earlier pestel leg of pig (1326), and as a surname Pestel (about 1280); borrowed from Old French pestel, from Latin pistillum pounder or pestle, related to pinsere to pound.

pet¹ n. animal. 1508, indulged child; later, animal kept as a favorite (1539); originally a Scottish and Northern English dialectal usage; probably associated with petty, Middle English pety small, but ultimately of unknown origin. —adj. 1584, from the noun. —v. 1629, treat as a pet, from the noun. The sense of to stroke is found in 1818.

pet² n. peevishness. 1590, in take the pet to take offence, become peevish; of uncertain origin. Use in phrase in a pet, is found as early as 1647.

petal n. 1726 (but found as petala in an English context, 1704); borrowed from New Latin petalum a petal (1649), from Greek petalon leaf, thin plate, originally pétalos outspread, broad, flat.

petard n. 1598, explosive device formerly used to breach defenses; borrowed from French pétard, from Middle French péter break wind, from Old French pet a breaking of wind, from Latin pēditum, from neuter past participle of pēdere to break wind.

The expression hoist with (or on) one's own petard (to be) blown up by one's own bomb, caught in one's own trap, is found in 1605.

peter v. 1846, in peter out, become exhausted, diminish gradually, give out (mining slang); earlier to peter cease, stop (1812); of uncertain origin.

petiole n. 1753, borrowed from French pétiole, from New Latin petiolus, special use of Latin petiolus, misspelling of peciolus stalk, stem; literally, little foot, contracted from pediculus*, diminutive of pediculus foot stalk.

petit adj. About 1378, petty, minor, as a proper name Petit (1086); borrowed from Old French petit small, probably derived from the Gallo-Romance stem pitt- little, related to the stem pit-, pis- of Late Latin pitinnus, pisinnus small, of uncertain origin; replaced by petty, as in petty jury, but is retained in such established forms as petit bourgeois (1853), petit four (1884), and petit mal (1842).

petite adj. 1784, earlier in French phrases used in English, such as petite pièce minor writing of an author (1712); borrowing of French petite, feminine of petit little, from Old French; see PETIT.

petit four n. 1884, borrowing of French petit four little oven (petit little, from Old French; four oven, from Latin furnus).

petition n. Before 1338 peticioun, peticion; borrowed from Old French peticion, and directly from Latin petitiōnem (nominative petitiō) a request, solicitation, from petere to require, seek; for suffix see -TION. —v. 1607, from the noun.

petrel n. 1703, earlier with the spelling pittrel (1676); perhaps a formation in English on analogy with pickrel and cockrel representing a diminutive form of Peter in Latin, such as Petrellus*, from Late Latin Petrus Peter.

Petri dish or petri dish n. 1892, named after the German bacteriologist Julius Petri, who devised such a dish.

petrify v. 1594, turn into stone; found in earlier petrified hardened, solidified (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French pétrifier (as if a borrowing from Latin petrificāre* to make or become stone) from Latin petra rock + Middle French -fier -fy. The sense of paralyze with fear or surprise, is first recorded in 1771. — petrification n. 1611, borrowed from French pétrification, from Middle French pétrifier petrify, on the model of such pairs as édifier, édification; for suffix see -ATION. Also found in Middle English petrifacioun (probably before 1425), formed after Medieval Latin petrifactionem* (accusative of petrificatio*), a nominative form to Latin petrificatiōnem*.

petro- a combining form meaning: 1 stone, rock, rocks, as in petrology. 2 petroleum, as in petrochemical. 3 of or having to do with petroleum production, as in petropower, petrodollar. Borrowed from Greek petro-, combining form of pétrā rock.

petrochemical n. 1942, formed from English petro- petroleum + chemical.

petrography n. 1858, formed from English petro- rock + -graphy, after French pétrographie.

petrol n. 1895, gasoline; earlier, petroleum (1596); borrowed from Middle French petrole petroleum, from Old French, from Medieval Latin petroleum PETROLEUM.

petrolatum n. 1887, New Latin for petroleum jelly or vaseline, formed from petroleum (from Medieval Latin) + -atum -ate¹.

petroleum n. Probably before 1425, borrowing of Medieval Latin petroleum (from Latin petra rock + Latin oleum OIL).

petrology n. 1876, formed from English petro- + -logy. The earlier spelling petralogy (1811) was formed from Greek pétrā rock + English -logy.

petticoat n. Before 1420 petycote padded coat worn under armor; later, short coat worn by men (1439), formed from pety small, PETTY + cote COAT.

By 1464 the word was applied to a garment worn by women and young children, perhaps originally a kind of tunic or chemise but usually a skirt hanging from the waist.

petty adj. Probably before 1387 pety small, minor; earlier found in petti-wacche petty watch (1372, an old name of coast guards), and in the surname Petipas (1191); borrowed from peti, variant of Old French petit small, PETIT.

petulant adj. 1599, immodest, wanton, saucy; borrowed through Middle French petulant, or directly from Latin petulantem (nominative petulāns) wanton, forward, insolent, from the root of petere rush at, seek also probably a back formation formed as an adjective to petulancy, n. (1559). The meaning of peevish, irritable is first recorded in 1775. — petulance n. 1610, immodesty, wanton or saucy behavior; borrowed from French petulance, from Latin petulantia, from petulantem (nominative petulāns) wanton, insolent. The meaning of peevishness is first recorded in English 1784. Petulance is a replacement of earlier petulancy.

petunia n. 1825, New Latin Petunia, from French petun tobacco, from Middle French, from Portuguese petum, from Guarani (Paraguay) petĩ (the ĩ represents a nasal sound); so called from its close botanical affinity to the tobacco plant.

pew n. Probably before 1387 puwe a raised bench in a church; later pewe (1406); borrowed from Old French puie, puy balcony or elevation, from Latin podia, plural of podium balcony; see PODIUM.

pewee or peewee n. 1796, kind of small American bird; its name is imitative of its cry.

pewit n. Before 1529, crested plover; its name is imitative of its cry.

pewter n. 1310 peuter, later pewter (1393); borrowed from Old French peautre, peaultre, peutre (compare Provençal peltre and Italian pelto), from Vulgar Latin peltrum* pewter, of uncertain origin.

peyote n. 1849, a stimulant drug prepared from mescal; later, the mescal or any one of several other cacti (1885); borrowing of Mexican Spanish peyote, from Nahuatl peyotl.

pH 1909, symbol for the acidity or alkalinity of a solution; formed from P, the initial letter of German Potenz potency, power + H, symbol for the hydrogen ion in relative concentration.

phage n. 1926, virus that destroys various bacteria, shortened from earlier bacteriophage (1921); borrowed from French bactériophage (bactério- + Greek phagēin to eat).

phagocyte n. 1884, borrowed from German (plural) Phagocyten, formed in German from Greek phagēin to eat + kýtos hollow container in allusion to cells of the body.

-phagous a combining form meaning eating, as in anthropophagous man-eating, saprophagous living on decaying matter. Adapted from Greek -phagos, from phagēin to eat.

phalanx n. 1553, an ancient Greek battle formation in close ranks; borrowing of Latin phalanx, or directly from Greek phálanx (genitive phálangos) line of battle, finger or toe bone; originally, trunk, leg.

The earlier form in English was phalange (before 1460), from Latin phalangem (nominative phalanx), from Greek phálanx.

phallus n. 1613, image of the phallus, symbolizing the generative power in nature; borrowed from Latin phallus, from Greek phállōs penis, figure of the penis used in the cult of Dionysus; related to phállē whale. — phallic adj. 1789, borrowed from Greek phallikós, from phállōs phallus; for suffix see -IC.

phantasm n. 1614, spelling alteration of earlier phantasma (1598) and fantesme (before 1250); borrowed from Old French fantesme, fantesme, and directly from Latin phantasma an apparition, specter, from Greek phántasma image, phantom, from phántazein make visible, from pháinein to show.

phantasmagoria n. 1802 Phantasmagoria, the name of an exhibition of optical illusions by means of the magic lantern, held in London in 1802; alteration (with Latinized ending) of French phantasmagorie, formed from Greek phántasma image + agorá assembly + French -ie -y³.

phantom n. 1590 phantome, spelling alteration (influenced by Latin phantasma) of earlier fantom (about 1340) ghost, unreal fancy; earlier fantisme (before 1250); borrowed from Old French fantisme, fantasme, from Vulgar Latin fantauma*, from fantagma*, alteration of Latin phantasma PHANTASM.

Pharisee n. Probably before 1200 phariseu; also fariseu (probably about 1200), and later faresee (about 1384); in part developed from Old English (about 897) fariseus, and in part borrowed from Old French pharise and directly from Late Latin Pharīsaicus, from Greek Pharīsaíos, from Aramaic pērīshayyā, emphatic plural of pērīsh separated, separatist, corresponding to Hebrew pārūsh, from pārash he separated.

pharmaceutical adj. 1648, formed in English from Late Latin pharmaceuticus of drugs (from Greek pharmakeutikós, from pharmakéus preparer of drugs) + English -al. — pharmaceutics n. 1541 pharmaceutic; later with *-s*¹ (1670), from Late Latin pharmaceuticus of drugs; for suffix see -ICS and *-s*¹.

pharmacology n. 1721, borrowed from New Latin pharmacologia (1683); formed from Greek phármakon drug, poison; + -logiā -logy. — pharmacologist n. Before 1728; formed from English pharmacology + -ist.

pharmacopoeia or pharmacopeia n. 1621, New Latin pharmacopoeia, from Greek pharmakopoiā the art of preparing drugs, from pharmakopoiós, adj., preparing drugs, from pharmakopoiēn prepare drugs, dyes, etc. (phármakon drug, poison + poiēn to make).

pharmacy n. About 1385 fermacie a drug, the use of drugs; borrowed from Old French farmacie, from Medieval Latin pharmacia, from Greek pharmakēiā use of drugs or medicines, from pharmakéus preparer of drugs, from phármakon drug, poison, charm, spell; for suffix see *-Y*³.

The preparation of drugs and medicines is first recorded in English in 1651, and that of a drugstore in 1833. — pharmacist n. 1834, formed from English pharmacy + -ist.

pharynx n. 1693, New Latin, from Greek phárynx (genitive pháryngos) pharynx, windpipe, throat. Greek phárynx was altered (under influence of lárinx) from earlier pháryx (genitive phárygos) and is related to pháranx chasm, cleft. — pharyngeal adj. 1835, formed from New Latin pharyngem with use of the suffix -al for New Latin -em. — pharyngeal adj. 1828, formed from New Latin pharyngeus with use of the suffix -al for New Latin -us.

phase n. 1812, phase of the moon; formed as a singular of New Latin phases, plural of phasis, perhaps also by influence of French phase. New Latin phasis is from Greek phásis appearance, from phainein to show. General application to one stage or aspect of a thing is first recorded in 1841. — v. 1938, from the noun.

pheasant n. 1299 fesaund; earlier as a surname Faisant (1166); borrowed from Anglo-French fesaunt, Old French fesan, faisan, fesant, from Latin phāsiānus, from Greek phāsiānós a pheasant; literally, Phasian bird, from Phásis, river on the Black Sea, where these birds were said to have been numerous. The spelling with ph appeared before 1393.

phen- or pheno- a combining form indicating a benzene derivative, as in phenol. Borrowed from French phén-, from Greek phainein to bring light (because substances were by-products of illuminating gas).

phenol n. 1852, formed from English phen- + *-ol*¹.

phenomenon n. 1625, fact or occurrence, manifestation; borrowed from Latin phaenomenon, from Greek phainómenon that which appears or is seen, noun use of neuter present participle of phainesthai appear. The meaning of an extraordinary occurrence, prodigy, is first recorded in 1771. — phenomenal adj. 1825, of a phenomenon, formed from English phenomenon + *-al*¹. The meaning of extraordinary is first recorded in 1850.

phenotype n. 1911, observable make-up of an organism, as distinguished from the genotype; borrowed from German Phänotypus, formed from Greek phainein to show + German Typus type.

phenyl n. 1850, borrowed from French phényle (phène benzene + -yle -yl).

pheromone n. 1959, formed from English phero-, from Greek phérein to carry + (hor)mone.

phial n. Probably about 1380 fyole; borrowed from Old French firole, probably from Medieval Latin phiola, variant of Latin phiala, from Greek phidē broad flat drinking vessel. The spelling phial is found in Middle English before 1398.

phil- form of philo-, before vowels and before h or l, as in philately, philharmonic, phillumenist.

— phil form of -phile, as in acidophil, Francophil.

philander v. 1737 (implied in philandering), to make love in a trifling manner, flirt; literally, to act the Philander, from Philander, the proper name of a lover in stories, drama, and poetry; borrowed from the Greek adjective philandros loving or fond of men (perhaps misunderstood later as meaning a loving man); formed from phil- loving + andr-, stem of anēr man. — philanderer n. 1841, formed from English philander + *-er*¹.

philanthropy n. 1623, love of mankind; earlier philanthropia (1608); borrowed perhaps from French philanthropie, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin philanthrōpia, and in earliest use directly from Greek philanthrōpiā humanity, benevolence, from philánthrōpos, adj., loving mankind (phil- loving + ánthrōpos mankind); for suffix see *-Y*³. The meaning of a philanthropic action or agency is first recorded in 1884. — philanthropic adj. 1789, (implied earlier in philanthropically, 1787); borrowed from French philanthropique, from Greek philánthrōpos; for suffix see -IC. — philanthropist n.

1730–36, lover of mankind; formed from English philanthropy + -ist.

philately n. 1865, borrowed from French philatélie, formed from French phil- loving + Greek atéleia exemption from tax (because a postage stamp shows prepayment of postal tax), from atéles free from tax (a- without + télos tax); for suffix see -Y³. —philatelist n. 1865, borrowed from French philatelist (philatélie philately + -iste -ist).

-phile a combining form meaning loving, admiring, or having a strong affinity for, or someone or something that loves, admires, or has a strong affinity, as in acidophile, Francophile. Borrowed through French and Latin from Greek -philos, especially in personal names, philos loving, dear, from phileîn to love.

philharmonic adj. 1813, borrowed from French philharmonique, from Italian filarmónico, literally, loving harmony, from Greek philos loving + tà harmoniká theory of harmony or music, from neuter plural of harmonikós HARMONIC.

Philharmonic came into English as part of the name of musical societies (the Philharmonic Society founded in London in 1813); hence the first Philharmonic orchestra (1895) was the Society's orchestra. Later many symphony orchestras used Philharmonic (e.g. the Berlin and the New York Philharmonic).

-philia a combining form meaning admiration, fondness, or affinity for, or tendency toward, as in Anglophilia, hemophilia, necrophilia. New Latin, from Greek philía affection, from philos loving.

philippic n. 1592 Philippique; borrowing of Middle French philippique, learned borrowing from Latin ōratiōnēs Philippicae speeches made by Cicero against Mark Antony in 44 and 43 B.C., named after speeches made by Demosthenes in 351, 344, and 341 B.C. attacking the growing power of Philip II of Macedon. Latin ōratiōnēs Philippicae is a translation of Greek Philippikoi logoi, from masculine plural of Philippikós of Philip, from Philippos Philip.

philistine n. 1827 Philistine, translation of German Philister enemy of God's word, applied by German university students to townsmen or outsiders; hence, any uncultured person, from Late Latin Philistaenus of or from Philistaea land of the Philistines, from Greek Philistia, from Hebrew Pēlesheth. An earlier sense of a person regarded as hostile to those in his control, is found in 1600.

English Philistine one of an ancient people of southwestern Palestine (1325), is borrowed from Late Latin Philistinī, plural from Greek Philistinoi, from Hebrew Pēlishim people of Pēlesheth Philistia. —adj. 1831, from the noun.

philo- a combining form meaning loving or having admiration or fondness for, as in philology, philosophy. Borrowed from Greek philo-, combining form from philos dear or friend and phileîn to love.

philodendron n. 1877, New Latin philodendron the genus name, from Greek philódendron, neuter of philódendros loving trees (philo- loving + déndron tree, because it clings to trees).

philology n. About 1395 philologie the personification of knowledge pertaining to language and literature; borrowed from Latin philologia. The sense of the study of learning and literature (1614) is borrowed from French philologie, learned borrowing from Latin philologia love of learning or literature, from Greek philología love of discussion, learning, and literature, from philólogos fond of discussion studious of words (philo- loving + lógos word, speech); for suffix see -Y³. Philology as the study or science of language (1716) is alluded to earlier in philologer a linguistic scholar (1660), philological (1659), and philologue a linguist (1594). —philologist n. 1648, literary person, classical scholar; formed from English philology + -ist. The meaning of a student of language, (1716), replaced philologer and philologue.

philosophy n. About 1300 philosofie knowledge, body of knowledge; later philosophye (before 1333); borrowed from Old French filosofie and later philosophie; also borrowed directly from Latin philosophia, and from Greek philosophía love or pursuit of knowledge, philosophy (philo- loving + sophía knowledge, wisdom, from sophós wise, learned); for suffix see -Y³. —philosopher n. About 1330 philosofre learned man; later philosophre (about 1378); in part borrowed from Old French filosofe, philosophre; also borrowed directly from Latin philosophus, and from Greek philósophos lover of wisdom, philosopher (philo- lover of + sophía knowledge, wisdom); for suffix see -ER¹; also part developed from Old English philosophre (before 899); borrowed from Latin philosophus. —philosophic adj. About 1475 philosophik of philosophy or philosophers; borrowed from Middle French philosophique; also borrowed directly from Latin philosophicus, and from Greek philosophikós, from philosophía philosophy; for suffix see -IC. —philosophical adj. About 1385, formed from Latin philosophicus of philosophers or philosophy + Middle English -al -al¹. —philosophize v. 1594, formed from English philosophy + -ize.

philter or philtre n. Probably 1587, borrowing of Middle French philtre, learned borrowing from Latin philtrum, from Greek phíltron love-charm, from phileîn to love, from philos loving; for suffix see -ER¹.

phlebitis n. 1822–34, New Latin, formed from Greek phléps (genitive phlebós) vein + New Latin -itis inflammation.

phlebotomy n. Before 1400 flebotomie a letting of blood; borrowed from Old French flebotomie, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin phlebotomia, from Greek phlebotomía (phléps, genitive phlebós vein + -tomía a cutting, from témnein to cut) for suffix see -Y³.

phlegm n. 1373 fleume cold and moist humor of the body (also, possibly as an error feme, about 1250); borrowed from Old French fleume, flaime, borrowed from Late Latin phlegma one of the four humors of the body, from Greek phléγμα inflammation, heat, humor caused by heat, from phlégein to burn.

The meaning of mucus, thick discharge, appeared before 1398. —phlegmatic adj. 1340 fleumatik abounding in phlegm phloem n. 1875, borrowing of German Phloem, Phlœm, from Greek phlóos bark, skin; originally, a swelling or growth, from phleîn be full of; related to phlyein boil over.

(one of the four humors of the body); borrowed from Old French fleumatique, from Late Latin phlegmaticus full of phlegm, from Greek phlegmatikós of or like phlegm, from phlégma PHLEGM; for suffix see -IC.

phlox n. 1706, borrowing of Latin phlox, from Greek phlóx (genitive phlogós) a kind of plant with a showy flower; literally, flame.

-phobe a combining form meaning one having a certain fear, hatred, or dread, as in Anglophobe, xenophobe. Borrowed from French -phobe, learned borrowing from Latin -phobus, from Greek -phóbos fearing, from phóbos fear, phobeîn to put to flight, frighten.

phobia n. 1786, New Latin, abstracted from compounds formed with Latin -phobia and Greek -phobía -PHOBIA. —phobic adj. 1897, formed from English phobia + -ic. As a noun, phobic a person having a phobia, appeared about 1968.

-phobia a combining form meaning an excessive or abnormal fear of something or someone, as in agoraphobia, claustrophobia. Borrowed from Greek -phobía, from phóbos fear, phobeîn to put to flight, frighten.

phoebe n. 1700 phebe, its name formed in imitation of its cry, but later (1839) adapted to Phoebe, a proper name.

phoenix n. Before 1150 fenix; found in Old English (about 750) fenix; borrowed from Medieval Latin phenix, and later directly from Latin phoenix, from Greek phóinix (genitive phoiníkos) the mythical bird; compare Egyptian bjn.

phon- the form of phono-, before vowels, as in phonetic, phonic.

phone¹ n. telephone. 1884, shortened form of TELEPHONE. —v. 1889, from the noun.

phone² n. speech sound. 1866, borrowed from Greek phōnē sound or voice.

-phone a combining form meaning sound or voice, as in microphone, xylophone; or speaking or speaker of, as in Francophone. Adapted from Greek phōnē voice, sound.

phoneme n. 1894, any speech sound; later, smallest contrastive unit of sound in a language (1896); borrowed from French phonème, from Greek phōnēma a sound, from phōnēin to sound or speak, from phōnē sound or voice. —phonemic adj. 1933, formed from English phoneme + -ic. —phonemics n. 1936, formed from English phoneme + -ics.

phonetic adj. 1826, borrowed from New Latin phoneticus (1797), from Greek phōnētikós vocal, from phōnētós to be spoken, utterable, from phōnēin to speak, from phōnē sound, voice; for suffix see -IC. —phonetics n. 1841, formed from English phonetic + -s.

phonic adj. 1823, of sound, acoustic; later, phonetic (1843); back formation from phonics. —phonics n. 1683–84, the science of sound, acoustics; later, phonetics (1894); formed from English phon- sound + -ics. The method of teaching reading is first recorded in 1908, though this system appeared as early as 1844.

phono- a combining form meaning sound, as in phonograph, phonology. Borrowed from Greek phōno-, combining form of phōnē voice or sound.

phonograph n. 1835–40, a written symbol representing a speech sound; formed in English from Greek phōno- sound + -gráphos writing, writer; later, instrument that reproduces sounds from records (1877); formed from English phono- sound + -graph machine that records.

phonology n. 1799, formed from English phono- sound + -logy study of. —phonological adj. 1818, formed from English phonology + -ical.

phonon n. 1932, quantum of energy in the form of sound or vibration; formed from English phon- sound + -on unit, as in meson.

phony or phoney adj. 1900 phoney, perhaps an alteration of English faunney a gilt brass ring used by swindlers (1781), borrowed from Irish fáinne ring. —n. 1902 phony, probably from the adjective. —v. 1942, from the adjective.

phosphate n. 1795, borrowing of French phosphate, formed from phosph(ore) PHOSPHOROUS + -ate -ate².

phosphor n. 1705, borrowed from New Latin phosphorus phosphorus, and reinforced by French phosphore; later reinforced by German Phosphor, from New Latin phosphorus PHOSPHORUS.

An earlier use of Phosphor (1635–56) the morning star, especially the planet Venus, is borrowed from Latin Phōsphorus, and Greek Phōsphóros Lucifer, the morning star, from phosphorus adj. (1629).

phosphorescent adj. 1766, formed from New Latin phosphorus + English -escent. —phosphorescence n. 1796, probably used in English as a natural formation of the noun to the adjective phosphorescent with substitution of ence, but also found in French phosphorescence.

phosphorus n. 1645 phosphorescent substance; New Latin, special use of Latin Phōsphorus morning star, from Greek Phōsphóros morning star, torchbearer (phōs light + -phóros bearer, from phérein carry). Earlier use English Phosphorus (1629) is found in reference to the morning star.

Specific reference to the chemical element first occurs in 1680, though the element was discovered in 1669. —phosphoric adj. 1784, phosphorescent; probably from phosphorical (1753); formed from English phosphorous + -ical; later, containing phosphorus (1791); probably developed in meaning by influence of French phosphorique.

photo n. 1860, shortened from PHOTOGRAPH. —v. 1868, from the noun.

photo- a combining form meaning light, as in photosynthesis; or a shortened form of photograph, as in photogenic, or of photoelectric, in photocell. Borrowed from Greek phōto-, combining form of phōs (genitive phōtós) light. Also formed in compounds such as photojournalism, n. (1944) and photojournalist, n. (1959).

photogenic adj. 1839, as in photogenic drawing (the earlier term for photography); formed from English photo- + -genic produced by.

Since 1855 photogenic has been used technically to mean "produced or caused by light." In 1928, photogenic was reformed (from photo photograph + -genic producing) meaning photographing very well.

photograph n. 1839, formed from English photo- light + -graph instrument for recording. —v. 1839, from the noun. —photographer n. 1847, formed from English photography + -er. —photographic adj. 1839, formed from English photograph + -ic. —photography n. 1839, formed from English photo + -graphy.

photon n. 1926, quantum of light; formed from English photo- light + -on unit, as in proton.

photosynthesis n. 1898, loan translation of German Photosynthese (photo- light + synthese synthesis). —photosynthesize v. 1921, from photosynthesis + -ize.

phrase n. 1530, manner of expression, combination of words, idiomatic expression; borrowed from Latin phrasis, from Greek phrasis speech, way of speaking, phraseology, from phrāzein to express, tell, from phrāzesthai to consider. —v. Before 1550, to use a phrase or phrases; later, to express in a particular way (1570); from the noun. —phrasal adj. 1871, formed from English phrase + -al. —phraseology n. 1558, appearing as if from Greek phraseologia*, irregularly formed from Greek phrasis way of speaking + -logia -logy, and in New Latin phraseologia, irregularly formed from Latin phrasis way of speaking + -logia -logy.

phrenetic adj. 1558 phrenetike, borrowed from Greek phrenētikós FRENETIC; for suffix see -ic.

phylactery n. About 1384 filaterie; later philateri (probably about 1400); borrowed from Old French philaterie, and directly from Medieval Latin filacterium, philaterium, alteration of Late Latin phylactērion a reliquary or phylactery, from Greek phylaktērion safeguard, an amulet, from phylaktēr, from phylassein to guard or ward off, from phylax (genitive phylakos) guard; for suffix see *-y*³.

phylogeny n. 1872, origin and development of a species; borrowed from German Phylogenie, formed from Greek phylon race + -gēneia origin, from -genēs born; for suffix see *-y*³.

phylum n. 1876, New Latin, from Greek phylon race, stock, related to phylē tribe, clan, and phyein bring forth.

physic n. About 1300 fysike a healing potion; later, natural science (about 1330), and phisik (about 1378); borrowed from Old French phisike, fisique natural science, art of healing, and directly from Latin physica, feminine singular, study of nature, from Greek physikē epistēmē knowledge of nature, from physis nature. The sense of a medicine that acts as a laxative is first recorded in 1617.

physical adj. Probably before 1425 phisicale medical, as distinguished from surgical; borrowed from Medieval Latin physicallis of nature, natural, from Latin physica study of nature; see PHYSIC; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The meaning of pertaining to matter, material is attested in 1597 and that of having to do with the body, bodily, in 1780.

physician n. Probably before 1200 fisitien doctor of medicine; later phisicien (1369); borrowed from Old French fisicien, from fisique art of healing; see PHYSIC; for suffix see -IAN.

physics n. 1589, natural science; later, science that deals with matter and energy (1715); borrowed as a translation of Latin neuter plural physica natural science; also formed from English physic natural science (about 1330) + *-s*¹. Latin physica is from Greek tà physiká, literally, the natural things, a name given to Aristotle's treatises on nature, from neuter plural of physikós of nature, from physis nature; for suffix see -ICS. —physicist n. 1840, formed from English physic(s) + -ist.

physio- a combining form meaning nature, natural, physical, as in physiology, physiotherapy. Borrowed from Greek physio-, combining form of physis nature.

physiognomy n. Before 1393 phisonomie art of judging a person's nature by observing features of the face; borrowed from Old French phisonomie, and directly from Late Latin physiognōmia, from Greek physiognōmīā, a variant of physiognōmonīā the judging of a person's nature by his features (physio- nature + gnōmōn, genitive gnōmonos judge, indicator); for suffix see *-y*³.

physiology n. 1564, natural science, natural philosophy; borrowed through Middle French physiologie, or directly from Latin physiologia natural science, study of nature, from Greek physiologīā natural science (physio- nature + -logia -logy). The study of the functions of living things is first recorded in 1615 as a borrowing from New Latin physiologia, from Latin. —physiological adj. 1610, of natural science; formed from Latin physiologicus of or belonging to natural science + English *-al*¹.

physiotherapy n. 1905, formed from English physio- physical + therapy.

physique n. 1826, borrowed from French physique, noun use of physique, adj., physical, from Latin physicus natural, physical, from Greek physikós, from physis nature.

-phyte a combining form meaning: 1 plant, planting, growth, as in epiphyte plant growing on another, saprophyte plant living on decaying matter. 2 abnormal growth, as in osteophyte bony excrescence. Adapted from Greek phytón plant, phyein beget, produce.

phyto- a combining form meaning plant, as in phytohormone, phytotoxic. Borrowed from Greek phyto-, combining form of phytón plant; see -PHYTE.

pi n. 1841, ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter indicated by the Greek letter π (used in a Latin context, 1748). Borrowing of the name of the Greek letter π (an abbreviation of Greek periphēria periphery).

piano n. 1803, borrowing of French piano and Italian piano, shortened form of PIANOFORTE. — pianist n. 1839, borrowed from French pianiste, from Italian pianista, formed from piano piano + -ista -ist.

piandforte n. 1767, borrowing of Italian piandforte, from piano e forte soft and loud (1598, piano soft; e and; forte loud). Italian piandforte derives from gravicembalo col piano e forte harpsichord with soft and loud (about 1710), because it is capable of producing gradations of tone, in contrast with the unvarying tone of the ordinary harpsichord.

pianola n. Before 1896 Pianola, trademark of a player piano; formed from piano + the ending -ola, perhaps abstracted from viola.

The popularity of the Pianola inspired the coinage of many names in -ola, notably (in 1906) the Victrola, eventually leading to the use of -ola in slang words such as payola and plugola.

piazza n. 1583, public square or marketplace; borrowing of Italian piazza, from Latin platea courtyard, broad street. The meaning of a colonnade, covered gallery or walk surrounding an open square, appeared in English in 1642.

pica n. 1588, probably borrowed from Medieval Latin pica name of a book of rules for determining dates of holy days; probably from Latin pica magpie; perhaps so called from the color and confused appearance of the old black type on the page which looked pied on the white paper.

picador n. 1797, borrowing of Spanish picador, literally, pricker, from picar to pierce, from Vulgar Latin pīccāre* to pierce; see PIKE¹ spear.

picaresque adj. 1810, borrowed from Spanish picaresco roguish, from pícaro rogue, possibly from picar to pierce, from Vulgar Latin pīccāre* to pierce; see PIKE¹ spear; for suffix see -ESQUE.

picayune adj. 1813, from the noun (1804, coin of small value, probably from Louisiana French picaillon coin worth 5 cents, from French, a coin of Savoy, from Provençal picaïoun, derivative of picaio money).

piccalilli n. 1769 piccalillo, perhaps thought of as a derivative of PICKLE. The spelling piccalilli appeared in 1845.

piccolo n. 1856 piccolo flute; borrowed from French piccolo, from Italian flauto piccolo small flute; piccolo small, perhaps from picca point or from Vulgar Latin root pīkk-* little, perhaps related to pīccāre* to pierce; see PIKE¹ spear.

pick¹ v. select. About 1225 picken to peck; about 1300 piken to work with a pick, dig; about 1330, to choose, select, pick out; probably a fusion of Old English pīcian* to prick (implied in pīcung pricking), and of Old Icelandic pikka to prick, peck; both the Old English and Icelandic forms cognate with Middle Dutch picken to pick, prick, peck, (modern Dutch pikken). — n. Before 1450 pīke a blow with a pointed instrument; later, meaning choice, selection (1760–72); from the verb. — picker n. (1526) — pickpocket n. 1591, replacing Middle English pikepurse (about 1385, from piken to pick + purse). — picky adj. 1867, formed from English *pick*¹, v. + *-y*¹.

pick² n. tool. Probably before 1200 pic pickaxe; later pīke sharp tool (1337), variants of PIKE² sharp point.

pickax or pickaxe n. 1428 pecaxe, 1494 pycax, alteration (influenced by axe, ax) of earlier Middle English picas (1256), picoyc (1278); borrowed through Anglo-French piceis, and from Old French picois, pecois; and probably borrowed directly from Medieval Latin pīcosa pick, pickax. Old French picois and pecois were also, in part, borrowed from Medieval Latin and, in part, formed from Old French pic pointed instrument, from Latin pīcus woodpecker; see PIE² magpie.

pickerel n. 1290 pikerel, diminutive of PIKE³ fish; earlier as a surname (1200). The suffix -erel (also found in mackerel, doggerel, etc.) was borrowed from Old French -erel, -erelle, and appears sometimes in the form -rel as a derogatory suffix, as in mongrel, scoundrel, wastrel, etc.

picket n. 1690, a pointed stake used for military purposes, such as building fences, a defense against cavalry, etc.; borrowed from French piquet, from piquer to pierce; see PIKE¹ spear.

The sense of a body of troops posted to watch for the enemy is first recorded in 1761 and that of a group of people stationed by a labor union to deter strikebreakers from entering a workplace in 1867. — v. 1745, enclose with pointed stakes, from the noun. The meaning of act as a labor picket appeared in 1867.

pickle n. Probably before 1400 pekill a highly-seasoned sauce served with meat or fowl; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch pekel pickle or brine; cognate with Frisian pikel, Middle Low German pēkel (modern German Pökel).

The meaning of food such as a cucumber, preserved in pickle is first recorded in 1707, and developed from the sense of a salt or acid liquid in which meat, vegetables, etc., are preserved (1502, pigell). — v. 1552 (implied in pickled), from the noun + *-ed*².

picnic n. 1748, a fashionable social gathering in which each participant contributes a share of the provisions; borrowed from French pique-nique (1692), of uncertain origin; perhaps a rhyming reduplication of French piquer to pick, peck, from Old French (see PIKE¹ spear) or possibly a compound of French piquer to pick + nique worthless thing, from a Germanic source. — v. 1821, furnish (provisions) by individual contribution; later, go on a picnic (1842); from the noun.

pico- a combining form meaning: 1 one trillionth, as in picosecond. 2 very small, as in picornavirus. Adapted from Spanish pico a little over, a small balance; literally, sharp point, beak, from Celtic (compare Gaulish beccus BEAK).

picornavirus n. 1962, formed from English pico- very small + RNA (abbreviation of ribonucleic acid) + virus.

picosecond n. 1966, formed from English pico- trillionth + second.

pictograph n. 1851, formed from Latin pictus painted + English connective -o- (perhaps influenced by photo-) + -graph.

pictorial adj. 1646, pertaining to painting, produced by the painter; formed as if from a Latin form pictōriālis*, from Latin pictōrius of a painter, from Latin pictor painter, from pict-, past participle stem of pingere make pictures, PAINT; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of having to do with or consisting of pictures is first recorded in 1807, that of containing pictures, illustrated (1826), and that of picturesque or graphic, in 1829.

picture n. Before 1420, drawing, painting; borrowed from Latin pictūra, from pictus, past participle of pingere make pictures, PAINT; for suffix see -URE. —v. About 1489 picture to paint, draw, depict; from the noun.

picturesque adj. 1703, interesting enough to be used as the subject of a picture; formed from English picture + -esque, perhaps patterned on French pittoresque, from Italian pittoreresco pictorial, from pittore painter.

piddle v. 1545, of uncertain origin; the form of the verb is that of a frequentative (see the suffix -LE³). The participial adjective piddling, meaning insignificant, petty, trifling, appeared in 1559.

pidgin n. 1876, shortened form of Pidgin English, alteration of earlier pigeon English the reduced form of English used in China for communication with Europeans (1859), from the Pidgin English form pigeon, pigeon business, representing a Chinese pronunciation of English business.

The meaning of any simplified language used between foreigners is first recorded in 1921. —pidginize v. 1937, back formation from earlier pidginization (1934); formed from pidgin + -ization.

pie¹ n. pastry. 1357–58; earlier in Medieval Latin context (1303) pie meat or fish enclosed in a pastry; also found in Piehus bakery (1199); perhaps from Medieval Latin pia pie, pastry, of uncertain origin.

pie² n. magpie. About 1250, probably earlier as a surname Pie (1177); borrowed from Old French pie, from Latin pica magpie, related to pīcus woodpecker.

piebald adj. 1589, in the figurative sense of mixed or mongrel; formed from English pie² magpie + bald spotted or white; so called from the spotted plumage of the magpie. —n. 1765, piebald horse; from the adjective.

piece n. Probably before 1200 pece part, portion, section; later piece (about 1330); borrowed from Old French piece, pece, from Vulgar Latin pettia*, probably from Gaulish (compare Welsh peth thing and Breton pez piece). —v. about 1400 pesen to patch, repair, join the pieces of; later pecen (1440); from noun.

piecemeal adv. About 1300 pecemele (pece PIECE + -mele, obsolete suffix “by small measures,” developed from Old English -mælum from mælum at a time, dative plural of mæl appointed time, food served, MEAL¹).

pied adj. 1382 pyed; earlier in the surname Pydecoke (1310); formed from Middle English pie² magpie + -ed²; so called from the spotted plumage of the magpie.

Early use is associated with pyed freres, the name of an order of friars who wore a habit resembling the black and white plumage of the magpie.

pier n. Before 1125, as the inflected form peran; later pere (about 1380); borrowed from Medieval Latin pera, perhaps a Latinization of Old North French pire, piere a breakwater, from Vulgar Latin petricus*, from Latin petra rock.

pierce v. Probably before 1300 percen to thrust through, prick; earlier in the surname Percheaie (1202); borrowed through Anglo-French perser, piercer, Old French percer, percier, probably from Vulgar Latin pertusiāre*, from Latin pertūsus, past participle of pertundere to thrust or bore through (per- through + tundere to beat, pound).

piety n. About 1325 piete mercy, tenderness, pity; earlier as a surname Piete (1195); borrowed from Old French pieté, from archaic and colloquial Latin pietātem (nominative pietās, the source of Classical pietās) dutiful conduct, kindness, pity, from archaic and colloquial pīus (the source of pīas dutiful, kind, PIOUS); for suffix see -TY². Related to PITY.

The meaning of piousness, in English, is first recorded in 1604. —pietism n. 1697, a movement in Germany to revive personal piety in the Lutheran Church; borrowed from German Pietismus, from Latin pietās piety + German -ismus -ism. The extended sense of pietism “piety, pious sentiment” (often implying an affectation of piety) is first recorded in English in 1829.

piezo- a combining form meaning pressure, as in piezoelectricity (1883, electric polarity induced by mechanical pressure, as in certain crystals). Adapted from Greek piezein to press, squeeze.

piezometer n. 1820, instrument for measuring pressure; formed from English piezo- + -meter.

piffle v. 1847–78, perhaps alteration of trifle (by association with such forms as piddle). —n. 1890, from the verb.

pig n. About 1250 pigge; later pig (before 1325), and as a surname (1186); probably developed from Old English picga*, pigga*, found in the compound pic-bred acorn, mast. The offensive slang meaning of police officer is recorded in underworld slang since about 1812. —v. Probably 1440 piggen to bear pigs, farrow; from the noun. The phrase to pig it is first recorded in 1889, and the sense of eat like a pig in pig out is found in the 1970's. —pig-headed (1620) —pigskin n. 1855, leather from pig's skin; 1894, a football. —pigsty n. (1591) —pigtail n. 1688, tobacco in a twisted roll; later, a braid of hair (late 1700's).

pigeon n. 1373 pichon dove or pigeon; also pygeon (probably before 1422); earlier as a surname Pigun (1211); borrowed from Old French pijon, pyjoun young dove, probably from Vulgar Latin pibiōnem*, alteration (by dissimilation of p to b) of Late Latin pīpiōnem squab, young chirping bird, from Latin pīpiāre to chirp. —pigeonhole n. 1577, small recess for a pigeon; later, compartment in a desk (1688). The sense of a category is first attested in 1847. —v. 1840, to put in a pigeonhole; later, to assign to a category (1870); from the noun.

piggyback adv. 1838, alteration of dialectal English pig back (1783), itself an alteration (by association with pig) of earlier pickback (1565), also pick pack (1591); possibly formed from English pick (a dialectal variant of *pitch*¹ to throw) + back or pack. The form piggyback was also influenced by pick-a-back, a variant of pickback. —adj. 1823 pick-a-back; 1944 piggyback; from the adverb. The transporting of loaded truck trailers on railroad flatcars is first recorded in 1953. —v. to carry on the back, transport on railroad flatcars. 1952, from the adverb.

pigment n. Before 1398, a spice or red dye; re-borrowed, probably by influence of Old French pigment spice, balm, from Latin pigmentum pigment, paint, from root of pingere to color, paint. An earlier form pyhmentum a spice, as a plural dative, is found about 1150, possibly also known in Old English, and borrowed from Latin pigmentum. —pigmentation n. 1866, formed from English pigment + -ation.

pigmy n. See PYGMY.

pike¹ n. spear. About 1511, borrowed from Middle French pique a spear, pikeman, from piquer to pick, prick, pierce, from Old French pic sharp point or spike, possibly through Vulgar Latin picus*, ultimately from Germanic (compare Old English pic). The word was also developed in part directly from Old English pic pointed instrument; see PIKE².

pike² n. sharp point or spike. Before 1200 pike, developed from Old English piic, pic pointed instrument, pickax (about 725); perhaps borrowed from a Celtic source (compare Gaelic pic pickax, Irish pice pike, pitchfork, Breton pik pike, pickax, and Welsh pig point, pike, beak, which are all borrowings from an unknown source). Middle English *pike*² was confused with *pike*¹ by influence of Old French pic; and Middle French pique and probably by Middle Dutch picke, peke.

pike³ n. fish. 1314 pike; also pike (1345); probably a special use of *pike*² sharp point, because of the fish's long, slender snout.

pike⁴ n. turnpike. 1837, shortened form of TURNPIKE, used in the sense of tollgate; the sense of highway is first recorded in 1852.

piker n. 1872, miserly person, probably from earlier Piker a poor migrant to California (1860, but originally one from Pike County, Missouri).

pilaf or pilau n. 1612 pilaw, borrowed from Persian pilāw, from Turkish pilāv. The spelling pilaff (1813) is from modern Greek pilafi, from Turkish pilāv.

pilaster n. 1575, borrowed from Middle French pilastre, from Italian pilastro; formed from pila buttress or pile (from Latin pila PILLAR) and Latin -aster, expressing incomplete resemblance.

pile¹ n. mass, heap. About 1410 pyle; borrowed from Middle French pile, and directly from Latin pila stone barrier, PILLAR. It is possible that an earlier use of pyle a castle, tower, stronghold (about 1378), and now meaning any very large building, belongs to this group of meanings. —v. Probably before 1400 pilen, from the noun, and perhaps also borrowed from Medieval Latin pilare to pile up, stack.

pile² n. heavy beam. 1190 pile an arrow; later, a timber driven into the ground (before 1338); developed from Old English (before 1000) pil stake, arrow; borrowed from Latin pilum heavy javelin, pestle. Old English pil is cognate with Old High German pfil arrow, stake.

pile³ n. nap of a fabric. About 1350 pilus, pl., feathers or plumage; later piles hair; borrowed probably from Middle Dutch pijl, and directly from Latin pilus hair.

The meaning of nap on a fabric is first recorded in English in 1568.

pile⁴ n. Usually piles pl. hemorrhoids. Probably before 1425 pillis, pilez; borrowed from Medieval Latin pili piles, probably from Latin pila ball, in reference to the shape of hemorrhoids.

pilfer v. Before 1548, verb use of Middle English pylfre spoils or booty (before 1400); also, plundering or despoiling (before 1420); borrowed from Middle French pelfre booty or spoils, found in Old French, but of unknown origin; possibly related to PELF. Anglo-Latin pelfra booty or spoils was also a source of Middle English pylfre and Middle French pelfrer to rob, influenced formation of the verb in English.

pilgrim n. Probably before 1200 pilgrim, pelegrim; later pilgrim (about 1280); borrowed from Old French peligrin, pelerin, from Latin peregrinus foreigner, from peregrē (per- beyond + agrē*, Old Latin ablative case of ager field), and peregrī abroad, from abroad (per- beyond + agrī, locative case of ager field).

In the Romance languages (except Spanish) Latin peregrinus became pelegrin(o), peligrin, (by dissimilation of the first r to l). Final m is perhaps from Germanic (compare Old High German Pilgrim, from bili- sword + grīm helmet), which may also explain the first i in pilgrim. In American history, the name pilgrim, the English Puritans who founded the colony of Plymouth, Massachusetts in 1620 is also found in the phrase Pilgrim Fathers (1799). —pilgrimage n. About 1275 pelrimage; later pilgrimage (probably before 1300); formed from English pilgrim + -age, and borrowed from Old French pelerinage, from pelerin, peligrin pilgrim.

pill n. Before 1400 pille small ball of medicine; borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German pille, and from Middle French pile; all from Latin pilula little ball, pill, diminutive of pila ball, related to pilus hair; see PILE³ nap. —v. 1736, to dose with pills; from the noun. The meaning of form small fuzzy balls on fabrics is first recorded in 1953.

pillage n. Before 1393 pilage spoils or booty; later pillage robbery (probably about 1421); borrowed from Old French pillage plunder, from piller to plunder; possibly from Vulgar Latin piliāre* to plunder; for suffix see -AGE. —v. About 1592; from the noun.

pillar n. Probably before 1200 pilar pillar, post; later pillar (1434); borrowed from Old French piler, pillier, pillier, and directly from Medieval Latin pilare, from Latin pila pillar, stone barrier.

pillory n. 1275 pillory; earlier as a surname Pillori (1257–58); borrowed from Old French pilori, pillori, pelori, and directly from Medieval Latin pilloria, pilorium, pellorium; of uncertain origin. —v. Probably before 1600; from the noun.

pillow n. About 1150 pule; later pilowe (about 1350), and pillow (1440); developed from Old English pulwi*, pylu, pyle (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon puli, puliui pillow, Middle Dutch pōlu, pōluwe (modern Dutch peluw), and Old High German pfūliwi, pfūlwo (modern German Pfuhl); all representing West Germanic pulwī(n)*, an early borrowing from Latin pulvīnus pillow. The Middle English word was also borrowed directly from Latin.

pilot n. 1530, one who steers a ship; borrowed from Middle French pilot, pilote (and reinforced by Spanish and Portuguese piloto, and Middle Dutch piljost), perhaps all from Italian piloto, pilota; earlier pedoto, pedota, from Medieval Greek pēdōtēs*, from Greek pēdōn steering oar, related to poūs (genitive podós) FOOT. (For the change of d to l compare Latin odor: olet it smells.) Application to one who controls a balloon, is first recorded in 1848. —v. 1649, to guide, lead; from the noun; later, conduct as a pilot (1693). —adj. 1788, of or pertaining to a pilot; from the noun; later, serving as a guide or prototype, as in a pilot study, a pilot film (1928).

pimento n. 1690 piemento; later pimento (1718); borrowing of Spanish pimiento green or red pepper, also pimentia black pepper, from Late Latin pimenta, plural of pimentum vegetable juice, from Latin pimentum pigment.

pimp n. 1607, perhaps connected with Middle French pinper to dress elegantly, present participle pinpant alluring in dress, seductive. —v. 1636, from the noun.

pimpernel n. 1373 pympirnell, 1392 pimpernelle; borrowed from Old French piprenelle, pinpernelle, pimpernelle, and directly from Late Latin pimpinella a medicinal plant. The meaning of something or someone very elusive (1953), is an allusion to the Scarlet Pimpernel, code name of the hero of the adventure novel The Scarlet Pimpernel (1905).

pimple n. 1373 pympel small inflamed swelling; earlier as a surname Pympel (1311); perhaps related to Old English piplian* (found in the present participle pipligende having shingles). —pimply adj. 1748, formed from English pimple + -y.

pin n. Before 1200 pin part of a latch or bolt; later, fastener for clothing (about 1250); developed from Late Old English (before 1100) pin; cognate with Old Saxon pin peg, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch pin, pinne (modern Dutch pin), and Old High German pfinn (modern German Pinne); from Proto-Germanic penn-* jutting point or peak. —v. Probably 1350–75 pynen to fasten with a pin; also about 1375 pynnen; from the noun.

pinafore n. 1782 pin-a-fore, formed from English pin, v. + afore on the front; so called because it was originally pinned to the dress front.

pincers n. pl. or sing. Probably before 1325 pynsours; later piners (1371); borrowed from Old French pinceure pincers, from pinzier to PINCH.

pinch v. About 1230 pinchen to pluck; also, to be stingy with (probably before 1325), and to pinch, nip, or assail (about 1350); borrowed from Old North French pinchier* (modern Norman dialect pincher), variant of Old French pinzier, perhaps from Vulgar Latin pinctiāre*, a possible fusion of punctiāre* to pierce (from Latin punctum POINT) and pīcāre* to pierce. —n. 1489, critical juncture; from the verb. The literal meaning of act of pinching is not recorded before 1591.

pine¹ n. evergreen tree. About 1150 pin; later pine (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 1000, in pintreow, pin-beam) pīn-, borrowed from Latin and from Old French pin, also from Latin pinus. —pineapple n. Possibly before 1350, in pine-appeltre, in reference to pine appel cone of the pine tree. The fruit from a tropical plant, is first recorded in 1664, but found as Queen Pine (1661). —pine cone (1695, replacing pine-appel 1350, and pine nut 1600, Old English pinhnyte, about 1000).

pine² v. yearn. About 1125 pinen to torture, crucify; later, to waste away with pain, desire, etc., yearn (before 1325); developed from Old English pīnian cause to suffer (before 899), from pīne* pain, torture, punishment; borrowed possibly through Medieval or Vulgar Latin pēna*, variant from Latin poena punishment, penalty, from Greek poínē.

The Old English noun pīne* corresponds to Old Saxon pīna, Middle Dutch pīne (modern Dutch pijn pain), Old High German pīna (modern German Pein), and Old Icelandic pīna (Swedish pina, Danish pine), all borrowed from Latin into Germanic with Christianity, and in English first applied to the pains of hell. Though the noun is not found in Old English, the verb is common from an early period.

pineal adj. 1681, of or having to do with a cone-shaped gland in the brain; borrowed from French pinéal, literally, like a pine cone, from Latin pīnea pine cone, from pīnus PINE¹ tree.

ping-pong n. 1900 Ping-Pong, trademark for table tennis equipment (of ping, n. 1835, and pong, n. 1823, imitative of the sound of the celluloid ball hitting the paddle and then the table). —v. 1901, from the noun. The sense of send something or someone back and forth (as if a ping-pong ball) is first recorded in 1952.

pinion¹ n. last joint of a bird's wing. Probably before 1425 pinion wing; borrowed from Middle French pignon, perhaps from Vulgar Latin pinnionem* (nominative pinnio*), extended form of Latin pinna, variant of penna wing. —v. 1558, disable by binding the arms; 1577, bind the wings of; from the noun.

pinion² n. small gear with teeth that fit into a larger gear. 1659, borrowed from French pignon, from Old French pignon crenellation or battlement, from Vulgar Latin pinnionem* (nominative pinnio*), an extended form of Latin pinna pinna- cle, battlement, variant of penna wing, feather, peak. It may be that *pinion*¹ and *pinion*² are the same word if both are derived through Vulgar Latin from Latin pinna.

pink¹ n. light red color. 1573, a garden plant of various colors; of uncertain origin.

The meaning of the flower (of some good quality) is first recorded in 1592; and that of the most perfect degree of something (as in the pink of health), in 1767.

About 1720 the plant name began to be used attributively in the sense of having the color of the garden pink when of a pale rose color.

pink² v. to prick or pierce. Probably before 1200 pungen pierce or stab; later, to punch holes in (about 1325); developed from a possible Old English pyngan and borrowed directly from Latin pungere to pierce, prick. The meaning of cut or perforate (cloth) in an ornamental pattern is first recorded in 1503.

pinkie n. 1808, borrowed from Dutch pinkje, diminutive from pink little finger; of uncertain origin.

pinnacle n. 1546, ship's boat, borrowed from Middle French pinace, from Italian pinaccia, or from Spanish pinaza, from pino pine tree, ship, from Latin pīnus PINE¹, also (by metonymy) ship.

pinnacle n. Probably about 1300 pinacle mountain, peak, promontory; later spire, turret (probably 1350–75), and pynna-cle (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French pinacle, pinnacle, and directly from Late Latin pinnāculum gable, diminutive of pinna peak; originally, wing, feather, variant of penna FEATHER.

pinnate adj. 1727, having leaflets arranged like the vanes of a feather; borrowed from Latin pinnātus feathered, winged, from pinna feather; for suffix see -ATE¹.

pinochle n. 1864 Peanukle, Penuchle; 1892 pinochle; of uncertain origin; perhaps a borrowing of Binokel, found in Swiss dialect of German, and probably binocle, found in Swiss dialect of French.

piñon n. 1831, borrowed from Spanish piñón pine nut, a pine bearing edible seed, from piña pine cone, from Latin pīnea, from pīnus pine.

pinscher n. 1926, borrowing of German Pinscher, earlier Pint-scher, also Pintsch or Pinsch, probably from English pinch (because its ears are usually clipped).

pint n. 1354 pynte vessel containing a pint; borrowed from Old French pinte, probably from Vulgar Latin pīnta*, variant of Latin picta painted, feminine past participle of pingere to PAINT; possibly so called from the painted mark on a vessel indicating this measure.

pintle n. 1486 pyntell; earlier pyntul penis (about 1350); developed from Late Old English (before 1100) pintel penis, probably a formation from the root of Old Frisian and Middle Low German pint penis; for suffix see -LE¹.

pinto n. 1860, borrowing of American Spanish pinto, literally, painted or spotted, from Spanish pinto, from Vulgar Latin pīntus*, variant of Latin pictus painted, past participle of pingere to paint.

Pinyin n. 1963, system for transliterating modern Chinese into Roman characters; borrowed from Chinese pīnyīn to combine sounds into syllables, phonetic alphabet, (pīn put together + yīn sound, tone).

pion n. 1951, meson having a mass 264–273 times that of an electron; contraction of pi-meson (1947).

pioneer n. 1523, foot soldier who prepares the way for an army; borrowed from Middle French pionnier, from Old French peonier foot soldier, from peon; see PAWN² chess piece; for suffix see -EER. The sense of a person who goes first or does something first is first recorded in 1605. —v. 1780, from the noun.

pious adj. About 1450 piouse, borrowed from archaic and colloquial Latin pīus (the source of Classical pīus) dutiful, kind, devout; related to PIETY and PITY.

pip¹ n. seed of fleshy fruit. 1797, shortened form of pipin (before 1325); see PIPPIN.

pip² n. disease of birds, characterized by the secretion of thick mucus. 1373 pipe; borrowed from Middle Dutch pip, pippe pip or mucus, from Vulgar Latin pippita*, pīpita, through pīwita* from Latin pīuīta phlegm.

pip³ n. spot on playing cards, dominoes, or dice. 1674, alteration of earlier peep (1604), of unknown origin.

pipe¹ n. Probably before 1200 pipe musical wind instrument; later, water pipe, conduit (about 1250); developed from Old English (before 1000) pipe musical wind instrument, tube to convey water, smoke, etc.; borrowed from Vulgar Latin pīpa* a pipe, from Latin pīpare to chirp or peep, of imitative origin. The Old English form is cognate with Old Frisian pīpe pipe, Old Saxon pīpa, Middle Dutch pipe, Old High German pfīfa, and Old Icelandic pīpa; all borrowed from Vulgar Latin pīpa*.

The meaning of a pipe for smoking (1594) is originally recorded with the defining word, as pipe of tobacco. —v. About 1250 pipen whistle, peep; later, play a pipe (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (before 1000) pīpian, from Old English pipe, n., and probably from Latin pīpare; of imitative origin.

The meaning of convey through a pipe or pipes is first recorded in 1889; from the noun.

pipe² n. cask, vat. 1314, as part of the name of a customary rental of a cask and armor called “Pipe and Puleyn,” and later a cask, vat (1348); borrowed from Old French pipe a liquid-measure, cask for wine, from Vulgar Latin pīpa* PIPE¹; also influenced in development by Middle English pipe PIPE¹.

pipette n. 1839, borrowing of French pipette, from Middle French pipette tube, diminutive of Old French pipe, from Vulgar Latin pīpa* PIPE¹; for suffix see -ETTE.

piping n. 1858, from pipe, v. to trim with material (1841), special use of *pipe*¹, n. tube, referring to the cordage often drawn through piping to give it a rounded edge.

pipit n. 1768, a coined word (originally spelled pippit), imitative of the bird's cry.

pipin n. Before 1325 pipin, pepin seed of a fleshy fruit; earlier as a surname Pypin (1297), also, kind of apple (1432); borrowed from Old French pepin, probably from the root pip-*, expressing smallness.

pipsqueak n. 1910, formed from English *pip*³ small spot + squeak, n.

piquant adj. 1521, unpleasantly sharp or biting; borrowing of Middle French piquant pricking, stimulating, irritating, from Old French, present participle of piquer to prick, sting, nettle; see *PIKE*¹ spear.

The meaning of stimulating to the taste, appeared about 1645, and that of stimulating to the mind in 1695. —piquancy n. 1664, pungency, tartness; formed from English piquant + -cy.

pique n. 1532, ill feeling, personal quarrel; borrowed from Middle French pique a prick, sting, irritation, from piquer to prick, sting, pierce, nettle, from Old French; see *PIKE*¹ spear.

The meaning of a feeling of anger is first recorded in English in 1592. —v. 1664, borrowed from French piquer irritate, excite, prick, from Old French, to prick, pierce, nettle.

piqué n. 1852, borrowing of French piqué, literally, quilted, past participle of piquer to quilt, prick; see PIQUE.

piranha n. 1869, borrowing of Portuguese piranha, from Tupi (Brazil) pira nya, variant of pira'ya, literally, scissors.

pirate n. Probably before 1300; earlier as a surname Pyrot (1254); borrowed from Old French pirate, and directly from Latin pīrāta sailor, sea robber, from Greek peirātes brigand or pirate; literally, one who attacks, from peirān to attack, make a hostile attempt on, try, from peira trial, an attempt, attack.

The meaning of a person who appropriates the work of another without right is first recorded in 1701. —v. 1574, from the noun. —piracy n. Before 1552, borrowed from Medieval Latin piratīa, from Medieval Greek peirātēla*, from Greek peirātes PIRATE; for suffix see -CY. —piratical adj. 1549 (implied in piratically); formed from Latin pīraticus (from Greek peirātikós, from peirātes pirate) + English *-al*¹.

pirouette n. 1706, borrowing of French pirouette, from Old French pirouet spinning top, from the Gallo-Romance root pir-* peg or plug (represented by dialectal French pire large peg, piron kind of hinge, piroc bud, shoot); for suffix see -ETTE. —v. 1822, from the noun in English, influenced by French pirouetter, from pirouette, n.

piscatorial adj. 1828, from Latin piscātorius of fishermen, or fishing, from piscātor (genitive piscātoris) fisher, from piscāri to fish, from piscis fish; for suffix see *-AL*¹; possibly formed in English from piscatory + -ial on the model of Latin piscātorius. —piscatory adj. 1633, borrowed from Latin piscātorius.

piss v. About 1300 pissen; borrowed from Old French pissier urinate, from Vulgar Latin pissiāre*, of imitative origin. —n. Before 1387 pisse, from pissen, v. —pismire n. Probably about 1350 pyssmourre; earlier as a surname Pessemere (1327); also pissemure (about 1395), a compound of pyss, pisse urine (so called from the acrid smell of an anthill) + mire ant (before 1250 probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source, compare Old Icelandic maurr ant, and Old Swedish myr ant).

pistachio n. 1598, borrowed from Italian pistacchio, from Latin pistacium the pistachio nut, from Greek pistákion, from pistákē the pistachio tree, from an Eastern language (compare Persian pistā the pistachio tree).

The earlier form pistace, recorded in Middle English about 1440, was borrowed from Middle French pistace, pistache, from Latin pistacium.

pistil n. 1749, borrowing of French pistil, from New Latin pistillum a pistil (so called from its resemblance to a pestle), from Latin pistillum pestle.

pistol n. About 1570, borrowed from Middle French pistole small, short firearm, from German Pistole, from Czech píšťala firearm; originally, pipe, from píšťeti to whistle, of imitative origin. An earlier form pistolet (1550), borrowed from Middle French pistolet, is possibly connected with Italian pistolese, in reference to Pistoia a town in Tuscany once known for its metal industry and gunsmithing. —v. 1607, from the noun.

piston n. 1704, borrowing of French piston, from Middle French piston pestle for a mortar, from Italian pistone, pestone large pestle, from pestare to pound, from Late Latin pistāre, frequentative form of Latin pīnere to pound.

pit¹ n. hole. About 1175 putte water hole, pool, spring; later put, pit hole, grave, hell (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (847) pytt water hole, pit; cognate with Old Frisian pet pit, Old Saxon putti, Middle Low German putte, Middle Dutch put, putte (modern Dutch put well, pit), Old High German pfuzzi, pfuzza (modern German Pfütze puddle, pool); representing West Germanic puttjaz*, an early borrowing from Latin puteus well, pit, shaft. —v. 1456 pitten cast into a pit, mark with pits, from pit, n. The meaning of set (cocks, dogs, etc.) to fight for sport is first recorded in 1760, in reference to the pits where such matches took place, and that of set to compete, oppose, in 1777. —pitfall n. Before 1382 pit falle a concealed hole; put-falle (about 1325) unfavorable terrain. The sense of any hidden danger appears before 1425.

pit² n. hard seed. 1841, borrowing of Dutch pit kernel, seed, marrow, from Middle Dutch pit, pitte PITH. —v. Before 1930, from the noun.

pitch¹ v. to throw. Probably before 1200 pihte (past tense of picchen, picchen to thrust or drive something); later, to throw (about 1380); probably developed from Old English pician* to prick; cognate with Old Icelandic pikka, þjakka, Middle Dutch picken, pecken, East Frisian pikken.

The meaning of set up, erect (as in pitch a tent) is first recorded about 1250 and that of throw a ball in cricket (now bowl) in 1773, and in baseball, in 1845. —n. Before 1500, act of pitching; from the verb. The meaning of something pitched is first recorded in 1523, that of the degree of slope, in 1542, and musical pitch, degree of acuteness of tone in 1597.

The sense of the act of pitching a ball was first used in cricket in 1833, and that of talk used in promoting something pitch² n. sticky substance. Probably about 1175 pich; later pytche (before 1382); developed from Old English (about 700) pic; cognate with Old Saxon, Old Frisian pik pitch, Middle Dutch pik (Dutch pek), Middle Low German pik, pek, Old High German pek, peck (German Peck), Old Icelandic bik (Swedish beek, Danish beg); all borrowed from Latin. English pitch was also borrowed through Anglo-French piche, piz, Old French poiz, from Latin pīx (genitive pīcis) pitch.

(1876), probably an extended sense of a stall pitched for the sale of something (1811). —pitchfork n. 1364 pichforke, alteration (by influence of pichen to thrust, throw) of earlier pikfork (1356), pic-forken (probably before 1200), from pik-, pic-, combining forms of PIKE² (Old English pīc) or pikke PICK² + fork, forken fork.

pitcher¹ n. 1707, iron bar for making holes to erect fence posts; later, a person who pitches hay (before 1722), and the baseball player who pitches the ball (1845).

pitcher² n. 1208–09 picher earthen jug; later pitchere (before 1350); borrowed from Old French pichier, picher, alteration of bichier, from Medieval Latin bicarium, probably from Greek bīkos earthen vessel.

piteous adj. Probably before 1300 pitous deserving pity; later pituius full of pity (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French pitous, Old French pitos, piteus, from Medieval Latin pietous merciful, pitiful, from archaic and colloquial Latin piētās dutiful conduct, compassion, PIETY.

pith n. Before 1325 pith strength, force, vigor; about 1330 interior portion; developed from Old English piþa pith of plants, essential part (before 899); cognate with Middle Low German pedik, peddik pith, possibly also with Middle Low German pit, pitte kernel, pith, and Middle Dutch pit, pitte pith, from West Germanic piþan-*, piþthan-. —pithy adj. Before 1325 pithier, (comparative of pithi vigorous, strong); derived from English pith + *-y*¹. The meaning of full of substance, meaning, or force is first recorded in 1529.

piton n. 1898, borrowing of French piton hook, peak, piton, from Old French, nail, hook, from the Vulgar Latin root pīt-* point or peak.

pittance n. Probably before 1200 pitance donation to a religious community, small portion of food; borrowing of Old French pitance portion of food allowed a monk or poor person, pious dole, formed from pitie PITY + -ance -ance, from archaic and colloquial Latin piētās PITY; for suffix see -ANCE. The meaning of a small amount, portion, or allowance is first recorded in English in 1561.

pituitary adj. 1615, borrowed from New Latin pituitarius, from Latin pituitārius mucous from pituita phlegm, mucus; for suffix see -ARY.

The name for the gland was adopted because it was believed that the pituitary channeled mucus to the nose. —n. 1899, from the adjective.

pity n. Before 1250 pite pity; earlier as a surname Pitie (1195); also, devotion, piety (1340); borrowed from Old French pitē, pitie, from archaic and colloquial Latin piētatem (nominative piētās) compassion, pity, from pīus PIOUS. English pity and piety were not completely differentiated in meaning until the 1600's. —v. Probably before 1475 pete (variant of pitien* have compassion for); borrowed from Old French piteer, pitier to feel pity or compassion for; also, probably developed from the noun in English. —pitiful adj. About 1303 pitiful compassionate (implied in pytyffully); later, deserving pity, lamentable (about 1460); formed from Middle English pite, pitee pity + -ful. —pitiless adj. 1410 piteles merciless; formed from Middle English pite, pitee pity + -les -less.

pivot n. 1611, borrowing of French, from Old French pivot hinge, pivot, of uncertain origin. The sense of central point is first recorded in 1813. —v. 1841, turn as if on a pivot; from the noun in English. —pivotal adj. 1844, central, cardinal; formed from English pivot + *-al*¹.

pix n. pl. 1932, pictures, spelling alteration of earlier pics (1884), plural of pic picture.

pixel n. 1969, one of the photographic elements of a television image; formed from English pix pictures + el(ement).

pixie or pixy n. About 1630 pixy in the compound pixy-path bewilderment (path on which one is supposed to be led astray by pixies); later pixie in the compound pixie-led lost (led astray by pixies, 1659); of uncertain origin.

pixilated adj. 1848, dazed or confused; formed from pixie + -lated, as in elated, titillated, etc.

pizza n. 1935, borrowing of Italian pizza, originally, cake, tart, pie; of uncertain origin. —pizzeria n. 1943, although orally attested since the 1930's; probably borrowed from Italian, from pizza + -eria -ery.

pizzazz or pizazz n. 1937 pizzazz, a coined word, probably originally college or show business slang.

pizzicato n., adj. 1845, n.; 1880, adj.; borrowing of Italian pizzicato, past participle of pizzicare to pluck (strings), pinch, from pizzare to prick or sting, from pizzo point or edge, from Vulgar Latin pīts-*, probably of imitative origin.

placard n. 1481 plakart plate of armor; 1482 placuart sealed document; later, placard (1495); borrowed from Middle French placard, plackart, placquard sealed document, plate of armor, from Old French plaquier to piece together, stick, plaster, from Middle Dutch placken to patch, related to placke patch or stain; for suffix see -ARD. The meaning of poster is first recorded in English in 1560, influenced by Middle French, where this sense occurs since the 1400's. —v. 1813, from the noun.

placate v. 1678, probably developed from earlier placate, adj., placid (1662); borrowed from Latin placātus, past participle of placāre to calm, soothe, related to placēre to PLEASE; for suffix see *-ATE*¹; also probably a back formation from placation (1589) influenced by Middle French plaquier placate, from Latin. —placable adj. Before 1500, pleasing; later, capable of being placated, mild, gentle (1586); borrowed from Middle French placable, and directly from Latin placābilis, from placāre; for suffix see -ABLE.

place n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French place, and directly from Medieval Latin placea, placia place, spot, from Vulgar Latin plattea*, from Latin platea courtyard, broad street, from Greek platēta (hodós) broad (way), feminine of platýs broad. Derived forms from Latin platea include Middle Dutch plaetse (modern Dutch plaats), Middle High German platz (modern German Platz), Icelandic plāz (Swedish plats, Danish plads, Norwegian plass). Middle English place replaced Old English stow and stede. —v. 1442 placen; from the noun.

placebo n. 1785, New Latin, from Latin placēbō I shall please, future indicative of placēre to PLEASE. In Middle English, probably before 1200, used for the Latin rite of Vespers of the Office for the Dead, from the first word of the first antiphon (Psalm 114:9).

placenta n. 1677, ovarian tissue of flowering plants; later, organ by which the fetus is attached to the womb (1691), New Latin placenta uterina uterine cake, from Latin placenta flat cake, altered from Greek plakōnta, accusative of plakōeis flat.

placid adj. 1626, borrowed through French placide, and directly from Latin placidus pleasing, gentle, calm, from placēre to PLEASE.

placket n. 1605, of uncertain origin; possibly a variant of PLACARD, in the Middle English plackert piece of armor, undergarment (1483).

plagiarism n. 1621, formed from earlier English plagiary literary thief (1601) + -ism. English plagiary was borrowed (through influence of French plagiere) from Latin plagiarius kidnaper, seducer, plunderer, literary thief, from plagium kidnapping, from plaga snare, net. —plagiarist n. 1674, formed from English plagiary + -ist. —plagiarize v. 1716, formed from English plagiary + -ize.

plague n. Before 1382 plage blow, wound, affliction; later, torment or disease (about 1425), borrowed from Late Latin plāga pestilence, from Latin plāga blow or stroke, probably related to the root plag- of plangere to strike, lament. Latin plāga was also the source of late Old High German and late Old Icelandic plāga, Middle High German and Middle Dutch plāge, now represented by German Plage, Dutch plaage, and Norwegian plage.

The meaning of an epidemic disease that causes many deaths is first recorded in 1548–49, with the spelling plague, from Middle French plague. —v. 1481 plaghen, borrowed from Middle Dutch plaghen, from plaghe plague, from Late Latin plāga; later plage (1535); from the noun.

plaice n. 1267 plays; later playce (about 1300); borrowed from Old French plais, from Gallo-Romance platicem*, altered from Late Latin platessa flatfish, probably from Greek platýs flat or broad.

plaid n. 1512, Scottish, from Gaelic plaid blanket or mantle; cognate with Irish plaid, ploid blanket, quilt, plaid. —adj. Before 1600, from the noun.

plain adj. Probably before 1300 playne smooth, flat, straight; later plain open, clear, pure, simple (before 1325), and sincere, honest (about 1375); also, ordinary, unaffected (about 1386); borrowed from Old French plain, from Latin plānus flat, even, level. —adv. Before 1325 plain in a plain manner; from the adjective. —n. Probably before 1300 plain, pleyn, pleine flat stretch of land; borrowed from Old French plain, from Latin plānum level surface, from neuter of plānus flat, even, level. —Plains n. pl. 1755, broad open lands (earlier as singular plain the Indians living on the Plains, 1697, and the area itself, 1684); also in Middle English about 1395. —plainsong n. (before 1450) plaint n. Probably before 1200 pleinte mourning, lamentation; later plainte complaint; and legal statement of grievance (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French plaint, pleint, from Latin plāctus (genitive plāctūs) lamentation, beating, from plangere to lament, strike.

plaintiff n. Before 1400 playntyf, pleyntyff, borrowed through Anglo-French pleintif, noun use of Old French plaintif complaining.

plaintive adj. Before 1393 pleintif complaining, lamenting; later plaintive (1434); borrowed from Old French plaintif complaining, from plaint PLAIN; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning of mournful or sad is first recorded in 1579. Originally plaintiff and plaintive were the same word in English but the form ending in -iff retained its spelling and meaning in legal usage while the adjective use in the common vocabulary was Anglicized.

plait n. About 1385 plite pleat, fold, wrinkle; later pleit braid (before 1398); probably from the verb in English by influence of Anglo-French pleit, Old French pleit a fold, from Latin -plicatus, -plicitus folded, variant of plicatus, neuter past participle of plicare to fold. —v. About 1330 pliten to join, fasten; later pleiten (before 1376), and plaiten to fold (about 1380), also, to braid or weave (about 1385); though said to be from the noun in English, the dates in the record, and the development in meaning from “fold” to “braid” in first the verb and then the noun suggests that the verb is the original in English and that the verb was borrowed from Old French plier to fold, variant of pleieir from Latin plicare to fold.

plan n. 1678, plane perpendicular to the line of vision; borrowed from French plan plane surface, ground plan, map, learned borrowing from Latin plānum level or flat surface; also from Medieval Latin planus level or open (of land), from Latin plānus level or flat. The meaning of a drawing on a flat surface, and the sense of a scheme of action, design, method, are first recorded in 1706. —v. 1728, from the noun.

plane¹ n. level surface. 1604, borrowed from Latin plānum flat or level surface, from neuter of plānus flat or level. —adj. 1666, borrowed from Latin plānus flat or level. —v. soar, glide. 1410 planen, borrowed from Middle French planer, from plan plane surface, from Latin plānum flat or level surface (so called because a bird when soaring extends its wings in a plane). The meaning of both noun and verb is found in *plane*², an element of the compound airplane.

plane² n. airplane. 1908, shortened from AEROPLANE.

plane³ n. tool for smoothing surfaces. 1350, borrowed from Old French plane, and perhaps directly from Late Latin plāna, from plānāre make level (with a cutting tool), from Latin plānus level or flat. —v. Before 1325 planen to gloss over, explain away; later, to smooth, make even (about 1350); from the noun, and as a borrowing from Old French planer, and directly from Late Latin plānāre make level (with a cutting tool). —planer n. (1413).

plane⁴ n. tree. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French plane descended (with regular loss of t before n) from Latin platanus, from Greek plátanos, earlier called platanistos the plane tree of Asia Minor, associated with Greek platýs broad (from the shape of its leaf).

planet n. Probably before 1300 planete a celestial body having apparent motion; borrowed from Old French planete, and directly from Latin planēta, from Greek astēres planētai wandering stars, from planēsthai to wander. —planetary adj. 1593, formed from English planet + -ary, by influence of Middle French planétaire, from Old French planete planet + -aire -ary.

planetarium n. 1734, apparatus for showing the movement of the planets; New Latin, formed from Late Latin planēta PLANET + Latin -arium, neuter of -arius -ary.

planetesimal n. 1903, minute celestial body; formed from English planet + -esimal, abstracted from infinitesimal. —adj. 1904, probably from the noun.

plank n. 1294–95 plaunke; earlier as a surname Plank (1206); borrowed from Old North French planke, variant of Old French planche, from Late Latin planca board, slab. —v. 1432 plancken, from the noun.

plankton n. 1891, borrowing of German Plankton, from Greek planktón, neuter of planktós wandering, drifting, from plázesthai to wander, drift, from plázein (earlier plangye-*) to drive astray.

plant n. Before 1376 plante young plant, sprout, cutting; earlier as a surname Plant (1301); found in Old English (before 830) plante; borrowed from Latin planta sprout, slip, cutting, and later reborrowed into Middle English from Old French plante and directly from Latin planta; perhaps derived from plantāre* to drive in with the feet, push into the ground with the feet, from planta sole of the foot.

The sense of something planted or fixed developed into the meaning of a building for an industrial process, first recorded in 1789. The sense of someone who spies, as in the spy was a plant, is first recorded in 1812. —v. 1137 planten put in the ground to grow; later, to establish, settle (probably about 1380); developed from Old English (before 830) plantian to plant, and borrowed from Old French planter, both Old English and Old French borrowed from Latin plantāre to plant, set, from planta sprout. —planter n. (before 1382, one who plants seed; earlier, 1281, as a surname; 1957, container for plants).

plantain¹ n. banana. 1555 plantan bananalike fruit of the plantain tree; 1589 plantano the plantain tree, later Anglicized to plantain (1604); borrowing of Spanish plátano, plátano, from plantain² n. weed. Before 1300 plauntein; later plantayne (about 1395); borrowed through Anglo-French plaunteyne, and directly from Old French plantain from Latin plantāginem (nominative plantāgō) the common weed, from planta sole of the foot (from its flat leaves).

Medieval Latin plantanus plane tree, alteration (by association with Latin planta plant) of Greek plátanos and Latin platanus PLANE⁴ tree; so called from the broad, flat leaves of the plant.

plantation n. Probably before 1425 plantacion source (of nerves extending from the brain); later, the act of planting (before 1450); borrowed from Middle French plantation, and directly from Latin plantātiōnem (nominative plantātiō) a planting, from plantāre to plant; for suffix see -ATION.

The meaning of a large farm on which cotton, tobacco, etc., is grown is first recorded in 1706.

plantigrade adj. 1831, walking on the whole sole of the foot; borrowing of French plantigrade (1795), formed from Latin planta sole of the foot + gradus step. —n. 1835, from the adjective.

plaque n. 1848, borrowing of French plaque, from Middle French plaque metal plate, coin, of uncertain origin (perhaps through Flemish placke, plak small coin; originally flat disk or board, or directly from Middle Dutch placke disk, patch, stain).

The meaning of a patch of fibrous tissue on the wall of an artery is first recorded in 1891, and that of a deposit of bacteria that adheres to the teeth in 1898.

plash n. Probably before 1400 plashe a pool of water, puddle; developed from Old English plæsc; cognate with Middle Dutch and Flemish plash pool. The later meaning of a splash is first recorded in 1513. —v. 1582, probably from the noun.

plasma n. 1712, form or shape; earlier plasm, plasme mold in which something is formed (1620); borrowed from Late Latin plasma, from Greek plásma something molded or created, from plássein to mold.

The sense of the liquid part of blood or lymph (from which blood is molded or made) is first recorded in 1845, and that of a highly ionized gas, in 1928.

-plast a combining form used to name particles, granules, cells, or other small formations of living matter, as in bioplast, chromoplast. Adopted from Greek plastós formed, molded.

plaster n. About 1150 plaster medicinal application, such as a poultice; developed from Old English (before 1000) plaster medicinal application; also 1284 plastre cementing material, borrowed from Old French plastre cementing material; both the Old English and Old French forms borrowed from Latin emplastra, emplastrum a plaster, from Greek émplastron, variant of émplaston salve or plaster, from neuter of émplastós daubed on (en- on + plastós molded, from plássein to mold; originally, to spread thin). —v. Before 1325 plasteren to daub or cover with plaster; probably from the noun in Middle English; also 1373 plastren, borrowed from Old French plastrir, from Old French plastre, n. —plasterer n. 1368, borrowed from Old French plastrier, from plastrir to plaster.

plastic adj. 1632, molding or giving shape to material; borrowed, perhaps through influence of French plastique, from Latin plasticus, from Greek plastikós able to be molded, pertaining to molding, from plastós molded, from plássein to form, mold; for suffix see -IC.

The meaning of easily molded, shaped, or influenced, is first recorded in 1711. —n. 1905, solid substance that can be molded; from the adjective. The synthetic product made from oil derivatives (i.e. modern plastic) is first recorded in 1909. —plasticity n. 1782–83, formed from English plastic, adj. + -ity.

plate n. About 1250 plate gold or silver coin; later, flat sheet of metal (about 1300), and metal utensils, shallow dish (1415, but see platter 1280); borrowed from Old French plate, noun use of plate, adj., feminine of plat flat, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin plata plate, piece of metal, probably from Vulgar Latin plattus*, perhaps formed on the model of Greek platýs flat, broad. —v. About 1380 platen, from the noun. —platelet n. 1895, formed from English plate + -let (earlier in reference to blood platelets as blood plate, 1885).

plateau n. 1796, borrowing of French plateau from Old French platel, diminutive of plat flat surface or thing, noun use of plat adj. The sense of a level at which something stabilizes, is first recorded in 1894. —v. 1952, from the noun.

platen n. 1541, flat metal plate; borrowed from Middle French platine, from Old French plat flat.

platform n. 1550, plan of action, scheme, design; borrowed from Middle French plate-forme, literally, flat form (from Old French plate flat + forme form).

The meaning of a raised level surface from the literal sense “flat form” is first recorded in 1560. The sense of a statement of policies of a political party (1803) developed from the literal meaning but was influenced by the sense of a set of rules governing church doctrine, found as early as 1648.

The meaning of a railroad station platform is first recorded in 1838.

platinum n. 1812, as an alteration of platina platinum (1750), a borrowing of Spanish platina, diminutive of plata silver (so called because the element resembles silver), from Vulgar Latin plattus* flat; see PLATE.

platitude n. 1812, flatness, dullness, triteness, in relation to use of language; borrowing of French platitude flatness, vapidness, from Old French plat flat (see PLATE), formed on analogy of latitude, certitude, etc.; for suffix see -TUDE.

Platonic adj. 1533, of or having to do with the Greek philosopher Plato; later, now usually platonian, of or having to do with love free of sensual desire (1631) in reference to Plato's writings in his Symposium.

platoon n. 1637, borrowed from French peloton platoon, group of persons, from Middle French peloton, literally, little ball, diminutive of Old French pelote ball; see PELLET; for suffixal ending see -OON. The sense of a group of football players trained to act as a defensive unit, is first recorded in 1941. —v. 1706, to fire a volley; later redeveloped with the sense of alternate (baseball or football players) in the same position (1955), from the noun use in football.

platter n. About 1280 platerie, borrowed from Anglo-French plater, Old French plate PLATE, and from Anglo-Latin platera, of uncertain origin.

platypus n. 1799, New Latin, from Greek platýpous flat-footed (platýs broad, flat + poús foot).

plaudit n. 1624, shortened from earlier plaudite an actor's request for applause (1567); borrowing of Latin plaudite! applaud! (the customary appeal for applause made by Roman actors at the end of a play). Latin plaudite is 2nd person plural imperative of plaudere to clap, applaud, approve.

The English form plaudite was originally pronounced in three syllables; later, the sound represented by the final -e became mute, giving rise to the shortened form plaudit.

plausible adj. 1541, acceptable, agreeable, pleasing, deserving applause; borrowed from Latin plausibilis deserving applause, acceptable, from plaus-, past participle stem of plaudere to applaud; for suffix see -IBLE. The meaning of seemingly true or reasonable, as applied to arguments or statements, is first recorded in 1565. —plausibility n. 1596, quality of being agreeable, formed in English from Latin plausibilis agreeable, acceptable + English -ity.

play n. Probably before 1200 plage, ploge, pleige, pleowe, plohe, variously found meaning a game or martial sport, activity of children, joke or jesting, revelry; later play, pleie (before 1250), and dramatic performance (before 1325); developed from Old English (West Saxon) plega recreation, exercise, quick movement (about 725, in Beowulf), related to plegian to exercise, frolic, perform music; cognate with Middle Dutch playen, pleyen to dance, play, rejoice, and perhaps with pleghen attend to, practice (modern Dutch plegen commit, practice), Old Saxon plēgan vouch for, take charge of, Old Frisian plega tend to, and Old High German pflegen to tend, attend to, cultivate (modern German pflegen), from West Germanic plegan*.

The meaning of action, operation, working (as in the play of fancy) is found probably before 1200, in fulle ploge freedom of movement, as is the sense of free action, scope for activity (in to allow the fullest play). —v. Probably before 1200 pleien; later plaien (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 830) plegian to play. —player n. About 1340 player reveler; earlier as a surname Pleyere (1275); developed from Old English plegeri (about 1000); formed from plegan + -er¹. —playful adj. About 1225 pleiful, formed in Middle English from plei play + -ful.

plaza n. 1836, borrowing of Spanish plaza square, place, from Latin platea courtyard, broad street.

plea n. the noun form of plead. About 1250 plait strife, complaint, later plai lawsuit, controversy (about 1300); ple (probably about 1350); borrowed through Anglo-French plai, and directly from Old French plait, plet, plai lawsuit, decision, decree, from Late Latin placitum decision, decree, from Latin, opinion, decree; literally, that which pleases, from neuter past participle of placere to PLEASE.

The meaning of an appeal, argument, excuse, is first recorded in English before 1550. —plea bargain (1968); v. (1973). —plea bargaining (1963).

plead v. the verb form of plea (itself found as a verb in English from about 1440). About 1250 plaiden make a plea in court, argue a case; later pleden (about 1387); borrowed through Anglo-French pleder, and directly from Old French pleidier, plaidier, from Medieval Latin placitare, from Late Latin placitum PLEA. A variant form, Middle English plaiten (before 1325), was borrowed from Old French plaitier, altered from plaidier by influence of plait lawsuit.

The meaning of request, beg, is first recorded probably before 1390.

pleasant adj. About 1378 plesaunte pleasing or agreeable; earlier pleisant pleased, favorable; also, as a surname Plesent (1320); borrowed from Old French plaisant, present participle of plaisir to PLEASE; for suffix see -ANT. —pleasantry n. 1655, borrowed from French plaisanterie, from Old French pleanterie, from plaisant pleasant; for suffix see -RY.

please v. About 1303 plesen to satisfy, placate, appease; later, delight (probably about 1380); also pleasen (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French plesir, plaisir to please, from Latin placere to be acceptable, be liked or approved; related to placare to soothe, quiet.

The intransitive use of to be pleased, to like (as in I do as I please) is first recorded in (1500–20). The imperative use (as in Please follow me) was probably originally a shortening of if you please (1530). —pleasure n. About 1370 plesure will, wish, desire; later pleasure (probably before 1425); also, gratification, enjoyment, liking (before 1450); borrowed from Old French plesir, plaisir enjoyment, delight, from plaisir, v., to please; for suffix see -URE. —pleasurable adj. 1579, formed from English pleasure + -able.

pleat n. 1581, variant of PLAID, n. Although the form pleat is not found in print from the late 1600's to the late 1800's, the pronunciation it represents did survive and led to reestablishment of the written form pleat in the sense of a fold in cloth. —v. 1570, variant of plait, v. Use of the spelling pleat for the verb parallels the noun.

plebe or pleb n. 1833–34 plebe; later pleb (1852); probably a shortened form of PLEBEIAN or perhaps an extension of meaning and a revival in form of English plebe the common people (1612); borrowed from French plèbe, from Old French plebe, or perhaps a learned borrowing among students from Latin plēbem (nominative plēbs); see PLEBEIAN.

plebeian n. 1533, commoner of ancient Rome; possibly borrowed from Middle French plébéien, or formed in English from Latin plēbeius of the common people, from plēbēs (later plēbs) the common people + English -ian. The sense of any commoner is first recorded in English before 1586. —adj. 1566, from the noun.

plebiscite n. 1860, borrowed from French plébiscite, learned borrowing from Latin plēbiscitum a decree or resolution of the people (plēbis, genitive of plēbs the common people + scitum decree, from neuter past participle of sciscere to assent, vote for, approve); for suffix see -ITE¹. An earlier use in the sense of law enacted by a Roman plebeian is first recorded in 1533.

plectrum n. 1626, borrowing of Latin plēctrum, from Greek plēktron thing to strike with, from plēk-, root of plēssein to strike.

pledge n. 1348 plegge a surety, bail; also pledge (before 1463); borrowed from Old French plege, probably from Frankish plegan* to guarantee (compare Old Saxon plēgan vouch for).

The meaning of a solemn promise or vow is first recorded in English in 1814. —v. Probably about 1400 pleggen give in pledge, promise; later, become surety for (before 1439); from the noun in English, and borrowed from Old French plegier to guarantee, bail, from plege pledge.

For an explanation of the spelling -dge see DRUDGE.

plenary adj. 1517, borrowed from Medieval Latin plenarius entire, complete, from Latin plēnus full. Modern English plenary replaced Middle English plener (recorded about 1250); borrowed through Anglo-French plener, Old French plenier, from Medieval Latin plenarius from Latin plēnus full; for suffix see -ARY.

plenipotentiary adj. About 1645, borrowed from French plénipotentiaire, and directly from Medieval Latin plenipotentarius, from Late Latin plēnipotentem (nominative plēnipotēns) having full power (Latin plēnus full + potentem powerful); for suffix see -ARY. —n. 1656, from the adjective, influenced by the noun in French.

plenitude n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Old French plenitude, and directly from Latin plēnitūdinem (nominative plēnitūdo) abundance, completeness, fullness, from plēnus complete, full; for suffix see -TUDE.

plenteous adj. Probably before 1400 plentiose, plentius, alteration of plentiuos (1300) and plenteuous abundant or plentiful (before 1382); borrowed from Old French plentiveus, plentivous, fertile or rich, from plentif abundant, from plenté abundance + -if (Latin -ivus); see PLENTY; for suffix see -OUS.

plenty n. Before 1250 plente full supply, abundance; later plenty (1373); borrowed from Old French plenté, earlier plentet, from Latin plēnitātem (nominative plēnitās) fullness, from plēnus complete, full; for suffix see -TY². A now obsolete form plenthith, (before 1382), plentheth (about 1250), existed until the mid to late 1400's; borrowed from Old French plentet. —adj. Before 1325 plente full or abundant; from the noun. —plenti-ful adj. About 1400 plenteful, formed from Middle English plente, n. + -ful.

plenum n. 1678, space completely filled; borrowing of Latin plēnum (spatium) full (space), neuter of plēnus complete, full. The meaning of a full assembly (of legislators) is first recorded in 1772.

pleonasm n. 1586, borrowed from Late Latin pleonasmus, from Greek pleonasmós abundance, exaggeration (in grammar) redundancy, from pleonázein abound, be redundant, from plēōn, plēōn more, comparative of polýs much. —pleonastic adj. 1778, probably a shortened form of earlier pleonastical plethora n. 1541, abnormal condition caused by an excess of body fluid; borrowing of Late Latin plēthōra, from Greek plēthōrā fullness, from plēthein be full. The sense of too much is first recorded in English in 1700.

(1653), formed on the pattern of such pairs as sarcasm, sarcastic, etc.; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL.

pleura n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin pleura*, from Greek pleurā side of the body, rib.

pleurisy n. Before 1398 pleuresi; borrowed from Old French pleurisie, and directly from Medieval Latin pleurisis pleurisy, altered from Latin pleuritis pain in the side, from Greek pleuritis, from pleurā side of the body, rib.

plexus n. 1682, New Latin, from past participle of Latin plectere to twine, braid, fold. New Latin was probably influenced by French plexus.

pliable adj. 1392, easily bent, flexible; borrowing of Old French pliable flexible, from plier to bend, see *PLY*² fold; for suffix see -ABLE. — pliability n. 1768, formed from pliable on the model of such pairs as durable, durability.

pliant adj. Before 1382 pleaunt turning about; later plyant, pliaunt bending easily, malleable; borrowed from Old French pliant bending, present participle of plier to bend, see *PLY*² fold; for suffix see -ANT. — pliancy n. 1711, formed from English pliant + -cy.

pliers n. pl. 1568–69, formed from English *ply*², v. + -ers, plural of -er¹.

plight¹ n. pledge. About 1250 pligt; later plyt (probably about 1380) pledge or promise, usually with great risk to the pledger in default; developed from Old English pliht danger, risk (before 830); cognate with Old Frisian plicht danger, concern, care, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch plicht obligation, duty, Old High German pfliht (modern German Pflicht); from Proto-Germanic plez-*, found in Old English plēon to risk the loss of, expose to danger.

The form with gh was a spelling alteration introduced on the model of weight, straight, flight. — v. Probably before 1200 plihten to promise or pledge, swear allegiance; later plighen (probably before 1350); developed from Late Old English (before 1016) pligtan endanger, from pliht danger or risk.

plight² n. condition or state, usually bad. About 1175 plihthe; later plight (before 1275); also plyt (probably about 1380) danger, harm, strife; borrowed from Anglo-French plit, pleit, Old French pleit, plait condition; originally, way of folding. The common pronunciation and spelling plyt (about 1380) is evidence that *plight*² was confused with *plight*¹ in the converging sense of entangling risk, with ensuing harmful consequences, in the 1400's, and further by the shift in spelling of both words after 1425 to plight.

plinth n. 1611, borrowed probably from French plinthe (1544), and directly from Latin plinthus, from Greek plinthos plinth, brick, tile.

plod v. 1562, work laboriously; 1566, walk heavily or slowly; of uncertain origin, probably imitative, and not connected with Middle English plodder a ruffian.

plosive n., adj. 1899, shortened form of explosive.

plot n. Late Old English plot (probably before 1100) small area, small piece of ground; of unknown origin.

The sense of ground plan, map, chart is first recorded in 1551, that of a plan or scheme in 1587 and specifically a secret plan in 1594 (in this latter sense plot was probably influenced by accidental similarity within complot, 1577, borrowed from Old French complot combined plan, itself of unknown origin). — v. 1588, make a plan; 1589, contrive; from the noun.

plover n. 1304 pluver, later plover (about 1353); borrowing of Anglo-French plover, and directly from Old French plovier, pluvier, from Vulgar Latin pluviārius* rain bird, from Latin pluvia rain; see PLUVIAL.

plow n. Probably about 1150 plowe, later plow (about 1300), and plough (before 1325); developed from Late Old English (before 1100) plōg, plōh plow, plowland (a measure of land); possibly a borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic plōgr plow, Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish pløg), cognate with Old Frisian plōch plow, Old Saxon plōg, Middle Low German plōch, Middle Dutch ploech (modern Dutch ploeg), and Old High German pfluoc (modern German Pflug). The word appeared late in the Germanic languages. Early Old English used sulh (cognate with Latin sulcus furrow). — v. 1374 pluen; also plowen (before 1400), from plough, plow, n. — plowman n. (about 1300) — plowshare n. Before 1387 plow schare.

ploy n. 1722, pursuit, pastime, game, sport; possibly a shortened form of employ, n., in the obsolete meaning of employment, use (1666).

pluck v. Probably about 1300 ploken; later plukken (before 1376); developed from Old English (before 1000) pluccian, pluccian pull off or cull; later, draw or snatch; borrowed from Vulgar Latin pilūccāre* remove the hair, from earlier pilūccāre*, frequentative form of pilūccāre*, extended from Latin pilāre pull out hair, from pilus hair. The Old English forms are cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch plucken to pluck, Middle High German pfücken, and Old Icelandic plukka, plokka. — n. Probably before 1400 plucke; from plucken, plukken, v.

The sense of courage, boldness, originally boxing slang, is first recorded in 1785; developed from pluck the heart or other viscera of an animal (1611). — plucky adj. 1842, formed from English pluck, n. + -y¹.

plug n. 1627, probably borrowed from Dutch plug, from Middle Dutch plugge a bung, stopper; cognate with Middle Low German pluck, plugge plug, Middle High German pflock, and modern German Pflock.

The meaning of an advertisement, publicity, promotion is first recorded in 1902, perhaps from the verb sense of to strive for, work energetically at (about 1865). — v. 1630, from the noun.

plum n. About 1150 plum; later plumme (before 1425, showing shortening of the vowel, as in thumb), and ploume (about 1450); developed from Old English plūme (about 700), corresponding to Middle Low German plūme plum and Old High German pflūmo plum tree (modern German Pflaume plum); variants of earlier Middle Low German and Middle Dutch prūme (modern Dutch prui plum) and Old High German pfrūma, early borrowings from Vulgar Latin prūna*, formed from Latin prunum plum, from Greek proūnon, later form of proūmnōn.

The meaning of something very good or desirable is first recorded in English in 1825. The differentiation of prune (as a dried plum) and plum in English is first found in Middle English about 1350 in drie prunes, prune being borrowed from Old French prune a plum, from Vulgar Latin prūna* and directly from Latin porānum.

plumage n. About 1395, borrowing of Old French plumage, from plume PLUME; for suffix see -AGE.

plumb n. Before 1325 plum; later plumbe (probably about 1400); borrowed from Old French plom, plomb sounding lead, and directly from Latin plumbum lead. —adj. Before 1460 plom vertical; from the noun. The meaning of complete (as in plumb foolishness), is first recorded in 1748. —adv. About 1400 plum vertically; from the noun. The meaning of thoroughly (as in plumb worn out) is found in 1587. —v. 1392 plumen to immerse; later plumben to sink like lead (before 1425); from the noun. The meaning of sound with a plumb is first recorded before 1568.

plumber n. 1370 plumbiner worker in lead; earlier as a surname Plumberre (1102–07); also plummer (1399–1400); borrowed from Old French plomier, and directly from Latin plumbārius worker in lead, from plumbum lead; for suffix see -ER¹. —plumbing n. 1450, the act of attaching a weight to a fishing line; from plumb, v. + -ing¹. The meaning of water pipes of a building is first recorded in 1884, though the sense of work of one who fashions things in lead is found in 1666.

plume n. About 1399, borrowing of Old French plume, and borrowed directly from Latin plūma feather, down. —v. About 1399 plumen to strip prey of feathers; later, to adorn with plumes (probably before 1437); borrowed from Old French plumer pluck feathers from plume, n., plume. The sense of smooth the feathers, preen, is first recorded in 1702, after the figurative sense of show pride in oneself (1643).

plummet n. About 1384 plomet; borrowed from Old French plomet, diminutive of plom, plomb sounding lead, see PLUMB; for suffix see -ET. —v. 1626, to fathom, sound from the noun.

plump¹ adj. rounded out. 1481, blunt, dull, stupid; later, of full and rounded form, implied in plumpness (1545); borrowed from Middle Dutch plomp (or Middle Low German plump, plomp) blunt, thick, massive, stumpy, probably related to plompen fall or drop heavily, PLUMP². —v. 1533, probably from the adjective.

plump² v. fall or drop heavily. Probably before 1300 plumten to plunge abruptly into water; later plumpen to immerse quickly (before 1475); borrowed from Middle Dutch plompen, or Middle Low German plumpen, probably of imitative origin. —n.

1596, from the verb; but found also in the form plumb a sudden plunge (before 1450). —adv. 1594, from the verb. The sense of directly, bluntly is first recorded before 1734. —adj. 1611, descending directly, from the verb. The sense of direct or blunt, as in a plump denial, is first recorded in 1789.

plunder v. 1632, borrowed from modern German plündern, from Middle High German plundern, from plunder, blunder household goods; cognate with Middle Dutch plunder, plonder household goods, clothes, Middle Low German plunder-, Frisian plunje, plonje clothes. —n. 1643, act of plundering; 1647 goods plundered, booty, spoil, from the verb.

plunge v. About 1380 plungen to immerse, submerge, thrust; borrowed from Old French plungier, ploncher, from Vulgar Latin plumbicāre* to heave a sounding lead, from Latin plumbum lead. —n. Probably before 1400, deep pool for diving, from plungen, v. The act of plunging, a dive into water, is first recorded in 1711.

plunk v. 1805, pluck a stringed instrument; 1808, drop down abruptly; probably of imitative origin. —n. 1809, from the verb. —adv. 1894, from the verb.

pluperfect adj. Before 1500 pluperfyt, shortened from Latin (tempus praeteritum) plūs (quam) perfectum (past tense) more (than) perfect (plūs more; and perfectum, neuter of perfectus PERFECT).

plural adj. About 1378 plurel, borrowed from Old French plurel more than one, from Latin plūralis of or belonging to more than one (also in grammar), from plūs (genitive plūris) more, see PLUS; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. Before 1398 plurell, from the adjective. —pluralism n. 1818, the holding of two or more church benefices at one time; formed from English plural + -ism, by influence of plurality. The meaning in philosophy that reality is made up of a plurality of things is first recorded in 1882, and that in sociology of ethnic or cultural diversity in society in 1933. —plurality n. Before 1376 pluralité the holding of two or more church benefices at one time; borrowed from Old French pluralité large number, and probably directly from Late Latin plūralitatem (nominative plūralitās), from Latin plūralis plural; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of being plural is first recorded before 1398 and that of the greater number or part, majority, in 1578, as a borrowing of French pluralité.

pluri- a combining form meaning more than one, several or many, multi-, as in pluricellular, pluridisciplinary consisting of several branches of learning. Borrowed from Latin plūri-, from plūs (genitive plūris) more; see PLUS.

pluripotent adj. 1925, formed from English pluri- several or many + potential.

plus prep. 1579, borrowing of Latin plūs more (comparative of multus much). Latin plūs (Old Latin plous) is from earlier pleus*, altered (by influence of minus less) from pleos*, originally neuter comparative. The English sense of added to, did not exist in Latin and probably originated in commercial language of the Middle Ages. —adj. 1756, from the preposition. —n. 1654, from the preposition. The sense of an addition, gain, advantage, is first recorded in 1791. —conj., adv. 1968, in addition, and; from the preposition.

plush n. 1594, borrowed from Middle French pluche shag, plush, contraction of peluche, literally, hairy fabric, from Old French peluchier to pluck (final process in weaving plush) from Vulgar Latin pilicāre* remove the hair; see PLUCK. —adj. 1927, from the noun. —plushy adj. 1611, formed from English plush, n. + *-y*¹.

plutocracy n. 1652, borrowed from Greek ploutokratia (plōtōs wealth + -kratīā rule, from krátos rule, power); for suffix see -CRACY. —plutocrat n. 1850, formed from English plutocracy, on analogy of aristocracy, aristocrat.

plutonium n. 1942, New Latin, from Pluto the planet (from Latin Plūtō god of the region of the dead, from Greek Plōtōn god of wealth, + -ium); so called because plutonium follows neptunium in the periodic table of elements just as the planet Pluto orbits beyond Neptune in the solar system.

pluvial adj. 1656, borrowed from French pluvial, learned borrowing from Latin pluviālis pertaining to rain, from (aqua) pluvia rain (water), from feminine of pluvius (earlier plovius*), adj., rainy, from plovere to rain; for suffix see -AL¹.

ply¹ v. work with, use. Probably about 1380 plyen to cover; 1385, to use, apply, employ, work busily at; shortened from applien, aplien join to, apply, use; borrowed from Old French aplier, from Latin applicāre to attach, apply (op- on + plicāre to lay, fold, twist). The meaning of urge, is first recorded in 1587. The sense of travel regularly between places (1803) probably developed from that of steer a course, move onwards (1556, also found in Middle English about 1410).

ply² n. layer. 1532, borrowed from Middle French pli a fold, from Old French plier, formed from the accented stem of pleier, ployer to bend or fold. It is probable that the noun in English was also in part influenced in its development by the verb, if not developed from it in some instances. The term plywood, referring to several thin layers of wood bonded together, is first recorded in 1907. —v. Probably about 1380 plyen, borrowed from Old French plier, alteration (influenced by pli-, the accented stem) of pleier, ployer to bend or fold, from Latin plicāre (earlier plecāre*) to fold, lay.

pneumatic adj. 1659, a shortened form of earlier pneumatical (1609), perhaps influenced by Middle French pneumatique, and borrowed directly from Latin pneumaticus of the wind, belonging to the air, from Greek pneumatikós from pneûma wind or breath, from pneîn to blow or breathe; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL.

pneumonia n. 1603, New Latin, from Greek pneumonía inflammation of the lungs, from pneûmōn (genitive pneûmonos) lung, alteration (perhaps by association with pneîn to breathe) of pleûmōn lung.

poach¹ v. trespass. 1528, to push or poke; borrowed from Middle French pocher to thrust, poke, from Old French pochier poke out, gouge, from Germanic (compare Middle High German puchen, bochen to pound, beat, knock, modern German pochen, Middle Dutch bōken to beat, pōken to poke).

The meaning of trespass on is probably first recorded in 1611, perhaps an extension of thrust oneself, intrude (before 1550), or as a translation of to pocket another man's labor (pocher le labour d'autrui), thence: 1) pocher to pocket, from poche a pocket, pouch, or 2) pocher to thrust (see above). —poacher n. 1667, from English *poach¹ + *-er*¹.*

poach² v. cook in a liquid. About 1450 (implied in pocched, of an egg cooked by breaking it into boiling water), from pochee poached egg (before 1399); borrowed from Old French poché, pochié, past participle of pochier, literally, put into a pocket (the white forming a pocket around the yolk), from poche bag, pocket, possibly from Germanic (compare Old English pocca, pohha bag, see POKE²).

pock n. About 1280 pokkes disease accompanied by pimply sores; later poke a pimple (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 1000) poc pustule; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch pocke pock (Dutch pok), and dialectal German Pfoche.

The plural forms pokkes, pocks developed into modern English pox (1503).

pocket n. 1350 pokete pocket, bag, sack; earlier as a surname Poket (1210); also pockete (about 1410); borrowed from Anglo-French pokete, diminutive of Old North French poke, poque bag, from a Germanic source (compare Old English pocca, pohha bag; see POKE²). —v. 1589, from the noun. The sense of to appropriate is first recorded in English in 1637. —adj. 1612, from the noun, as in pocket watch (1640). —pocketbook n. 1617, a small book; 1685, a notebook; 1816, a woman's purse. —pocketful adj. (1611) —pocket money (1632) pod n. 1688, of uncertain origin; associated with podware seed of legumes, seed grain, 1467, and with parallel forms codware husked or seeded plants, such as peas (1398) and cod husk of seeded plants (about 1150, found in Old English about 1000).

podiatry n. 1914, formed in English from Greek pod- (stem of poús foot) + iātrēā healing, from iātrós physician. —podiatrist n. (1914) podium n. 1789, borrowed through French podium (1765), and directly from Latin podium raised platform, from Greek pódion foot of a vase, diminutive of poús (genitive podós) foot.

Podunk n. 1846, originally used attributively for a small group of Indians living around the Podunk River in Connecticut (1656); borrowed from Algonquian (Mohegan or Massachusetts) Potunk, perhaps alteration of ptukohke neck or corner of land.

poem n. 1548, composition in verse, poetry; replacing poesy, and borrowed from Middle French poème, from Latin poëma verse, poetry, from Greek poëma, early variant of poiēma thing made or created, fiction, poetical work, from poieîn, poiēin to make or compose.

poesy n. About 1378 poysye; also poesye (about 1385); borrowed from Old French poésie, from Latin poësis poetry, from Greek pōēsis, variant of poiēsis composition, poetry, from poiēin to make or compose.

poet n. Before 1325 poet writer of poems; earlier as a surname Poet (about 1200); borrowed from Old French poëte, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin poëta poet, author, from Greek poētēs, early variant of poiētēs maker, author, poet, from poieîn to make or compose. —poetic adj. 1530, shortened form of poetical (about 1380); probably formed from Middle English poet + -ical, later -ic, perhaps by influence of Old French poétique, and Latin poeticus.

The phrase poetic justice (for the ideal justice shown often in plays and stories) appeared originally as poetical justice in 1679.

poetaster n. 1599, New Latin poetaster, by influence of Middle French poetastre, from Latin poëta POET + -aster, diminutive suffix.

poetry n. About 1380 poetrie poetry, creative literature; borrowed from Old French pöeterie, pöetrie, and probably directly from Medieval Latin poetria, from Latin poëta POET; for suffix see -RY.

pogrom n. 1882, borrowing of Yiddish pogrom, from Russian pogrom devastation or destruction (po- by, through + grom thunder, roar, related to gremet' to thunder, roar). —v. 1915, from the noun.

poi n. 1823, food made from the taro root, borrowing of Hawaiian poi.

poignant adj. About 1387–95 poynaunt pungent, tart, painfully sharp, distressing; borrowed from Old French poignant, present participle of poindre to prick, from Latin pungere to prick; for suffix see -ANT. —poignancy n. Before 1688, sharpness or keenness of words, etc.; formed from English poignant + -cy.

poinsettia n. 1836, New Latin Poinsettia genus name of the plant, formed in allusion to Joel R. Poinsett (American minister to Mexico, said to have found the plant in Mexico) + -ia, noun ending.

point n. Probably before 1200, opportune moment or chance; also, state of being, condition; later, sharp end of a sword, knife, etc.; also, subject or topic (about 1300); and a small mark, dot, period (about 1353); borrowing from two Old French words: 1) in the older sense of opportunity, borrowed from Old French point prick, mark, small measure of space or time, from Vulgar Latin punctum* a puncture, mark on dice, moment, alteration of Latin punctum, neuter past participle of pungere to prick, stab; and 2) in the later sense of a sharp end, borrowed from Old French pointe a pricking, sharp end, from Medieval Latin puncta sharp point, altered from Latin puncta, feminine past participle of pungere to prick. —v. About 1300, in the past participle pointed having a sharp end; later pointen punctuate or end (before 1376); and to prick, stab (before 1400); borrowed from Old French pointer, from 1) Old French point prick, mark, and 2) Old French pointe a pricking, sharp end. The meaning of aim or direct at is first found in the sense of direct attention to (probably before 1387). —pointed adj. About 1300, having a sharp point; 1665, cutting, stinging, sharp. —pointer n. 1500, maker of needlepoint lace; 1574, thing that points; 1717, game dog; formed from point, n., v. + *-er*¹. —pointless adj. About 1330 pointles blunt; 1726, futile.

poise n. 1421 pois weight; later, significance (1457); borrowed from Old French pois, peis weight, balance, consideration, from Medieval Latin pesum weight, from Latin pēsum, noun use of neuter past participle of pendere to weigh. The sense of steadiness, composure, is first recorded in English in 1649. —v. About 1378 poisen to weigh; borrowed from Old French pois-, stressed stem of peser to weigh, consider, from Vulgar Latin pēsare*, from Latin pēnsare to weigh, consider, frequentative form of pendere to weigh.

poison n. Probably about 1200 poisun deadly substance; borrowed from Old French poison a potion, poisonous drink, from Latin pōtōnem (nominative pōtiō) a drink, poisonous drink. —v. Probably before 1300 poysonen to kill by poison, from the noun in Middle English, and borrowed from Old French poisoner to give to drink, from poison, n. —poison ivy (1784) —poisonous adj. 1573–80, formed from English poison, n. + -ous.

poke¹ v. push with something pointed. Probably before 1300 puken to poke, nudge; later poken (before 1325); of uncertain origin (compare Middle Dutch pōken to poke, poke dagger, and Middle Low German pōken to stick with a knife; suggesting a Proto-Germanic stem puk-*, preserved in Low German). —n. 1796, from the verb.

poke² n. sack. 1228, probably borrowed from Old North French poke, poque (corresponding to Old French poche pocket, POUCH) from a Germanic source (compare Old English pocca, pohha bag, pocket, Middle Dutch poke, dialectal German Pfoch, and Old Icelandic poki pouch).

poke³ n. bonnet. 1770, brim of a bonnet, from *poke*¹ to push. The meaning of a bonnet with a projecting brim is first recorded as poke bonnet (1820).

poke⁴ n. kind of weed used in medicine; pokeweed. 1634, tobacco plant, shortened form of uppowoc (1588); borrowed from Algonquian (Virginia) uppowoc; later pokeweed (1708); shortened form of earlier puccon (1612); borrowed from Algonquian (Virginia) puccon any plant used for dyeing.

poker¹ n. metal rod. 1534, formed from English *poke*¹, v. + *-er*¹.

poker² n. card game. 1834, of uncertain origin (variously explained as borrowed from German Poch, Pochspiel card game similar to poker, from pochen to brag as a bluff; a popular alternative is that poker was borrowed from French poque another card game resembling poker, said to have come ultimately from the Persian āš nāš), but without documentation these explanations are mere speculation.

pokey¹ n. jail. 1919, perhaps an alteration of earlier pogy or pogie poorhouse (1891); of unknown origin.

poky or pokey² adj. moving slowly. 1849, confined, shabby; later, slow, dull (1856); formed from English *poke*¹ to push + *-y*¹.

polar adj. 1551, borrowed from New Latin polaris of or pertaining to the poles, from Latin polus POLE²; for suffix see -AR.

—polarity n. 1646, formed from English polar + -ity.
 —polarization n. 1812, from French polarisation, formed from polariser + -ation. —polarize v. 1811, borrowed from French polariser, formed from New Latin polaris polar + French -iser -ize, and formed in English from polar + -ize.

pole¹ n. long, slender piece of wood, etc. Before 1325 polle; earlier in a surname Waghepol (1218); also, pole (1340); developed from Old English (about 1050) pāl stake; borrowed from Latin pālus (earlier pāglos*) stake. Old English pāl is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon pāl stake, Middle Dutch pael, Old High German pfāl, and Old Icelandic páll. —v. 1573, furnish with poles; later, push with a pole (1753); from the noun.

pole² n. either end of the earth's axis. About 1380 pool; also pole (1391); borrowed perhaps through Old French pole, pol, or directly from Latin polus end of an axis, the sky, from Greek pólos pivot, axis, the sky.

poleax n. 1356–57 poleax (more commonly polax, pollax) a kind of battle-ax; formed from pol head (see POLL) + ax. The modern spelling poleax was influenced by *pole*¹.

polecat n. 1320 polcat, probably formed of Anglo-French pol, pul, from Old French poule, pol fowl, hen + cat, variant of chat, reinforced by Middle English cat; perhaps so called because it preys on poultry or the first element pol-, later pul-, is from Old French pulent stinking, because of the polecat's foul odor, but the form pulcat does not appear before 1440.

polemic n. 1638, borrowed probably from French polémique, from Middle French polemique, adj., disputatious or controversial; or perhaps, directly from Greek polemiakós warlike, belligerent, from pólemos war; for suffix see -ic. —adj. 1641, borrowed probably from French polémique; or perhaps, directly from Greek polemiakós.

polemology n. 1938, formed from Greek pólemos war + English -logy. —polemologist n. 1970, formed from English polemology + -ist.

police n. 1716, public order, regulation of a community enforced through Commissioners of Police (1714); earlier, civil organization (1530, police, not differentiated from earlier policie, probably before 1439, and perhaps about 1390; see *POLICY*¹). English police law enforcement (1730), was borrowed from modern French police, but in its older sense of civil organization was borrowed from Old French policie civil organization; see *POLICY*¹. —v. 1589 (implied in policing), keep order in; borrowed from Middle French policer, from police, n. The sense of keep order in by use of a police force (1841) is from later use of the noun in English.

An earlier sense of make policies or improve land is first recorded in 1535, in Scottish. —police force (1838) —police officer policy¹ n. way of management. About 1385 policey the art, study or practice of government; also policie organized government, civil administration (1390); borrowed from Old French policie, learned borrowing from Late Latin politiā settled order of government, the State, from Latin politiā the State, from policy² n. written agreement about insurance. 1565 police of assurance insurance policy; borrowed from Middle French police contract, from Italian pòlizza, from Old Italian pòliza written evidence of a transaction, alteration of Medieval Latin apodissa, apodixa receipt for money, from Greek apódeixis proof, declaration (apo- off + deiknḗnai to show); for suffix see *-y*³. The form development apódissa, pódissa, pólissa is parallel by Portuguese apólice (from Latin apódixem).

Greek politeiā state, administration, government, citizenship, from polítēs citizen, from pólis city; for suffix see *-y*³. The meaning of a plan of action, way of management is first recorded probably about 1406.

poliomyelitis n. 1878, New Latin, formed from Greek poliós gray + myelós marrow (probably related to myós muscle) + New Latin -itis inflammation; so called for the inflammation of gray matter in the spinal cord, causing paralysis of muscles; earlier infantile paralysis 1843, because it affected chiefly the young. The form polio is first recorded in 1931.

polish v. Before 1325 polisen make smooth and shiny; later polishen (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French poliss-, stem of polir, from Latin polire to polish, make smooth; for suffix see *-ish*². The sense of free from coarseness, refined, is first recorded about 1340. —n. 1597, absence of coarseness, refinement; from the verb. The sense of the act of polishing is first recorded in 1704, and that of a substance used for polishing in 1819.

polite adj. Before 1398 polit polished, burnished; earlier as a surname Polyte (1263); borrowed from Latin polītus refined, polished, elegant, from past participle of polire to polish.

The meaning of refined, elegant, cultured, is first recorded in English in 1501 and that of courteous, behaving properly, in 1762.

politic adj. 1427 politique of public affairs, political; also 1436 politik prudent, judicious; borrowed from Middle French politique, and directly from Latin polīticus of citizens or the State, civil, civic, from Greek polítikós of citizens or the State, from polítēs citizen, from pólis city; for suffix see -ic. —v. Now usually politick. 1917, back formation from politics or political. —political adj. 1551, of citizens or government; formed probably from Latin polīticus political + English *-al*¹, and perhaps from politic, adj. + *-al*¹. —politician n. 1588, shrewd person; 1589, person skilled in politics; formed from English politic, adj. + -ian. —politics n. Before 1529, formed from English politic, adj. + *-s*¹; also 1450 as Polettiques Aristotle's book on governing and government.

politico n. 1630, borrowed from Italian politico or Spanish político, noun use of adjective, political, from Latin polīticus POLITIC.

polity n. 1538, civil organization; borrowed from Late Latin politiā organized government, civil administration; see *POLICY*¹; for suffix see *-ty*².

polka n. 1844, borrowing of French polka and German Polka, from Czech polka, the dance; literally, Polish woman; also found in Polish Polka, feminine of Polak a Pole. Possibly Czech polka is an alteration of pulka half (in half steps of the Bohemian peasant dance).

The term polka dot pattern of dots, is first recorded in 1884 and was named after the dance. —v. 1846, from the noun.

poll n. 1625, collection of votes; extended from earlier counting of heads (1607); developed from Middle English (about 1300) polle hair of the head; later pol person or individual, head (before 1325); borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch pol head, top. The meaning of a survey of public opinion is first found in 1902. —v. 1625, to record the votes of; earlier pollen cut the hair of (probably before 1300); from the noun. —pollster n. 1939, formed from poll, n. + -ster.

pollack n. 1672, kind of saltwater food fish, alteration of earlier pollock (1602), itself an alteration of Scottish podlok (1502), of unknown origin.

pollen n. 1760, New Latin pollen, found in Latin pollen (genitive pollinis) mill dust, fine flour, related to polenta peeled barley, and pulvis (genitive pulveris) dust.

pollinate v. 1875, probably a back formation from English pollination; for suffix see -ATE ¹. —pollination n. 1875, borrowed from obsolete French pollination (1812, replaced by pollinisation), from New Latin pollen (genitive pollinis) + French -ation.

polliwog n. 1440 polwygle, probably a compound of pol head (see POLL) + wiglen to WIGGLE. Later spellings include: polwigge (1592), polliwig (before 1825), and pollywog (1835–40).

pollute v. About 1380 polluten defile; also, to desecrate, profane, sully (before 1382); back formation from pollution, and probably borrowed from Latin pollūtus, past participle of polluere to soil or defile (pol-, por- before + -luere smear, related to lutum mud).

The meaning of make physically foul or filthy, is first recorded in English before 1548, and that of contaminate the environment with harmful substances, since 1954. —pollutant n. 1892, formed from English pollute + -ant. —pollution n. Before 1349 pollucyone discharge of semen other than during coition; later pollucyoun desecration, defilement (before 1382); borrowed through Old French pollution, and directly from Late Latin pollutiōnem (nominative pollutiō) defilement, from Latin polluere to soil, defile; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of contamination of the environment by harmful substances appears sporadically in technical sources since 1877 but came into general use about 1955.

Pollyanna n. 1921, in allusion to the child heroine of the novels Pollyanna (1913) and Pollyanna Grows Up (1915), who is noted for her cheerful and optimistic outlook in the worst situations.

polo n. 1872, Anglo-Indian polo, from Balti (a Tibetan language) polo ball, related to Tibetan pulu ball.

polonaise n. 1773, woman's overdress; 1797, stately dance of Polish origin; borrowings of French polonaise, from feminine of polonais, adj. Polish, from Pologne Poland, from Medieval Latin Polonia Poland.

polonium n. 1898, New Latin polonium; formed from Medieval Latin Polonia Poland + New Latin -ium. The term was coined after Marie Curie's homeland, Poland.

poltergeist n. 1848, borrowing of German Poltergeist (poltern make noise, rattle, rumble + Geist GHOST).

poltroon n. Before 1529, borrowed from Middle French poltron rascal, coward, from Italian poltrone lazy fellow, coward, from poltro a sluggard, or from poltrone colt (from a colt's skittishness); of uncertain origin; for suffix see -OON.

poly- a combining form meaning: 1 much, many, multi-, as in polysyllable. 2 in chemistry, a one or more units, as in polyamide; b polymer, polymeric, as in polyvinyl. Borrowed from Greek poly- combining form of poly much.

polyandry n. 1780, borrowed from Late Greek polyandria populousness, from polyandros having many men or mates (poly- many + andr-, stem of anēr man, husband); for suffix see -Y³.

polyester n. 1929, formed from English poly- + ester.

polygamy n. Before 1591, borrowed perhaps through Middle French polygamie, and directly from Late Greek polygamia polygamy, from polygamos often married (poly- many + gamos marriage); for suffix see -Y³. —polygamous adj. 1613, from Late Greek polygamos often married; for suffix see -OUS.

polyglot n. About 1645, borrowed perhaps through French polyglotte, n. and directly from Greek polyglōttos speaking many languages (poly- many + glōtta, Attic variant of glōssa language, tongue). —adj. 1656, borrowed perhaps through French polyglotte, adj., and directly from Greek polyglōttos speaking many languages, and from the noun in English.

polygon n. 1656, earlier in Latin plural form polygona (1571); borrowed probably from French polygone, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin polygōnum, from Greek polygōnon a polygon, from neuter of polygōnos many-angled (poly- many + gōnā angle).

polygraph n. 1805, a mechanical device for making two or more copies at the same time of something written or drawn; later, an instrument for recording several pulsations of the body at the same time (1871, and first used as a lie detector in 1921); borrowed from Greek polygráphos writing much (poly- much + -gráphos writing, from gráphein write). —v. 1969, from the noun.

It is possible the form was influenced by French polygraphe and also affected by earlier polygraphic (1788, in reference to mechanical copying) and polygraphy (1593) and polygrapher (1588).

polygyny n. 1780, formed from Greek polygynēs having many wives (poly- many + gynē woman, wife).

polyhedron n. 1570, borrowed from Greek polyédron, neuter of polyédros having many bases or sides (poly- many + hédra side, base).

polymath n. 1621, borrowed from Greek polymathēs having learned much (poly- much + root of manthánein learn).

polymer n. 1866, replacing earlier polymeride (1857), and probably borrowed from German Polymere, from Greek polymērēs having many parts (poly- many + mēros part). The term was introduced in 1830, and was probably known much earlier than the record shows. — polymeric adj. 1833, borrowed from German polymerisch, formed from Greek polymērēs + German -isch -ic. — polymerize v. 1865, probably formed from English polymer(ic) + -ize. — polymerization n. 1872, formed from English polymerize + -ation.

polymorphous adj. 1785, borrowed from Greek polymorphos multiform, manifold (poly- many + morphē form).

polynomial n. 1674, formed from English poly- + -nomial, as in BINOMIAL. — adj. 1704, from the noun.

polyoma n. 1958, formed from English poly- many + Latin-ate -oma tumor.

polyp n. Before 1400 polippe nasal tumor (having branches like tentacles); 1583, animal with many tentacles or feet; later polyp (1602); borrowed from Middle French polype, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin polypus cuttlefish, nasal tumor, from Greek (Doric, Aeolic) polypōs.

polyphony n. 1828, a multiplicity of sounds; earlier polyphonia (1713); borrowed from Greek polyphōnīā variety of sounds, from polyphōnos having many sounds or voices (poly- many + phōnē voice or sound); for suffix see -y³. Later use (perhaps a separate word) meaning counterpoint (1864) is perhaps a back formation from polyphonic. — polyphonic adj. 1782, contrapuntal. 1782, formed from Greek polyphōnos having many sounds + English -ic.

polytheism n. 1613, borrowed from French polythéisme, formed from Greek polytheos of many gods (poly- many + theos god) + French -isme -ism.

polyvinyl adj. 1933, formed from English poly- + vinyl.

pomade n. 1562, borrowed from Middle French pommade an ointment, from Italian pomata, from pomo apple, from Latin pōmum fruit; so called because the ointment originally contained apple pulp; for suffix see -ADE. — v. 1889, from the noun.

pome n. 1381 pomme meatball; later pome ball, fruit of any kind (1392); borrowed from Old French pome, pomme, from Vulgar Latin pōma*, feminine formed from the neuter plural of Latin pōmum fruit. The word in Middle English was also borrowed directly from Latin pōmum.

pomegranate n. Probably about 1300 pomme-garnate; later pome granate (1398); borrowed from Medieval Latin pomum granatum, and from Old French pome grenate (pome apple, fruit, and grenate having grains, from Latin grānāta, feminine of grānātus, from grānum grain).

pommel n. About 1250 pomel ornamental knob, round finial; later, knob at end of a sword's hilt (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French pomel, diminutive of pom hilt of a sword. The sense of the front peak of a saddle appeared probably about 1450. — v. 1530, from the noun (in the sense of the hilt of a sword). The original sense of the verb was probably to strike with the pommel of a sword.

pomp n. Probably about 1300 pompe; borrowing of Old French pompe, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pompa procession, pomp, from Greek pompē procession, display.

pompadour n. 1887, a style of men's hair; also, a woman's style of hair swept up high over the forehead (1899); in allusion to the Marquise de Pompadour, who wore her hair in an upswept style.

pompano n. 1778 pampano; borrowed from American Spanish pámpano any of various fish, from Spanish, a kind of fish with golden markings; originally a vine tendril or scion, from Latin pampinus tendril or leaf of a vine.

pompon n. 1748, borrowed from French pompon, perhaps from Old French pompe POMP.

pompous adj. About 1375, self-important, pretentious, inflated; borrowed from Old French pompeux, and directly from Late Latin pompōsus stately, pompous, from Latin pompa POMP; for suffix see -OUS. — pomposity n. Probably before 1425 pomposite pomp, solemnity; borrowed from Late Latin pompōsitās, from pompōsus stately, pompous; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of ostentatious display, appeared in English in 1620, perhaps borrowed from French pomposité, from Late Latin pompōsitās.

poncho n. 1717, borrowing of American Spanish poncho probably from Araucanian (Chile) pontho woolen fabric, or possibly (because of early appearance in Castilian Spanish in 1530) from the Spanish adjective poncho, variant of pocho discolored, faded, designating a blanket or shawl without bright colors and without designs.

pond n. About 1300 punde artificially enclosed body of water, variant of POUND³ enclosed place. The form is found earlier in the compound pundpani pond-penny (1248, a levy imposed for the maintenance of ponds).

ponder v. Before 1338 pundren to reckon, calculate; later ponderen to think, presume, suppose (probably about 1378); also, appraise, weigh (before 1387); borrowed from Old French ponderer to weigh, balance, and directly from Latin ponderāre to weigh, from pondus (genitive ponderis) weight; see PENDANT.

ponderous adj. Before 1400, thick or viscous; later, heavy or weighty (probably before 1425); borrowed perhaps through Old French pondereux, and directly from Latin ponderōsus of great weight, from pondus (genitive ponderis) weight; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of heavy in the sense of labored, dull, or tedious, appeared before 1704.

pone n. 1634 poane corn bread; earlier ponap, appone (1612); borrowed from Algonquian (Powhatan) āpan something baked, from āpen she bakes.

poniard n. 1588, dagger, borrowed from Middle French poig- nard, from Old French poing fist, from Latin pugnis fist; for suffix see -ARD.

pontiff n. 1596, high priest; borrowed from French pontif, pontife, learned borrowing from Latin pontifex (genitive pontificis) a Roman high priest (in Medieval and Late Latin bishop), probably formed from pont- (stem of pōns bridge) + -fex, -ficis, from facere make. Latin pontifex originally “bridge-maker” or “pathmaker” referred to the priest’s rôle in leading. Pontiff referring to a pope (as Bishop of Rome) is not recorded in English before 1677; referring to a pope’s office or tenure, pontificality and pontificate are found about 1425.

pontifical adj. Probably about 1425, of a high church official; borrowed from Middle French pontifical, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pontificalis of a high priest of Rome, from pontifex; see PONTIFF; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of characteristic of a pontiff, stately, pompous, is first recorded in English in 1589. —pontificate v. 1818, officiate as a pontiff; borrowed from Medieval Latin pontificatum, past participle of pontificare, from Latin pontifex; see PONTIFF; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of act the pontiff, behave or speak pompously, is first recorded in English in 1825.

pontoon n. 1676, borrowing of French pontoon, from Middle French ponton, from Latin pōtōnem (nominative pōtō) flat-bottomed boat, from pont- (stem of pōns bridge); for ending see -OON. Term pontoon bridge, is first recorded in 1778.

pony n. 1659 powny, Scottish, apparently borrowed from obsolete French poulenet little foal, diminutive of Old French poulain foal, from Late Latin pullāmen (genitive pullāminis) young of an animal, from Latin pullus young of a horse, etc., young fowl. —pony express (1847) pooch n. 1924, dog; of unknown origin.

poodle n. 1825, borrowed from German Pudel, shortened form of Pudelhund water dog (Low German Pudel PUDDLE + German Hund HOUND); probably so called because it was used to hunt water fowl.

pool¹ n. small body of water. Probably before 1200 pole lake, pond; later pool (about 1384); developed from Old English pōl (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian and Middle Low German pōl pool, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch poel, and Old High German pfuol (modern German Pfuhl).

pool² n. game similar to billiards. 1693, card game with collective stakes (a pool) by the players; borrowed from French poule stakes, booty, plunder; literally, hen, from Old French poule hen, young fowl. The meaning of a game similar to billiards, originally played for a pool of money, is first recorded in 1848. The meaning of things owned or used in common by a group (as in motor pool) is first recorded in 1869. —v. 1872, from the noun.

poop¹ n. deck at the stern of a ship. 1405–10 poupe, borrowed from Middle French poupe the stern of a ship; earlier pope, from Italian poppa, from Latin puppis poop, stern.

poop² v. become exhausted. 1931, of unknown origin.

poop³ n. inside information. 1941, originally army slang; of unknown origin.

poor adj. Probably before 1200 poure, pouere; later poore (about 1390); borrowed from Old French poure, povre, from Latin pauper poor. —n. Probably about 1150 pouere poor people as a group; later poure (probably about 1200); collective use of the adjective. —poorly adv. About 1230 pourelliche, formed from Middle English poure poor + -liche -ly¹. —adj. 1573, probably from the adverb.

pop¹ v. make an explosive sound. 1433 poppen to strike, rap, from the noun. The meaning of move, go, or come suddenly appeared in 1530. The meaning of make an explosive sound is first recorded in 1576. —n. About 1400 poppe, pop blow or stroke, of imitative origin. The meaning of an explosive sound is found in 1591; from the verb. —adj. 1621, from the verb and noun. —popcorn n. 1819, a variety of corn.

pop² adj. popular. 1926, shortened from popular, originally having wide public appeal, influenced by the earlier pop (1862), shortening of popular concert, often in the plural, as in Boston Pops Orchestra.

pop³ n. father, dad. 1838, shortened and altered form of earlier papa 1681, borrowing of French papa, from Old French, a children’s word similar to Latin pappa.

pope or Pope n. Before 1118 pape (implied in papdom, papedom); later pope (probably before 1200); developed from Old English pāpa (before 899); borrowed from Medieval or Late Latin pāpa bishop, pope, found in Latin pāpa bishop, and pāpās tutor, from Greek pāpās, pāppās patriarch, bishop; originally, father (also the same as Latin pappa; compare POP³).

popinjay n. 1322 popingaye parrot, figure of a parrot; earlier as a surname Papejaye (1270); also popynjay (about 1380); borrowed from Old French papingay, papegai, from Spanish papagayo, from Arabic babaghā, from Persian babghā, babaghā parrot. The meaning of a vain, talkative person is first recorded in 1528.

poplar n. 1356 popler, borrowed from Old French poplier, extended from pouple poplar, from Latin pōpulus poplar.

poplin n. 1710, borrowed from French papeline cloth of fine silk, probably from Provençal papalino, feminine of papalin of or belonging to the pope, especially to the papal seat of Avignon and its manufacturing of silk fabric, from Medieval Latin papalis PAPAL; and developing from confusion in English of Flemish Poperinghe, town in Flanders where poplin was made, with French papeline cloth of fine silk.

poppy n. About 1150 papig; later popi (before 1200); developed from Old English popig (about 1000), earlier popæg (about 700); borrowed probably as an alteration of Vulgar Latin papāvum*, itself an alteration of Latin papāver poppy.

poppycock n. 1865, nonsense, probably borrowed from dialectal Dutch pappekak (Middle Dutch pappe soft food, pap + kak dung, excrement, from kakken, cacken to excrete, from Latin cacāre).

popsicle n. 1923 Popsicle, a trademark for lollipops and ices on a stick; probably formed from English (lolly)pops + (ic)icle.

populace n. 1572, borrowed from Middle French populace, from Italian popolaccio mob or rabble, a pejorative form of popolo people, from Latin populus people.

popular adj. Probably before 1425 populer commonly known, public; borrowed from Middle French populeir, populaire, and directly from Latin populāris belonging to the people, from populus people; for suffix see -AR. The meaning of intended for the general public (as in popular science) is first recorded in 1573, and that of liked, beloved, or admired by the people, in 1608. —popularize v. 1593, to cater to popular taste; 1797, make popular (a sense probably borrowed from French populariser); but the word was originally formed from English popular + -ize.

populate v. 1574, as a past participial adjective; borrowed from Medieval Latin populatus, past participle of populare inhabit, from Latin populus inhabitants, people; for suffix see -ATE¹. —population n. 1612, borrowed from Late Latin populatiōnem (nominative populatiō) a people, multitude, from Latin populus people; for suffix see -ATION.

populist n. 1892, formed from Latin populus people + English -ist, referring to a supporter of the Populist Party, organized in the interests of farmers and workers in the U.S. After the Party dissolved the term continued (especially as an adjective) to describe political views similar to those of the original Populists. —adj. 1893, of the Populist Party, adjective use of Populist, n. By the 1920's, populist meant "representing the views of the masses." —populism n. 1893 Populism the policies of the Populist Party, formed from Populist, on the pattern of socialist, socialism, etc.

populous adj. About 1425 populous, learned borrowing from Latin populōsus full of people, populous, from populus people; for suffix see -OUS.

porcelain n. About 1530 Porseland chinaware; also Porcelana (1555), and porcelain (1615); borrowed from Middle French porcelaine, from Old French porcelaine, pourcelaine, and directly from Italian porcellana porcelain cowrie shell (so called from the resemblance of chinaware to the surface of cowrie shells). Italian porcellana is our adjective form of porcella young sow, from Latin (masculine) porcellus young pig, diminutive of porculus piglet, itself a diminutive of porcus pig; so called because the curved shape of the cowrie shell was thought to be suggestive of the exposed outer genitalia of the young sow.

porch n. About 1300 porche roofed structure, covered entrance; borrowing of Old French porche, from Latin porticus (genitive porticius) colonnade, arcade, porch, from porta gate.

porcine adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Old French porcin, and directly from Latin porcīnus of a hog, swinish, from porcus hog, pig.

porcupine n. Probably before 1400 porke despyne; also portepyn (about 1400); borrowed from Old French porc-espīn (literally, pig of spines) a compound of Latin porcus hog, pig + spīna thorn, spine.

pore¹ v. look intently. Probably about 1225 puren; later pouren (probably before 1300); of uncertain origin; perhaps from Old English pūrian*, pūran*, related to: 1) Old English spyrian to investigate, examine; cognate with Old Icelandic spyrja, Old High German spūrien, and Old Frisian spera, and 2) Old English spor trace, vestige; cognate with Old Icelandic and Old High German spor.

pore² n. very small opening in the skin. Before 1387 poore; also pore (before 1398); borrowed from Old French pore, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin porus a pore, from Greek póros a pore; literally, passage.

porgy n. 1725 porgie; 1734 porgy, probably alteration of earlier porgo (1616) and pargo (1557) the sea bream; borrowing of Spanish and Portuguese pargo, from Latin phagnum, accusative of phager, from Greek phágros sea bream.

pork n. About 1300 porc; earlier in the surname Porkuiller (1215); also pork (before 1398); borrowing of Old French porc, and directly from Latin porcus pig, tame swine. —pork barrel 1909, the State's financial resources, as a source of distribution, from earlier sense of a source of supply of food (pork) kept in a pork barrel (1801). The shortend form pork is recorded from 1879.

porn or porno adj. 1952 porno, 1963 porn, shortened form of pornographic. —n. 1962 porn, 1968 porno, shortened form of pornography.

pornography n. 1857, description of prostitutes or prostitution; 1864, obscene writings or pictures; borrowed from French pornographie, from Greek pornógráphos (one) writing of prostitutes (pornē prostitute + gráphein write; for suffix see -Y³). —pornographic adj. 1880, formed from English pornography + -ic.

porous adj. 1392, borrowed probably through Old French poroux, from Medieval Latin porosus, and borrowed directly from Latin porus opening, PORE²; for suffix see -OUS. —porosity n. 1392 porosite, borrowed probably through Old French porosité, from Medieval Latin porositatem (nominative porositas), from porosus; for suffix see -ITY.

porphyry n. About 1450 porphiri, spelling alteration (influenced by Latin porphyritēs) of Middle English porfurie (about 1395); borrowed from Old French porfire, from Italian porfiro, and borrowed directly into English from Latin porphyritēs a purple precious or semi-precious stone originally quarried in Egypt, from Greek porphyritēs, from porphyrā purple.

porpoise n. 1309–10 porpas; later porpeys (1381) and *porpoy*s (1391); borrowed from Old French porpais, porpeis, literally, pork fish (porc PORK + peis fish, from Latin piscis fish). Old French porpois, porpeis is probably a loan translation of a Germanic compound (compare Middle Dutch mēreswijn porpoise, modern German Meerschwein, Danish marvin, and modern Icelandic marvin).

porridge n. About 1532 porage soup of meat and vegetables, alteration of POTTAGE. The spelling porridge appeared in 1601 possibly influenced by obsolete English porray, porrey a vegetable soup, from Middle English porreie (before 1325); borrowed from Old French porree leek soup, from por leek, from Latin porrum leek. The food made of oatmeal is recorded before 1643.

porringer n. 1467 porrynger; alteration of Middle English potynger small dish for stew (1454); earlier potager (1415), from potage POTTAGE; for suffix see -ER¹. For intrusive n see MESSENGER.

port¹ n. harbor. Old English port harbor or haven (before 899); reinforced in Middle English port (1340, and 1102 as a place name) by Old French port; both the Old English and Old French forms borrowed from Latin portus port.

port² n. porthole. About 1300 porte port or gate, gateway; earlier as a surname Port (1243); also port (before 1325); borrowed from Old French porte gate, entrance, and directly from Latin porta gate, door.

port³ n. left side of a ship or aircraft when facing the bow or front. 1625–44, probably from PORT¹ harbor, the side of a ship facing the harbor having originally been called port side.

port⁴ n. bearing, carriage, mien. Probably before 1300 pourt; later porte (about 1378); borrowed from Old French port, from porter to carry, from Latin portāre to carry.

port⁵ n. sweet wine. 1691, shortened form of Oporto (in Portuguese O Porto the Port), city in northwestern Portugal, from which the wine was originally shipped.

portable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French portable that can be carried, and directly from Late Latin portābilis that can be carried, from Latin portāre to carry. —n. 1883, from the adjective.

portage n. 1423 portage act of carrying; borrowing of Old French portage, from porter to carry, from Latin portāre to carry; for suffix see -AGE. The specific sense of the carrying of boats, etc. from one body of water to another is first recorded in 1698.

portal n. Probably about 1380 portale, borrowed from Old French portal gate, and directly from Medieval Latin portale city gate, porch, from neuter of portalis, adj., of a gate, from Latin porta gate.

Special application of portal, first to the valves of the heart (1615), later to circulation of the blood through the portal vein (1845), is borrowed from Medieval Latin portalis of or pertaining to a gate, though first referred to in the noun porta (1392, a borrowing from Latin porta gate).

portcullis n. Probably before 1300 port colice; later portculis (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French porte coleice sliding gate (porte gate, from Latin porta gate; and coleice sliding or flowing, feminine of coleis, from Vulgar Latin cōlāticius* sliding, from Latin cōlāre to filter or strain).

portend v. Probably before 1425 portenden, borrowed from Latin portendere foretell or predict (por- forth, forward + tendere to stretch, extend).

portent n. 1563–87, borrowed from Middle French portente, from Latin portentum a sign, omen, from neuter of portentus, past participle of portendere; PORTEND; also probably influenced by earlier portentous. —portentous adj. About 1540 portentius, later portentous (1553); borrowed possibly through Middle French portentueux, and directly from Latin portentōsus, portentuōsus monstrous, threatening, from portentum portent; for suffix see -OUS.

porter¹ n. person employed to carry. Before 1382 portor; earlier as a surname Portur (1263); borrowed from Anglo-French portour, porter, Old French portēor, from Late Latin portātorēm (accusative portātor) one who carries from Latin portāre to carry; for suffix see -ER¹, -OR².

porter² n. doorkeeper, janitor. About 1250; earlier as a surname Portier (1183–85); borrowed from Anglo-French porter, portour, Old French portier, from Late Latin portārius gatekeeper, from Latin porta gate; for suffix see -ER¹, -OR².

porter³ n. dark-brown beer. 1739, shortened from earlier (1727) porter's ale; see PORTER¹. Whether porter or porter's ale was made at low cost for, and consumed chiefly by, porters as a class of laborers is not known, though that is the thrust of early quotations. Others have referred to the strength of the drink, presumably suitable to men and women engaged in the hard manual labor of a porter.

porterhouse n. 1800, restaurant or chophouse where porter and other malt liquors are served (*porter*³ beer + house). The meaning of a choice cut of beefsteak, as porterhouse steak (1841), is said to be associated with a porterhouse in New York City where this cut of meat was popularized about 1814.

portfolio n. 1796 port folio, and porto folio (1722); borrowed from Italian portafoglio a case for carrying loose papers (porta, imperative of portare to carry + foglio sheet or leaf).

portico n. 1605, borrowing of Italian portico, from Latin porticus (genitive porticiūs) colonnade, arcade, porch, from porta gate.

portion n. Before 1325 porcion part or share; also, about 1330 portion; borrowed from Old French porcion, portion, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin portiōnem (nominative portiō) share or part, accusative of the noun in the phrase prō portiōne according to the relation (of parts to each other); see PROPORTION. —v. Before 1338 portionen, borrowed from Old French porcioner, portionner, from the noun.

portly adj. Before 1475, stately or dignified (*port*⁴ bearing + -ly²). The meaning of stout or corpulent is first recorded in 1598.

portmanteau n. 1584, borrowing of Middle French portemanteau traveling bag; also, officer who carries a prince's mantle (porte, imperative of Old French porter to carry + manteau cloak). —adj. 1882, in portmanteau word a word blending sounds of two different words; originally applied (as a noun, 1872) to such coinages as slithy (lithe and slimy), subsequently extended to anything suggesting such a combination.

portrait n. 1570, drawing, painting, or carving of an object; probably a back formation from portraiture, influenced by portret, purtrayt painted, sculptured, past participle of portraien, purtrayen portray; and borrowed from Middle French portrait, from Old French portret, portraict, purtraict, noun use of portrait, past participle of portraire to paint, depict; see PORTRAY. The picture of a person's face is first recorded in English in 1585. —portraiture n. About 1380 portreyture a painting, picture, portrait; also, about 1385, act of portraying; borrowed from Old French portraiture, from portrait portrait; for suffix see -URE.

portray v. About 1250 purtrayen to draw, paint, or engrave; later portrayen (probably about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French purtraire and from Old French portraire to draw or paint, portray; literally, trace (a line) or draw forth (por- forth, from Latin prō- + traire trace, draw, from Latin trahere to drag, draw).

The meaning of picture in words, describe, is first recorded in about 1370. —portrayal n. 1847, formed from English portray + -al.

portulaca n. 1373 portulake; later portulaca (probably about 1450); borrowed from Latin portulaca purslane, from portula, diminutive of porta gate; so called from the gatelike covering of the plant's seed capsule.

pose¹ v. put in a certain position. About 1378 posen suggest, propose, suppose, especially for the sake of argument; later, put or place in a certain condition or situation (before 1425); borrowed from Old French poser put, place, propose, from Vulgar Latin pauāre* put, place, from Late Latin pauāre to halt, rest, pause.

In Old French (also in Spanish Portuguese, Italian and Provençal) the verb acquired the sense of Latin pōnere to put, place, by confusion with pos-, perfect stem of pōnere and came to be identified with it in many of its compounds coexisting in English, such as compose, dispose, expose, impose, and propose. —n. 1818, borrowed from French, from Old French poser to pose.

pose² v. to puzzle completely. 1593, from earlier sense of question, interrogate (1526); probably borrowed from Middle French poser, originally, suppose, assume, from Old French poser POSE¹; and a shortening of English apose to examine closely, question (before 1333) and oppose of the same meaning (about 1385).

poseur n. 1872, borrowing of French poseur, from poser affect an attitude or pose, from Old French poser to put or place, POSE.

posh adj. 1903 push; later posh (1918, in Punch); perhaps from British slang posh a dandy (1890); earlier money (1830; originally a coin of small value, a halfpenny, possibly borrowed from Rumanian posh half).

The derivation from the initial letters of port outward, starboard home, the more expensive shipboard accommodations for those traveling between England and India, especially on the P & O Lines, is without substance.

posit v. 1647, put in position; borrowed from Latin positus, past participle of pōnere put or place; see POSITION. The meaning of lay down or assume as a fact or principle is first recorded in 1697.

position n. About 1380 posicioun statement of belief, proposition; later, place where a person or thing is, location; borrowed from Old French posicion, and directly from Latin positiōnem (nominative positiō) act or fact of placing, position, affirmation, from posit-, past participle stem of pōnere put or place; for suffix see -ION. —v. 1678, assume a position; later, to put or place (1817); from the noun.

positive adj. Before 1325, formally laid down or imposed, in reference to a law, etc.; borrowed from Old French positif of that which is laid down, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin positivus settled by arbitrary agreement, positive, from positus, past participle of pōnere put or place; for suffix see -IVE.

The meaning of explicitly laid down, definite, precise (as in proof positive) is first recorded in 1598, and that of unqualified, absolute, unconditional (as in a positive miracle) in 1606. As the opposite of negative, positive first appears before 1398, but most technical uses are later; in philosophy, practical or empirical (1594); in mathematics, greater than zero (1704); in electricity (1755). —n. 1530, from the adjective. —positively adv. About 1443, in a definite way, expressly; also, absolutely or extremely (1777).

positron n. 1933, formed from English posi(tive), adj. + (elec)tron.

posse n. 1645, armed force; 1691, body of citizens summoned by a sheriff; shortening of earlier posse comitatus (1626), literally, the force of the county; borrowed from Medieval Latin (posse body of men, power, from Latin posse have power, be able and comitatus of the county, genitive of Late Latin comitatus court, palace).

possess v. About 1380 possessen to have, hold, or own; probably a back formation from possession, and borrowed from Old French possesser possess, from Latin possess-, past participle stem of possidēre to possess. —possession n. 1340 possession, borrowed from Old French possession, and directly from Latin possessiōnem (nominative possessiō), from possess-; for suffix see -ION. —possessive adj. About 1450 possessyf of the possessive case in grammar (also as a noun); borrowed from Middle French possessif (feminine possessive), and directly from Latin possessivus possessive (in grammar), from possess-; for suffix see -IVE.

possible adj. Probably 1350–75 possybil that can be or capable of being; also, possible (probably about 1370); borrowed from Old French possible, and directly from Latin possibilis that can be done, from posse be able; see POTENT; for suffix see -IBLE.

—possibility n. About 1385 possibilitie, borrowed from Old French possibilitē, and directly from Late Latin possibilitātem (nominative possibilitās) possibility, from Latin possibilis possible; for suffix see -ITY. —possibly adv. About 1400, formed from English possible, adj. + -ly¹.

possum n. 1613, shortened form of OPOSSUM. The phrase play possum pretend (in allusion to the opossum's habit of pretending to be dead when threatened) is first recorded in 1822.

post¹ n. piece of timber, etc. set upright. Old English post post, pillar, doorpost (about 1000) borrowed from Latin postis post (probably originally "projecting," perhaps then from por- forth + stāre to stand), reinforced in Middle English by Old French post post, pillar, beam. —v. 1650, fasten (a notice) to a post, from the noun; earlier, to square (timber) before sawing (about 1520), and as posting (gerund) a post or posts (1295).

post² n. place when on duty or in employment. 1598, borrowed from Middle French poste place where one is stationed, employment, military post (also a station for post horses), from Italian posto post, station, employment, from Medieval or Vulgar Latin postum* station, from Latin positum, neuter past participle of pōnere to place or put; see related POST³ system of mail. The meaning of a job, position, place, is first recorded in English in 1695–96. —v. 1683, to station at a post; from the noun.

post³ n. system for sending mail. 1506, riders and horses posted at intervals along a route to carry mail in relays; borrowed from Middle French poste specifically, station for post horse, from Italian posta an establishment for the conveyance of mail, from Medieval or Vulgar Latin posta* station, fixed place on a road, variant of Latin posita, feminine past participle of pōnere to place or put; see related POST² place where one is stationed.

The meaning of a system for carrying mail is first recorded in English in 1663. —v. 1533, travel with relays of horses; from the noun. The meaning of carry swiftly is first recorded in 1611; and that of send by post, mail, in 1837. —postage n. 1590, the sending of mail by post; formed from English *post*³, n. + -age. The amount charged for sending by mail is first recorded in 1654. —postage stamp (1840, eventually replacing the postmark, 1678, that showed a fee for mailing). —postal adj. 1843, borrowed from French postal, from Middle French poste *post*³, n.; for suffix see -AL¹. —postcard n. (1870) —postman n. (1529) —postmaster n. (1513) —post office (1652; earlier letter office, 1635) post- a prefix meaning after, afterwards, behind; the use of the prefix may be prepositional, as in postglacial, Postimpressionism, postmeridian, or adverbial or adjectival, as in postlude, postpone, postscript. Borrowed from Latin post-, from adverb and preposition post behind, after, afterward.

poster n. 1838, formed from English *post*¹, v., to fasten (a notice) + -er¹.

posterior adj. 1534, coming after, later, subsequent; situated behind (1632); borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French postérieur, and directly from Latin posterior after, later, behind, comparative of posterus coming after, subsequent, from post after.

posterity n. Before 1387 posterite, borrowed from Old French posterité, learned borrowing from Latin posteritatem (nominative posteritās) posterity, from posterus coming after, subsequent; (but as posterī, n. pl., coming generations, posterity), from post after; for suffix see -ITY.

postern n. Probably before 1300 posterne; earlier as a surname Posterne (1242–43); borrowing of Old French posterne, alteration of posterle, from Late Latin posterula small back door or gate, diminutive from Latin posterus that is behind, coming after, subsequent.

posthaste adv. 1593, developed from the earlier noun meaning of great speed (1545); usually said to be from an old direction on letters "Haste, post, haste," in which the words are the imperative of haste, v. and *post*³ system for sending mail; subsequently written as a compound. —adj. 1604, from the adverb.

posthumous adj. Before 1464 posthumus born after the death of the father; borrowed from Late Latin posthumus, alteration of Latin postumus last, last-born, born after the father's death, superlative of posterus coming after, subsequent; for suffix see -OUS. Late Latin posthumus, literally, after the ground or earth, is supposed to have developed either by association with Latin humus earth, or by attribution to Latin humare to bury.

postilion or postillion n. 1591, guide; later, one who rides to carry mail (1616); borrowed from Middle French postillon, from Italian postiglione guide, especially for one carrying mail by horseback, forerunner (posta mail, + -iglione, from Latin -iliō compound suffix).

postlude n. 1851, formed from English post- after, later + (pre)lude.

postmortem adv., adj. Before 1734, adv.; 1835–36, adj.; borrowed from Latin post mortem (post after, and mortem, accusative of mors death). —n. 1850, shortened form of postmortem examination.

postpone v. 1500–20, borrowed from Latin postpōnere put after, neglect, postpone (post- after + pōnere put, place).

postprandial adj. 1820, formed from English post- after + Latin prandium luncheon, meal + English -al¹.

postscript n. 1551; earlier as a Latinate plural postscripta (1523); borrowed from Medieval Latin postscriptum*, from neuter past participle of Latin postscribere write after (post- after + scribere to write).

postulant n. 1759, borrowed from French postulant an applicant or candidate, from Latin postulantem (nominative postulāns), present participle of postulāre to ask, require, demand; for suffix see -ANT.

postulate v. 1533, to nominate to a church office, either: 1) developed in English from earlier postulate, adj., nominated to a bishopric (1433), borrowed from Medieval Latin postulatus, past participle of postulare to nominate to a bishopric (see 2 below); or a back formation from postulation; or 2) borrowed directly from Medieval Latin postulatus, past participle of pos- ulare to nominate to a bishopric, from Latin postulāre probably formed from the lost past participle postos* of poscere ask urgently or demand; for suffix see -ATE¹.

The meaning of assume (a principle, etc.) as a basis of reasoning, take for granted, appears in English in 1646, and was borrowed from Medieval Latin. —n. 1588, a request or demand, replacing postulation, postulacioun; and either, 1) developed from the verb in English; or 2) borrowed from Latin postulātum thing requested, from neuter past participle of postulāre to request or demand.

The meaning of a fundamental assumption or condition is first recorded in English in 1646, and was borrowed from Medieval Latin. —postulation, n. Before 1400 postulacioun petition, request; borrowed from Old French postulacion and directly from Latin postulatiōnem (nominative postulatiō) a request or demanding from Latin postulāre POSTULATE, v.; for suffix see -ATION.

posture n. 1605, position of one thing or person relative to another; 1606, position of the body; borrowing of French posture, from Italian postura, from Latin positūra position, from positus, past participle of pōnere put or place; for suffix see -URE. The sense of attitude, stance (as in America's diplomatic posture) is first recorded about 1956, developed from a situation in relation to circumstances (as in a posture of defense), first recorded in 1642. —v. Before 1628, found in posturing; from posture, n. + -ing¹.

posy n. 1533, motto or line of poetry engraved within a ring; variant of POESY. The meaning of a flower or bouquet is first recorded in 1573.

pot¹ n. Probably before 1200 pot container or vessel; developed from Late Old English pott and reinforced in Middle English by Old French pot, both Old English and Old French forms originating in Vulgar Latin pottus*, of uncertain origin, and probably not related to Late Latin pōtus drinking cup. Old English pott is cognate with Old Frisian pott pot, Middle Low German pot, put, and Middle Dutch pot, pott. —v. 1594 (implied in potting), to drink from a pot; later, put in a pot (1616); from the noun. —potbellied adj. (1657) —pot-holder n. (1928; earlier holder, 1910) —pothole n. (1826) —potluck n. (1592) —potpie n. (before 1792) —pot roast (1881) —potshot n. 1858, shot fired at game to get food, without regard to skill or sportsmanship; hence, opportunistic criticism (as in take potshots at), first recorded in 1926.

pot² n. marijuana. 1938, probably borrowed as a shortened form of Mexican Spanish potiguaya marijuana leaves.

potable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Old French potable, and directly from Late Latin pōtābilis drinkable, from Latin pōtāre to drink; for suffix see -ABLE. —n. Usually, potables. 1623, from the adjective.

potash n. 1751, from earlier pot-ashes (1648); borrowed as a loan translation of obsolete Dutch potaschen, plural of potasch, literally, pot ash; so called because the substance was originally obtained by leaching wood ashes and evaporating the solution in an iron pot.

potassium n. 1807, formed from New Latin potassa potash; earlier in English potass (1799) + -ium; so called because potassium is the basis of potash.

potato n. 1565, borrowed from Spanish patata, from Carib (of Haiti, perhaps Taino) batata sweet potato, probably influenced by or blended directly with Spanish papa potato; earlier, from Quechua. If there was any real and clear distinction of form in English between batata and patata, it was quickly lost in potato which has been the common form for sweet potatoes and white potatoes, though the latter was known as Virginia potato by false association with Sir Walter Raleigh.

potent adj. Probably about 1425; borrowed from Latin potētem (nominative potēns) powerful, strong, present participle of a lost Latin verb potēre* be powerful, be able, from potis powerful. Probably by confusion of potis, in the phrase potis esse be powerful, potentem was used as present participle of posse have power, be able, which is a contraction of potis esse (potis powerful, and esse to be); for suffix see -ENT. —potency n. Before 1450 potencie; borrowed from Latin potentia power, from potentem (nominative potēns) potent; for suffix see -CY.

potentate n. Probably about 1400 potentat, borrowed from Old French potentat, and directly from Late Latin potentiātus a ruler, also political power; both Old French and Late Latin forms from Latin potentiātus power, dominion, from potentem (nominative potēns) powerful; for suffix see -ATE³.

potential adj. Before 1398 potencial potential, latent; borrowed probably through Old French potenciel, and directly from Late Latin potentialis potential, from Latin potentia power, POTENCY; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1817, from the adjective. An earlier sense of something that gives power is recorded in 1656, and in Middle English the sense of a cauterization probably before 1425. —potentiality n. 1625, probably formed from English potential + -ity, but also found in Medieval Latin potentialitas, from potentialis latent, POTENTIAL.

potion n. Probably before 1300 pocioun a medicinal drink; borrowed from Old French pocion, from Latin pōtiōnem (nominative pōtiō) potion or a drinking, from pōtus drunken, irregular past participle of pōtāre to drink; for suffix see -ION.

potlatch n. 1845, gift; borrowed from Chinook jargon, from Wakashan (Nootka) patshat giving, gift. The occasion on which gifts are distributed is first recorded before 1861.

potpourri n. 1611, pot pourri mixed meats served as a stew, borrowing of French pot pourri stew; literally rotten pot, loan translation of Spanish olla podrida as pot pot and pourri, past participle of pourrir to rot, from Latin putrēscere grow rotten; see PUTRESCENT. The meaning of medley is found in the sense of a fragrant mixture of dried flowers and spices, first recorded in English in 1749.

potsherd n. Before 1325 potschoord (pot container + schoord, sherd SHARD).

pottage n. Probably before 1200 potage; later pottage (probably about 1425); borrowed from Old French potage, pottage soup, formed from pot pot + -age -age.

potter¹ n. person who makes pottery. Before 1325 potter, earlier pottere (about 1200); found in Late Old English (before 1100) pottere, formed from pott container, POT¹ + -ere -er¹. The form in Middle English was reinforced by Anglo-French potier; Old French potier, and Anglo-Latin pottarius. — potter's field 1526, from a field of suitable clay to make pottery, later purchased by the high priests of Jerusalem as a burying ground for strangers, criminals, and the poor. — pottery n. 1727–41, manufacture of earthenware; borrowed from French poterie, from Old French potier potter, from pot POT¹; for suffix see -Y³. An early sense of potter's workshop is recorded in about 1483.

potter² v. keep busy in a rather useless way; putter. 1740, developed from the now dialectal meaning of poke again and again (about 1530), probably a form of poten to push, poke (about 1250), from Old English potian to push; see PUT; for suffix see -ER⁴.

pouch n. 1299 puche a fish trap; earlier as a surname Poche (1184); also pouch bag (1327); borrowed through Anglo-French puche and from Old North French pouche, Old French poche, puche, pouche, from a Germanic source (compare Old English pocca, pohha bag).

poulitice n. 1592 poultresse; later poultice (1611); alteration of Middle English pultes (1392); borrowed from Latin pultēs, plural of puls (genitive pultis) porridge. — v. 1730, from the noun.

poultry n. 1345–46 pultry market where domestic fowl is sold; later pultrie domestic fowl (before 1387); borrowed from Old French pouletrie domestic fowl, from pouletier dealer in domestic fowl, from poulet young fowl, PULLET; for suffix see -RY and -ERY. — poulterer n. 1638, extended form of poulter (1576); earlier pulter (1247) and pulleter (1226); borrowed from Anglo-French poleter, pulleter, Old French poletier, pouletier; see POULTRY.

pounce v. 1686, to seize with the talons, swoop down and seize; developed from Middle English pounse, n., talon of a bird of prey (before 1475); earlier, a tool for making holes or embossing metal (1367); probably borrowed from Old French poinçon, poinson, ponchon (see PUNCH¹). — n. 1841, from the verb (and probably recorded earlier as pounse, n., noted above under verb).

pound¹ n. measure of weight. Before 1121 punde; later pound (about 1280); developed from Old English (before 810) pund; derived from the West Germanic stem punda-* pound (measure of weight), and cognate with Old Saxon, Old Frisian, Old Icelandic, and Gothic pund pound, Old High German phunt (modern German Pfund), and Middle Dutch pont (modern Dutch pond). West Germanic punda-* represents a very early borrowing from Latin pondō a pound or pounds; originally in libra pondō a pound by weight, from pondō, adv., by weight, ablative of a lost noun pondos* weight. It is also possible that Old English pund was borrowed directly from Latin pondō, before the arrival of the West Germanic tribes in Britain. Pound as a unit of money (Old English about 975) was originally pound weight of silver (12 ounces troy weight). The pound of 16 ounces for bulk, was established for trade before 1377.

pound² v. hit hard again and again. Before 1500 pounden crush by beating, reduce to a powder; later pound (1594); developed by alteration (with added d) of Middle English pounen grind to a powder, break to pieces (before 1325), developed from Old English (about 1000) pūnian pulverize or crush; from West Germanic pūnō-* stem of pūnōjanan* and so probably cognate with Dutch puin rubbish, rubble. — n. 1562, from the verb.

pound³ n. enclosed place in which to keep animals. Probably about 1378; earlier in the place name Pandmad (1198); developed from Old English pund-*, in compounds such as pund-fald penfold or pound; related to pyndan to dam up or enclose (water).

pour v. Probably about 1300 pouren send forth in a stream; probably borrowed from dialectal Old French (Flanders) *pur*er to sift (grain), pour out (water), from Latin pūrāre to purify, from pūrus PURE.

pout v. Probably before 1325 pouten, of uncertain origin; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian pute fat woman and Swedish dialect puta to be puffed out); also found in Frisian (compare East Frisian piit bag, swelling, which is related perhaps through a verbal stem put-* to inflate, found in Old English ælepiute a fish with inflated parts, and in Middle Dutch puyt (modern Dutch puif), Flemish puut a frog. — n. 1591, from the verb.

poverty n. Before 1200 poverté condition of being poor; borrowed from Old French poverté, povreté, both forms from Latin paupertātem (nominative paupertās) poverty, from pauper POOR; for suffix see -TY².

powder n. Probably before 1300 poudre pulverized substance, dust; earlier as a surname Poudre (1260); borrowed from Old French poudre; earlier pouldre, from Latin pulverem (genitive pulvis) dust. — v. Before 1300 pudren put powder on, season; later powderen (probably about 1380), and make into powder (before 1400); from the noun in Middle English, and borrowed from Old French poudrer, pudrer cover with powder, from poudre, n. — powder horn (1533) — powder keg (1855).

power n. Probably before 1300 power, also about 1300 poër, pouer; borrowed through Anglo-French poër, pouair, puëir, and directly from Old French poër, pöer, pouvoir, noun use of the infinitive in Old French, to be able, from Vulgar Latin potēre* be powerful, be able, from potis powerful; see POTENT. — v. 1540, make powerful, strengthen; later, to supply with power (1898); from the noun. — powerful adj. Probably before 1400, formed from Middle English power + -ful. — powerless adj. Before 1420, formed from Middle English power + -les -less.

powwow n. 1624 Powah medicine man; later, ceremony, often accompanied by magic (1648); borrowed from Algonquian (probably Narragansett) pouwow shaman, medicine man, from a verb meaning “to use divination, to dream.” The sense of any meeting is first recorded in 1812. —v. 1642, from the noun.

pox n. 1503, spelling alteration of Middle English pockes, pokkes, plural of pocke POCK; found in the surname Poxe (1273).

practicable adj. 1670, that can be put into practice, formed in English from practic put into action or practice (about 1475, borrowed from Middle French practiquer and Medieval Latin practicare to practice, from practica; see PRACTICAL) + -able; also formed, in part, by influence of French praticable, from pratiquer to practice, from Old French practiquer to PRACTICE; for suffix see -ABLE. —practicability n. 1767, formed from English practicable + -ity.

practical adj. Probably before 1425 practicale of or having to do with matters of practice, applied; borrowed from Old French pratique, adj., and directly from Medieval Latin practicalis; earlier practicus, found in Late Latin practicus active, from Greek praktikós practical; also formed from Middle English praktik, n., method, practice, use (1392; earlier, applied science, before 1387) + *-al*¹. Middle English praktik, n., was borrowed from Old French pratique practice, usage, and directly from Medieval Latin practica practice, practical knowledge, from Greek praktiké practical knowledge, feminine singular of praktikós practical, from praktós, verbal adjective of prátein, Attic variant of prássein to do or act; for suffix see -ICAL. —practically adv. 1623, in a practical manner; formed from English practical + *-ly*¹. The meaning “almost” is recorded in 1869.

practice v. 1392 practisen to do, act, or perform habitually; later practicen (1477); borrowed from Old French practiser to practice, alteration (by substituting -iser) of practiquer, from Medieval Latin practicare do, perform, practice, from Late Latin practicus practical, from Greek praktikós PRACTICAL; for suffix see -IZE. —n. 1421 practise; probably before 1425 practice; from the verb in Middle English. The form practice replaced praktik, n., but both spellings existed into the 1800's. —practiced adj. (1568) —practitioner n. 1548, extended form of practisen to carry on some activity, employ (before 1400); borrowed from Old French practiser PRACTICE, v.

praetor n. magistrate in ancient Rome. Probably before 1425 pretor; perhaps borrowed through Old French pretor, and directly from Latin praetor, from praitōr* one who goes before, a consul as leader of an army (prae- before + the root of ire to go); for suffix see *-OR*². —praetorian adj. 1425, of or having to do with a soldier or bodyguard of a Roman commander or emperor; formed from Latin praetor + English -ian, after Latin praetōriānus.

pragmatic adj. 1616, busy, interfering, meddlesome; a shortened form of pragmatical (1543); borrowed probably through Middle French pragmatique (with English -ical), from Latin pragmaticus skilled in business or law, from Greek pragmatikós active, businesslike, from pragma (genitive prágmatos) civil business, deed, act, from prássein to do, act, perform; see PRACTICAL; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of concerned with practical results is first recorded in 1597. —pragmatism n. 1863, pedantry; formed from English pragmatic(ic) + -ism. 1878, in philosophy; perhaps Anglicized from German use of Pragmatismus in the 1700's.

prairie n. 1691, implied in prairie chicken a kind of grouse; later, large area of grassland (1734); borrowing of French prairie; also found earlier as prerie meadow (before 1682); borrowed from Old French prairie, from Vulgar Latin prātāria*, from Latin prātum meadow, originally a hollow.

Earlier in Middle English prayer meadow (about 1390), prae (about 1300); borrowed from Old French prairie (and in Medieval Latin prairie, before 1260), but the word disappeared so that modern English prairie represents a reborrowing from French.

praise v. Probably before 1200 preisen to praise, value, price; later praisen (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French preisier, variant of prisier to praise, value; see PRICE. —n. Before 1325 praise, pres; from the verb in Middle English.

praline n. 1727 prawlin; later praline (1809); borrowed from French praline, from the name of Marshal Duplessis-Praslin, whose cook invented pralines.

pram n. 1884, shortened and contracted from PERAMBULATOR; perhaps humorously influenced in its formation by earlier pram a flat-bottomed boat (1634).

prance v. About 1380 prauncen; earlier as a surname Praunce (1318); also prancen (before 1393); of uncertain origin; associated with Middle English pranken, v., to show off (about 1450, from Middle Dutch pronken to strut, parade; or with Danish dialectal prandse, pranse to go in a stately manner. —n. 1751, from the verb.

prank n. Before 1529, malicious or mischievous trick; of uncertain origin.

praseodymium n. 1885, New Latin, formed from Greek prásios leek-green (from práson leek) + New Latin (di)dymium double; so called from the green color of its salts, and because the supposed element didymium was found to consist of two elements, neodymium and praseodymium; for suffix see -IUM.

prate v. Probably before 1425 praten, borrowed from Middle Dutch praten to prate; cognate with Middle Low German praten to prate or chat, Swedish prata, and Norwegian prate. —n. 1579, from the verb.

pratfall n. 1939, fall on the buttocks, formed from English prat buttocks (1567, of unknown origin) + fall, n.

prattle v. 1532, a frequentative form of PRATE, corresponding to Middle Low German pratelen to chatter or grumble, frequentative of praten to prate; for suffix see *-LE*³. —n. 1555, from the verb.

prawn n. 1426 prayne; later prane (1440); of uncertain origin.

praxis n. 1581, borrowed from Medieval Latin praxis practice, action, from Greek práxis practice, action, doing, acting, from the stem of prássein to do or act.

pray v. Probably before 1225 preien ask earnestly, beg; later praien pray to a god, saint, etc. (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French preier, prier, from Latin precārī ask earnestly, beg, pray, from prex (genitive precis) prayer, request, entreaty. —prayer n. Probably before 1300 prayer, preier an earnest request; also about 1300 preiere supplication or prayer; borrowed from Old French preiere, praiere, from Medieval Latin precāria petition or prayer, from feminine of Latin precārius, adj., obtained by begging, given as a favor, from precārī ask earnestly, beg, pray.

pre- prefix meaning before, beforehand, in front, ahead, as in place, rank, or time; its relation in the compound may be prepositional, as in Precambrian, prenuclear, Pre-Raphaelite, or adverbial or adjectival, as in prearrange, precaution, precook, precede. Borrowed and abstracted from Old French words with pre-, also from Medieval Latin pre-, and directly from Latin prae-, from prae before, adv. and prep., earlier prai.

The prefix pre- is also embedded in many words borrowed from Latin, such as preach, precinct, precipice, precise, pregnant, premier. Some words, however, are formations with pre- probably by confusion with other prefixes (going back to Middle English) such as preserve from perserven and proposen as a variant of proposen, though forms such as precession and procession may be from confusion among whole words.

preach v. The word was adopted early in Europe from ecclesiastical Latin, as it appears in nearly all of the Germanic and Romance languages. It is found in Old English predician, but did not survive into Middle English. Probably before 1200 preachen speak publicly on a religious subject, deliver a sermon; borrowed from Old French precher, from a possible predichier* (compare Provençal predican), from Late Latin praedicāre to proclaim publicly, announce (in Medieval Latin, preach), found in Latin, proclaim or declare (prae- forth, before + dicāre proclaim). —preacher n. Apparently before 1200 preachur one who preaches sermons; borrowed from Old French precheor, from precher PREACH; for suffix see -ER¹. —preachment n. Before 1388 prechement a preaching or sermon; earlier, an annoying or tedious speech (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French prechement (precher PREACH + -ment -ment).

preamble n. About 1395, borrowed from Old French préambule, and directly from Medieval Latin preambulum, noun use of neuter adjective preambulum preliminary, from Late Latin praeambulus walking before (Latin prae- before + ambulāre to walk, AMBLE).

prebend n. 1422 prebend clergyman's salary, property or tax that yields this salary; borrowed from Middle French prebende, and directly from Medieval Latin prebenda allowance, from Late Latin prae'benda; see PROVENDER.

precarious adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin precārius obtained by entreaty or begging, and therefore also with the meaning of uncertain, from prex (genitive precis) entreaty, prayer; for suffix see -OUS.

precaution n. 1603, borrowed from French précaution, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin praecautiōnem (nominative praecautiō) a safeguarding, from Latin praecavēre guard against beforehand (prae- before + cavēre be on one's guard); for suffix see -TION.

precede v. Probably before 1425 preceden go or come before; borrowed from Middle French preceder, and directly from Latin praecedere (prae- before + cēdere to go).

precedent n. 1427 precydente; 1433 precedent; earlier precedent, adj., preceding (about 1400); borrowed from Middle French precedent, from Latin praecedentem (nominative praecedēns), present participle of praecedere go before PRECEDE; for suffix see -ENT. —precedence n. 1558, a precedent; probably from precedent, on the analogy of evidence, evident, etc.; for suffix see -ENCE. The meaning of the fact of preceding another or others, priority is first recorded in English in 1605.

precept n. About 1375, borrowed from Old French precept, and directly from Latin praecceptum maxim, rule, order, from neuter past participle of praecipere take beforehand, give rules to, order, advise, anticipate (prae- before + capere to take). —preceptor n. About 1425, an expert in the art of writing; borrowed from Latin praecceptor, from praecipere; for suffix see -OR².

precession n. 1594, the earlier occurrence of the equinoxes in each successive sidereal year; borrowed from Late Latin praecessiōnem (nominative praecessiō) a coming before, from Latin praecedere PRECEDE; for suffix see -SION.

precinct n. About 1400 prasaunt specific district or area, especially of a city or town; later precincte (1447); borrowed from Medieval Latin precinctum enclosure, boundary line, from neuter past participle of Latin praecingere to gird about, enclose (prae- before + cingere to gird, surround, encircle).

precious adj. About 1250 precious; later precious (about 1280); borrowed from Old French precios, precieuse, learned borrowing from Latin pretiosus costly or valuable, from pretium value; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of fastidious, over-refined is first recorded about 1395 and that of very great, thoroughgoing in 1449.

precipice n. 1598, sudden or headlong fall; borrowed from Middle French précepice, learned borrowing from Latin praecipitium a fall or jump from a great height, from praiceps (genitive praecipitis) steep, headlong, precipitous (prae- forth, before + caput HEAD). The meaning of a very steep cliff is first recorded in English in 1632.

precipitate v. 1528, hurl headlong; probably a back formation from precipitation, influenced by Latin praecipitātus, past participle of praecipitare hurl headlong, fall, be hasty, from praiceps (genitive praecipitis) headlong; see PRECIPICE; for suffix see -ATE¹.

The meaning of hasten the beginning of is first recorded in English in 1625. The meaning in chemistry of be deposited from solution is found before 1626. —adj. 1607, hasty or rash; later, very hurried, sudden (1658); borrowed from Latin praecipitātus, past participle of praecipitare be hasty. —n. 1563, substance separated from a solution; back formation from precipitation. —precipitation n. Before 1475 preccipitacion act of precipitating or casting down; also, about 1477, separation of a solid from a solution; borrowed possibly from Middle French précipitation, and directly from Latin praecipitātiōnem (nominative praecipitātiō) act or fact of falling headlong, headlong haste, from praecipitāre hurl headlong, fall, be hasty; for suffix see -ATION. —precipitous adj. 1646, abrupt, hasty; later, rushing headlong (1774); probably formed from: 1) a refashioning of earlier precipitous (1613, from Latin praecipitium precipice + English -ous); and 2) English precipitate + -ous, developing by influence of French précipiteux (from Latin praecipitium PRECIPICE + French -eux -ous).

précis n. 1760, borrowing of French précis, noun use of Middle French précis, adj., condensed, cut short, PRECISE.

precise adj. About 1443; borrowed from Middle French précis, précise condensed, cut short, and directly from Medieval Latin precisus, from Latin praecisus abridged, cut off, past participle of praecidere to cut off, abridge, shorten (prae- in front + caedere to cut). —precision n. 1640, borrowed through French précision, and directly from Latin praecisiōnem (nominative praecisiō) a cutting off abruptly, from praecidere to cut off; for suffix see -SION.

preclude v. 1618; borrowed from Latin praeccludere to close, shut off, impede (prae- before, ahead + cludere to shut).

precocious adj. 1650, formed from Latin praecox (genitive praecocis) maturing early + English -ous. Latin praecox is from praecoquere ripen fully (prae- before + coquere to ripen). —precocity n. 1640, formed from Latin praecox (genitive praecocis) precocious + English -ity.

precursor n. Probably about 1425 precursoure; borrowed from Middle French precursur, and directly from Latin praecursor forerunner, from praecursum, past participle of praecurrere (prae- before, ahead + currere to run); for suffix see -OR².

predaceous or predacious adj. 1713 predaceous, formed from Latin praedāri to plunder, rob + English -aceous, as in cretaceous, herbaceous, etc. The spelling predacious (confused with the suffix -ious as in voracious and ferocious) is first recorded in 1774.

predation n. Before 1475 predacion, borrowed from Latin praedātiōnem (nominative praedātiō) a plundering, act of taking booty, from praedāri to plunder or rob; for suffix see -ATION.

predatory adj. 1589; borrowed from Latin praedatōrius plundering, from praedatōr plunderer or hunter, from praedāri to rob or plunder; for suffix see -ORY. —predator n. 1922, developed from earlier Predatores (1840), name proposed for a group of insects that prey upon other insects; borrowed from Latin praedatōr; for suffix see -OR².

predecessor n. Before 1387 predecessoure, predecessor; borrowed from Old French predecesseur, and directly from Late Latin praedecessor (from Latin prae- before + decessor retiring official, from dēcedere go away, die; for suffix see -OR²).

predestine v. About 1385 predestinen, borrowed from Old French predestiner, and directly from Late Latin praedestināre appoint or determine beforehand (Latin prae- before + dēstināre appoint, determine, DESTINE). —predestinate v. About predetermine v. 1625, formed from English pre- + determine, after Latin praedetermināre. —predetermination n. 1637, formed from English predetermine + -ation.

1450, probably a back formation from predestination, and developed from predestinate, adj., foreordained by decree or purpose of God (about 1380); borrowed from Late Latin praedestinātus, past participle of praedestināre PREDESTINE; for suffix see -ATE¹. —predestination n. About 1340 predestinacioun, borrowed from Old French predestinacion, and directly from Late Latin praedestinātiōnem (nominative praedestinātiō) a determining beforehand, from praedestināre PREDESTINE; for suffix see -ATION.

predicament n. Before 1425, a category or class; specifically, one of Aristotle's ten categories; borrowed from Middle French prédicament, and directly from Medieval Latin predicamentum, Late Latin praedicamentum quality, category, something predicated, a loan translation of Greek katēgoriā CATEGORY, using Latin praedicāre; see PREDICATE; for suffix see -MENT. The meaning of a condition, or situation that is of an unpleasant or dangerous category is first recorded in English in 1586.

predicate v. 1552, borrowed from Latin praedicātus past participle of praedicāre assert, proclaim, declare publicly (prae- forth, before + dicāre proclaim); for suffix see -ATE¹; also possibly a back formation from predication a sermon, statement of belief (before 1325); borrowed from Middle French predication, and directly from Medieval Latin predicationem (nominative predicatio), from Latin praedicātiōnem, from praedicāre; for suffix see -ATION.

The verb in English may also have been influenced by the noun predicate. The sense of base (a statement, etc.) on something is first recorded in 1766. —n. About 1450, that which is said of the subject in a proposition of logic; borrowed from Middle French predicat, and directly from Medieval Latin predicatum a predicate in logic, from Late Latin praedicātum, noun use of neuter past participle of Latin praedicāre declare publicly. The meaning in grammar is first recorded in English before 1638. —adj. 1887, from the noun.

predict v. 1671, a back formation from earlier prediction, and borrowed from Latin praedictus, past participle of praedicere foretell, advise, give notice of (prae- before + dicere to say). —prediction n. 1561, borrowed from Middle French prédiction, and directly from Medieval Latin predictionem (nominative predictio) a prediction, from Latin praedictionem (nominative praedictiō) a prediction, premising, from praedicere foretell; for suffix see -TION. —predictability n. 1868, formed from English predictable + -ity. —predictable adj. 1857, formed from English predict + -able.

predilection n. 1742, borrowed from French prédilection, formed from Medieval Latin predilect-, past participle stem of prediligere prefer before others (from Latin prae- before + diligere choose, love) + French -ion.

predominate v. 1594, be greater, prevail; 1597, (in astrology) have ascendancy, exert controlling influence; probably borrowed from Medieval Latin predominare (Latin prae- before + domināri to rule); for suffix see -ATE¹. —predominance n. 1592, (in astrology) ascendancy, controlling influence; formed from English predominant + -ance, by influence of French prédominance, formed as in English from Middle French prédominant + -ance. The sense of preponderance or prevalence is first recorded in English in 1853. —predominant adj. 1576, exerting a controlling influence; borrowed from Middle French prédominant, formed as if from Medieval Latin prae-dominantem (nominative prae-dominans), present participle of prae-dominare predominate; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of greater, prevailing, is first recorded in English in 1601.

preemie n. 1927 premy, American English; formed from prem(ature) + -y²; the present spelling with ee, influenced by the pronunciation of premature, appeared in 1949 as preemies, pl.

preeminence n. Probably before 1200 preminence, pre eminence; borrowed probably from Medieval Latin preeminentia, Late Latin praeēminentia distinction, superiority, from Latin praeēminēns, present participle of praeēminēre project forwards, rise above, excel (prae- before + ēminēre stand out, project); for suffix see -ENCE. —preeminent adj. Before 1460 premy-nent; later preeminent (1473); borrowed from Medieval Latin preeminentem (nominative preeminens), from Latin praeēminentem, present participle of praeēminēre; for suffix see -ENT.

preemption n. 1602, formed in English from pre- before + Latin ēmpitiōnem (nominative ēmpitiō) buying, from emere to buy; see REDEEM; for suffix see -TION. —preempt v. 1850, secure (public land) by preemption; back formation from preemption.

preen v. About 1395 preynen to trim, preen; later prenen (1486); both forms variants of Middle English proinen to trim, preen, found as pruynen (about 1390), prunen (before 1393), and proynen prouynen (probably before 1430); formed as a blend of two words borrowed from Old French: 1) poroindre anoint before); and 2) proïgnier, proïgnier round off, prune.

prefab adj. 1937, shortened from prefabricate (1932) to make all standardized parts of, formed from English pre- beforehand + fabricate. —n. 1942, from the adjective.

preface n. About 1380 preface introduction to the Canon of the Mass; borrowed from Old French preface, and directly from Medieval Latin prefatīa, also borrowed from Latin praefatīo a saying beforehand, an introduction, preface, from praefārī to say beforehand, introduce, preface (prae- before + fārī speak). —v. 1616, to introduce, precede, herald; from the noun. —prefatory adj. 1675, formed in English from Latin praefat-, past participle stem of praefārī preface + English -ory.

prefect n. Probably about 1350 prefecte a civil or military officer; borrowed from Old French prefect, and directly from Latin praefectus public overseer, director, civil or military officer, from past participle of praeficere to put in front, put in authority over (prae- in front, before + the root of facere to perform). —prefecture n. Probably before 1439; borrowed from Middle French prefecture, and directly from Latin praefectūra the office of a prefect, from praefectus PREFECT; for suffix see -URE.

prefer v. Before 1393 preferren like better, choose rather, promote, advance; borrowed from Old French preferer, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin praeferre place or set before, advance, prefer (prae- before + ferre carry, place). —preferable adj. 1648 (implied in preferableness); formed from English prefer + -able, probably on the model of French préférable, formed from parallel elements in French. —preference n. 1456 preferraunce advancement in position or status, preferment; formed from English prefer + Middle French -aunce -ence, on the model of Middle French préférence, from Medieval Latin preferentia, from Latin praeferēns, present participle of praeferre prefer; for suffix see -ENCE. —preferential adj. 1849, formed from Medieval Latin preferentia preference + English *-al*¹. —preferment n. 1443 preferement prior claim or right; later, advancement (1454); formed from Middle English preferren prefer + -ment.

prefix n. 1646, from the verb in English (see below); earlier, New Latin prefixa (1614, plural of praefixum, noun use of the neuter form of Latin praefixus, past participle of praefigere fix in front, prae- in front, before + figere to fix, fasten). —v. 1414 perfixen; 1415 prefixen fix or appoint beforehand; borrowed from Middle French prefixer (pre- before + fixer to fix or place, from Latin fixus, past participle of figere to fix). The meaning of place in front is first recorded in 1538.

pregnable adj. About 1540, alteration (probably influenced by English pregnant) of Middle English preignable (probably before 1440, with gn representing a pronunciation usually recorded by ny, as in English poignant); which superseded earlier Middle English prenable (1435), pernable (1393); for suffix see -ABLE.

Middle English preignable was borrowed from Old French pregnauble, with the subjunctive stem pregn-, while earlier Middle English prenable, pernable were borrowed through Anglo-French pernable, Old French prenable, with the indicative stem pren-; all meaning assailable or vulnerable.

pregnant adj. About 1385, convincing or compelling; later, filled with meaning, heavy with significance, weighty (1402), and being with child (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin praegnantem (nominative praegnāns), variant of praegnātem (nominative praegnās) before birth, with child (prae- before + the root of gnāscī, nāscī be born); for suffix see -ANT. —pregnancy n. Before 1529, condition of being pregnant (used figuratively); later, condition of being with child, gestation (1598); formed from English pregnant + -cy.

prehensile adj. 1781–85, borrowed from French préhensile, from Latin prehēnsus, past participle of prehendere to grasp or seize (pre- before + -hendere, related to hedera ivy, in the sense of clinging).

prehistoric adj. 1851, formed from English pre- + historic, modeled on French préhistorique. —prehistory n. 1871, perhaps an independent formation of English pre- + history.

prejudice n. About 1300 prejudice (in prejudice of to the detriment of, in contempt of); later, detriment or injury (before 1333), and previous or hasty judgment (about 1395, perhaps before 1387); borrowed from Old French prejudice, and directly from Medieval Latin praedictum injustice, from Latin praedictum previous judgment, opinion formed in advance (prae- before + iudicium judgment, from iudex, genitive iudicis JUDGE). —v. 1447 prejudicen injure or be detrimental to; from the noun in Middle English, and borrowed from Middle French prejudicier to prejudice or be injurious, from Old French prejudice, n. prejudice. The meaning of affect with prejudice is first recorded in 1610. —prejudicial adj. 1418 prejudiciel; later prejudicial (1434), borrowed from Middle French prejudiciel, prejudicial, and directly from Medieval Latin prejudicialis injurious, from Latin praedictum prejudice; for suffix see -AL¹.

prelate n. Probably before 1200 prelat, borrowed from Old French prelat, and directly from Medieval Latin praelatus clergyman of high rank, from Latin praelatus one preferred, one given preference; praelatus serves as past participle of praefere PREFER; for suffix see -ATE¹.

preliminary adj. Before 1667, borrowed perhaps from French préliminaire; and directly from New Latin praeliminaris, formed from Latin prae- before + limen (genitive liminis) threshold; for suffix see -ARY; also possibly influenced by the earlier noun. —n. 1656, often in the plural preliminaries; borrowed from New Latin praeliminaris, n. and adj.

prelude n. 1561, borrowed from Middle French prélude set of notes sung or played to test the voice or an instrument, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin preludium prelude, preliminary, from Latin praeludere to play beforehand for practice, compose a prelude, to preface (prae- before + ludere to play). The sense of piece of music that introduces another piece is first recorded in English in 1658. —v. 1655, borrowed from Latin praeludere; see the noun.

premature adj. Probably 1440, borrowed from Latin praematurus early ripe, as fruit; very early, too early (prae- before + maturus ripe, timely); also possibly in later instances, formed from English pre- + mature.

premeditate v. Before 1548, possibly a back formation from premeditation or an independent formation of English pre- + meditate; also borrowed from Latin praemeditatus, past participle of praemeditari to consider beforehand. —premeditation n. Probably before 1425 premeditation, borrowed from Old French premeditation, and directly from Latin praemeditationem (nominative praemeditatio) consideration beforehand from praemeditari to consider beforehand (prae- before + meditari to consider); for suffix see -ATION.

premier adj. 1448 prymier first in time, earliest; as a surname Primer (1287); also premier first in rank, foremost (before 1471); borrowed from Middle French premier, primier first, chief, from Latin primarius of the first rank, chief. —n. 1711, shortened from earlier premier minister first minister (1686).

premiere or première n. 1889, first public performance; borrowing of French première in première représentation, from feminine of Old French premier first, PREMIER. —v. 1940, from the noun.

premise n. About 1380 premise, borrowed from Old French premise, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin premissa (propositio) (the proposition) put before, from feminine past participle of Latin praemittere send or put before (prae- before + mittere to send). The plural form premisses, in the legal meaning of property is found in 1464; from this developed the house or building with its grounds (1730). —v. About 1450, implied in premised aforesaid; from the noun.

premium n. 1601, borrowed from Latin praemium reward, profit derived from booty (prae- before + emere to buy; originally, to take). The meaning of an amount of money paid for insurance is first recorded in 1656.

premonition n. 1545, borrowing of Middle French premonition, learned borrowing from Late Latin praemonitionem (nominative praemonitio) a forewarning, from Latin praemonere forewarn (prae- before + monere to warn); for suffix see -TION. The word appears in Middle English premonicion a preliminary warning (probably 1456) and premonition (1472–73), found in Anglo-French premonition and Anglo-Latin premonitio warning, premonition, forms resulting from confusion with Latin praemunire protect in front (prae- before + mūnīre fortify).

prenatal adj. 1826; formed from English pre- + natal.

preoccupy v. 1567, formed from English pre- + occupy, possibly as a verb to earlier preoccupation, and on the model of Latin praecoccupare seize beforehand (prae- before + occupare seize, OCCUPY). —preoccupied adj. 1849, formed from English preoccupy + -ed². —preoccupation n. 1552, anticipation; borrowed from Latin praecoccupātionem (nominative praecoccupatio) a seizing beforehand, anticipation, from praecoccupare PREOCCUPY.

prep n. 1862, preparation of lessons, shortened form of preparation; later prep or prep school (1895), shortened form of preparatory school (1828). —v. 1915, to attend preparatory school, from the noun; later, to prepare, train (1927), shortened form of prepare. —preppy n. 1962, student or graduate of a preparatory school; formed from prep, n. + -y². —adj. 1966, from the noun.

prepare v. 1466 preparen make ready beforehand; back formation probably from preparation, and borrowed from Middle French preparer, from Latin praeparare make ready beforehand (prae- before + parare make ready). Later Middle English preparen replaced earlier preperaten (1392) and preparaten (about 1395); learned borrowings from Latin praeparatus past participle of praeparare. —preparation n. About 1390 preparacion; borrowed from Old French preparacion, and a learned borrowing from Latin praeparationem (nominative praeparatio) a making ready, from praeparare prepare; for suffix see -ATION. —preparatory adj. 1413, borrowed from Middle French préparatoire, and a learned borrowing from Late Latin praeparatōrius preliminary, from Latin praeparare prepare; for suffix see -ORY.

preponderate v. 1611, borrowed from Latin praeponderatus, past participle of praeponderare outweigh (prae- before + ponderare to weigh); for suffix see -ATE¹. —preponderance n.

1681, greater weight; formed from English preponderant + -ance. —preponderant adj. Before 1450, borrowed from Latin praeponderantem (nominative praeponderāns), present participle of praeponderāre PREPONDERATE; for suffix see -ANT.

preposition n. Before 1397 preposicioun, borrowed from Old French preposition, and directly from Latin praepositionem (nominative praepositio) a putting before (but in the sense of a grammatical preposition praepositio is a loan translation of Greek próthesis), from praepōnere put before (prae- before + pōnere put, set, place); for suffix see -TION.

prepossess v. 1614, to take beforehand; formed from English pre- + possess. The meaning of fill with a feeling or opinion beforehand is first recorded in 1639, and that of to impress favorably at the outset, is recorded in 1849. —prepossessing adj. 1642, biasing; formed from English prepossess + *-ing*². The sense of attractive is first recorded in 1805.

preposterous adj. 1542, borrowed from Latin praeposterus absurd; originally, with the last coming first (prae- before + posterus subsequent); for suffix see -OUS.

prepuce n. About 1400, borrowed from Old French prepuce, learned borrowing from Latin praepūtium foreskin (possibly formed from prae- before + pūtos* penis).

prerequisite n. 1633, something required beforehand. —adj. 1651, required beforehand. Both uses formed from English pre- + requisite, n. and adj.

prerogative n. Before 1387, borrowing of Old French prerogative, and directly from Medieval Latin prerogativa special right, from Latin praerogātiva prerogative, previous choice or election; originally referring to a unit of one hundred voters, who by lot voted first; from feminine of praerogātivus, adj., chosen to vote first, from praerogāre ask before others (prae- before + rogāre ask); for suffix see -IVE.

presage n. Before 1393, borrowed from Latin praesāgium a foreboding, from praesāgīre to perceive beforehand, forebode, from praesāgus foreboding (prae- before + sāgus prophetic, related to sāgīre perceive). —v. 1562, borrowed from Middle French présager, from présage omen, from Latin praesāgium.

presbyter n. 1597, borrowed from Late Latin presbyter presbyter, an elder, from Greek presbýteros an elder, also as an adjective with the meaning of older, a comparative form of presbys old, as in the noun sense of old man, possibly originally meaning one who leads a herd of cattle. —Presbyterian adj. 1640, formed from English presbytery a body or assembly of presbyters or elders (1578) + -an, and from presbyter + -ian. —presbytery n. 1466 presbetory part of a church reserved for the clergy; later, assembly of presbyters or elders (1578); borrowed from Late Latin presbyterium presbytery, from Greek presbytérion, from presbýteros presbyter; for suffix see -Y³. The term appears earlier in Middle English prismatorie (1412), probably an error by confusion with cris- in crismatorie chrismatory (vessel for holding sacred oil used in baptism).

preschool adj. 1924, formed from English pre- + school.

—n. 1934, nursery school, or other school for children before kindergarten; from the adjective.

prescience n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French prescience, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin praescientia foreknowledge, from praescientem* (nominative praesciēns*), present participle of praescire* to know in advance (Latin prae- before + scire to know); for suffix see -ENCE. —prescient adj. Before 1626, borrowed from French prescient, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin praescientem* (nominative praesciēns*), present participle of praescire*; for suffix see -ENT.

prescribe v. 1445 prescriben, borrowed from Latin praescribere write before, order, direct (prae- before + scribere to write). The medical meaning of direct the use of a medicine or remedy is first recorded in English in 1581, probably a back formation from prescription. —prescription n. Probably 1383 prescripcion right to something acquired through long possession or use; borrowed from Old French prescription, and directly from Latin praescriptiōnem (nominative praescriptiō) a writing before, order, direction, from praescribere PRESCRIBE; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a written direction given by a doctor, is first recorded in English in 1579. —prescriptive adj. 1748, that prescribes or directs; probably formed in English from earlier prescript a direction (about 1540, from Latin praescriptum something prescribed, from neuter of praescriptus, past participle of praescribere prescribe) + -ive.

presence n. About 1330 presens surrounding space, immediate vicinity; also 1340 presense fact or state of being present; borrowed from Old French presence, and directly from Latin praesentia a being present, from praesentem (nominative praesēns) PRESENT¹, adj.; for suffix see -ENCE.

present¹ adj. being at hand, not absent. About 1303, borrowed from Old French present, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin praesentem (nominative praesēns) present, immediate, prompt, from present participle of praeesse be before (a person or thing), be at hand, take the lead (prae- before + esse to be); for suffix see -ENT. —n. Probably before 1300 present presence, and in the phrase in present in this place; also probably about 1300, present time; borrowed from Old French present, n. and adj. —presently adv. About 1380, at present, now; formed from Middle English present, adj. + -ly¹. The sense of immediately is first recorded about 1430, and that of in the time that follows shortly, soon, before 1566.

present² n. thing given, gift. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French present in the phrase en present (to offer) in or into the presence of, and in mettre en present place before, give. Old French en present is from Late Latin inpraesentī face to face, from Latin in rē praesentī in the situation in question (praesentī, from praesēns being there; see PRESENT¹, adj.). —v. Probably before 1300 presenten to present, give, offer; also, bring before, introduce; borrowed from Old French presenter, and directly from Latin praesentāre place before, exhibit, from praesentem (nominative praesēns) being at hand, immediate; see PRESENT¹, adj. —presentable adj. 1451 (in law) liable to a formal charge of wrongdoing. The meaning of suitable in appearance or manner is first recorded in 1827. —presentation n. Probably 1383 presentacioun the action of presenting a clergyman as a candidate for a benefice; borrowed from Old French presentacion, from Late Latin praesentationem (nominative praesentatiō) a placing before, an exhibition, from Latin praesentāre to place before, exhibit; for suffix see -ATION.

presentiment n. 1714, borrowing of French presentiment, variant of pressentiment, from Middle French, from pressentir to have foreboding or premonition, from Latin praesentire to sense beforehand (prae- before + sentire perceive or feel); for suffix see -MENT.

preserve v. 1392 preserven keep from harm, keep alive; borrowed through Anglo-Latin preservare, from Late Latin; and borrowed from Old French preserver, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin preservare keep, preserve; from Late Latin praeservāre observe beforehand, preserve (Latin prae- before + servāre to watch or keep). —n. 1552 a preservative; later (usually preserves), fruit preserved with sugar (1600); from the verb. The meaning of a place where animals or plants are protected is first recorded in 1807. —preservation n. Probably before 1425 preservacioun protection from a disease; borrowed from Middle French preservation, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin preservationem (nominative preservatio), from preservare to PRESERVE; for suffix see -ATION. —preservative n. Before 1420 preservatif a protection or defense; developed from adjective preservative serving to prevent or protect against disease (before 1398); borrowed from Old French preservatif (feminine preservative), and directly from Medieval Latin preservativus, from preservare to PRESERVE.

preside v. 1611, borrowed from French présider preside over, govern, learned borrowing from Latin praesidēre stand guard, preside; literally, sit before (prae- before, + sedēre to SIT).

president n. Before 1382 president person who presides, chief officer; borrowed from Old French president, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin praesidentem (nominative praesidēs) a president or governor, noun use of present participle of praesidēre to act as head or chief, PRESIDE; for suffix see -ENT. The application of president to the chief executive officer of a republic is first recorded in 1787, the year in which the U.S. Constitution was drafted, and was extended from the earlier use of president as the presiding officer at meetings of the Continental Congress (1774), and that of chief officer of an American colony (1608). —presidency n. 1591, borrowed from Medieval Latin praesidentia office of president, from Latin praesidentem (nominative praesidēs), present participle of praesidēre PRESIDE; for suffix see -CY. —presidential adj. 1603, borrowed from Medieval Latin presidentialis, from praesidentia office of president; see PRESIDENCY; for suffix see -AL¹.

press¹ v. to push against. Before 1325 pressen offer, urge, recommend; later, push ahead (1338), crowd (before 1350), exert pressure, torment (about 1380); borrowed from Old French presier, presser, and directly from Latin pressāre to press, a frequentative form (influenced by pressus, past participle) of premere to press, hold fast, cover, crowd, compress. It is also probable the verb in English was influenced by the noun. —n.

Probably before 1200 prease society or companionship of people; later pres crowd, multitude (about 1280), presse crowding (before 1300), and device for exerting pressure (1373 in pre-shous); borrowed from Old French presse, from presser to press.

The meaning of urgency, haste, appeared before 1393. The meaning of a machine for printing, printing press (1535), borrowed from Middle French presse, from presser to press, from Old French was by 1579 used as an inclusive name for a publishing house, as in Clarendon Press. Such phrases as the freedom of the press, to write for the press, etc., began to appear about 1680. —pressing adj. About 1391, burdensome; formed from English *press*¹ overburden + -ing². The sense of urgent is first recorded in 1616.

press² v. force into service. 1578, alteration (by association with *press*¹, v.) of prest engage (recruits) by loan, pay in advance (1513); found in Middle English prest loan (1359–60); borrowed from Old French prest, from prester to lend, from Latin praestāre lend, make available, from praestō, adv., ready, available.

pressure n. About 1384, distress, anguish, affliction, suffering; borrowed from Old French pressure, pressur, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin pressūra action of pressing, from pressus, past participle of premere to PRESS¹; for suffix see -URE. The meaning of exertion of continuous force, is first recorded probably before 1425, and the sense (as in the pressure of air) is found in 1660. The meaning of urgency is first recorded in 1812. —v. 1939, from the noun. —pressurize v. 1938 (implied in pressurized); formed from English pressure, n. + -ize.

prestige n. 1656, illusion, deception, magic spell; borrowing of French prestige illusion, fascination, learned borrowing from Latin praestigia a delusion, an illusion, but usually found as praestigiae, pl., juggler's or conjurer's tricks, probably alteration of praestrigiae, from praestringere to bind, blindfold, dazzle (prae- before + stringere to tie or bind). The sense of blinding or dazzling influence, distinction is first applied to Napoleon in 1815 as a French word in an English context. —prestigious adj. 1546, deceitful, practicing magic; borrowed from Latin praestigiosus full of tricks, from praestigiae juggler's tricks; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of having reputation or influence or showing distinction is first recorded in English in 1913.

presto adv., adj. 1598–99, borrowing of Italian presto, from Latin praestus ready, from praestō, adv., ready, available, at hand.

presume v. About 1378 presumen take for granted, assume; later, venture, dare (about 1390); borrowed from Old French presumer, and directly from Late Latin praesumere take for granted, assume, dare, from Latin, to take before or anticipate (prae- before + sumere to take) —presumably adv. 1646, with a taking of things for granted; 1846, probably; formed from English presumable (presume + -able, perhaps after French présomable) + -ly¹. —presumption n. Before 1250 presumpcion arrogance; later, assumption, supposition (before 1376); borrowed from Old French presumpcion, and directly from Late Latin praesumptiōnem (nominative praesumptiō) confidence, audacity, from Latin, a taking beforehand, anticipation, from praesumere PRESUME; for suffix see -TION. —presumptive pretend v. Probably 1382 pretenden to claim, profess to have; later, feign or claim falsely (1402); borrowed from Old French pretendre, or directly from Latin praetendere stretch in front, put forward, allege, pretend (prae- before + tendere to stretch). —pretender n. 1591, one who intends; later, one who puts forth a claim (1622), formed from English pretend, v. + -er¹.

adj. About 1443, borrowed from Medieval Latin presumptivus, from Late Latin praesūptīvus, from praesūpt-, past participle stem of praesūmere. —presumptuous adj. Before 1349, borrowed from Old French presumptueux, and directly from Late Latin praesūptuōsus, variant of praesūptiōsus full of boldness, from praesūptiōnem PRESUMPTION; for suffix see -OUS.

pretense n. Before 1420 pretense, pretence claim, false show, feigning; borrowed from Middle French pretensse, from Medieval Latin pretense*, from feminine of Late Latin praetēnsus, corresponding to Latin praetentus, past participle of praetendere PRETEND. —pretension n. About 1443 pretensioun, pretencioun signification, sense; later, assertion (about 1449), and purpose, intention (about 1456); formed from Late Latin praetēnsus, corresponding to Latin praetentus, past participle of praetendere; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of ostentation is first recorded in English in 1727.

pretentious adj. 1845, borrowed from French prétentieux, from prétention pretension, from Medieval Latin pretentionem (nominative pretentio) pretention, variant of pretensionem (nominative pretensio), formed from Late Latin praetēnsus pretended; see PRETENSE; for suffix see -IOUS.

preterit or preterite adj. 1340, bygone or past; later, (in grammar) expressing past time (before 1397); borrowed from Old French preterit, and directly from Latin praeteritum, as in tempus praeteritum time past (praeter beyond, from prae- before + itum, past participle of ire go). —n. About 1380, past time, the past; developed from the adjective in English, and probably borrowed from Old French preterit, and directly from Latin praeteritum, neuter of praeteritus.

preternatural adj. 1580, borrowed from Medieval Latin preternaturalis, from Latin praeter nātūram (praeterque fātum) beyond nature (and beyond fate); for suffix see -AL¹.

pretext n. 1513, borrowed from Latin praetextum a pretext, originally neuter past participle of praetextere; or from praetextus (genitive praetextūs) outward display, show, from past participle stem of praetextere to disguise, cover (prae- in front, before + texere to weave).

pretty adj. Probably before 1400 praty manly, gallant, fine; also, about 1405, clever, skillful; and probably before 1410, handsome, attractive, pleasing; developed from Old English (about 1000, West Saxon praetig, Mercian prettig*) cunning, skillful, artful (praett, prett* trick, wile, craft, + -ig -y¹). Old English praett is cognate with Middle Dutch perre trick (modern Dutch pret sport, fun, pleasure), and Old Icelandic prett trick, deceit. Compare modern Dutch prettig pleasant, agreeable. —n. 1773, from the adjective. —adv. 1565, fairly, rather; from the adjective in an extended use of fair weakening to moderate, rather. —prettify v. 1850, formed from English pretty, adj. + -fy.

pretzel n. 1856, borrowing of German Prezel, Pretzel; also Brezel, Bretzel, from Old High German brezitella a pretzel, from Medieval Latin brachitellum* presumably a kind of biscuit baked in the shape of folded arms (compare Italian bracciata), diminutive from Latin brachiātus having branches (resembling arms), from Latin brachium arm.

prevail v. Before 1400 prevailen be successful or effective, later, prove superior, overcome; borrowed from Old French prevailoir, and directly from Latin praevalēre be very able, have greater power (prae- before + valēre have power, be worth). The spelling in ai is probably by analogy with Middle English availen and vailen. The meaning of predominate is first recorded in English in 1628. —prevailing adj. Before 1586, victorious; later, widely accepted (1685); from prevail, v. + -ing².

prevalent adj. Probably before 1425, very strong or powerful; borrowed from Latin praevalentem (nominative praevalēns), present participle of praevalēre PREVAIL; for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of widespread is first recorded in English in 1658. —prevalence n. 1592, mastery; later, influence (1631); possibly formed, in part, as a noun to earlier adjective prevalent; and in part borrowed from Middle French prévalence, from Latin praevalentia, from praevalēns, present participle of praevalēre PREVAIL; for suffix see -ENCE.

prevaricate v. 1582, deviate from the right course, go astray; a back formation from earlier prevarication, perhaps influenced by Latin praevaricātus, past participle of praevaricārī; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of equivocate, lie, is first recorded before 1631. —prevarication n. About 1384 prevaricioun transgression, trespass; borrowed from Old French prevarication, and directly from Latin praevaricātiōnem (nominative praevaricātiō) a stepping out of line in duty or behavior, from praevaricārī to make a sham accusation, deviate; literally, walk crookedly (prae- before + varicāre to straddle, from varicus straddling, from vānus bowlegged, crooked); for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of deception, equivocation is first recorded in English before 1655; from the Latin. —prevaricator n. Before 1400, transgressor of the law; borrowed from Old French prevaricator, and directly from Latin praevaricātor (praevaricārī to deviate + -tor -or²).

prevent v. Probably before 1425, act in anticipation of; borrowed from Latin praeventus, past participle of praevenire come before, anticipate, hinder (prae- before + venire to come). The meaning of keep from happening by anticipatory action is first recorded in English in 1548, and that of hinder in 1663. —prevention n. 1447 prevencion action of stopping, restriction; borrowed from Middle French prévention, and directly from Late Latin praeventiōnem (nominative praeventiō) a going before, anticipation, from Latin praevenire come before; for suffix see -TION. —preventive adj. 1639, formed from English prevent + -ive.

preview v. 1607, formed from English pre- + view, v. —n. 1855, from the verb.

previous adj. 1625, borrowed from Latin praeuius going before (prae- before + via road); for suffix see -OUS.

prey n. About 1225 preie a company of men, army; later prae animal hunted or seized for food (about 1250), and preye booty, plunder (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French preie booty, animal taken in the chase, from Latin praeda booty, plunder, game hunted or seized; related to prehendere to grasp, seize. —v. About 1300 preien to pillage, plunder; from the noun in English, and probably borrowed from Old French preier, earlier preder, from Latin praedāri to plunder, rob, from praeda, n., booty.

price n. Probably before 1200 pris value, worth, praise; later, cost, recompense, prize (about 1250); and in the spelling price (before 1382); borrowed from Old French pris, from Latin pretium reward, prize, value, worth, price. —v. 1382, prisen set the price to, value, prize, praise; borrowed from Old French prisier, variant of preisier, from Late Latin pretiāre to prize, from Latin pretium PRICE n.

In Middle English praise is said to have developed from pris originally, value, worth, praise, but differentiation was already in progress in Old French, shown by the difference in spelling, not only in early Middle English pris, n., value, worth, praise, contrasted with preisen, v., to value, praise, price, but also in Old French pris n., value, praise, and preisier, v., to value, praise. Further differentiation was completed in Middle English as pris, n., and preisen, v., each developed corresponding differentiated parts of speech, so that before 1325 preisen, v., had a new noun form pres, praise, to correspond to praise, n., while before 1382 pris, price, n., had a new verb form to correspond to price, n. giving the two words complete paradigms of noun and verb.

Later differentiation of *prize*¹, n., reward and *prize*³, v., value highly, from price, praise became evident in the late 1500's, with the introduction of the spelling -z-. —priceless adj. 1593, formed from English price, n. + -less.

prick n. Probably before 1200 pricke a point in space; later, a pricking, sharp pain, goad (probably about 1225); developed from Old English prica point, puncture, particle (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch pricke prick, and modern Dutch prik. —v. Probably before 1200 priken to pierce with a sharp point; also, cause agitation or distress; developed from Old English prician to prick (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch pricken to prick, modern Dutch prikken, and Middle High German pfrecken; derived from Proto-Germanic prikōjanan* and prikjanan*. —pricker n. (about 1325) prickle n. About 1303 prykyl (figurative) temptation; also prykyl small, sharp point, goad or spike (before 1338); developed from Old English (about 950) pricel, variant of pricels thing to prick with; cognate with Middle Low German prikel prickle, and Middle Dutch prikel (modern Dutch prikkel). These words are all apparently derived from the Germanic source of Old English prician to PRICK; for suffix see -LE¹ (later meanings were influenced by the frequentative suffix -LE³). —v. 1500–20, developed in part from prickle, n., and probably in part as a diminutive or frequentative from prick, v. + -LE³. —prickly adj. 1578, full of prickles, thorny; formed from pride n. Probably before 1200 prude, prute high opinion of one's worth; also magnificence, glory, honor; about 1200 pride; developed from Old English (before 1000) prȳde, from prūd PROUD. —v. Probably about 1150 pruden to be proud, pride oneself; later priden (about 1340), from the noun in Old English.

English prickle + -y¹. The sense of irritable is first recorded about 1862.

priest n. Before 1121 preost; later prest (probably before 1200), and prieste (about 1200); developed from Old English (695–96) prēost; usually regarded as a shortening of a form represented by Old Frisian prēstere priest, Old Saxon prēstar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch priester, and Old High German prēstar (modern German Priester); borrowed (perhaps through Vulgar Latin prester* priest), from Late Latin presbyter presbyter, elder, from Greek presbýteros an elder, also an adjective with the meaning of older, and a comparative form of presbys old man, possibly originally meaning one who leads a herd of cattle, from a primitive compound pres-* before (related to pará near, and pró before) + the root bofs, bōs cow. To account for the ēo of Old English prēost, an alternative etymology assumes a correspondence of Old English prēost to Old High German priast, prēst both forms borrowed through an intermediate prēvost* from Latin praepositus person placed in charge, from the past participle of praepōnere put in charge, place in front (prae- before + pōnere put, set). —priesthood n. About 1378 presthode, developed from Old English prēosthād (before 899); formed from prēost priest + -hād -hood.

prig n. 1753; earlier, dandy, fop (1676); probably the same word as prig thief (1610), and prig tinker (1567), originally thieves' cant, of unknown origin.

prim adj. 1709, related to earlier prim, v., to assume a formal, precise, or demure manner (1684), and prim, n., a formal, precise, or haughty person (before 1700); perhaps from obsolete French prim thin, small, delicate, from Old French prim fine, delicate, from Latin primus first, finest, PRIME¹.

primacy n. About 1384, borrowed from Old French primacie superiority, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin primatia office of a church primate, from Late Latin primās (genitive primātis) principal, chief, of first rank; see PRIMATE¹ bishop; for suffix see -CY.

prima donna n. 1812, borrowing of Italian prima donna first lady, from Latin prima, feminine of primus first; and domina lady. The meaning "temperamental person" is first recorded in 1834.

prima facie n. Probably before 1475, apparent to all; borrowing of Latin primā faciē, ablative case of prima faciēs first appearance (prima, feminine of primus first; and faciēs form, face).

primal adj. 1602, borrowed from Medieval Latin primālis primary, from Latin primus first; for suffix see -AL¹.

primary adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin primārius of the first rank, chief, principal, excellent, from primus first; for suffix see -ARY. —n. Before 1721, from the adjective. —primary election (1835). —primary color (1612). —primary school (1802).

primate¹ n. superior bishop or archbishop. Probably before 1200 primat, borrowed from Old French primat, and directly from Medieval Latin primas (genitive primatis) a church primate, from Late Latin primās of first rank, chief, principal, from primus first; for suffix see -ATE³.

primate² n. mammal of the order that includes monkeys, apes, and humans. 1898, Anglicized singular of New Latin Primates the order name, from Latin primātēs, plural of primās (genitive primātis) of first rank, chief; see PRIMATE¹; also possibly borrowed from earlier French primate, from New Latin Primates.

prime¹ adj. first in rank, chief. About 1385 pryme first in order of time, basic; borrowed from Old French prime, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin primus first, from pre-Italic prīmos*, related to Old Latin prī before; see PRIOR¹. The meaning of first in rank or importance, chief, principal, is first recorded in 1610, and that of first in quality in 1628. —prime minister 1694, head of a parliamentary government; earlier, any important minister (1647). —prime number (1570). —prime time (1961).

prime² n. the best time, best condition. Probably before 1200 prime the first daylight canonical hour; later, beginning of a period, course of events, etc. (1385); developed from Old English (about 961) prīm; borrowed from Medieval Latin prima the first service, and reinforced by Old French prime; both from Late Latin prīma, from Latin prīma hōra first hour, in reference to the Roman day. The meaning of the best or most vigorous stage or state is first recorded in English about 1536.

prime³ v. to fill, charge, load. 1513, probably from PRIME¹, adj. (the usage developing from the fact that priming a pump, gun, etc., is a first step in the operation of some device). The meaning of cover (a surface) with a first coat of paint, etc., is found in 1609, and that of furnish with information in 1791.

primer¹ n. beginner's book. 1378, prayer book, often used to teach children to read; borrowed from Medieval Latin primarius, noun use of Latin primārius of the first; see PRIMARY.

primer² n. 1497, a priming wire to keep the touchhole of a cannon open; formed from English *prime*³, v. + -er¹. The sense of a base coat of paint is found in 1688.

primeval adj. 1653, formed from Latin primāevus early in life (primus first + aevum AGE) + English -al¹.

primitive adj. 1392 premetif of original or primary cause, in reference to disease; later primitive of early times (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French primitif (feminine primitive), and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin primitivus first or earliest of its kind, from primitus at first, originally, from primus first; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning of simple, crude, uncivilized, is first recorded in 1685. —n. Before 1400, the first-born, original ancestor, spiritual ancestor; from the adjective.

primogenitor n. 1654, borrowed possibly through French primogéniteur, and directly from Late Latin primogenitor (Latin primus first, + genitor begetter, from genit-, past participle stem of gignere beget); for suffix see -OR².

primogeniture n. 1602, borrowed probably through French primogéniture, and directly from Medieval Latin primogenitura, from Late Latin primogenitus first-born (Latin primus first + genitus, past participle of gignere beget; see KIN); for suffix see -URE.

primordial adj. Before 1398, borrowed from Late Latin primordiālis, from Latin primordium the beginning (primus first + the stem of ordiri to begin); for suffix see -AL¹.

prim v. 1801, perhaps alteration of PRIM to assume a formal, precise, or demure manner (1684).

primrose n. 1373 prymrose; earlier as a surname Primerose (1365–66); borrowed from Old French primerose, and directly from Medieval Latin prima rosa, literally, first rose. The plant was so called because it comes early in the spring. —adj. 1844, pale-yellow (color of the common primrose of Europe) from the noun.

prince n. Probably before 1200, ruler of a principality, sovereign, chief, leader, great man; earlier as a surname (1166); borrowing of Old French prince, from Latin princeps (genitive principis) first or principal person, leader, chief; originally, adj., first, chief, leading, original; literally, that takes first (primus first; + -ceps, regular development of unaccented *-caps, from the root of capere to take, hold). —princess n. About 1370 princesse, formed from English prince + -ess, and borrowed from Old French princesse, feminine of prince; for suffix see -ESS.

principal adj. About 1300, largest, most important, main, chief; borrowed from Old French principal, learned borrowing from Latin and directly as a principalis first in importance, primary, from princeps (genitive principis) first, chief, leading, original; see PRINCE; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. About 1300, chief, ruler; later, original sum of money on which interest is paid (1430–31); from the adjective in English, also influenced by if not borrowed from Old French, where the noun use was developed from the adjective, and from Latin, in which the same process of development from the adjective took place. The sense of a person in charge of a school is first recorded in 1827.

principality n. About 1350 principalte government by a prince; later, kingdom, state or country ruled by a prince (probably about 1380); with the spelling principalite (about 1385); borrowed from Old French principalité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin principālītatem (nominative principālītās) the first place, superiority, from Latin principālis first in importance, PRINCIPAL; for suffix see -ITY.

principle n. About 1380 principle law, rule, characteristic, basic assumption; also principis origin, source, beginning (about 1382); alteration with l of Old French principe, learned borrowing from Latin principium first part, beginning, origin (plural principia first principles, fundamentals, elements), from princeps (genitive principis) first, chief, original; see PRINCE. The English spelling with l apparently developed on the learned analogy of such words as English participle, corresponding to Latin participium.

The extended meaning of basic rule, in the sense of right action, uprightness, rectitude, is first recorded in 1653.

print n. About 1300 prente mark made by pressing, printed state or form; later prient (before 1325), and prynt (about 1340); borrowed from Old French preinte, *prie*nt impression, from feminine of preint, past participle of preindre to press, alteration (under influence of such verbs as feindre pretend) of earlier pembre, from Latin premere use force, PRESS¹. —v. About 1380 prynten to imprint, instill; also before 1382 prenten to mark, impress, stamp; from the noun. The meaning of produce (a book, etc.) by applying inked type to paper is first recorded in 1511, replacing Middle English emprynten (before 1474 variant of emprienten IMPRINT). —printer n. 1504, formed from English print, v. + *-er*¹. —printing press (1588, though known in press, 1535) prior¹ adj. preceding, earlier. 1714, borrowing of Latin prior former, earlier, superior, a comparative form of Old Latin pri before, related to Latin prae before. —priority n. About 1385 priorite, borrowed from Old French priorité, borrowed directly from Medieval Latin prioritatem (nominative prioritas), from Latin prior prior; for suffix see -ITY. —prioritize v. 1972, formed from priority + -ize.

prior² n. head of a priory of men. Old English (1093) prior, borrowing of Medieval Latin prior superior officer, prior, noun use of Latin prior superior, PRIOR¹. The word was reinforced in Middle English (first recorded in 1123) by Old French priur, prior, prieux, as found in Middle English forms, such as priur (about 1230) and priour (about 1330). —prioress n. About 1300, borrowing of Old French prieresse, and borrowed directly from Medieval Latin priorissa, from prior prior; for suffix see -ESS. —priory n. About 1300 priorie, borrowed through Anglo-French priorie, from Medieval Latin prioria, from prior prior; for suffix see *-Y*³.

prism n. 1570, borrowed from Late Latin prisma, from Greek prisma, originally, thing sawed off, from prēin to saw. The meaning in optics of a transparent prism is first recorded in English in 1612. —prismatic adj. 1709, shortened form of prismatical (1654); developed by influence of French prismatique formed from Greek prisma (genitive prismatos) + French -ique -ic.

prison n. Before 1112 prisune confinement; later, place for confinement (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French prison, prisoun, prison a prison, imprisonment (influenced by pris taken, seized; see PRIZE²), from Latin prensionem (nominative prensio, contracted from prehensio*) a seizing, arrest, from prehens-, past participle stem of prehendere seize. —prisoner n. Probably 1350–75 prysner one kept in prison, or one captured in war; later prisoner (before 1375); borrowed from Old French prisonier, from prison PRISON; for suffix see *-ER*¹.

prissy adj. 1895, perhaps humorous alteration of precise with suffix *-y*¹, or a blend of prim and sisy.

pristine adj. 1534, borrowed perhaps from Middle French pristin (feminine pristine) or directly from Latin pristinus former, early, original, primitive, from pris-, related to primus first; for suffix see *-INE*¹.

privacy n. 1591 privacie a private matter, secret; later, seclusion (1598–1601); formed from English private, adj. + (-cie) -cy.

private adj. Probably 1384 pryvat distinctive, set apart; borrowed from Latin privatus apart from the public life, deprived of office, belonging to an individual; originally, past participle of privare deprive, free, release, from privus one's own, single, individual; related to Old Latin pri- before, in the sense of apart from the rest; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —n. 1599, a private citizen; from the adjective.

privateer n. 1664, formed from English private, adj. + -eer, probably patterned after volunteer; originally a term for private man of war (1646).

privation n. Before 1398 privacioun condition of being deprived, lack; borrowed from Old French privacion, and directly from Latin privatiōnem (nominative privatiō) a taking away, from privare deprive; see PRIVATE; for suffix see -ATION.

privet n. 1542, of uncertain origin.

privilege n. 1137 privilegie a grant, commission, license; later privilege a distinction, power (probably before 1200), and a special right, advantage, or favor (1340); borrowed from Old French privilege, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin privilegium law applying to one individual, (later) privilege, prerogative (privus individual + lēx, genitive lēgis law) —v. Before 1325 privelegen grant a privilege to (implied in privelegenge); later pryvylegen (about 1390); from the noun, and borrowed from Old French privelegier, privilegier, from the noun in Old French.

privy adj. Probably before 1200 prive private, having private knowledge, personal, intimate; later pryvy (1303); borrowed from Old French privé, from Latin privatus private; for suffix see *-Y*³. —n. Probably before 1200 prive toilet, private place; later, confidant, intimate (about 1300); borrowed from Old French privé, from privé, adj., private. —Privy Council About 1300, confidential advice; later, a secret meeting (about 1383), and group of advisors to a king (about 1390).

prize¹ n. reward. 1593, spelling alteration of Middle English pris value, reward; see PRICE. —adj. 1803, worthy of a prize; from the noun.

prize² n. thing taken or captured. 1596, spelling alteration of Middle English prise (about 1250; see PRICE); borrowed from Old French prise a taking hold, seizure; from pris (influenced by pris I seized, from Vulgar Latin prēs*), past participle of pren to seize, take, from Latin *pren*ere, contracted from prehendere seize.

prize³ v. value highly. 1586, spelling alteration of Middle English prisen to prize, value (1382; see PRICE).

prize⁴ n. lever, leverage. About 1400 prise instrument for prying, lever, borrowed from Old French prise a taking hold, seizure; see PRIZE². The meaning of leverage is first recorded in 1835. —v. 1686, from the noun.

pro¹ adv. for (a proposition, opinion, etc.). 1572, abstracted from earlier pro & contra for and against (probably before 1430); borrowing of New Latin pro et contra; see PRO⁻¹. —n. Probably about 1400, borrowed from Latin prō for; see PRO⁻¹.

pro² n., adj. professional. 1866, shortened form of professional, n. As an adjective, pro appeared in 1932.

pro⁻¹ a prefix meaning: 1 forward, forth, as in proclaim, proceed, progress, propel. 2 beforehand, as in provide. 3 taking care of, as in procure. 4 in place of, as in proconsul, pronoun. 5 on the side of, favoring, as in pro-American. Borrowed from Latin prō-, from preposition prō on behalf of, in place of, before, for; see also PRO⁻².

pro⁻² a prefix meaning before, ahead, in front, earlier than, especially in words borrowed (often through Latin and French) from Greek, as in prologue, prophet, prophylactic, but also in words of later formation, as in procephalic, proseminar, provirus. Borrowed from Greek pro-, from preposition prō before, in front of. The prefix is also embedded in words such as problem and program, and as the distinction between pro⁻¹ and pro⁻² weakened in Middle English, most users became unaware of any differences in sound or meaning, though it survives, in modern coinages and in the sense of favoring (as in pro-union), a use not known in Latin.

probable adj. Before 1387, likely or plausible; borrowed from Old French probable, from Latin probabilis that may be proved, from probāre to try or test; see PROVE; for suffix see -ABLE. The meaning of likely to occur, is probably first recorded in English in 1606. —probability n. About 1443 probabilite the fact of being probable, likelihood; borrowed from Middle French probabilité, learned borrowing from Latin probabilitatem (nominative probabilitās) credibility, probability, from probabilis PROBABLE; for suffix see -ITY.

probate n. Before 1400 probeyt proof, evidence; later probat the official approval of a will's validity (about 1439); borrowed from Latin probātum, neuter of probātus, past participle of probāre to test, PROVE; for suffix see -ATE¹. —v. 1570, to prove; later, prove the genuineness of a will (1792); from the noun.

probation n. About 1412 probacioun a testing or proving; borrowed from Middle French probacion, and directly from Latin probationem (nominative probatio) inspection, examination, from probāre to test, PROVE; for suffix see -ATION. The system by which criminals are put on probation, under the supervision of a probation officer, was introduced in the United States in the 1800's; these terms are first recorded about 1878.

probe n. Probably before 1425, instrument for exploring wounds, cavities, etc.; also, an examination; borrowed from Medieval Latin proba examination, in Late Latin, test or proof, from Latin probāre to PROVE. The meaning of an act of probing is first recorded in English in 1890; from the verb. —v. 1649, search into, explore, investigate; from the noun.

probity n. About 1425 probyte, borrowed from Middle French probité, from Latin probritatem (nominative probritās) uprightness, honesty, from probus worthy, good; see PROVE; for suffix see -ITY.

problem n. Before 1382 probleme puzzling question, riddle; borrowed from Old French problème, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin problēma, from Greek problēma a problem, question proposed for solution; literally, a thing put forward, from probállein propose, put forward or before (pro-forward, pro⁻² + bállein to throw; see BALL²).

The meaning of a difficulty (in mathematics) to be solved is first recorded in English in 1570, and that of a difficult question in 1594, developing from senses of a scholarly question for investigation (before 1387), and that of a difficulty (1464). —problematic adj. 1609, shortened form of problematical (1570, of the nature of a problem; later, doubtful or uncertain, 1611); formed (by influence of Middle French problématique) from Late Latin problēmaticus, from Greek problēmatikós pertaining to a problem, from problēma (genitive problēmatis) problem + English -ical; see also the suffix -IC.

proboscis n. 1609, borrowing of Latin proboscis, from Greek proboskís (genitive proboskídos) an elephant's trunk; literally, means for taking in food, from pro-forward, pro⁻² + bóskein to nourish, feed, bóskesthai graze, be fed.

procaryote or prokaryote n. 1963, cell without a visible nucleus; borrowed from French procaryote (pro-before, pro⁻² + caryote cell nucleus, from Greek káryon nut, kernel). The forms procaryote, prokaryote were influenced by prokaryotic and by prokaryon (1957).

procedure n. 1611, borrowing of French procédure manner of proceeding, method, from Old French proceder to PROCEED; for suffix see -URE. —procedural adj. 1889, formed from English procedure + -al.

proceed v. About 1380 proceden spread, continue, come or result from; borrowed from Old French proceder, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin prōcēdere go forward, advance, go on (prō-forward, pro⁻¹ + cēdere go). —n. proceeds pl. 1665, plural of proceed that which proceeds from something, outcome, profit (1643); from the verb. An earlier meaning of the act or manner of proceeding is first recorded in 1628. —proceeding n. 1517 procedyng action of going forward; later, what is done, action, conduct, often proceedings, pl. (1553); from proceed, v. + -ing¹.

process n. Before 1338 proces content of a discourse, subject matter, meaning; later proces proceedings in a legal action (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French proces journey, a going, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin prōcessus (genitive prōcessūs) process, progress, from past participle stem of prōcēdere go forward, PROCEED. The meaning of a set of actions in a special order (as in the process of making cloth from wool), is first recorded in English in 1627. —v. 1532, start legal action against; borrowed from Middle French processer to prosecute, from Old French proces, n., PROCESS. The meaning of prepare by a special process, is first recorded in English in 1884, from the noun. —processor n. 1909, formed from procession n. 1103, act of marching or proceeding; borrowed from Old French procession, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin processiōnem (nominative processiō) religious procession, from Latin processiōnem a marching onwards, from the stem of processum, past participle of prōcedere to PROCEED; for suffix see -SION. — processional n. 1440 processional book containing hymns, etc., for use in religious processions; borrowed from Medieval Latin processionale a processional book, from neuter of processionalis of a procession, from Late Latin processiōnem (nominative processiō) PROCESSION; for suffix see -AL¹. — adj. 1611, of or belonging to a procession; formed from English procession + *-al*¹, probably by influence of French processional and Medieval Latin processionalis.

English process + *-or*²; found in such formations as data processor in 1958, microprocessor in 1970, word processor about 1974, and food processor in 1977.

proclaim v. Before 1393 proclamen make known publicly; borrowed from Old French proclamer, and directly from Latin prōclāmāre to cry or call out (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + clāmāre cry out). The spelling proclaymen (about 1425) was influenced by claymen to CLAIM. — proclamation n. 1386 proclamacion act of proclaiming; borrowed from Old French proclamacion, and directly from Latin prōclāmātiōnem (nominative prōclāmātiō) a crying or calling out, from prōclāmāre PROCLAIM; for suffix see -ATION.

proclivity n. Before 1591, borrowed from Middle French proclivité, and directly from Latin prōclivitatē (nominative prōclivitas) a tendency, propensity, from prōclivis prone to; literally, sloping or inclining (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + clivus a slope, related to clināre to bend); for suffix see -ITY.

proconsul n. About 1384, governor or military commander of an ancient Roman province; borrowing of Latin prōcōsul, from prō cōsule (acting) in place of a consul (prō in place of; and cōsule, ablative case of cōsul CONSUL).

procrastinate v. 1588, possibly a back formation from procrastination and borrowed from Latin prōcrāstinātus, past participle of prōcrāstināre put off till tomorrow, defer (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + crāstinus belonging to tomorrow, from crās tomorrow); for suffix see -ATE¹. A verb procrastine (before 1548), borrowed from Middle French procrastiner, did not survive. — procrastination n. Before 1548, borrowed from Middle French, and directly from Latin prōcrāstinātiōnem (nominative prōcrāstinātiō) a putting off, from prōcrāstināre put off; for suffix see -ATION.

procreate v. 1536, developed from procreate, adj., begotten, born (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin prōcreātus, past participle of prōcreāre bring forth (offspring), engender (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + creāre CREATE); for suffix see -ATE¹; also probably a back formation from procreation. — procreation n. About 1395 procreacioun a begetting, generation, reproduction; borrowed from Old French procreacion, and directly from Latin prōcreātiōnem (nominative prōcreātiō) generation, from prōcreāre PROCREATE; for suffix see -ATION.

procrustean or Procrustean adj. Before 1846, aiming to produce conformity by arbitrary means, formed in allusion to Procrustes (robber in Greek legend who caused his captives to fit the length of his bed by stretching their bodies or cutting short their legs) + English -an. The name in Greek is Prokroústēs, literally, one who stretches, from prokroúein to beat or hammer out, stretch out (pro- out + kroúein to beat).

proctology n. branch of medicine dealing with the rectum and anus. 1899, formed from Greek prōktós anus + English -logy.

proctor n. Probably before 1350 proketour defender of a realm; earlier as a surname (1301); also proctour agent, steward, officer (probably about 1378); contraction of procuratour PROCURATOR. The meaning of a university official, is first recorded in English in 1447, from use of procurator (1410, from similar use of Latin procurator, 1248). — v. 1676, from the noun.

procurator n. About 1300 procuratour steward, overseer, manager; earlier as a surname (1275); also, financial administrator of a college, church, or abbey (about 1410); borrowed from Old French procuratour, procurator, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin prōcūrātor manager, administrator, from prōcūrāre manage; for suffix see -OR².

procure v. Probably before 1300 procouren, procuren cause, bring about, recruit, entice; borrowed from Old French procurer, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin prōcūrāre, in Latin, manage or take care of (prō- in behalf of, *pro-*¹ + cūrāre care for). — procurement n. About 1303, improper use of influence in making an appointment or legal decision, connivance; later, act of bringing about (about 1400); borrowed from Old French procurement, from procurer PROCURE; for suffix see -MENT. — procurer n. Before 1398 procurour an advocate or spokesman; later, an instigator, contriver (1451); borrowed from Old French procureur, procureor, refashioned from English procure + *-er*¹.

prod v. 1535, possibly a variant of brod (also perhaps influenced by poke); developed from Middle English brodden to goad, urge, prod (probably about 1475), from earlier brode, n., pointed instrument, goad (before 1425); earlier, a nail (1295), from brodd a sprout or shoot (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic broddr shaft, spike, sprout). — n. 1787, from the verb.

prodigal adj. 1500–20, possibly a back formation from prodigality, and borrowed from Middle French prodigal, and from Late Latin prōdigālis* wasteful, from Latin prōdigus wasteful, from prōdigere drive away, waste (prōd-, variant of prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + agere to drive); for suffix see -AL¹. — n. 1596, from the adjective. — prodigality n. 1340 prodigalite, borrowed from Old French prodigalité, and directly from Late Latin prōdigālītatem (nominative prōdigālītās) wastefulness, from prōdigālis* (found only in Medieval Latin), from Latin prōdigus wasteful; for suffix see -ITY.

prodigy n. Before 1470 prodige extraordinary sign, portent, omen; borrowed from Latin prōdigium (prōd-, variant of prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + -igium, of uncertain origin). The meaning of something out of the ordinary, a marvel or wonder, is first recorded in 1626, and that of a person with exceptional qualities, especially a precocious child 1658. —prodigious adj. 1552, ominous, portentous; borrowed from Middle French prodigieux, and directly from Latin prōdigiōsus marvelous, from prōdigiū prodigy; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of marvelous, astounding, is first recorded in English in 1568, and that of very great, huge, in 1601.

produce v. Probably before 1425 producen extend, proceed; borrowed from Latin prōducere lead or bring forth, draw out (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + dūcere to bring, lead). The meaning of bring into existence, give rise to, is first recorded in 1513 (implied in producer), that of give birth to, beget, generate, in 1526, and that of yield, furnish, supply, in 1585. —n. 1695, from the verb. —producer n. 1513, formed from English produce, v. + *-er*¹.

product n. About 1450, quantity produced by multiplying numbers; possibly influenced in use by earlier product, adj., produced (before 1398), but borrowed from Medieval Latin productum, from Latin prōductum something produced, noun use of neuter past participle of prōducere to bring forth, PRODUCE. The meaning of something produced by any action, operation, or work, is found in English in 1575.

production n. 1410 producioun act of producing; later, product (about 1450); borrowed from Middle French production, and directly from Medieval Latin productionem (nominative productio), from Latin prōductus, past participle of prōducere bring forth, PRODUCE; for suffix see -TION. —productive adj. 1612, tending to produce, creative, generative; borrowed from French productif (feminine productive), and directly from Medieval Latin productivus, from Latin prōductus, past participle of prōducere bring forth, PRODUCE; for suffix see -IVE. —productivity n. 1809–10, power to produce; formed from English productive + -ity.

profane adj. About 1450 prophane, borrowed from Middle French profane, prophane, and borrowed directly from Latin profānus profane, not consecrated, from prō fānō not admitted into the temple (with the initiates); literally, out in front of the temple (prō before; and fānō, ablative case of fānum temple). —v. About 1384 prophanen, borrowed possibly from Old French profaner, and directly from Latin profānāre to desecrate, from profānus, adj., PROFANE. —profanity n. 1607, quality or condition of being profane, profane word or act; borrowed from Late Latin profānitās profaneness, from Latin profānus, adj., PROFANE; for suffix see -ITY.

profess v. Before 1333 professen to take the vows of a religious order; a back formation from earlier profession, and probably, borrowed from Old French profes, adj., that has taken a religious vow, from Medieval Latin professus professed, avowed, Latin professus, past participle of profiteri declare openly, lay claim to (pro- forth, *pro-*¹ + fatēri utter, declare, disclose). The meaning of declare openly, acknowledge (1526) was a direct borrowing of the sense from Latin, and its extended meaning of lay claim to, allege, is first recorded in English 1530.

profession n. Probably before 1200 professium vow made by a person entering a religious order; borrowed from Old French profession, from Latin professionem (nominative professio) public declaration, avowal; also, avowed occupation, calling, from professus, past participle of profiteri declare openly, PROFESS; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of an occupation requiring professed skill or qualified training is first recorded in English in 1541. —professional adj. 1747–48, of or having to do with a profession, formed from English profession + *-al*¹. An isolated sense of pertaining to a religious order is found about 1420. —n. 1811, person who makes a profession of something that others do for pleasure; from the adjective.

professor n. Before 1387 professour teacher of a branch of knowledge; borrowed from Old French professeur, and directly from Latin professor person who professes to be expert in some art or science, teacher of the highest rank, from profiteri lay claim to, PROFESS; for suffix see -OR². —professorial adj. 1713, formed from English professor + -ial.

proffer v. Probably before 1300 proferen to offer, deliver; borrowed through Anglo-French profrier, and directly from Old French poroffrir, profir (por- forth, from Latin prō- *pro-*¹ + offir to offer, from Latin offerre to OFFER). —n. Before 1375 profer a petition, request; 1380, an offer; borrowed through Anglo-French profre, from profir to PROFFER.

proficient adj. About 1590, possibly a back formation from proficiency, and borrowed through Old French proficient, from Latin prōficiētem (nominative prōficiēs), present participle of prōficere accomplish, make progress, profit, be useful (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -ENT. —proficiency n. 1544, progress toward a high degree of skill, probably formed from Latin prōficiētem (nominative prōficiēs), present participle of prōficere + English -cy; see -ENCY. The meaning of skill, expertness, is first recorded before 1639.

profile n. 1656, sideview or outline, especially of a face; borrowed from Italian profilo, from profilare to draw in outline; formed from pro- forth, from Latin pro-; see *PRO-*¹ + filare draw out, spin from Late Latin filāre; to spin, draw out in a line. —v. 1715, draw a profile of; borrowed from Italian profilare draw in outline.

profit n. 1263 profit income, proceeds; borrowed from Old French profit advantage, profit, from Latin prōfectus (genitive prōfectūs) profit, progress, advance, from past participle of prōficere; see PROFICIENT. —v. About 1330, profiten to advance, benefit, gain, from the noun in Middle English, and borrowed from Old French profiter, from profit, n. —profitable adj. Probably about 1300, yielding profit; borrowed from Old French profitable, from profit, n., (also found in Anglo-Latin profitabilis); for suffix see -ABLE. —profiteer n. 1912, formed from English profit, n. + -eer. v. 1916, from the noun (but implied in an earlier profiteering, 1814).

profligate adj. 1647, borrowed from Latin prōfligātus immoral, ruined, past participle of prōfligāre to cast down, defeat, ruin (prō- down, forth, *pro-*¹ + -fligāre, form of fligere to strike, dash); for suffix see -ATE¹. The word appears with the now obsolete meaning of overthrown or routed 1535. —n. 1709, from the adjective. —profligacy n. 1738, formed from English profligate + -cy.

profound adj. About 1300, characterized by depth of thought and knowledge, very learned; borrowed from Old French profond deep, and directly from Latin profundus deep, bottomless, vast (pro- forth, *pro-*¹ + fundus BOTTOM). —profundity n. Probably before 1425 profundite bottom or depth of the ocean; borrowed from Old French profundité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin profunditatem (nominative profunditās) depth, immensity, from Latin profundus deep, vast; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of depth of intellect, is first recorded before 1500.

profuse adj. Probably before 1425, lavish, extravagant; borrowed from Latin profusus poured forth, spread out, profuse, from past participle of profundere pour forth, (pro- forth, *pro-*¹ + fundere to pour). The meaning of very abundant, bountiful, is first recorded in English before 1610. —profusion n. 1545, lavish and wasteful expenditure; borrowed from Middle French profusion, and directly from Latin profusio (nominative profusio) a pouring out, from profusus, past participle of profundere pour forth; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of great abundance is first recorded in English in 1705.

progenitor n. About 1384 progenitor, borrowed from Old French progeniteur, and directly from Latin progenitor ancestor, from progenit-, past participle stem of prognoscere beget (pro- forth, *pro-*¹ + gnoscere to produce, beget); for suffix see *-OR*².

progeny n. Before 1325 progeni, borrowed from Old French progenie, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin progenies descent, offspring, from prognoscere beget; see PROGENITOR.

prognosis n. 1655, borrowed from Late Latin prognōsis, from Greek prognōsis, from prognōskein come to know beforehand (pro- before, *pro-*² + gnōskein come to know). The general meaning of prognostication or forecast is first recorded in 1706.

prognosticate v. Probably before 1425 pronosticaten; a back formation from Middle English pronostication, and borrowed from Medieval Latin prognosticatus, pronosticatus, past participle of prognosticare, from Latin prognōstika signs to forecast weather, from the neuter plural of Greek prognōstikós foreknowing, from prognōskein PROGNOSIS; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —prognostication n. 1392 pronosticioun a symptom, something that foretells death; borrowed from Old French pronostication, and directly from Medieval Latin prognosticationem, pronosticationem* (nominative prognosticatio), from prognosticare, foretell; for suffix see -ATION.

program n. 1633, public notice; borrowed from Late Latin programma proclamation, edict, from Greek programma a written public notice, from gráphein write publicly (pro- forth, *pro-*² + gráphein to write).

In the early 1800's, reborrowed from French programme, in the sense of a descriptive notice or listing of items or events, as a list of pieces at a musical concert, or playbill for a theatrical event (1805). Computer use for a set of coded instructions has been recorded since 1945. —v. 1896, from the noun. —programmatic adj. 1896, formed in English from Greek programma (genitive prográmmatos) program + English suffix -ic. —programmer n. 1890, one who draws up a program of events; later, person who programs a computer (1948); formed from English program, v. + *-er*¹.

progress n. Probably before 1425 progresse course or process (of action, events, narrative, etc.), forward movement; borrowed from Latin progrēssus (genitive progrēssūs), from past participle of progrēdi go forward (pro- forward, *pro-*¹ + grādi to step, walk).

The meaning of advance, growth, development, is first recorded in 1603. —v. About 1590, to journey or travel; from the noun. The meaning of proceed or advance is first recorded in 1595, and that of make progress or develop, in 1610. —progression n. About 1380 progression action of moving from one state of an operation or development to another; borrowed from Old French progression, and directly from Latin progrēssionem (nominative progrēssio) a going forward, from progrēssus, past participle of progrēdi go forward; for suffix see -ION. —progressive adj. 1607–12, making progress; borrowed from French progressif (feminine progressive), formed as if from Latin progrēssivus*, from progrēssus, past participle of progrēdi go forward; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1865, one who favors or advocates progress or reforms, especially in political and social matters, from the adjective.

prohibit v. Probably before 1425 prohibiti, borrowed from Latin prohibitus, past participle of prohibere hold back, forbid, prevent (pro- away, forth, *pro-*¹ + habere to hold); also possibly a back formation from prohibition. —prohibition n. About 1385 prohibicion act of prohibiting; borrowed from Old French prohibicion, and directly from Latin prohibitiōnem (nominative prohibitiō) a hindering or forbidding, from prohibere hold back; for suffix see -TION. —prohibitive adj. 1602, that prohibits; borrowed from French prohibitif (feminine prohibitive), from Late Latin prohibitivus, from Latin prohibitus, past participle of prohibere hold back; for suffix see -IVE.

project n. Probably before 1400 projecte plan, draft, scheme; borrowed from Latin proiectum something thrown forth, noun use of neuter of proiectus, past participle of proicere stretch out, throw forth (pro- forward, *pro-*¹ + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw).

The meaning of a group of low-rent apartment buildings first appeared about 1958, as a shortened form of housing project (1930's). —v. About 1477 projecten to plan, devise; developed from earlier project, adj., extended, inclined, disposed (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin proiectus, past participle of proicere. The meaning of stick out, protrude, appeared in 1718. —projection n. 1477 projection the conversion of a baser metal into gold; borrowed from Latin; later, representation on a plane in constructing maps (1557); borrowed probably from Middle French projection, and directly from Latin proiectiōnem (nominative proiectiō) extension, projection, from past participle of proicere to PROJECT; for suffix see -TION. —projector n. 1596, formed from English project, v. + *-or*².

projectile n. 1665 projectil, object that can be thrown or shot; borrowed from New Latin projectilis, from Latin prōiectus, past participle of prōicere throw forth, PROJECT.

proletarian n. 1658, formed in English from Latin prōletārius a Roman citizen of the lowest class (one too poor to serve the state except by furnishing it with his offspring) + English -an. Latin prōletārius derives from prōlēs offspring, progeny (prō- forth, pro-¹ + -olēs, as in sub-olēs offspring). —adj. 1663, formed in English from Latin prōletārius of or belonging to the lowest class of Roman citizens + English -an. —proletariat n. 1853, borrowed from French prolétariat, from Latin prōlētārius a Roman citizen of the lowest class + French -at *-ate*³.

proliferation n. 1867, reproduction by budding or division; borrowing of French prolifération, from prolifere producing offspring (proli-, from Latin prōlēs offspring + -fere, from Latin ferre BEAR²); for suffix see -ATION. —proliferate v. 1873, back formation from proliferation; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

prolific adj. 1650, borrowed from French prolifère; from Medieval Latin prolificus (from Latin prōlēs offspring + the root of facere make).

prolix adj. Before 1420, lengthy, wordy; borrowed through Middle French prolix, and directly from Latin prōlixus, literally, poured out (prō- forth, pro-¹ + lix-*, related to liquere to flow, be fluid). —prolixity n. About 1385 prolixitee, borrowed from Old French prolixité, learned borrowing from Latin prōlixitatem (nominative prōlixitās), from prōlixus PROLIX; for suffix see -ITY.

prologue n. Before 1325 prolong; later prolog, prologe (about 1385); borrowed from Old French prologue, prologe, and borrowed directly from Latin prologus, from Greek prólogos prologue of a play, speaker of a prologue (pro- before, pro-² + lógos speech, from légein speak).

prolong v. Probably about 1408 prolongen; probably a back formation from prolongation, and borrowed from Middle French prolonguer, and directly from Late Latin prōlongāre prolong, extend (Latin prō- forth, pro-¹ + longus LONG¹, adj.). —prolongation n. 1392 prolongacioun extension, length; borrowed from Old French prolongation, formed from Late Latin prōlongāre prolong, extend + Old French -ation. The sense of a lengthening of duration is recorded in Middle English probably before 1425.

prom n. 1894, dance given by a school; shortened form of earlier promenade, in the same sense (1887).

promenade n. 1567, borrowing of Middle French promenade, from promener take for a walk, from Latin prōmināre drive (a beast) on (prō- forward, pro-¹ + mināre drive with shouts); for suffix see -ADE. —v. 1588 (implied in promenading); from the noun.

promethium n. 1948, New Latin, formed in allusion to Prometheus (from Greek Prōmētheús the Titan in Greek mythology who stole fire from heaven and taught mankind its use) + -ium. Promethium was associated with Prometheus' deed because the element was a product of mankind's new-found ability to harness the energy of nuclear fission.

prominent adj. Probably 1440 promynent projecting or jutting out; borrowed from Latin prōminentem (nominative prōminēns), present participle of prōminere jut or stand out (prō- forward, pro-¹ + -minere, related to mōns MOUNT² hill); for suffix see -ENT. The extended meaning of conspicuous or striking is first recorded in 1759, and that of notable, distinguished, leading, in 1849. —prominence n. 1598, projection or protuberance, borrowed from obsolete French prominence, from Latin prōminētia a jutting out, from prōminētem PROMINENT; for suffix see -ENCE. The meaning of distinction, notoriety, conspicuousness, is first recorded in 1828.

promiscuous adj. 1603, consisting of a disorderly mixture of persons or things; borrowed from Latin prōmiscuus mixed (prō- forward, pro-¹ + miscere to MIX); for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of confusedly mingled, indiscriminate, is first recorded in 1605; that of indiscriminate in sexual relations, in 1900, probably from its use in promiscuity. —promiscuity n. Before 1849, borrowed from French promiscuité, formed in French from Latin prōmiscuus promiscuous + French -ité -ity. Reference to promiscuous sexual relations is first recorded in 1865.

promise n. About 1400, Middle English promys a pledge, vow; borrowed from Latin prōmissum a promise, noun use of neuter past participle of prōmittere send forth, foretell, promise (prō- before, pro-¹ + mittere to put, send). A coexisting form promisse (before 1410) was borrowed from Old French promise, promesse, from Medieval Latin promissa a promise, from Latin prōmissum. —v. Probably before 1400 promicen make a promise; later promysen (probably before 1425); probably from the noun in Middle English. —promissory adj. About 1445 promissorye; borrowed from Medieval Latin promissorius, from Latin prōmissor a promiser, from prōmittere send forth, PROMISE; for suffix see -ORY. —promising adj. (1592) promo n. 1962, advertising, publicity, or other promotional presentation; shortened form of earlier promotion, in the same sense (1925).

promontory n. 1548, borrowed perhaps from Middle French promontoire, and directly from Medieval Latin promontorium, alteration (influenced by Latin mōns MOUNT² hill) of Latin prōmunturium mountain ridge, headland, probably related to prōminere jut out; see PROMINENT; for suffix see -ORY.

promote v. Before 1387 promoten to advance, raise to a higher position; borrowed from Old French promoter, and directly from Latin prōmōtus, past participle of prōmovēre move forward, advance (prō- forward, pro-¹ + movēre drive with shouts); for suffix see -ADE. The extended meaning of further the growth, development, or progress of anything, is first recorded before 1400.

Latin prōmovēre was also borrowed into Middle English in promoven (probably about 1400) in the sense of encourage someone in a certain course of action, promote; but the word gradually became obsolete in the 1600's and even in its derivative forms, such as promoveant, is not recorded after 1877. —promoter n. 1384, one who furthers the interests of another, supporter; borrowed from Old French promoteur, promotor, and directly from Medieval Latin promotor, from Latin prōmovēre to PROMOTE. —promotion n. Before 1400 promociōne advancement in rank or position; later promotion (1429); borrowed from Old French promociōn, and directly from Latin prōmōtiōnem (nominative prōmōtiō) advancement, from prōmovēre advance; for suffix see -TION. —promotional adj. 1922, of promotion; formed from English promotion + -al.

prompt adj. About 1415, ready, prepared, eager; probably from the verb in Middle English and borrowed from Old French prompt, and directly from Latin prōmptus visible, at hand, ready, quick, from past participle of prōmere bring forth, bring to light (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + emere, originally, take). —v. About 1340 promitten urge or incite to action; later prompten (1440, normalized by influence of prompt, adj., and Latin prōmptus); probably borrowed from Medieval Latin promptare*, from Latin prōmptus prompt. The meaning of remind (a speaker, learner, actor) of the words or actions needed is recorded in Middle English in 1428. —prompter n. 1440 promptator; later prompter (before 1548).

promulgate v. 1530, possibly developed from promulgate, adj., set forth; borrowed from Latin prōmulgātus; and borrowed directly from Latin prōmulgātus, past participle of prōmulgāre make publicly known, perhaps altered from prōvulgāre in the same sense (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + vulgāre make public, publish); for suffix see -ATE¹. —promulgation n. 1604, borrowed from French promulgation, from Latin prōmulgātiōnem (nominative prōmulgātiō) proclamation, publication, from prōmulgāre make known, publish; for suffix see -ATION.

prone adj. 1408 proone inclined, disposed to; borrowed from Latin pronus bent forward, inclined to, perhaps from a lost adverb prōne* forward, in front, from prō- forward, *PRO-*¹; for the Latin ending -nus compare Latin infernus situated below (INFERNAL) and externus outside (EXTERNAL). The meaning of lying face down, is first recorded in 1578.

prong n. Probably about 1425 prange pointed instrument; later pronge agony, pain (1440); borrowed from Anglo-Latin pronga prong, pointed tool; of uncertain origin, perhaps related to Middle Low German prange stick, restraining device, prangen to press, pinch, Middle Dutch pranghen (modern Dutch pran-gen), Middle High German pfrenge, and Gothic anapranagan oppress.

pronominal adj. 1680, borrowed from Late Latin prōnōminālis belonging to a pronoun, from Latin prōnōmen (genitive prōnōminis) PRONOUN; for suffix see -AL¹.

pronoun n. About 1450, formed from English *pro-*¹ + noun, modeled on Middle French pronom, learned borrowing from Latin, and modeled directly on Latin prōnōmen (prō- in place of, *pro-*¹ + nōmen noun, NAME).

pronounce v. Before 1338 pronuncen declare, decree; later pronuncen (about 1350), and utter or articulate, speak (1393); borrowed from Old French pronuncier, prononcier, and directly from Latin prōnūntiāre to proclaim, announce, publish, pronounce (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + nūntiāre announce, from nūntius messenger). —pronounced adj. 1577, spoken; formed from English pronounce + -ed². The sense of strongly marked, emphatic or decided, is first recorded in 1727–41. —pronouncement n. 1593, formed from English pronounce + -ment. —pronunciation n. Probably before 1425 pronunciation act of pronouncing, speaking; borrowed perhaps by influence of Middle French prononciation, from Latin prōnūntiātiōnem (nominative prōnūntiātiō) act of speaking; also, a proclamation, publication, from prōnūntiāre announce, PRONOUNCE; for suffix see -ATION.

pronto adv. 1850, borrowing of Spanish pronto, perhaps also influenced by earlier use of pronto (1740) borrowing of Italian pronto; both the Spanish and Italian from Latin prōmptus, adj.

proof n. Probably before 1200 preove that which proves a statement, evidence, in Ancrene Riwe; later prove, prōf (before 1325); borrowed from Anglo-French prove, preove, Old French proeve, pneue, from Late Latin proba a proof, from Latin probāre to PROVE. —adj. 1592, in proof against; from the noun, as in proof of proved or tested power (1456). This sense was extended to use as the second element in such compounds fireproof (before 1638), waterproof (1736). —proofread v. Before 1927, back formation from proofreader. —proofreader n. 1832, formed from English proof trial impression from type, test + reader; for suffix see -ER¹.

prop¹ n. support. 1440 proppe a stick, rod, pole, beam, or other rigid support; borrowed from Middle Dutch proppe vine prop, support, of uncertain origin. —v. 1456 proppen; from the Middle English noun.

prop² n. object used in a play. 1911, back formation from props, pl. (1841), shortened form of properties (1578).

prop³ n. aircraft propeller. 1914, shortened form of propeller.

propaganda n. 1718 Propaganda committee of cardinals in charge of Catholic missionary activity, founded in 1622; borrowing from New Latin Congregatio de Propaganda Fide Congregation for Propagation of the Faith; New Latin propaganda is an ablative feminine gerundive construction of Latin propagāre to PROPAGATE. —propagandist n. (1829) —propagandize v. (1844) propagate v. 1570, multiply by reproduction, cause to breed; back formation from propagation; also, probably developed from propagate, adj. propagated (before 1548), borrowed from Latin propagātus, past participle of propagāre multiply plants by means of layers or slips, breed, extend the stock of, from propagō (genitive propaginis) that which propagates, a layer or slip of a plant, offspring (pro- forth, *pro-*¹ + pāg-, root of pangere to fix, fasten); for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of spread, disseminate (as in propagate a rumor) is first recorded in 1600. —propagation n. Probably 1440 propagacioun generation, reproduction; borrowed from Middle French propagation, and directly from Latin propagātiōnem (nominative propagātiō) a propagation or extension from propagāre PROPAGATE; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of dissemination, making widely known, is first recorded in 1588.

propel v. Probably 1440 propellen drive away or expel; borrowed from Latin prōpellere push forward (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + pellere to push, drive). The meaning of drive forward is recorded in 1658. —propellant n. 1881, firearm explosive, from propellant, adj., that propels a bullet, etc. (1858); formed from English propel + -ant, as an alteration of propellent. Application to the fuel of a rocket is first recorded in 1919. —propellent adj. 1644, formed from English propel + -ent, modeled on Latin prōpellentem (nominative prōpellēs), present participle of prōpellere PROPEL. —n. 1814, from the adjective. —propeller n. 1780, mechanical contrivance for propelling machinery or a vehicle such as a ship (1809); formed from English propel + -er. The apparatus to propel a flying machine (as by mechanical flapping wings) is first recorded in 1842 and a mechanism analogous to a ship's propeller is applied to a toy flying machine in 1853.

propensity n. 1570, probably formed from obsolete English propense, adj., inclined, disposed, prone (1528) + -ity; and perhaps formed as if from Latin prōpēnsitatem* (nominative prōpēnsitās*) inclination, from prōpēns-, past participle stem of prōpēndere incline to, hang forward, weigh over (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + pendere hang) + English suffix -ity.

proper adj. Probably before 1300 propre special, commendable; also, proper one's own (1303), and appropriate or correct (1340); borrowed from Old French propre, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin proprius one's own, particular, special, peculiar. The specialized meaning of socially appropriate, decent, respectable, is first recorded in 1704. —proper noun noun naming a particular person, place, or thing (probably before 1500).

property n. About 1303 properte nature, quality, characteristic; later, possession, things owned (before 1325), and probably about 1380 property; borrowed from Old French propreté, propreté, and directly from Latin proprietas (nominative proprietas) special character, propriety, property, from proprius one's own, special, proper; for suffix see -ty.

prophecy n. Probably before 1200 prophecie; also prophesie (about 1300); borrowed from Old French prophetie, prophecie, prophesie, and directly from Late Latin prophētia, from Greek prophētiā gift of interpreting the will of the gods, from prophētēs PROPHET; for suffix see -cy. The spelling of the noun (prophecy) and the verb (prophesy) did not become fully differentiated until after 1700. —prophesy v. About 1350 prophecie; also prophesien (about 1384); borrowed from Old French prophecie, prophesier, from prophetie prophecy. —prophesier n. 1477, formed from English prophesy + -er.

prophet n. Probably before 1200 prophete person who speaks for God, person who foretells, inspired preacher; borrowed from Old French prophete, profete, and directly from Latin prophēta, from Greek prophētēs (Doric prophātās) an interpreter, spokesman, especially of the will of the gods; also, an inspired person (pro- before, *pro-*² + phā-, root of phānai to speak). The sense of an inspired spokesman, as of some principle, cause, or movement, is first recorded in English in 1848. —prophetic adj. Before 1475 prophetyk, borrowed from Middle French prophetique, and directly from Late Latin prophēticus, from Greek prophētikós pertaining to a prophet or to a prophecy, from prophētēs prophet; for suffix see -ic.

prophylactic adj. 1574, borrowed perhaps from Middle French prophylactique (1546), and directly from Greek prophylaktikós precautionary, adjective to prophylaxis*, from prophylassein keep guard before (pro- before, *pro-*² + phylassein, Ionic variant of phylátein to guard); for suffix see -ic. —n. 1642, from the adjective. Prophylactic in the sense of a condom is first recorded in 1943; earlier called preventive (1822) and preventative (1901). —prophylaxis n. 1842, New Latin, noun formed to Greek prophylaktikós PROPHYLACTIC.

propinquity n. About 1380 propinquyte nearness in relationship, kinship; later, physical proximity (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French propinquite, and directly from Latin propinquitatem (nominative propinquitās) nearness, vicinity, from propinquus near, neighboring, from prope near; for suffix see -ity.

propitiate v. 1583, probably a back formation from propitiation, and developed from propitiate, adj. appeased, conciliated, favorable; borrowed from Latin propitiatus, past participle of propitiare render favorable, from propitius PROPITIOUS; for suffix see *-ate*¹. —propitiation n. About 1395 propiciacioun; borrowed from Late Latin propitiatiōnem (nominative propitiatiō) an atonement, from Latin propitiare render favorable; for suffix see -ation.

propitious adj. 1440 propicius inclined to grant favor, generous; borrowed from Anglo-French propicius, propicios, Middle French propicieux favorable, gracious, and borrowed directly from Latin propitius favorable, gracious, kind (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + petere go to); for suffix see -ious. Earlier propice (about 1350), borrowed from Old French propice, from Latin propitius (see above), gradually disappeared in the 1600's.

proponent n. 1588, borrowed from Latin prōpōnentem (nominative prōpōnēs), present participle of prōpōnere put forward, PROPOSE; for suffix see -ent; also probably formed in English from propone, v. to put forth, propose (1402, from Latin prōpōnere put forward) + -ent.

proportion n. Before 1382 proporcyon relation between parts, shape, form; also, comparative relation of things, in size, degree, number, etc. (before 1387); borrowed from Old French proportion, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin prōportiōnem (nominative prōportiō) comparative relation, analogy, from prō portiōne according to the relation (of the parts to each other), alteration of prō partiōne*, ablative case of a lost noun partiō* division, related to pars (genitive partis) PART; for suffix see -tion. —v. About 1385 proporcionen, from the noun in English, and probably borrowed from Old French proportionner, from Old French proportion, n., and perhaps from Medieval Latin proportionare, formed as a verb to prōportiōnem (nominative prōportiō; see noun). —proportional adj. 1392 proportional; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French proportionnel, from Late Latin prōportiōnālis pertaining to proportion, from Latin prōportiō (genitive prōportiōnis) PROPORTION; for suffix see *-al*¹. —proportionate adj. Before 1398 proportionate of proper proportion, appropriate, corresponding; borrowed from Late Latin prōportiōnātus proportioned, from Latin prōportiō (genitive prōportiōnis) PROPORTION; for suffix see -ATE¹.

propose v. 1340 proposen to put forward a scheme, form an intention; later, put forward for consideration (before 1398); borrowed from Old French proposer (pro- forth, *pro-*¹ + poser put, place) also influenced in formation by Latin prōpos-, perfect stem of prōponere put forward, PROFOUND. Latin prōponere is also the source of obsolete English propone, which coexisted with propose, but is now evident only in such words as propone.

—proposal n. 1653, formed from English propose + -al². —proposition n. About 1340 proposicion a parable, obscure statement; later, assertion or statement (about 1380); borrowed from Old French proposition, learned borrowing from Latin prōpositiōnem (nominative prōpositiō) a setting forth, purpose, statement, from prōposit-, past participle stem of prōponere PROFOUND; for suffix see -TION. —v. 1924, from the noun.

propound v. 1551, alteration of propowne, propoune (1537), developed from Middle English propoune to put forward, propose, assert (1402); borrowed from Latin prōponere put forward, declare, propose, intend (prō- before, *pro-*¹ + pōnere to put, place; see POSITION). The -d in propound began to appear in the late 1500's, and is similar in its development to the d of COMPOUND¹ and EXPOUND.

proprietary adj. About 1450 proprietarye possessing worldly goods in excess of a cleric's needs; later, held in private ownership (1589); probably from earlier noun (1401 proprietarie person interested in worldly goods to the distraction of devotion to God; later, property owner, 1473); borrowed from Middle French propriétaire, and directly from Medieval Latin propriarius owner of property, Late Latin propriarius of a property holder, from Latin proprietas ownership, PROPERTY; for suffix see -ARY.

proprietor n. 1639, owner by royal grant, of an American colony; probably alteration of English proprietary property owner (1473); see PROPRIETARY; for suffix see -OR².

propriety n. Probably before 1425 proprie quality of being proper, appropriateness, fitness; borrowed from Old French proprieté, proprieté, learned borrowing from Latin proprietas (nominative proprietas) appropriateness, propriety, ownership; see PROPERTY; for suffix see -TY².

propulsion n. 1611, act of driving away, expulsion; formed in English from Latin propuls-, past participle stem of propellere to PROPEL + English suffix -ION. The meaning of the act of driving forward or condition of being driven forward, propelling force or effect, is first recorded in 1799.

pro rata 1575, borrowing of Latin prō ratā (parte) according to (the portion) figured for each (prō for; and ratā, ablative case singular of ratus, past participle of rēre to count, reckon).

prorate v. 1860, from PRO RATA. —proration n. 1923, formed from English prorate + -ion.

prorogue v. 1419 proroguen prolong or extend (an agreement, truce, etc.); later, discontinue regular meetings of a legislature or parliament for a time (1455); borrowed from Middle French proroguer, and directly as a learned borrowing from prōrogāre defer, prolong (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + rogāre ask, propose, request).

prosaic adj. 1656, of, in, or having to do with prose; borrowed probably from French prosaïque, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin prōsaicus in prose, pertaining to prose, from Latin prōsa PROSE; for suffix see -IC.

The meaning of characteristic of prose rather than poetry is first recorded in English in 1746, and the extended sense of ordinary, not exciting, in 1813; both senses probably from earlier use in French.

proscenium n. 1606, the stage of an ancient theater; borrowed from Latin proscenium, from Greek proskénion the space in front of the scene or scenery where the action took place, the entrance of a tent (pro- in front of, *pro-*² + skénē stage, tent). The theatrical meaning of forestage is first recorded in 1807.

prosciutto n. About 1938, borrowing of Italian prosciutto, alteration (probably influenced by prosciugato dried) of presciutto (pre- an intensive form + -sciutto, from Latin exsūctus lacking juice, dried up, from past participle of exsūgere suck out, draw out moisture, from ex- out + sūgere to SUCK).

proscribe v. Probably before 1425 proscriben write before, prefix; later proscribed excited, past participle (1445); borrowed from Latin proscribere publish in writing, publish as having forfeited one's property, condemn, outlaw (prō- before, *pro-*¹ + scribere to write). The meaning of prohibit as wrong or dangerous is first recorded in English in 1622. —proscription n. About 1380 proscripcion exile, banishment; borrowed from Latin proscriptiōnem (nominative proscriptiō) public notice, outlawry, from proscript-, past participle stem of proscribere PROSCRIBE; for suffix see -TION. —proscriptive adj. 1757, formed from Latin proscript-, past participle stem of proscribere PROSCRIBE + English suffix -ive.

prose n. Probably before 1300, a story or narration; later, prose writing, language not arranged in verse or meter (about 1338); borrowed from Old French prose, and directly from Latin prōsa (ōratiō) straightforward or direct speech with no ornamental variations as in verse; prōsa, feminine of prōsus, earlier prōsus straightforward, direct, a contraction of Old Latin prōvorsus (moving) straight ahead (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + vorsus turned, past participle of vertere to turn). —prosy adj. 1837, formed from English prose + -y¹.

prosecute v. Probably before 1425 prosecuten carry out, follow up, pursue; borrowed from Latin prosecūtus, past participle of prosequi follow after, PURSUE. The meaning of bring before a court of law is first recorded in English in 1579. —prosecution n. 1564, action to get possession of; also 1567, act of pursuing; borrowed from Middle French prosecution, and probably directly from Late Latin prosecutiōnem (nominative prosecutiō) a following, from Latin prosecūt-, past participle stem of prosequi pursue. The meaning of legal action is first recorded in 1631. —prosecutor n. 1599, one who carries out some action; borrowing of Medieval Latin prosecutor, from Latin prosecūt-, past participle stem of prosequi pursue + -or -OR². The meaning of a person who brings a case before a court of law is first recorded in 1621, and is earlier found in the term promoter (1485).

proselyte n. convert. About 1384 proselite, borrowed from Old French proselite, from Late Latin proselitus, from Greek proselitos one who has come over, stranger, convert; literally, having arrived (pros- to, alteration of proti toward + ely- root of eleúsesthai to be going to come, and of né-ēlys new-comer). —proselytize v. 1679, formed from English proselyte + -ize.

prosody n. Probably before 1475 prosodye; borrowed from Latin prosōdia, from Greek prosōidiā song sung to music; also, accent, modulation, etc. (pros- to + ōidē song, poem, ODE); for suffix see -Y³.

prospect n. Probably before 1425 prospecte outlook, view; learned borrowing of Latin prospectus (genitive prospectūs) view, outlook, from past participle of prospicere look out on, look forward (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + specere look at). The meaning of a thing expected or looked forward to is first recorded in 1665, and in its plural form (as in good prospects for the coming year) in 1667. —v. 1841, explore for gold or other minerals; from prospect, n., a spot giving prospects of a mineral deposit (1832). —prospective adj. 1588, affording an extensive view; borrowed from Old French prospectif (feminine prospective), and directly from Late Latin prospectivus affording a prospect, from Latin prospectus, past participle of prospicere look out on; see PROSPECT; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning of expected, hoped for, future, appeared in 1829. —prospector n. 1846, from prospect, v. + *-or*². —prospectus n. 1777, borrowed from French prospectus, and directly from Latin prospectus view, outlook, PROSPECT.

prosper v. 1350 prosporn, borrowed from Old French prosperer, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin prosperare cause to succeed, from prosperus favorable, fortunate, prosperous. —prosperity n. Probably before 1200 prosperite success, well-being; borrowed from Old French prosperité, and directly from Latin prosperitatem (nominative prosperitās) good fortune, from prosperus fortunate, prosperous; for suffix see -ITY. —prosperous adj. About 1425, favorable, fortunate; probably borrowed from Anglo-Latin prosperosus, and Middle French prosperous, from Latin prosperus; and in part a re-formation in Middle English directly from Latin prosperus favorable + English -ous.

prostaglandin n. 1936, hormonelike substance found originally in seminal fluid of the prostate gland; borrowing of German Prostaglandin (Prosta(ta) prostate or English prostate) + gland + -in).

prostate n. 1646, borrowed from Middle French prostate, and directly from Medieval Latin prostata, from Greek prostátēs (adēn) prostate (gland), from prostátēs one standing in front, from proistānai set before (pro- before, *pro-*² + histānai cause to STAND); so called in allusion to the prostate's position at the base of the bladder.

prosthesis n. 1550, addition of a letter or syllable to a word; borrowed from Late Latin, from Greek prōsthesis addition, from prostithēnai add to (pros- to + tithēnai to put, place). The meaning of replacement of a missing part of the body with an artificial one is first recorded in 1706. —prosthetic adj. 1837, borrowed from Greek prosthētikós of the nature of addition, giving additional power, from prōsthetos added, verbal adjective of prostithēnai add to; for suffix see -IC.

prostitute n. 1613, woman who has sexual intercourse for payment; borrowed from Latin prostituta prostitute, from feminine of prostitutus, past participle of prostituere to offer for sale, expose publicly to prostitution (prō- before, *pro-*¹ + statuere cause to stand, establish). —v. 1530, to offer oneself or another to prostitution; borrowed from Latin prostitutus, past participle of prostituere to expose to prostitution. The meaning of put to an unworthy or base use, to defile or dishonor, is first recorded in 1593. —prostitution n. 1533, borrowed from Middle French prostitution, and directly from Latin prostitutiōnem (nominative prostitutiō), from prostituere to PROSTITUTE; for suffix see -TION.

prostrate v. Before 1425 prostraten fall down in submission; from the adjective. —adj. Probably about 1350 prostrat, borrowed from Latin prostrātus, past participle of prosternere strew in front, throw down (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + sternere to spread out).

prot- a combining form of proto- before vowels, as in protagonist, protactinium (except in proper names, such as Proto-Indo-European). Borrowed from Greek prōt-, variant (before vowels) of prōto- first, PROTO-.

protactinium n. 1918 protoactinium, formed in English from proto- + actinium, modeled on German Protactinium, and replaced in English by protactinium (1919). The name derives from the process of radioactive disintegration of protactinium to form the more stable element ACTINIUM.

protagonist n. 1671, borrowed from Greek prōtagōnistēs actor who plays the chief or first part (prōt- first, prot- + agōnistēs actor, competitor, from agōn contest); for suffix see -IST.

protean adj. 1598, formed in English from Prōteús Greek sea god who could assume many different shapes + English -an.

protect v. About 1456 protecten defend or guard from harm or danger; developed from protecte, adj. defended, cared for (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin prōtēctus, past participle of prōtegere cover in front, protect (prō- in front, *pro-*¹ + tegere to cover); also probably a back formation from protection, and perhaps protector. —protection n. About 1350 protection act of protecting, shelter, defense; borrowed from Old French protection, protection, and directly from Latin prōtēctiōnem (nominative prōtēctiō) a covering over, from prōtēctus, past participle of prōtegere PROTECT; for suffix see -TION. —protectionist n. 1844, person who supports high duties on imported goods; formed from English protection + -ist, modeled on French protectionniste. adj. 1846, supporting the policy of protectionists; from the noun. —protectionism n. 1852, the policy of protectionists; formed from English protection + -ism, modeled on French protectionnisme. —protective adj. 1661, defensive; formed from English protect + -ive. —pro- tector n. About 1390 protectour one that protects, defender, guardian; borrowed from Old French protector, and directly from Latin protēctor, from prōtēct-, past participle stem of prōtegere protect; for suffix see -OR². —protectorate n. 1692, office of the Protector of the Commonwealth held by Oliver, and later Richard, Cromwell; formed from Middle English protector (1426) + -ate³. The meaning of a territory or country under the protection of another country is first recorded in 1795, after French protectorat (formed from Latin prōtēctor + French -at -ate³).

protégé n. 1778, borrowing of French protégé one who is protected, from past participle of Middle French protéger protect, from Latin prōtegere PROTECT.

protein n. 1844, borrowed from French protéine, from Greek prōteios of the first quality, from prōtos first; for suffix see -INE².

The French word originally referred to a nitrogenous substance thought to be the essential constituent of all animals and plants; current use (borrowed from German Protein) dates from 1907.

protest n. Probably about 1400, solemn or formal declaration; borrowed from Old French protest, from protester declare publicly, and directly from Latin prōtestārī declare publicly, testify, protest (prō- forth, before, *pro-*¹ + testārī testify, from testis witness). The meaning of a statement or declaration of objection, disapproval or dissent, is first recorded in English in 1751, from the verb sense in English. —v. 1430 protesten to vow; later, declare solemnly or formally (1440); borrowed from Middle French protester declare publicly. The meaning of object, dissent, or disapprove is first recorded in English in 1608.

—protestation n. 1382, avowal, declaration, assertion; borrowed from Old French protestacion, and directly from Late Latin prōtestātiōnem (nominative prōtestātiō) a declaration or protest, from Latin prōtestārī to PROTEST; for suffix see -ATION.

Protestant n. 1539, any one of the German princes who protested the decision of the Diet of Speyer (Spire) in 1529, which had denounced the Reformation; the word protestant became a general name (especially among the French, Dutch, and Scandinavians) for an adherent of the Reformation in Germany; borrowed perhaps from German Protestant, and from French protestant, from Latin prōtestantem (nominative prōtestāns), present participle of prōtestārī to PROTEST; for suffix see -ANT. The meaning of a member or adherent of any of the Christian churches which broke away from the Roman Catholic Church during the Reformation is first recorded in English in 1553. —adj. 1539, from the noun. —Protestantism n. 1649, the religious principles and practices of the Protestants; borrowed from French protestantisme, from protestant Protestant (from German) + -isme -ism.

protist n. 1889 (earlier implied in Protistic 1869); borrowed from New Latin Protista a third kingdom of one-celled organisms (alongside plants and animals) proposed in 1868, from German Protisten, from Greek prōtistos the very first, principal, superlative of prōtos first; see PROTO-.

proto- a combining form meaning first, with various shades of meaning: source or parent (Proto-Germanic), preceding (protohuman), earliest form (protogalaxy), original or model (prototype), basic (protoplasm). Borrowed from Greek prōto-, combining form of prōtos first; earlier prōatos*, related to prō, prep., before, forward. Also prot- (the usual form before vowels).

protocol n. 1541 prothogall; later, prothocoll original draft or record of a document (1552); borrowed from Middle French prothocole, protocolle draft of a document, from Medieval Latin protocollum the first sheet of a volume with its contents, draft of a document, from Greek prōtókollon first sheet (containing date and contents) glued onto a manuscript or papyrus roll and describing the origin of the manuscript (prōtos first; see PROTO- + kōlla glue).

The meaning of rules of etiquette and procedure to be observed in affairs of state and diplomatic relations is first recorded in 1896, in the context of French diplomacy.

proton n. 1920, from Greek prōton, neuter of prōtos first; modeled on such words as electron and ion. The word has been attributed to an early hypothesis that hydrogen was a constituent of all elements. Proton was used earlier (in 1893) to designate the primitive cell structure from which an embryonic part develops.

protoplasm n. 1848, borrowed from German Protoplasma, formed from proto- first + Plasma something molded; see PLASMA.

prototype n. 1603, borrowed from French prototype, and from both Late Latin prōtotypus original, primitive, and Greek prōtōtypōn a first or primitive form, from neuter of prōtōtypos original, primitive (prōto- first + týpos impression). Prototype replaced prototypōn (1596), borrowed directly from Greek prōtōtypōn. —prototypical adj. 1650, formed from English prototype + -ical.

Protozoa n. pl. Before 1834, a kind of protist that comprises a large group of single-celled organisms, New Latin Protozoa; formed from Greek prōtos first + zōia, plural of zōion animal. The classification Protozoa, when coined included sponges and corals, but was restricted to the current sense in 1845. —protozoan n. 1864, formed from English Protozoa + -an.

protract v. Before 1548, probably a back formation from earlier protraction, and borrowed from Latin prōtractus, past participle of prōtrahere draw forth, prolong, extend, defer (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + trahere to draw). —protraction n. About 1458 protraccioun the drawing or writing of numbers; later protraction prolongation, extension of time (1535); borrowed from Middle French protraction, and directly from Late Latin prōtractionem (nominative prōtractiō) a drawing out or lengthening, from Latin prōtract-, past participle stem of prōtrahere PROTRACT; for suffix see -TION. —protractor n. 1611, one who prolongs or extends something; later, an instrument for drawing or measuring angles (1658); borrowed from Medieval Latin protractor, from Latin prōtract-, past participle stem of prōtrahere PROTRACT; for suffix see -OR².

protrude v. 1620, drive along, thrust forward; borrowed from Latin prōtrūdere thrust or push forward (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + trūdere to thrust). The meaning of stick out is first recorded before 1626. —protrusion n. 1646, probably borrowed from French protrusion, and formed in English as if from Latin prōtrūsio*, from prōtrūs-, past participle stem of prōtrūdere protrude + English suffix -ion. The meaning of something that juts out, a swelling or protuberance, is first recorded in 1704.

protuberant adj. 1646, borrowed from French protubérant, and directly from Late Latin prōtūberantem (nominative prōtūberāns) protruding, present participle of prōtūberāre to swell or bulge, grow forth (Latin prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + tūber lump, swelling, TUBER); for suffix see -ANT. —protuberance n. 1646, a swelling, bump; borrowed from Late Latin prōtūberantem (nominative prōtūberāns) present participle of prōtūberāre; for suffix see -ANCE; also in some instances possibly formed from English protuberant + -ance.

proud adj. Probably about 1150 prude noble, excellent, splendid; later prud, prut, prute haughty, arrogant (probably before 1200); and proud (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) prūd and prūte.

Old English prūd was probably borrowed from Old French prod, prud (found in prud'homme, produme brave man, prou de homme a stalwart of a man, formations in which the first element represents the oblique case prou of the adjective prouz brave, valiant). Old French prouz is cognate with Italian prode valiant, from Vulgar Latin prōdis*, derived from Late Latin prōde advantageous, profitable, of use, abstracted from Latin prōdesse be useful (prōd-, variant before vowels of prō- before, *pro-*¹ + esse to be); compare PROWESS, PRUDE.

Old English prūte (before 1000, with final -te) was probably borrowed from Old French prouz (earlier proup-s*) and from Old English prūte developed the Old English noun prȳte pride; compare Old English prȳde PRIDE.

prove v. Probably before 1200 pruven to try, test; also proven examine, evaluate, demonstrate, prove; borrowed from Old French prover, pruver, from Latin probāre to test, prove worthy, from probus worthy, good (pro- before, *pro-*¹ + -bus, representing the root of be). —provable adj. About 1382, worthy of approval; later, that can be proved (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French provable (prover prove + -able).

provenance n. 1785, borrowed from French provenance origin, production, from provenant, present participle of Middle French provenir come forth, arise, originate, from Latin prōvenīre come forth, originate (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + venīre COME); for suffix see -ANCE.

provender n. About 1300 provendre allowance paid each chapter member of a cathedral; later, food or provisions (1340); borrowed through Anglo-French provendir, Old French provendier, provendre, variant of provende, from Gallo-Romance prōvenda*, altered (through influence of Latin prōvidere supply) from Late Latin praeberenda allowance, subsistence, from Latin praeberenda (things) to be furnished, neuter plural gerundive of praeberē to furnish, offer (contraction of Old Latin praehibere to hold before, from prae- before, pre- + habere to hold).

provenience n. 1881, probably alteration of provenance, influenced by Latin prōvenientem (nominative prōveniēns), present participle of prōvenire originate; see PROVENANCE; for suffix see -ENCE. The word's formation may have been patterned after English convenience.

proverb n. 1303 proverbe; borrowed from Old French proverb, and directly from Latin prōverbium a common saying, proverb; literally, words or saying put forward (prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + verbum WORD). —proverbial adj. Probably before 1425 (implied in proverbially); borrowed from Latin prōverbialis of or characteristic of a proverb, from prōverbium proverb. The meaning of that has passed into a proverb or common talk, well-known, is first recorded in English in 1571.

provide v. Probably about 1408 provyden make provision for, prepare; borrowed from Latin prōvidere look ahead, prepare, supply (prō- ahead, *pro-*¹ + videre to see). The meaning of furnish for use is first recorded before 1420. —provided conj. (about 1460) —provided n. (1523) —providing conj. = provided (1423) providence n. Before 1382 provydence foresight, provision; also, divine foreknowledge; borrowed from Old French providence, and directly from Latin prōvidentia foresight, precaution, providence, from prōvidentem (nominative prōvidēns), present participle of prōvidere to PROVIDE; for suffix see -ENCE.

The capitalized form Providence, applied to God as beneficent caretaker or guide, is first recorded in English 1602, perhaps taken directly from Latin prōvidentia. —providential adj. 1614 (implied in providentially) of or proceeding from divine providence; formed from Latin prōvidentia PROVIDENCE + English -al.

provident adj. Probably about 1408, prudent, careful; borrowed from Latin prōvidentem (nominative prōvidēns), present participle of prōvidere to foresee, PROVIDE; for suffix see -ENT.

province n. Before 1338, a country, territory, or region; borrowing of Old French province, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin prōvincia a territory under Roman domination; also, governorship of a territory (traditionally analyzed as prō- before, + vincere to conquer).

The meaning of duty, office, or business of a person, is first recorded in English before 1626. —provincial adj. Before 1378, of a province or provinces, (also, as a noun, 1376); borrowed from Old French provincial, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin prōvincialis of a province, from prōvincia province; for suffix see -AL. The meaning of countrified, lacking refinement or polish, is recorded in 1755.

provirus n. 1952, formed from English *prō-*² before + virus.

provision n. Before 1387 provisioun appointment to a church office not yet vacant; later, foresight, preparation, (before 1398); borrowed, perhaps through Old French provision, from Latin prōvisiōnem (nominative prōvisiō) foresight, preparation, from prōvidere look ahead, PROVIDE; for suffix see -ION.

The meaning of something provided, stock or store, is first recorded in English in 1451, and that of a supply of food (usually provisions, pl.), in 1610. —provisional adj. 1601, belonging to a temporary arrangement, provided for present needs probably formed from English provision + -al, perhaps by influence of Middle French provisional.

proviso n. 1434, borrowed from Medieval Latin proviso quod it being provided that (a phrase appearing at the beginning of a clause in a legal document), from Latin prōvisō provided, ablative case neuter of prōvisus, past participle of prōvidēre PROVIDE. —provisory adj. 1611, subject to a proviso, conditional; borrowed through French provisoire, or directly from Medieval Latin provisorius of or for papal provision, from Latin prōvisus, past participle of prōvidēre; for suffix see -ORY.

provocateur n. 1922, shortened from earlier agent provocateur—person hired to provoke trouble, agitator (1877); borrowing of French agent provocateur; provocateur one who provokes, from Latin prōvocātor challenger, from prōvocāre PROVOKE.

provocation n. Before 1400 provocacyoun act of provoking or inciting, instigation; borrowed from Old French provocacion, and directly from Latin prōvocātiōnem (nominative prōvocātiō) a calling forth, challenge, from prōvocāre PROVOKE; for suffix see -TION. —provocative adj. About 1443, borrowed from Middle French provocatif (feminine provocative), and directly from Late Latin prōvocātīvus calling forth, from Latin prōvocāre PROVOKE; for suffix see -IVE.

provoke v. 1392, (in medicine) to induce, stimulate; also, to incite, urge, persuade (before 1400); borrowed from Old French provoker, provoquer, and directly from Latin prōvocāre to call forth, challenge, appeal, excite (prō- forth, pro- + vocāre to call).

provost n. Before 1121 provost, developed from Old English (before 900) profoſt, prafost, and reinforced by Old French provost; both from Medieval Latin propositus, alteration of Latin praepositus a chief, prefect; literally, placed in charge of, from past participle of praepōnere put before; see PREPOSITION.

prow n. 1555, borrowed from Middle French proue, from Genoese prua, from Vulgar Latin prōda* (retained in Italian proda shore, bank, but obsolete in the sense of prow of a ship), developed by dissimilation of r to d in Latin prōra prow, from Greek prōira, related to prō before, forward.

prowess n. Probably 1225 pruesse an act of bravery; later prouesse bravery, valor (about 1280), and prowesse (about 1300); borrowed from Old French proece (pro, prou, later variants of prod, prud brave, valiant + -ece, from Latin -itia, suffix showing quality or condition). Old French prod, prud, developed from Vulgar Latin prōdem*, accusative of prōdis*; see PROUD.

prowl v. About 1395 prollen go or move about, especially in search of something; of unknown origin. The meaning of go about stealthily, especially on the lookout for a victim or prey, is first recorded before 1586.

Change in the original from proll(en) to prowl occurred in the 1500's, but the pronunciation remained (prōl). After about 1750 the change in spelling was reflected in the pronunciation (proul). —n. 1803, act of prowling, from the verb. —prowled n. 1519 proller; later prowler (1557); formed from proll (later prowl) + -er.

proximal adj. 1727, situated near; formed in English from Latin proximus nearest + English -al.

proximate adj. 1597 (implied in proximately); borrowed from Latin proximātum, past participle of proximāre come near, from proximus nearest; for suffix see -ATE.

proximity n. 1480, borrowed from Middle French proximité nearness, from Latin proximitātem (nominative proximitās) nearness, vicinity, from proximus nearest, next, superlative of prope near; for suffix see -ITY.

proxy n. Probably before 1425 procy letter containing power of attorney; later prokecy stewardship (1440); also proxi (1454); contraction of earlier procracie annual payment to a bishop (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French procracie, and directly from Medieval Latin procuratia administration, alteration of Latin prōcūrātiō care, management, from prōcūrāre manage; see PROCURE.

prude n. 1704, borrowed from French prude excessively prim or demure woman, from Old French prude, prode, preude good, virtuous, modest, (found in Old French preudefemme, prodefemme virtuous woman, prou de femme; formed as a parallel to prud'homme, produme brave man); see PROUD. —prudery n. 1709, formed from English prude + -ery, and perhaps borrowed directly from French pruderie, from prude prude; for suffix see -ERY. —prudish adj. 1717; formed from English prude + -ish.

prudence n. 1340, wisdom to see what is virtuous; earlier as a surname (1203); also foresight, practical wisdom, discretion (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French prudence, and directly from Latin prudentia foresight, sagacity, skill, prudence; contraction of prōvidentia foresight; see PROVIDENCE; for suffix see -ENCE. —prudent adj. 1382, wise, discerning; borrowed from Old French prudent, from Latin prudentem (nominative prūdēns), contraction of prōvidentem having foresight, see PROVIDENT; for suffix see -ENT. —prudential adj. About 1454 prudential, probably borrowed from Medieval Latin prudentialis, from Latin prudentia PRUDENCE; for suffix see -AL; also possibly formed in English from Latin prudentia.

prune¹ n. dried plum. 1345–46 prunne; earlier in the place name Prunhill (1201); also prune (before 1398); borrowed from Old French prune, pronne plum, from Vulgar Latin prūna* (feminine singular formed from neuter plural of Latin prūnum), and borrowed directly from Latin prūnum PLUM.

prune² v. cut useless parts from, trim. 1547 proine; 1575 prune; developed from Middle English proinen, found as pruynen (of a bird) trim the feathers with the beak, preen (about 1390); also prunen (before 1393); borrowed possibly from Old French proignier, proïgnier cut back, prune, from Gallo-Romance prō-retundiāre* (prō- forth, pro- + retundiāre* round off, from Vulgar Latin retundus* rounded, from Latin rotundus ROUND). The sense of trim useless parts appeared probably before 1430. Related to PREEN.

prurient adj. 1639, itching; later, having an itching desire or curiosity (1653); borrowed from Latin prūrientem (nominative prūriēns), present participle of prūrire to itch, long for, be wanton; perhaps related to prūna glowing coals; for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of lewd or lustful is first recorded in English in 1746. —prurience n. Before 1688, quality or condition of being prurient; formed from English prurient, on the analogy of such pairs as patient, and patience, etc.

prussic acid 1790, borrowed from French acide prussique Prussian, in reference to Prussian blue, a pigment chemically related to prussic acid; for suffix see -IC.

pry¹ v. look inquisitively. 1307 prien to peer in, seek for; later, look about inquisitively, of uncertain origin; perhaps developed from Old English (about 1000) beprīwan to wink.

pry² v. raise or move by force. 1823, altered form of PRIZE⁴, v., lever.

psalm n. Probably before 1200 psalme; also salme; developed from Old English psalm (about 1000); earlier salm (before 830); both early borrowings from Latin psalmus, from Greek psalmós song sung to the harp, psalm; originally, performance on a stringed instrument, from psállēin play on a stringed instrument, pull. In many languages p was later restored on the model of Latin and Greek, and in such cases became a spelling pronunciation. English is almost alone in writing ps and pronouncing as if only spelled with s. (It should also be noted that l, though preserved in Old English, was often omitted in Middle English, as well as Old French.) —psalmist n. 1483, borrowed from Middle French psalmiste, and directly from Late Latin psalmista, from Greek psalmistēs, from psalmízein sing psalms, from Greek psalmós psalm; for suffix see -IST. The word replaced in Middle English the earlier psalmistre (before 1387), borrowed from Old French, variant of psalmiste.

Psalter n. Probably before 1200 sawter; also salter (before 1225) and psalter (1440); developed from Old English psaltere (about 1000); earlier saltere (737); also reinforced in Middle English by borrowing through Anglo-French from Old French sautier, psautier. Both the Old English and the Old French forms were borrowings from Late Latin psaltērīum Psalter, from Latin, stringed instrument, PSALTERY.

psaltery n. Probably about 1300 sautri; earlier as a surname Sautre (1248); also psautery (about 1340); borrowed from Old French sauterie, psalterie, and directly from Latin psaltērīum stringed instrument, from Greek psaltērion stringed instrument, from psállēin play on a stringed instrument, pull, pluck.

pseud- the spelling of the combining form pseudo- before vowels, as in pseudaxis a false stem, the full form pseudo- being sometimes retained, as in pseudoarchaic.

pseudo adj. 1449, and perhaps before 1400, adjective use of the combining form PSEUDO-. —n. About 1380, borrowed from Medieval Latin pseudo, from Greek pseudo-; and also developed from noun use of the combining form PSEUDO-.

pseudo- a combining form meaning: 1 false, falsely claimed or pretended, as in pseudoscience. 2 falsely supposed or appearing, as in pseudo-hexagonal. 3 substitute or replacement, as in pseudonym. 4 resembling, related, as in pseudopod. Borrowed from Greek pseudo-, combining form of pseúdos falsehood, fallacy, or pseúdes false, from pseúdein to falsify, deceive.

Rare in Middle English, pseudo- appears chiefly in borrowings from Latin (as in pseudoprophet), but is occasionally found in Middle English formations as pseudofriar false friar.

pseudonym n. 1846, possibly a dictionary word, a back formation from earlier pseudonymous, influenced by, and later actually borrowed from, French pseudonyme, from Greek pseudónymon, neuter of pseudónymos falsely named (pseudo- false + ónyma, dialectal form of ónoma NAME). —pseudonymous adj. 1706, borrowed from Greek pseudónymos falsely named; for suffix see -OUS.

psittacosis n. 1897, New Latin, formed from Latin psittacus parrot, from Greek psittakós + New Latin -osis abnormal condition, disease.

psoriasis n. 1684, New Latin, formed from Late Latin psōriasis mange or scurvy, from Greek psōriāsīs a being itchy, from psōriān have the itch, from psōrā itch or mange, related to psēn to rub.

psych v. 1917, shortened form of psychoanalyze (by influence of psych, n., psychology or psychiatry, a shortened form appearing in 1895). The meaning of influence, or figure out psychologically, is first recorded about 1957, probably as a shortened form of psychologize (1830).

psych- the combining form of psycho- before vowels, as in psychic, and in psychiatry.

psyche n. 1647, animating spirit, soul; borrowing of Latin psychē, from Greek psychē soul, mind, spirit, breath, life, from psýchein to breathe, blow. The specific sense in psychology of the mind as the center of thought, emotions, and behavior, is first recorded in 1910.

psychedelic adj. 1957, formed in English from Greek psychē mind + dēloûn make visible, reveal + English -ic. —n. 1956, from the same source as the adjective.

psychiatry n. 1846, probably borrowed from French psychiatrie, formed from Greek psychē PSYCHE + iātrēā healing, cure.

—psychiatric adj. 1847, probably borrowed from French psychiatrique, formed from psychiatrie psychiatry + -ique -ic.

—psychiatrist n. 1890, formed from English psychiatry + -ist.

psychic adj. 1871; borrowed perhaps through French psychique, and directly from Greek psychikós of the soul, spirit, or mind, from psychē soul, mind, PSYCHE; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of characterized by sensitivity to psychic forces (as in to be psychic, psychic gifts) is first recorded in English in 1895. —n. 1871, probably from the adjective. —psychical adj. 1642, of the soul or mind; formed in English from Greek psychikós + English -al. The meaning of having to do with psychic forces or influences is first recorded in English in 1882.

psycho adj. 1 psychological (as in a psycho drama). 1927, shortened form of psychological. 2 psychopathic (as in a psycho killer). 1936, shortened form of psychopathic. —n. 1942, shortened form of psychopath.

psycho- a combining form meaning: 1 of the mind, mental, as in psychoanalysis. 2 of the brain, as in psychosurgery; psychological, as in psychotherapy. Borrowed from Greek psýchō-, combining form of psýchē PSYCHE. —psychoneurosis n. (1883) —psychosomatic adj. (1863) psychoanalysis n. 1906, borrowed from German Psychoanalyse (Psycho- mental, psycho- + Analyse, from Greek anál-ysis ANALYSIS). —psychoanalyst n. 1911, formed from English psychoanalysis, on the pattern of such pairs as analysis, analyst. —psychoanalyze v. 1911, back formation from psychoanalysis; formed on the pattern of such pairs as analysis, analyze.

psychology n. 1653, study of the human soul; borrowed from New Latin psychologia, from Greek psýchē PSYCHE + -logía -logy. The meaning of the study of the human mind is first recorded in English in 1748. —psychological adj. Before 1688, formed from English psychology + -ical. —psychologist n. 1727, student of the human soul; formed from English psychology + -ist. The meaning of a student of the human mind is first recorded in 1817. —psychologize v. 1830, to theorize, speculate, or reason psychologically; formed from English psychology + -ize.

psychopathic adj. 1847, borrowed from German psychopathisch, formed from German psycho- of the mind + Greek páthos suffering; see PATHOS + German -isch -ic. —psychopath n. 1885, probably a back formation from English psychopathic.

psychosis n. 1847, New Latin, from Greek psýchē PSYCHE + New Latin -osis abnormal condition. —psychotic adj. 1890, from psychosis, on the pattern of neurosis, neurotic. —n. 1910, from the adjective.

ptarmigan n. 1599, borrowed from Gaelic tarmachan, (in Scottish use) include termigan and tormichan. The form ptarmigan (1684) said to be influenced by Greek words with pt-, newly known and used in zoology at the time and referred to Greek pterón wing.

pterodactyl n. 1830 pterodactyle, borrowed from French ptérodactyle (1821), from New Latin Pterodactylus the genus name (Greek pterón wing + dáktylos finger, toe).

ptomaine or ptomain n. 1880 poison produced in decaying matter, borrowed from Italian ptomaina, from Greek ptōma corpse; literally, a fall, fallen thing. —ptomaine poisoning (1893) pub n. 1859, shortened form of public house (1768, tavern; earlier, an inn, 1658; originally, any building open to the public, 1574).

puberty n. About 1384 puberte, borrowed through Old French puberté, and directly from Latin pūbertātem (nominative pūbertās) age of maturity, manhood, from pūbēs (genitive pūberis) adult, full grown, manly; for suffix see -TY².

pubescent adj. 1646, a back formation from earlier pubescence, and borrowed from French pubescent, and directly from Latin pūbēscētem (nominative pūbēscēns) reach the age of puberty, present participle of pūbēscere arrive at puberty, from pūbēs adult, full grown; see PUBERTY; for suffix see -ENT. —pubescence n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin pubescentia, from Latin pūbēscētem (nominative pūbēscēns), present participle of pūbēscere, see PUBESCENT; for suffix see -ENCE.

pubis or pubes n. 1 pubes pubic hair; about 1570, borrowing of Latin pubes; later, the pubic bone (1872, but also as a plural, 1841). 2 pubis part of either hipbone that forms the front of the pelvis; 1597, borrowed from Middle French pubis, a shortening of New Latin os pubis bone of the groin, and borrowed directly as a shortening of Latin os pūbis; os bone; and pūbis, genitive of pūbēs genital area, groin, related to pūbēs full grown, adult. —pubic adj. 1831, having to do with the pubes (pubic hair) or the pubis (area formed by pelvic bones); formed from English pub(is), pub(es) + -ic.

public adj. 1394 pupplik open to general observation, sight, or knowledge; later publique of or concerning the people as a whole (1427), and in the spelling publik (1447); borrowed from Old French public, publique, and directly from Latin publicus, alteration (influenced by pūbēs adult population, adult) of Old Latin poplicus pertaining to the people, from populus people. —n. Before 1500 publike public view, place open to all persons; from the adjective. The meaning of the community, nation, or state, is first recorded in 1611; and that of the people in general in 1665. —public library (1614) —public office (1792, room or rooms set aside for public business; 1844, position held by a public official) —public opinion (1781) —public school (1580, endowed private school; 1636, free school maintained by taxes).

publican n. Probably before 1200 publicane tax collector of ancient Rome; later publycan (about 1303); borrowed from Old French publicain, publican, pubblican, from Latin pūblicānus a tax collector; originally as an adjective, pertaining to the public revenue, from pūblium public revenue, noun use of pūblicum, neuter of pūblicus PUBLIC; for suffix see -AN. The meaning of a keeper of a pub is first recorded in 1728.

publication n. Before 1387 publicacioun action of making publicly known; borrowed from Old French publication, and directly from Latin pūblicātiōnem (nominative pūblicātiō) a making public, from pūblicāre make public; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of issuing to the public a book, map, etc., is first recorded in 1576, and that of a work published for public sale, in 1656.

publicist n. 1792, a person learned in public law; 1795, writer on current public topics; borrowed from French publiciste (public PUBLIC + -iste -ist).

publicity n. 1791, the condition of being public; borrowed from French publicité (public PUBLIC + -ité -ity). The meaning of a making something publicly known, public notice, advertising, is first recorded in 1826. —publicize v. 1928, formed from English public, adj. or n. + -ize.

publish v. About 1378 publisshen; also publischen (1387); formed from Middle English publicen by replacement with -ish $-ish^2$, as if from Old French publiss-, stem of publir (not found in Anglo-French or Old French), but actually formed in imitation of other words in Middle English, such as admonish, banish, and finish. The original Middle English publicen (before 1338) was borrowed from Old French publier, puplier, from Latin publicāre make public, from publicus PUBLIC.

The meaning of issue for sale to the public is first recorded in 1529 in reference to movable type, but reference to publishing a book also occurs about 1450. — publisher n. About 1453, one who makes something known publicly; later, one who publishes a book, etc. (1654); formed from English publish + *-er*¹. — publishing n. Probably about 1450, the act of making publicly known; about 1454, the issuing of copies of a book for sale to the public; from gerund of English publish; for suffix see *-ING*¹.

puck¹ n. mischievous fairy in English folklore. Probably before 1300 puke, pouke the Devil, Satan; later, evil spirit, goblin (about 1378); developed from Old English (before 1000) pūca; cognate with Frisian puk goblin, Old Icelandic pūki devil, and Norwegian pokker devil, deuce, of unknown origin. — puckish adj. 1874, formed from English puck + *-ish*¹.

puck² n. hard disk used in ice hockey. 1891, from earlier puck, v., to hit or strike (1861, perhaps related to *poke*¹ to push).

pucker v. 1598, to draw into wrinkles or small folds; possibly formed from English pock (dialectal variant of *POKE*² bag, sack) + *-er*², the notion being that of forming small baglike gatherings. Verbs of this type often shorten or obscure the original vowel; compare clutter, flutter, putter, etc. — n. 1741 state of agitation, flutter; from the verb. The sense of a wrinkle is first recorded in 1744–50.

pudding n. 1287 puding animal's stomach or casing stuffed with meat, etc., kind of sausage; earlier as a surname Pudding (1176); also poding (before 1300); of uncertain origin (perhaps related to Old English puduc a wen, with allusion to swelling; or traditionally associated with Old French bodin, boudin sausage, from the root bod-* bloated or swollen; and possibly cognate with Low German puddenwurst a thick black pudding, puddig thick, bloated). German and Dutch forms were borrowed from English.

The soft cooked food resembling custard (1670), comes from food boiled or steamed in a bag, first recorded in 1544.

puddle n. Before 1338 podel small pool of water; probably a diminutive formed from Old English pudd ditch + *-le*¹; and cognate with Low German pūdel, High German dialect Pfüdel puddle. — v. 1440 pothelen to dabble or wallow in a puddle, from pothel, a variant, of podel, n.

puhendum n. 1634, external genitals, especially of the female; borrowing of Latin puhendum, pl. puhenda, literally, thing to be ashamed of, neuter gerundive of puhēre make ashamed, of uncertain origin. The Latin plural, puhenda, is recorded in Middle English before 1398, and an Anglicized singular puhende appears before 1425.

pudeur n. 1937, modesty, especially in sexual matters, borrowing of French pudeur, from Latin pudōrem, accusative of pudor shame, modesty, from pudēre make ashamed. The modern term is a revival of obsolete pudor modesty, bashfulness (1623; borrowed directly from Latin pudor shame).

pudgy adj. 1836, formed from English pudge (1808) anything short and thick + *-y*¹.

Both pudgy and the variant podgy are perhaps related to or variants of, pudsy plump (1754, possibly a diminutive and embellished form of pud a hand or forepaw, 1654).

pueblo n. 1808, borrowing of Spanish pueblo village or small town, people, community, from Latin populum, accusative of populus people.

puerile adj. 1661, a back formation from puerility, probably influenced by, and in some instances borrowed through, French puéril (feminine puérile), from Latin puerilis childish, boyish, from puer child, boy. — puerility n. About 1475 puerilite, borrowed from Middle French puerilité, from Latin puerilitatem (nominative puerilitās), from puerilis PUERILE; for suffix see -ITY.

puerperal adj. 1768, borrowed from New Latin puerperālis, from Latin puerpera bearing a child, from puer child, boy + parere to bear (children), bring forth; for suffix see *-AL*¹. It is possible that puerperal was formed as a replacement for the awkwardly pronounced puerperial (1628); formed in English from puerpery (1602) + -ial.

puff v. Probably before 1200 puffen blow with short, quick blasts; developed from Old English (about 1000) pyffan, of imitative origin. — n. Probably before 1200 puf, puffe, short, quick blast; later, light, airy pastry (before 1399); from the verb in Middle English, and in Old English. The figurative meaning of flattery, inflated praise, is first recorded in 1732, probably developed from the earlier sense of bombast. — puffy adj. 1599, vain, bombastic; formed from English puff, n. + *-y*¹. The meaning of swollen, puffed out, is first recorded in 1664.

puffin n. 1337 pofooun; earlier as a surname Puffin (1279); also poffin (1345); of uncertain origin, perhaps connected with puff, referring to the “puffy” appearance of the bird.

pug n. 1749 Pug-dog; earlier Pug, nickname for a monkey or dog (1731); extended sense of pug monkey (1664), sprite, imp (1616); of uncertain origin.

pugilism n. 1791, formed in English from Latin pugil boxer (related to pugnis fist) + English -ism. — pugilist n. 1790, formed in English from Latin pugil boxer + English -ist. — pugilistic adj. 1789, either formed from English pugilist + -ic, or from French pugiliste (1789) + English -ic. These words are probably not formed on English pugil boxer (1646) which was a rare word in English, and though once popular among sportswriters, have largely died out except in pugil stick used in the military as a substitute for a rifle in training for close combat (1962).

pugnacious adj. 1642, perhaps a back formation from earlier pugnacity; or formed in English as an adjective to pugnacity, from Latin pugnācis genitive of pugnāx combative, from pugnāre to fight, from pugnus fist + English -ous. —pugnacity n. 1605, borrowed from Latin pugnācitas, from pugnāx (genitive pugnācis) combative; for suffix see -ITY.

puissant adj. 1450 puissaunt; either formed in English as an adjective to puissance; or borrowed from Middle French puissant being powerful, from puiss-, stem of Old French poeir to be able; see POWER; for suffix see -ANT. —puissance n. About 1410 pusaunce power, strength, authority; later puissance (1431); borrowed from Middle French puissance, puissance, from puissant PUISSANT; for suffix see -ANCE.

puke v. 1600, perhaps of imitative origin. —n. 1737, from the verb.

pull v. About 1300 pullen to drag, move by pulling; developed from Old English (about 1000) pullian to pluck or draw out; of uncertain origin, perhaps cognate with Frisian púlje to shell, husk, Middle Low German pulen to shell, pluck, tear, Middle Dutch polen to peel, strip (modern Dutch peul husk, shell), and modern Icelandic púla work hard, all with underlying similarity of form and meaning of draw toward or out. —n. Before 1338 pul; earlier, a fishing net (1303), from the verb. The sense of personal influence used to one's advantage is first recorded in 1887. —pullover adj. 1907 Pullover Storm Coat. —n. 1875, hat covering; a sweater put on by pulling it over the head (1925).

pullet n. Before 1376 pulettis, pl., earlier as a surname Pulete (1297); borrowed through Anglo-French pullet, Old French polet, pollet, poulette, diminutives of poule hen, from Vulgar Latin pulla*, feminine of Latin pullus young animal, young fowl; for suffix see -ET.

pulley n. 1296 puly; later poley (1324), and pullyes (1468); borrowed from Old French polie, pulie, and from Medieval Latin poliva, puliva; both probably from Medieval Greek polidia*, plural of poldion*, diminutive of Greek pólos pivot, axis.

Pullman n. 1867 Pullman car, in allusion to George M. Pullman, who designed a railroad passenger car with folding berths.

pulmonary adj. 1704, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French pulmonaire, from Latin pulmōnārius the lungs, from pulmō (genitive pulmōnis) lung; for suffix see -ARY. Compare LIGHTS, PNEUMONIA.

pulp n. Before 1400 pulpe, borrowed from Latin pulpa (earlier pelpā*) animal or plant pulp, pith of wood. —v. 1662 (implied in pulping), from the noun. —pulpy adj. 1591, formed from English pulp, n. + *-y*¹.

pulpit n. Before 1338 pulpite; later pulpit (about 1395); borrowed from Late Latin pulpitum, from Old French pulpite, and directly from Latin, scaffold, platform.

pulsar n. 1968, formed from English *pulse*¹ or puls(ation) + -ar, on the analogy of earlier quasar.

pulsate v. 1794, back formation from earlier pulsation; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —pulsation n. Probably before 1425 pulsacioun throbbing of the blood, beating; borrowed probably through Middle French pulsation, and directly from Latin pulsationem (nominative pulsatio) a beating or striking, from pulsare to beat, strike, or push; for suffix see -ATION.

pulse¹ n. beating of the arteries. Before 1338 pous; later puls, pulse (before 1390); borrowed from Old French pous, pulse, and directly from Latin pulsus, (genitive pulsus) from past participle of pellere to push, drive. The sense of the throbbing of life, etc. (as in to feel the pulse of public sentiment) is first recorded about 1540. —v. Probably before 1425 pulsen to throb; borrowed from Latin pulsare to beat, strike, push, frequentative form of pellere to push.

pulse² n. peas, beans, and lentils, used as food. 1297 pols (in the compound polscorn); later puls (1388–89); borrowed from Old French pols, pouls, and directly from Latin puls (genitive pultis) porridge, probably, through Etruscan, from Greek póltos porridge.

pulverize v. Probably before 1425 pulverizen, borrowed from Late Latin pulverizāre reduce to powder or dust, from Latin pulvis (genitive pulveris) dust; for suffix see -IZE.

—pulverization n. 1658, borrowed from French pulvérisation, from Middle French pulveriser pulverize + -ation.

puma n. 1777, borrowing of Spanish puma, from Quechua (Peru) puma.

pumice n. 1400 pomyse; later pumyce (probably about 1475); borrowed through Anglo-French pomis, Old French pomis, from Late Latin pōmex (genitive pōmicis), an adaptation of Oscan poimex*, variant of Latin pūmex pumice. —v. Before 1425 pomeysen; probably about 1425 pumycen; from the noun.

pummel v. 1548 pumble, poumle strike repeatedly, alteration of POMMEL, v. The spelling pummel is first recorded in 1608.

pump¹ n. apparatus for forcing liquids, air, etc. in or out of things. 1420 pomp ship's pump; 1427 pumpe; possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch pompe water conduit, pipe, and Middle Low German pumpe pump (modern German Pumpe), both derived probably from the same source in nautical use. —v. 1508, from the noun.

pump² n. shoe without fasteners. 1555, a light, close-fitting, slipperlike shoe; of unknown origin.

pumpnickel n. 1839, borrowing of German Pumpnickel, from dialectal German of Westphalia; originally an abusive term, a compound of pumpen to break wind + Nickel goblin, rascal. An early example, spelled Pompernickel, is recorded in 1756.

pumpkin n. 1647, alteration (with -kin) of earlier pompon, pumpion melon or pumpkin (1545); borrowed from Middle French pompon, pepon, from Latin pepōn melon, from Greek pépōn, originally, cooked by the sun, ripe, from péptein, pésein to cook.

The spelling punkin appeared in 1825.

pun n. 1662, of uncertain origin. Pun was probably a clipped word which came into fashionable slang in the late 1600's, such as punnet or pundrigion. While punnet may have been a diminutive, pundrigion suggests an original shortening from Italian puntiglio equivocation, trivial objection, small or fine point, though nothing has been found to confirm the origin of pun. —v. 1670, from the noun. —punster n. 1700, formed from English pun, n. + -ster.

punch¹ v. to pierce, hit. About 1384 punchen to poke or prod; later, to stab, pierce (1440); borrowed from Old French ponchonner, poinçonner to punch, prick, from ponchon, poinçon pointed tool, piercing weapon, from Vulgar Latin punctionem* (nominative punctiō*) pointed tool, from punctiāre* to pierce, prick, from Latin punct- past participle stem of pungere to pierce.

The meaning of hit with the fist is first recorded in 1530, and that of pierce, cut, stamp, enboss, etc., with a tool, in 1423. —n. Before 1400 punche a stab or thrust; later, a dagger, a tool for piercing, etc. (1505); probably a variant of ponchon; see PUNCHEON². The meaning of quick blow (1580) is probably from the verb. The sense of vigorous force or effectiveness is found in 1911.

punch² n. mixed drink. 1632, of uncertain origin.

Punch n. 1709, shortened from PUNCHINELLO. Punch is the name of a puppet who quarrels violently with his wife Judy in the puppet show Punch and Judy.

puncheon¹ n. cask for liquor. 1400 pynson; later pownchon (1419–20) and ponchon (1468); borrowed from Middle French poinchon, poinçon, ponson, of uncertain origin.

Although the forms in Middle French and English are identical with puncheon², and the barrel staves of a puncheon are reminiscent of “upright slabs of timber,” there seems to be little else that provides a connection in the meaning between the two words.

puncheon² n. slab of timber, short upright piece of wood. 1348 pounchon, 1374 punchon short supporting beam, strut; earlier, as a surname Punchian (1274); also ponson, ponchon pointed tool for piercing, punch (1370); borrowed from Old French ponchon, poinçon; see PUNCH¹, v.

punchinello n. 1666 punchinello, (also) Polichinello, borrowed from Italian Pulcinella (or Neapolitan dialect Pollecina), diminutive of pollecena turkey pullet (the beak of which bears a resemblance to the nose of Pulcinella), from Latin pullus young fowl. Punchinello was originally the name of the principal character in a traditional Italian puppet show, the prototype of Punch.

punctilio n. 1596 puntilio small point or mark; probably borrowed from Italian puntiglio small or fine point, from Spanish puntillo small point, diminutive of punto point, from Latin punctum prick, POINT. The specific sense of a detail of conduct, a petty formality, is first recorded in English in 1599, and was influenced by Latin punctum. —punctilious adj. 1634 puntillious, probably borrowed from Italian puntiglioso, from puntiglio fine point; for suffix see -OUS. The spelling punctilious is first recorded in 1742 (earlier punctillious, 1653), influenced by English punctilio or by Latin punctum.

punctual adj. Before 1400, having a sharp point, producing small punctures; borrowed (perhaps through influence of Old French punctuel) from Medieval Latin punctualis, from Latin punctus (genitive punctūs) a pricking, POINT; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of prompt, is found in 1675. —punctuality n. 1620, exactness, precision, apparently formed from English punctual + -ity. The sense of promptness is first recorded in 1777.

punctuate v. 1818, probably a back formation from the earlier English punctuation; for suffix see -ATE¹. —punctuation n. Before 1539, insertion of points to mark pauses in a text; borrowed, perhaps through Middle French punctuation, and directly from Medieval Latin punctuationem (nominative punctuatio) a marking with points, from punctuare to mark with points or dots, from Latin punctus a prick, POINT; for suffix see -ATION. —punctuation mark (1866) puncture n. 1392, small perforation or wound, act of pricking or stinging; borrowed from Late Latin punctura a pricking, a puncture, from Latin punctus, past participle of pungere to prick, pierce; for suffix see -URE. —v. 1699, to prick, pierce, from the noun.

pundit n. 1672, very learned Hindu, borrowed from Hindi paṇḍī a learned man, master, teacher, from Sanskrit paṇḍitā-s a learned man, scholar; —adj. learned, skilled. The meaning of any learned person or authority is first recorded in English in 1816.

pungent adj. 1597, sharp, keen, acute; borrowed from Latin pungentem (nominative pungēns), present participle of pungere to prick, pierce, sting; related to pugnis fist; for suffix see -ENT.

The meaning of sharply affecting the organs of smell or taste appeared in English in 1668. —pungency n. 1649, sharpness, poignancy, piquancy; formed from English pungent + -cy.

punish v. About 1303 ponysshēn to inflict divine retribution on; later punissen to cause pain, loss, or discomfort to for a fault or offense (1340), and in the spelling punishen (1348); borrowed from Old French puniss-, stem of punir, from Latin pūnīre inflict a penalty on, cause pain for some offense, formed from poena penalty, punishment; see PAIN; for suffix see -ISH². —punishment n. 1385 punishment, borrowed through Anglo-French punissement, from Old French punissement, from puniss-, stem of punir punish; for suffix see -MENT.

punitive adj. 1624, borrowed from French punitif (feminine punitive), from Medieval Latin punitivus, from Latin pūnīre PUNISH; for suffix see -IVE.

punk n. 1687, rotten wood used as tinder, probably borrowed from Algonquian (Delaware) ponk, literally, living ashes.

The sense of something rotten or worthless, nonsense, is first recorded in 1869, and that of a worthless person, young hoodlum, in 1917. This latter use was probably shortened from the earlier underworld slang term punk kid a criminal's apprentice (1908). —adj. 1902, (of wood) rotten, decayed; from the noun. The sense of worthless, rotten, inferior, is first recorded in 1896.

punt¹ n. shallow, flat-bottomed boat. 1568, shortened form of earlier pontebot punt boat (1500); developed from Old English (about 1000) punt, borrowed from Latin pontō flat-bottomed boat, PONTON. The Old English word probably continued into the Middle English, although there are no recorded examples until early modern English. —v. 1816, from the noun.

punt² v. to kick (a football or soccer ball). 1845, perhaps special use of dialectal English punt to push, strike, alteration of bunt, of uncertain origin. —n. 1845, from the same source as the verb.

puny adj. Before 1577, subordinate, inferior in rank; borrowed from Middle French puiné, from Old French puisé born later, younger, (puis afterwards, from Vulgar Latin postius*, from Latin postea, from post after + Old French né born, from Latin nātus, past participle of nāscī be born). The -y is often considered suffixal, but is no more than a representation of -é from the French form. The sense of small, weak, insignificant, appeared in 1593. Puny is the original spelling in English, preceding the form puise (pyü'nē) in most senses by some 25 to 50 years. The French form was adopted in English during the 1600's and died out in the 1700's, except for reference to junior judges of a superior court.

pup n. 1773, young dog, shortened variant form of PUPPY. The sense of conceited person, is found in 1589.

pupa n. 1773, stage between the larva and adult insect, New Latin, special use of Latin pūpa girl, doll, puppet; see PUPIL¹. —pupal adj. (1866) —pupate v. 1879; formed from New Latin pupa + English *-ate*¹.

pupil¹ n. student. 1384 pupille an orphan child, ward; borrowed from Old French pupille, and directly from Latin pupillus (feminine pupilla) orphan, ward, minor, diminutives of pūpus boy (feminine pūpa girl), probably related to puer child, boy. The meaning of disciple, student, is first recorded in English in 1563.

pupil² n. spot in the iris of the eye. 1392 pupilla (as a Latinate form); before 1400 pupille; later pupil (about 1425); borrowed from Old French pupille, and directly from Latin pupilla, originally, little doll, diminutive of pūpa girl, doll (see PUPIL¹); so called from the tiny image of oneself that can be seen reflected in the pupils when looking into another person's eyes.

puppet n. 1538, doll moved by strings or wires; developed from Middle English poppet, popet doll (1413; earlier, wax figure, probably before 1300, and as a surname Pupet, 1191); probably borrowed from Old French (compare Middle French poupette little doll, diminutive of Old French poupée doll, from Vulgar Latin puppa*, from Latin pūpa girl, doll; see PUPIL¹); for suffix see -ET. The meaning of a person whose actions are manipulated by another is first recorded in English in the spelling poppet (1550). —puppetry n. 1528, action of or representation by puppets; formed from English puppet + -ry. —puppet show (1650; earlier puppet play, 1599, and implied in puppet-playing, 1552).

puppy n. 1486 popi woman's small pet dog; of uncertain origin, but on the analogy of a small pet dog being considered a toy, possibly borrowed from Middle French poupée doll, toy, from Vulgar Latin puppa*, from Latin pūpa girl, doll; see PUPIL¹; for suffix see *-y*¹. The meaning of a young dog, is first found in 1591; the sense of a vain, impertinent young man, fof, is attested since 1589.

purblind adj. About 1300 pur blind pure (entirely) blind; earlier a near-sighted person (before 1300). A meaning of partially blind or blind in one eye, appeared before 1382, and the sense of having imperfect perception, dull, is found in 1533.

purchase v. Probably before 1300 purchasen, purchacen acquire, buy; borrowed through Anglo-French purchaser go after, pursue, from Old French porchacier, pouchacier, purchacier (purforth, from Latin prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + Old French chacier run after, CHASE¹). —n. Probably before 1300 purchas booty, spoil; also, porchas something acquired, a possession (about 1300), and in the spelling purchace (before 1338); borrowed through Anglo-French purchase, purchaz, from Old French purchas, from purchacier to purchase. The meaning of a firm hold to help move something appeared in 1711, from the verb sense of haul in (a rope), in effect to gain or acquire one portion after another (1567).

pure adj. About 1250 pur refined, unmixed, unalloyed; earlier as a surname (1178); also with the spelling pure (about 1280); borrowed from Old French pur, pure, and directly from Latin pūrus clean, clear, unmixed, chaste.

purée n. 1707, borrowing of French purée, from past participle of purier to strain, cleanse, from Latin pūrare purify, from pūrus PURE. —v. Before 1934, from the noun.

purgatory n. Probably before 1200 purgatoire, later purgatorie (before 1250); borrowed from Old French purgatore, purgatoire, and directly from Medieval Latin purgatorium, from Late Latin, means of cleansing, from neuter of pūrgātōrius, adj., purging, cleansing, from Latin pūrgāre to PURGE; for suffix see -ORY.

purge v. About 1300 purgien to clear of a charge or suspicion of guilt, establish innocence; later purgen cleanse, clear, get rid of, purify (1398); borrowed through Anglo-French purger, Old French purgier, and directly from Latin pūrgāre cleanse, purify, Old Latin pūrigāre, from a lost adjective pūrigus* purifying (pūrus PURE + the root of agere to drive, make). —n. 1447, an examination in a court of law to clear of a charge or suspicion of guilt; later, a purgative (1563); and act of purging (1598); in all senses probably from the verb in English. —purgation n. About 1382 purgacioun purification from sin; also, discharge of waste matter (1387); borrowed from Old French purgacion, and directly from Latin pūrgātiōnem (nominative pūrgātiō) a cleansing, pūrgāre to PURGE; for suffix see -ATION. —purgative adj. Before 1398 purgatif, borrowed from Old French purgatif (feminine purgative), and directly from Late Latin pūrgātīvus, from Latin pūrgāre to PURGE; for suffix see -IVE. —n. Probably before 1425, from the adjective in English, and perhaps borrowed from Middle French purgatif.

purify v. Before 1338 purisien, borrowed from Old French purifier, from Latin pūrificāre, from a lost adjective pūrificus* (pūrus PURE + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY.

—purification n. 1350 purificaciun Feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary; borrowed through Old French purification, and directly from Latin pūrficātiōnem (nominative pūrficātiō) a purifying, from pūrficāre PURIFY; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of freeing from impurities is found in 1598.

purism n. 1803 purisms, pl. uses of language that reflect strict observance of purity or “correctness” in language; 1804, strict observance of purity in language, style, etc.; borrowed from French purisme (pur PURE + -isme -ism), and formed from English pur(e) + -ism. —purist n. 1706, formed from English pur(e) + -ist, and borrowed from French puriste (pur pure + -iste -ist).

Puritan n. 1564, opponent of the Anglican hierarchy’s directives in matters of ritual and vestments; later, person within the Church of England who demanded further reformation in the direction of Presbyterianism (1571); probably formed from English purify + -an.

From 1592 on, Puritan puritan, puritane was commonly applied to anyone considered overly strict in religion and morals. By the 1800’s, especially in the United States in reference to the Puritans who settled in New England in the early 1600’s, the term became largely historical. —puritanical adj. 1607, formed from English Puritan + -ical. —puritanism n. 1573, doctrines and principles of the Puritans; later, excessive strictness in morals or religion (1592); formed from English Puritan + -ism.

purity n. Probably before 1200 purte quality or condition of being pure; later puryte (about 1380); borrowed from Old French purte, pureté, and directly from Late Latin pūritātem (nominative pūritās) cleanness, pureness, from Latin pūrus PURE; for suffix see -ITY.

purl¹ v. flow with rippling motions and murmuring sound. Before 1586 (implied in purling); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian purla purl). —n. 1650, purling motion or sound; earlier perle a surge of water (before 1500); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian purl purl).

purl² v. knit with inverted stitches. 1526 pirle, pyrle to embroider with metallic thread; related to earlier pirle to twist thread (1523), and probably with Middle English pirlyng revolving or twisting (1448–49); of uncertain origin. —n. 1394, bordering, edging, frilling of twisted loops; later, metallic thread used for bordering and embroidering (1535); from the verb.

purlieu n. 1482 purlwe piece of land on the border of a forest, perhaps an alteration (influenced by Middle French lieu place) of Middle English porale royal or official perambulation to determine boundaries of a manor, district, or forest (1306); later purale (1338); borrowed through Anglo-French purale, puralee, originally, a going through, Old French porale, from poraler go through (por-, from Latin prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + aler to go; see ALLEY). The figurative sense of one’s haunt or resort is first recorded in 1643.

purloin v. 1348 purloinen remove, misappropriate; borrowed through Anglo-French purloigner, purloiner remove, and directly from Old French porloigner put off (por-, from Latin prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + Old French loing far, from Latin longē, from longus LONG¹, adj.).

purple adj. About 1250 purpel, later purple (1436); developed from Old English purpul, purpble (about 950), from earlier purpure purple garment (before 899); borrowed from Latin purpura purple-dyed cloth, purple dye, shellfish yielding a purple dye, from Greek porphyrā. Related to PORPHYRY. The Old English form purpul probably developed by dissimilation of the second r to l, as found in marble (from the original marbre, marbra). —n. About 1390 purpul, purpel rich cloth dyed purple; later, purpil the color purple (probably before 1439); from the adjective.

purport n. 1422 purporte; borrowed from Anglo-French purport contents (Anglo-Latin purportum, Old French purport) from purporter to contain (Old French porporter convey, carry); formed from pur- por- forth, from Latin prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + Old French porter carry; see PORT⁴ bearing. —v. 1424 purporten to indicate, express, set forth; originally borrowed from Anglo-French purporter (Old French porporter); formed as in the noun; later perhaps from the noun in English.

purpose n. About 1300 porpos intention, aim, goal; 1307 purpos; later purpose (about 1350); borrowed through Anglo-French purpos aim, intention, from purposer to design, intend; and directly from Old French porpos aim, intention, from porposer to put forth (pur-, por- forth, from Latin prō- forth, *pro-*¹ + Old French poser to put, place, POSE, influenced by the perfect stem prōpos- of Latin prōponere put forward, PRO-FOUND). —v. About 1380 purposen to state, set forth; probably from the noun in Middle English, influenced by, or in some instances borrowed through Anglo-French purposer, to design, intend, Old French porposer intend. —purposely adv. 1590, replacing earlier of purpose, recorded before 1382.

purr n. 1601, of imitative origin. —v. 1620, of imitative origin.

purse n. About 1250 purse; earlier purs (probably before 1200); found in Old English (before 1000) purs small bag for carrying money, alteration (perhaps influenced by Old English pusa bag) of Medieval Latin bursa purse, from Late Latin, variant of byrsa hide, from Greek býrsa. —v. 1303 pursen put in a purse; from the noun in Middle English. The meaning of draw together (as one does the strings of a purse or money bag), press into wrinkles, is first recorded in 1604. —purser n. 1445 purser treasurer, ship’s officer of accounts and provisions; earlier as a surname Pursere (1272); formed from Middle English purse, n. + *-er*¹.

purslane n. Before 1392 purcelane; later purslane (1440); probably borrowed through Anglo-French purcelane, and directly from Old French porcelaine, alteration (influenced by confusion in form with porcelaine PORCELAIN) of Latin porcilāca, variant of portulāca purslane; see PORTULACA.

pursue v. About 1280 pursuwiēn to harass, torment, persecute; later, to chase, follow, seek after (about 1300), and in the spelling pursuen (about 1350); borrowed through Anglo-

French pursuer, and directly from Old French poursuïr, porsuïr, variants of porsivre, porsivir, from Vulgar Latin prōsequere*, from Latin prōsequi follow after (prō- forward, *pro-*¹ + sequi follow).

—pursuance n. 1596, probably borrowed from Middle French poursuance act of pursuing, from Old French poursuïr PURSUE; for suffix see -ANCE. —pursuant adj. 1691, following; earlier, prosecuting (1542–43); possibly borrowed from Middle French poursuivant, present participle of Old French poursuïr PURSUE; and developed from the noun in English, recorded until sometime before 1657, and first found before 1393 as poursuivant one who seeks or aspires; borrowed through Anglo-French pursuant, present participle of pursuer, and directly from Old French poursuivant; for suffix see -ANT. —pursuit n. About 1383 pursuyt persecution; before 1387 act of pursuing; borrowed through Anglo-French pursuite, and directly from Old French poursuïte, from poursuivre, porsivre PURSUE. The meaning of occupation, interest, etc., that one pursues, is first recorded in 1529.

pursy adj. 1440 purcy, later, pursy (before 1475); alteration of Middle English pursyf asthmatic, short-winded; borrowed from Anglo-French pursif, porsif (Old French poussif), variants of Old French polsif, from poulser to pant, PUSH. The associated meaning of fat developed in English by 1576.

purulent adj. Probably before 1425 purulente of the coloring of pus; borrowed from Middle French purulent, and directly from Latin pūulentus full of pus, from pūs (genitive pūris) pus; for suffix see -ENT.

purvey v. Probably before 1300 purvaïen, porvaïen to make preparations, prepare, supply; about 1300 purveïen, porveïen; borrowed through Anglo-French purveier, purvëer, and directly from Old French porvëer, porvëoir, from Latin prōvidēre PROVIDE. —purveyance n. About 1300 purveance, porveance foresight, prudence; later, provisions, supplies (before 1325), and purveyance (1334); borrowed through Anglo-French purveance, and directly from Old French porveance, from porvëer PURVEY; for suffix see -ANCE.

purview n. 1442 purveu provisional clause, proviso; later purveue provision or scope of a statute; borrowed from Anglo-French purveuest it is provided, or purveu que provided that (clauses that introduce a statute), from Old French porveü, past participle of porvëer, porvëoir provide, PURVEY. The sense of scope or extent is first recorded in 1788. The form purview (influenced by view) is first recorded before 1677, and the meaning (influenced by view) of range of vision, outlook, range of experience or thought (1837).

pus n. 1392, borrowing of Latin pūs (genitive pūris) pus; related to PURULENT, PUTRID.

push v. About 1325 pushen; earlier possen to shove, thrust, surge; borrowed from Old French pousser, earlier poulser, from Latin pulsare to beat, strike, push, frequentative form of pellere to push, drive, beat. The meaning of promote (as in to push a book) appeared in 1714. From it developed the sense of to peddle drugs illegally (1938). —n. 1563, from the verb. —pusher n. 1591, formed from English push, v. + -*er*¹. The sense of a local dealer in illegal drugs is first recorded in 1935.

—pushy adj. Forward, aggressive. 1936, formed from push, n. or v. + -*y*¹.

pusillanimous adj. Before 1425 pusillanimus, borrowed from Late Latin pusillanimus, pusillanimis having little courage (from Latin pusillus little, diminutive of pullus young animal + animus spirit, courage); for suffix see -OUS.

puss n. cat. Before 1530, a conventional name for a cat; perhaps originally merely a call to attract a cat, common to several Germanic languages (compare Dutch poes, Low German pus, pus-katte, Norwegian puse, pus). —pussy n. 1726, diminutive of puss. —pussyfoot v. (1903) —pussy willow (1869) pustule n. 1392, borrowed from Old French pustule, and directly from Latin pustula blister, pimple, also pussula; for suffix see -ULE.

put v. Probably before 1200 putten, puten to thrust, push, move, place; developed from Old English putian*, implied in putung instigation, urging (about 1050); related to Old English potian to push (about 1000) and to Old English pȳtan put out, thrust out (about 1100). Old English potian is cognate with Middle Dutch and Middle Low German pōten to plant, Icelandic pota to poke, thrust, and Danish putte to put. —n. About 1300 put, from the verb in Middle English. The sense in commerce of an option is first recorded in 1717. —put-down n. (1962) —put-on n. (1621) adj. pretended; 1937 n. a ruse putative adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed perhaps through Middle French putatif (feminine putative), from Latin putātivus supposed, from putāre think, suppose (related to pūnus PURE); for suffix see -IVE.

putrescent adj. 1732, back formation from putrescence, possibly by influence of French putrescent, from Latin putrēscētem (nominative putrēscēs), present participle of putrēscere grow rotten, from putrēre be rotten, PUTRID; for suffix see -ENT. —putrescence n. 1646, formed as if from Latin putrēscētia*, from putrēscētem (nominative putrēscēs), present participle of putrēscere grow rotten; for suffix see -ENCE.

putrid adj. Before 1398 putrida, a Latinate form; borrowed directly from Latin putridus; later putred (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French putride, from Latin putridus, from putrēre be rotten, from putris rotten, crumbling; related to pūtēre to stink.

putt v. 1743 (implied in putter), Scottish, special use of PUT, v., and found in earlier putting pushing, shoving, thrusting (before 1398, probably associated with putting, now known in shot putting, about 1300). —n. 1743, Scottish; either from the verb or the same source as the verb.

puttee n. 1886, borrowed from Hindi paṭṭī bandage, strip, from Sanskrit paṭṭikā, from paṭṭa-s strip of cloth.

putter¹ v. keep busy in a rather useless way. 1877, alteration of POTTER².

putter² n. golf club used in putting. 1743; formed from putt + -*er*¹. It is difficult to determine when the differentiation in pronunciation took place between the golf putter (put'ər) and the track and field shot-putter (pùt'ər), perhaps by 1909.

putter³ n. 1820, found in shot-putter.

putty n. 1663, powder used for polishing; borrowed from French potée a polishing powder; originally, potful, contents of a pot, from Old French pot container. The soft mixture of powdered chalk and linseed oil is first recorded in 1706. —v. 1734, from the noun.

puzzle v. About 1595 pusle bewilder, confound, possibly a frequentative form of POSE, v. (as nuzzle is of nose); for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1607-12, puzzled condition; later, a hard problem (1655); from the verb. —puzzler n. (before 1652) pygmy or pigmy n. About 1384 Pigmei member of an ancient race of dwarfs inhabiting Ethiopia and India; borrowed from Latin Pygmaei, from Greek Pygmaioi a tribe of dwarfs, referred to by Homer and Herodotus; originally, as a plural adjective in the sense of dwarfish ("no taller than a cubit"), from pygmē cubit, fist; see PUNGENT. —adj. 1591, from the noun.

pylon n. 1850, monumental gateway to an Egyptian temple; borrowed from Greek pylōn gateway, from pylē gate. The meaning of a steel tower for carrying high-tension electric lines (1923), developed from the now obsolete tower for guiding aviators (1909).

pylorus n. 1615, borrowing of Late Latin pylōrus, from Greek pylōrōs lower opening of the stomach; originally pylāhorōs* gatekeeper (pylē gate + -horōs watcher). —pyloric adj. 1807, formed from English pylorus + -ic.

pyorrhea n. 1811, New Latin; formed from Greek pyōn pus; see FOUL + rhoiā a flow, from rhein to flow.

pyr- a combining form of pyro- before vowels in derivatives, as in pyruvic acid.

pyramid n. 1549 Pyramides (singular and then plural, 1552); borrowed from Latin p̄ramidēs, plural of p̄ramis one of the stone pyramids of Egypt or any structure like it, from Greek p̄ramis (plural p̄ramides), apparently alteration by transposition of m and r in Egyptian pimar pyramid.

The form piramis (borrowed from Latin p̄ramis as a singular form) is recorded in Middle English before 1398. —v. 1845, from the noun. —pyramidal adj. Before 1398 piramidal, borrowed perhaps through Old French pyramidal, and directly from Medieval Latin pyramidalis, from Latin p̄ramis (genitive p̄ramidis) pyramid; for suffix see -AL¹.

pyre n. 1658, borrowed from Latin pyra, and probably directly from Greek pyrā a hearth, a funeral pile, from p̄r (genitive pyrōs) fire.

pyretic adj. 1858, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French pyrétique, from New Latin pyreticus feverish, from Greek pyretōs fever, from p̄r (genitive pyrōs) fire; for suffix see -IC.

Pyrex n. 1915, an invented word for a type of glassware, formed by association with Greek p̄r fire + -ex an arbitrary ending.

pyrite n. 1868, yellow mineral that glitters so that it suggests gold, fool's gold; also known as iron pyrites (1567); from pyrite, before 1500, and perides firestone, before 1398; borrowed from Old French pyrite, and directly from Latin pyritēs firestone, flint, from Greek pyritēs lithos stone of fire, flint, from p̄r (genitive pyrōs) fire; for suffix see -ITE.

pyro- a combining form meaning: of, having to do with, using, or caused by fire, as in pyromania; heat, high temperatures, as in pyrometer; formed by heat, as in pyroacid. Borrowed through Latin, especially New Latin pyro-, from Greek pyro-, combining form of p̄r (genitive pyrōs) fire.

pyromania n. 1842, formed from English pyro- + mania. —pyromaniac n. 1887, from pyromania, on the analogy of mania, maniac.

pyrotechnics n. 1729, formed from earlier English pyrotechnic, adj. (1704, of or relating to the use of fire in chemistry, metallurgy, etc.) + the plural suffix -s¹; see -ICS. The adjective pyrotechnic is a shortened form of pyrotechnical. The sense of a brilliant display (as in orchestral pyrotechnics) is first recorded in 1901. —pyrotechnical adj. 1610, formed from English pyrotechny (1579, borrowed from French pyrotechnie, and formed from English pyro- + Greek téchnē art, skill) + -ical.

Pyrrhic adj. 1885, formed in allusion to Pyrrhus, king of Epirus in Greece, who defeated the Roman armies in 280 B.C., but lost so many men he was unable to attack Rome itself; for suffix see -IC.

pyruvic acid 1838, formed from PYR- + Latin ūva grape + English -ic; so called because this acid is produced by the distillation of an acid found in grapes.

python n. 1836, borrowed probably from French python, from Latin P̄ythōn the huge serpent killed near Delphi by Apollo, from Greek P̄ythōn, probably related to P̄ythō, older name of Delphi. As the name of the fabled serpent, Python is first recorded in English in 1590.

Q

quack¹ v. make the characteristic sound of a duck. 1617, of imitative origin; variant of earlier quake (before 1529) and queken (before 1333, also found as quelke before 1325). The Middle English form queken was probably developed from the interjection quek sound made by a duck or goose (1342). Though similar forms are found in Middle Dutch quacken (modern Dutch kwaken) and German quaken, it is unlikely the English word was borrowed, as similarities of imitative words appear independently in numerous languages. —n. 1839, the sound of a duck; from the verb.

quack² n. impostor, charlatan. 1638, shortened form of QUACKSALVER. —adj. 1653, from the noun. —quackery n. 1709–11, formed from English *quack*², n. + -ery.

quacksalver n. 1579, borrowed from Dutch quacksalver, literally, a hawker of salve (from Middle Dutch quacken to boast of, quack + salve SALVE¹, n.); for suffix see *-ER*¹.

quad¹ n. quadrangle of a college. 1820, shortened form of QUADRANGLE.

quad² n. quadruplet. 1896, a bicycle with four riders, shortened form of QUADRUPLET. Quad, one of four children born at the same time to the same mother, is first recorded in 1951, although this was the earliest meaning of quadruplet, first recorded in 1787.

quad³ n. unit of energy equal to one quadrillion British thermal units. 1974, shortened form of QUADRILLION.

quad⁴ adj., n. quadraphonic. 1970, adjective; 1971, noun; shortened form of QUADRAPHONIC.

quadr- the form of quadri- before vowels, as in quadrangle, quadrant.

quadrangle n. Before 1398, plane figure with four angles and four sides; borrowed from Old French quadrangle, adj., and directly from Late Latin quadrangulum a four-sided figure, from neuter of Latin quadrangulus, quadrangulus, adj., having four corners (quadri- four, quadri- + angulus ANGLE¹). The sense of a four-sided court is first recorded in English in 1593.

quadrant n. Before 1398, quarter of a day; borrowed from Latin quadrantem (nominative quadrans) a fourth, related to quattuor four.

The meaning of an instrument with a scale of 90 degrees, used for angular measurements, is first recorded before 1400, and that of a quarter of a circle in 1571.

quadraphonic adj. 1970, alteration of earlier quadriphonic (1969, quadri- four + phonic).

quadrante adj. Before 1398; borrowed from Latin quadrātus square, from quadrum a square, related to quattuor four; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —n. Probably about 1400 quadrat; borrowed from Latin quadrātum a square, from neuter of quadrātus, adj., square. —quadratic adj. 1656, formed from English quadrante, n. + -ic. The meaning in algebra of involving the square of an unknown quantity is first recorded in 1668.

quadrature n. Before 1460, square formation of troops; borrowed from Middle French quadrature, and directly from Latin quadrātūra, from quadrāre make square, from quadrum a square, QUADRATE; for suffix see -URE. The meaning of the position of one celestial body relative to another is first recorded in 1591, and that of the finding of a square of a given surface in 1596.

quadrennial adj. 1656 quadriniennial lasting four years; later, occurring every four years (1701, probably from the noun); originally formed from Latin quadriniennial period of four years (quadri- four + -ennium, from annus year) + English *-al*¹. —n. Before 1646 quadriniennial event that occurs every four years; formed as if from Latin quadriniennialis*, adj., from quadriniennial period of four years; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

quadri- a combining form meaning four, as in quadrilateral, quadrivalent. Also quadr- before vowels and quadru- before p. Borrowed from Latin quadri- (for expected quatr-*); related to quattuor four.

quadrilateral adj. having four sides and four angles. 1656, formed from Latin quadrilaterus (quadri- four + latus, genitive lateris side) + English *-al*¹. —n. 1650, either from the adjective or formed independently of the adjective in English from Latin quadrilaterus, adj.

quadrille n. 1773, square dance for four couples; earlier, one of four groups of horsemen taking part in a tournament or carousel (1738); borrowing of French quadrille, originally, one of four groups of horsemen, from Spanish cuadrilla, from cuadro square formation (in battle), from Latin quadrum a square, related to quattuor four. Quadrille is recorded earlier with the meaning of a card game for four people (1726); also borrowed from French.

quadrillion n. 1674, (in Great Britain) fourth power of a million; borrowed from French quadrillion, formed from quadri- four + (m)illion, from Old French million MILLION. In the United States, Canada, and France, quadrillion is the fifth power of a thousand.

quadruplegia n. 1921, formed from English quadri- four + Greek plēgē stroke, from the root of plēssein to strike; for suffix -ia compare poinsettia. —quadruplegic adj. 1921, formed as an adjective to English quadruplegia with the suffix -ic. —n. 1958, from the adjective.

quadru- the form of quadri- before p, as in quadruped, quadru-plex. In Latin, quadru- was the older form which survived before p when in other words it became quadri- by analogy with tri- three.

quadruped n. 1646 quadrupede, borrowed from French quadrupède, from Middle French, and borrowed directly from Latin quadrupēs (genitive quadrupedis) four-footed, a four-footed animal (quadru- four + pēs foot). —adj. 1741, from the noun.

quadruple adj. 1557, from the noun, possibly by influence of Middle French quadruple and Latin quadruplus, adj., quadruplum, n., quadruple. —v. 1375 quadruplen, borrowed from Latin quadruplāre make fourfold, from quadruplum, n., quadruple. —n. About 1425 quadruple a fourfold amount (probably influenced by triple, and found as quatriple probably before 1425); earlier quadruple tooth having a quadruple root (probably before 1425), and quadruply, pl. (before 1398); borrowed from Old French quadruple, variant of quadruple, and directly from Latin quadruplum (quadru- four + -plus -fold). —quadruplet n. 1787, one of four children born at one birth; formed from English quadruple, adj. + -et.

quaff v. 1523 quaff; later, quaff (1555); of uncertain origin (usually suggested as imitative of the sound of drinking deeply). —n. 1579, from the verb.

quagmire n. 1579–80, formed from quag bog (variant of earlier quabbe a marsh, bog, as a surname 1208–09; developed from Old English cwabba*) + MIRE. The sense of a difficult situation is first recorded in 1775.

quahog n. 1753 quogue, borrowed from Algonquian (probably Pequot) p'quaghhaug hard clam.

quail¹ n. kind of game bird. About 1380 quayle; earlier as a surname (1327); borrowed from Old French quaille, of uncertain origin (perhaps from a word in Medieval Latin quacula, quaquila*, or Gallo-Romance coacula*; or from a Germanic source, as Old High German quahtala, wahtala quail, modern German Wachtel).

quail² v. cower. About 1450 quaylen to fade, fail, give way; earlier (with substitution of w for qu) wailen to grow sick or feeble (probably before 1425), and weilynge having a morbid craving (about 1400); probably borrowed from Middle Dutch quelen, queilen to suffer, be ill, cognate with Old High German quelan, from Proto-Germanic kwel-* to die. The sense of lose courage or cower is first recorded in English in 1555.

quaint adj. Probably before 1200 cointe cunning, or proud; later queynte wise, clever (about 1280); elaborate, skillfully made (about 1300); with the spelling quaint (before 1325); and unusual, strange in a clever way (before 1338); borrowed from Old French cointe, queinte pretty, clever, knowing, from Latin cognitus known, past participle of cognōscere get or come to know well. The sense of uncommon or old-fashioned but pleasing, is first recorded in 1795.

quake v. Probably before 1200 cwakien, quakien to shake or tremble; later quaken (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 830) cwacian, related to cweccan to cause to shake, of unknown origin. —n. Before 1325 quak; later quake (before 1400); from quaken, v. The sense of an earthquake is first recorded in indirect reference before 1643, and in the verb sense probably about 1200.

Quaker n. 1651, member of the Religious Society of Friends; formed from English quake, v. + *-er*¹. By tradition the name was first given in 1650 because they, "Tremble at the Word of the Lord." However, the name was used previously in reference to a foreign sect of women given to fits of shaking in religious fervor (1647). —Quakerism n. 1656, formed from English Quaker + -ism.

qualify v. 1465 qualifyen to make a document legal; later, to limit, modify (1533); borrowed from Medieval Latin qualificare attribute a quality to, from a lost adjective qualificus* (Latin qualis of what sort + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY. The sense of make oneself fit for a job, etc., appeared before 1588. —qualification n. 1543–44, modification, limitation; borrowed from Middle French qualification, and directly from Medieval Latin qualificationem (nominative qualificatio), from qualificare qualify; for suffix see -ATION.

quality n. About 1300 qualite character, disposition; late, grade of excellence (before 1396); borrowed from Old French qualité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin qualitātem (nominative qualitās; said to be coined by Cicero as a loan translation of Greek poiôtēs), from quālis of what sort, related to quis WHO; for suffix see -ITY. —qualitative adj. Probably before 1425 qualitatyve (of a medicine) that produces one of the four qualities of heat, cold, moisture, or dryness; borrowed from Medieval Latin qualitativus; later revived in English in the sense of concerned with quality (1607); borrowed from French qualitatif (feminine qualitative), or reborrowed from Medieval or Late Latin qualitativus, from Latin qualitās quality; for suffix see -IVE.

qualm n. About 1530, feeling of faintness or sickness; possibly identical with Middle English qualm pestilence, plague (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (West Saxon) cwealm death, destruction, plague (before 899 and corresponding to Anglian -cwaln in ūtualm utter destruction, before 800); cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German qualm death, destruction, and related to Old English cwellan to kill and cwelan to die; see QUELL. The sense of uneasiness, doubt, is first recorded before 1555; and that of scruple of conscience in 1649.

quandary n. 1579, of uncertain origin.

quantify v. About 1840, (in logic) make explicit the quantity or extent of; borrowed from Medieval Latin quantificare, from a lost adjective quantificus* (Latin quantus how great + the root of facere make); for suffix see -FY. — quantification n. About 1840, probably formed from English quantify, on the analogy of qualify, qualification; for suffix see -ATION.

quantity n. Before 1325 quantite amount or extent; later, size, magnitude (about 1380); borrowed from Old French quantité, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin quantitatem (nominative quantitās; coined as a loan translation of Greek posōtes) relative greatness or extent, from quantus how great, related to quam how, and quis WHO; for suffix see -ITY. — quantitative adj. 1581, having quantity; later, measurable (1656); borrowed from Medieval Latin quantitativus, from Latin quantitās quantity; for suffix see -IVE.

quantize v. 1922, formed from English quantum + -ize.

quantum n., pl. quanta. 1619, sum or quantity; borrowed from Latin quantum how much, neuter of quantus how great; see QUANTITY. The meaning in physics of the smallest amount of radiant energy capable of existing independently, is first recorded in 1910. — adj. 1971, of sudden, spectacular significance or effect; abstracted from the earlier quantum jump (1955) and quantum leap (1970) referring to the sudden jump of an electron, etc., from one energy level to another.

quarantine n. 1) 1523, a period of forty days in which a widow had the right to remain in her dead husband's house. 2) 1663, period a ship suspected of carrying disease is kept in isolation; borrowed from Italian quarantina, from quaranta forty (in Venice vessels suspected of carrying disease were banned from the port for forty days), from Latin quadrāgintā forty, related to quattuor four. Any period, instance, etc., of isolation, is first recorded before 1680, developed perhaps in allusion to Middle English quarentyne the desert in which Christ wandered and fasted for forty days (probably 1458); borrowed from Medieval Latin quarentina forty days, and quarentena the desert of Christ's fast. — v. 1804, from the noun.

quark n. 1964, hypothetical nuclear particle smaller than a proton or neutron. Perhaps originally in association with German Quark curds, rubbish but whimsically adopted in reference to the theory that there were three types of quarks from which protons and other elementary particles were composed, from the use of quark in Joyce's Finnegans Wake (1939).

quarrel¹ n. angry dispute. 1340 querelle a dispute; later quarrel complaint, cause for a dispute (probably about 1375); borrowed from Old French quarrel, querelle, and directly from Latin querella, variant of querēla a complaining, complaint, from queri to complain, lament. — v. Before 1393 querelen to dispute, from the noun in Middle English. — quarrelsome adj. 1596, formed from English quarrel, n. + -some¹. Though the spelling quar- has been the established form from late Middle English times, the spelling quer- has remained in querulous.

quarrel² n. a square-headed bolt used with a crossbow. Before 1250 quarreis, pl.; later quarel (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French quarel, plural quarreus, from Vulgar Latin quadrellus*, diminutive of Late Latin quadrus, adj., square, related to quattuor four. The sense of a square or diamond-shaped pane of glass is first recorded in English in 1447.

quarry¹ n. place where stone is dug out for use in building. Before 1382 quarre; earlier as a place name (1266); borrowed from Medieval Latin quarea, dissimilated (by loss of the second r) from earlier quareria, a Latinized form based on Old French quarriere quarry, from quarre* cut stone, from Latin quadrum a square, related to quattuor four; for suffix see -Y³. An earlier form existed in Middle English quarriere (before 1375, and as a surname, 1166); also found as quarrieris (before 1382); borrowed from Anglo-French quarriere*, Old French quarriere quarry. — v. 1774, from the noun.

quarry² n. animal chased in a hunt. Probably before 1300 quarre entrails of deer, placed on the hide and given to dogs of the chase as a reward; later querre game killed in the chase (probably about 1390), and quary (before 1400); borrowed through Anglo-French quairie, and directly from Old French curee, cuirie, alteration (influenced by cuir skin, hide, from Latin corium hide) of Old French corée viscera, entrails, from Vulgar Latin corāta*, from Latin cor heart. The sense of anything hunted or eagerly pursued is first recorded in 1615.

quart n. Probably before 1325 quarte a quart container; later quart a liquid measure (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French quarte a fourth part, from Latin quārta, feminine of quārtus fourth, related to quattuor four through development from quatvortos* to quavortos* to quārtus.

quarter n. Probably before 1300 quarter one fourth, fourth part (of some measure or standard); earlier as a surname (1267); borrowed from Old French quarter, quartier, from Latin quārtarius a fourth part, from quārtus fourth, related to quattuor four; see QUART.

The meaning of the fourth part of a year is first recorded in 1389, that of the lunar period, before 1420; the meaning of a quarter of an hour is attested before 1456. The word was used for one of the four principal divisions of the horizon as early as 1391, and in the sense of any region or locality before 1300, though a particular area of a town (as in the French quarter) is not found before 1526. The meaning of dwelling place (quarters) is first recorded in 1591. A meaning of a coin worth a quarter of a dollar is peculiar to American English and is first recorded in 1783. Origin of the meaning of mercy shown to an enemy (as to give no quarter, 1611) may have derived from the military meaning of assigned position (1549). — v. About 1353 quarteren, from the noun. — adj. About 1390, from the noun. — quarterback n. (1879) — quarter horse strong horse bred for racing on quarter-mile tracks (1834). — quarterly adj. (1563) — adv. (1418) — n. (1830) — quartermaster n. (1415).*

quartet n. 1790, borrowed from French quartette, from Italian quartetto, diminutive of quarto fourth, from Latin quārtus; see QUART.

quartile n. 1450, developed from quartile, adj., of or pertaining to the relative position of two celestial bodies; borrowed from Middle French quartil, and directly from Medieval Latin quartilis of a quartile, from Latin quārtus fourth; see QUART.

quarto n. 1475, in quareto; borrowing of Medieval Latin in quarto in the fourth part of a sheet; quārtō, ablative case of Latin quārtus fourth; see QUART.

quartz n. 1756, borrowed from German Quarz rock crystal, quartz, from late Middle High German twarc, quarc, zwarc; probably borrowed from a West Slavic source (compare Czech tvrdý, Polish twardy quartz, Old Slavic tvrdŭ hard). Spelling with t is also found in French quartz and Dutch kwarts.

quasar n. 1964, acronym formed from earlier quas(i-stell)ar, as in quasi-stellar radio source (1963) or quasi-stellar object (1964); so called because the object gives a starlike image on a photographic plate though it is much larger and brighter than any star.

quash¹ v. to crush. Before 1387 quaschen; also quasshen (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French quasser to break, smash, from Latin quassāre to shatter, frequentative form of quātere to shake (past participle quassus).

Though not always analyzed as two different words in English (differences in meaning are considered literal for *quash*¹ and figurative for *quash*²), these two words come from different sources in Latin and Medieval Latin and they maintain a distinction in meaning in Old French, also evident in English.

quash² v. make void, annul. Before 1338 quassen; earlier quessen to suppress, overcome (about 1250); borrowed from Old French quasser to annul, and probably directly from Medieval Latin quassare make null and void, alteration (influenced by Latin quassāre shatter; see QUASH¹) of cassare, from Latin cassus empty, void, null, probably related to carere be devoid of, lack, and castus pure or chaste.

quasi adv. 1485, as it were, as if; borrowed from Middle French quasi, and directly from Latin quasi as if, as it were, almost, from quam how, as + sī if. —adj. 1643, from the adverb.

quasi- a prefix added to nouns, adjectives, and adverbs, and meaning literally as if, applied to substitutes and replacements that resemble or serve as a designated thing, as in quasiscience, quasigovernmental, quasi-judicially. Abstracted from QUASI, adv., adj.

quaternary n. About 1450, the number four; borrowed from Latin quaternarius, adj., consisting of four each, from quaterni four each, from quater four times (earlier quatrus*), related to quattuor four; for suffix see -ARY. —adj. 1605, borrowed from Latin quaternarius consisting of four each.

quatrain n. 1585, borrowing of Middle French quatrain stanza of four lines, from Old French quatre four, from Latin quattuor four + -ain -AN.

quaver v. Probably before 1425 quaveren, probably a frequentative form of earlier cwavien to tremble, shake (probably about 1225), of unknown origin; for suffix see -ER⁴. The coexisting form quaven (about 1378) may have developed from Old English cwafian* (compare Middle English cwavien and QUAKE). The meaning of use trills or quavers in singing is first recorded in 1538. —n. 1570, an eighth note; from the verb. The sense of a trill in singing is first recorded in 1611, probably from the earlier verb use, and that of a shake or tremble in the voice in 1748.

quay n. 1696, variant of earlier key (1548); developed from Middle English keye (before 1400) caye (1306); borrowed from Old North French cai, caie, from Gaulish (compare Welsh cae fence, field, hedge). The form quay was influenced by French quai, of the same meaning, from Old North French cai, caie.

quean n. hussy. Probably before 1200 quene a woman, old woman; later, a low-born woman (probably before 1300), and with the spelling queane (probably before 1425); developed from Old English (before 1000) cwene woman, hussy, prostitute; cognate with Old Saxon quena woman, wife, Middle Dutch quene, Old High German quena, Old Icelandic kona (Swedish kvinna), and Gothic qinō, from Proto-Germanic kwenōn*. Old English cwene woman, is also related to Old English cwēn QUEEN.

queasy adj. About 1450 kyse unsettling to the stomach; later queysy uncertain, unsettled; possibly from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic keisa in idhra-keisa bowel pains). In the sense of unsettled with the spelling coisy there may be some influence of Anglo-French queisier, Old French coisier to wound, hurt, make uneasy, apparently of Germanic origin, from the same root as the Scandinavian word cited above.

queen n. Probably before 1200 quene, quen king's wife; developed from Old English (before 725) cwēn queen, woman, wife, earlier cwēn, from Proto-Germanic kweniz* and cognate with Old Saxon quān wife, Old Icelandic kvæn, kvān, and Gothic qēns; compare QUEAN.

queer adj. 1508, Scottish, probably borrowed from Low German (perhaps Brunswick) queer oblique, off-center, related to German quer oblique, perverse, odd, from Old High German twerh oblique; see THWART. The sense of homosexual is first recorded in 1922. —v. 1812, to spoil, ruin, probably from the adjective. An earlier sense of trick, swindle, cheat, is recorded about 1790. —n. 1935, homosexual, from the adjective.

quell v. Probably before 1200 quellen put to death, kill, destroy; developed from Old English (before 725) cwellan to kill; cognate with Old Saxon quellian to torture or kill, Middle Dutch quelen (modern Dutch kwellen harass, torment), Old High German quellen to torture, kill (modern German quälen to pain, torment), and Old Icelandic kvæla to torture, kill (Swedish kvälja, Danish kvæle), from Proto-Germanic kwaljanan*. The same Proto-Germanic root kwal-/kwel- is the source of Old English cwelan to die, cwalu death, destruction, found in QUAIL². Other cognates (through Old English cwealm death, cweyllan to die) include Old Saxon quelan die, quāladeath, destruction, Middle Dutch quelen suffer, be ill, quāle death (modern Dutch kwaal disease, trouble), Old High German quelen die, quāla, qualm, death, destruction (modern German Qual pain, torment, grief), and Old Icelandic kvǫl torment, torture.

The sense of put an end to, suppress, subdue, is first recorded probably about 1200.

quench v. Probably about 1175 quenchen put out, extinguish; later, put an end to, bring to naught (probably about 1200); developed from Old English -awencan (as in āwencan to quench, before 899). Old English -awencan is a causative form that arose by analogy (as drencan drench is the causative of drincan drink) to correspond to the strong verb wincan go out, be extinguished (found in āwincan, about 1000) and cognate with Old Frisian quinka disappear.

querulous adj. Probably about 1400 querelouse litigious; also later querulose quarrelsome (1450–75); borrowed from Old French querelos, and directly from Late Latin querulosus, from Latin querulus full of complaints, complaining, from queri to complain; for suffix see -OUS.

query n. Before 1635 quaery, alteration (influenced by inquiry) of earlier quere, quaere question (1589); borrowed from Latin quaere ask, imperative of quaerere to seek, gain, ask. The spelling query is first recorded in 1645. —v. 1654, to question; 1657, to ask about; from the noun.

quest n. About 1303 quest search, official inquiry; borrowed from Old French queste, and directly from Medieval Latin questa search, inquiry, from Vulgar Latin questa*, from pre-Latin quaesta*, quaesita*, feminine of quaestus*, quaesitus*, original past participle of quaerere seek, gain, ask, QUERY. —v. About 1350 questen, perhaps from the noun, and in part borrowed from Old French quester, from the noun in Old French.

question n. Before 1200 questiun a philosophical or theological problem; later questioun any problem or thing asked, also the act of asking (before 1325); borrowed through Anglo-French questiun, and directly from Old French question legal inquest, learned borrowing from Latin quaestio (nominative quaestio) a seeking, inquiry, from quaes-, root of quaerere to ask, QUERY; for suffix see -TION. —v. Before 1470 questionen, perhaps from the noun, and in part borrowed from Middle French questionner, from the noun in Middle French. —question mark 1869; earlier question stop (1862).

questionnaire n. 1901, borrowing of French questionnaire, from questionner to question, from Middle French; see QUESTION, v.

queue n. 1592, tail of a beast; later, a braid of hair (1748); borrowing of French queue a tail, from Old French cue, coue, coe tail, from Latin cōda (dialect variant of cauda) tail. In late Middle English the word had the meaning of a line of dancers (before 1500), found as an extended meaning in a line of people, vehicles, etc. (1837). —v. 1777, put up (hair) in a braid; later, move, form, or stand in a line (1893); from the noun.

quibble n. 1611, play on words, pun; later, equivocation (1670); probably a diminutive of quib evasion of a point at issue (before 1550); borrowed from Latin quibus by what (things)? (dative and ablative plural of quid what, neuter of quis WHO), a word said to be much used in legal jargon and hence associated with legal quibbles; for suffix see -LE¹. —v. Before 1629, to play on words, pun; later, to indulge in quibbles (1656); from the noun. Though related by etymology, quibble and quip are independent formations in English. The evidence for separate borrowing lies not only in the difference in form but also in the original meanings of quibble a play on words (1611) and quip a sharp or sarcastic remark (1532).

quiche n. 1949, borrowing of French quiche (1810), from dialectal German (Alsace-Lorraine) Küche, diminutive of German Kuchen CAKE.

quick adj. Probably about 1175 quik alive, lively; also ready to act, swift; later quick (before 1325); developed from Old English cwic alive (about 725, in Beowulf); earlier cwic- (as in cwic-bēam aspen; about 700); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon quik alive, Middle Dutch quic (modern Dutch kwik quicksilver, mercury), Old High German quēc (modern German keck lively, bold), Old Icelandic kvíkr (Swedish quick, Danish kvik, Norwegian kvikk), from Proto-Germanic kwik-waz*, and Gothic qiwai (nominative plural). —adv. Probably before 1300 quyk; from the adjective. —n. Probably before 1200 quike living persons; developed from Old English (before 899) cwic; from the adjective. The sense of the tender flesh under a fingernail or toenail (1523), followed by that of a tender, sensitive part of one's feelings (as in cut to the quick) in 1526. —quicken v. About 1300 quikkenen, formed from quik, adj. + *-en*¹, replacing earlier quiken (recorded probably before 1200), probably developed from Old English gecwician (before 830). —quicklime n. Probably before 1375 quyke lyme; Middle English quyke living, and lyme lime¹; loan translation of Latin calx viva. —quicksand n. 1300 Quyksond; Middle English quyk living + sond sand. —quicksilver n. 1387–95 quyk silver; Middle English quyk living + silver silver. —quick-witted adj. (1530) quid¹ n. piece (of tobacco, etc.) to be chewed. 1727, from a dialectal variant of Middle English cudde, cud; developed from Old English cudu, cwidu CUD.

quid² n. one pound sterling. 1688, possibly borrowed from Latin quid what (see QUIDDITY), shortening of quid pro quo one thing for another (in English since 1565).

quiddity n. 1539, fine point in argument, quibble (alluding to scholastic arguments on the quidditas or essence of things); borrowed perhaps from Middle French quiddité, and directly from Medieval Latin quidditas; literally, whatness, from Latin quid what, neuter of quis WHO; for suffix see -ITY. The Medieval Latin sense of the essence of a thing is found in Middle English quidite (before 1398).

quiescent adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin quiescentem (nominative quiescens), present participle of quiescere to come to rest, be quiet, from quies rest, quiet; for suffix see -ENT. —quiescence n. Before 1631, borrowed from Late Latin quiescentia, from Latin quiescens; for suffix see -ENCE.

quiet n. Probably before 1300 quiet calmness, rest, stillness; borrowed from Old French quiete, and directly from Latin quiēs (genitive quiētis) rest, quiet. —adj. Before 1382 quyete at rest, still; borrowed through Old French quiet, quiete, and directly from Latin quiētus resting, peaceful, calm, from past participle of quiēscere to come to rest; see QUIESCENT. —v. Before 1398 quieten subdue, lessen, make quiet; possibly from the adjective in Middle English, and borrowed from Late Latin quiētāre put to rest, calm, from Latin quiētus resting. —adv. 1573, from the adjective.

quill n. Probably before 1425 quille, of uncertain origin, but probably cognate with Middle High German kil quill (modern German Kiel), and Low German Quiele. The writing pen made from a quill is found in English in 1552, and the spines of a porcupine in 1602.

quilt n. Probably about 1300 quoilt, quille mattress with a soft lining; borrowed through Anglo-French quille, coille, Old French cuite, coute, from Latin culcita mattress, of unknown origin. The thick outer bed covering is found in the 1500's. —v. 1555, stitch together with a soft lining; from the noun.

quince n. Before 1325, in quince tre; also coyns, pl., quince (about 1350); borrowed from Old French cooin, from Latin cōtōneum mālum quince fruit, probably a variant of cydōnium mālum, from Greek kydōnion mālon, apparently a variant of kōdymālon apple of Kodu (kodū- a Lydian name for the fruit, associated with Kydōnīā Cydonia, ancient city in Crete).

quinine n. 1826, formed in English from Spanish quina cinchona bark + English *-ine*²; from the bark of a cinchona tree. Spanish quina, from Quechua (Peru) kina is found in quinic (also kinic 1814) in the form quinaquina (1727), also called China China (1707).

quinque- a combining form meaning five, as in quinquevalent (having a valence of five). Also quinq- before vowels. Borrowed from Latin quinq-, from quinq- FIVE.

quinquennial adj. About 1475, quinquennale lasting five years, formed from Latin quīquennium period of five years (quīnque five + -ennium, from annus year) + English *-al*¹. The sense of occurring every five years is first recorded in 1610. —n. 1895, person holding office for five years; later, fifth anniversary (1903); from the adjective.

quinsy n. 1373 quyncie tonsillitis with pus; about 1450 quinsy; borrowed from Old French quinancie, and through Anglo-Latin quinancia, from Late Latin cynanchē, from Greek kynānchē dog quinsy; originally, dog's collar (kýōn, genitive kynós dog + ánchein to strangle).

quint n. 1935, shortened form of QUINTUPLET. The corresponding British form is quin (1935). An earlier use of quint group of five people, is recorded before 1678.

quintal n. 1401 quyntowes, pl. 100 pounds, hundredweight; later quintale (about 1436); borrowed from Old French quintal, and directly from Medieval Latin quintale, from Arabic qintār, from Late Greek kentēnāron, from Latin centēnārius containing a hundred; see CENTENARY. The plural quyntowes was influenced by the Old French plural quintaus.

quintessence n. Probably about 1435 quyntessence the fifth essence (ether) of ancient and medieval philosophy; borrowed from Middle French quinte essence, and directly from Medieval Latin quinta essentia fifth essence (from Latin quīnta, feminine of quīntus fifth; essentia ESSENCE); a loan translation of Greek pēmp̄tē ousiā, the ether of Aristotle, a fifth element (added to water, earth, fire, and air) permeating all things. The sense of pure essence, purest form, is first recorded in English in 1570. —quintessential adj. 1605, formed from English quintessence, on analogy of essence, essential; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

quintet or quintette n. 1811 quintet, probably borrowed from Italian quintetto, diminutive of quinto fifth, from Latin quīntus, related to quīnque FIVE. The form quintette (1864), was borrowed from French quintette, from Italian quintetto.

quintillion n. 1674, (in Great Britain) fifth power of a million, formed from Latin quīntus fifth + English (m)illion. In the United States, Canada, and France, a quintillion is the sixth power of a thousand.

quintuple adj. 1570, borrowed from Middle French quintuple, from Latin quīntus fifth; modeled on Middle French quadruple. —v. 1639, from the adjective; modeled on verb use of quadruple. —n. 1684, from the adjective. —quintuplet n. 1873, group of five; formed from English quintuple, adj. + -et. The meaning of one of five children born at one birth appeared in 1889.

quip n. 1532, from quippy (1519), perhaps borrowed from Latin quippe indeed, really (used sarcastically), from quid what, neuter of quis WHO; compare QUIBBLE. —v. 1579, from the noun.

quire n. Probably before 1200 quaer, cuaer a book or treatise; later quaiers standard unit for selling paper (1393); also quayr a set of folded pages for a book; originally, a set of four such pages (1438); borrowed through Anglo-French quier, Old French quaier; earlier quaer, caier, from Vulgar Latin quaternus*, from Latin quaterni four each, from quater four times.

quirk n. 1565, quibble, evasion; of uncertain origin. The sense of a peculiarity or mannerism is found in 1601, and that of a sudden twist or curve, in 1605. —v. 1596, to subject to quirks, from the noun. The meaning of move with sudden twists appears in 1821. —quirky adj. (1806) quirt n. 1845, borrowed from American Spanish cuarta whip; originally, said to be a whip long enough to reach the guide mule of a team of four, from dialectal Spanish cuarta guide mule.

quisling n. 1940 Quisling, in allusion to Vidkun Quisling, Norwegian politician who was premier of the puppet government during the German occupation of Norway in World War II.

quit adj. Probably before 1200 cwite free, clear, rid (as of debt or obligation); later quite, quit (1275); borrowed from Old French quite free, clear, from Medieval Latin quiētus*, from Latin quiētus free (from war, debts, etc.), calm, resting. —v. Probably before 1200 cwiten to pay, settle (a debt or obligation); later quiten to release, clear, give up (before 1250); borrowed from Old French quiter to free, clear, from the adjective in Old French. The sense of leave, separate, or part from, is first recorded in about 1390, and that of cease, stop, discontinue, in the early 1300's. —quitclaim n. (probably before 1300) —quits adj. 1478, discharged of a liability, free, clear; from quit rid of debt (probably before 1200), perhaps by influence of Medieval Latin quittus free of debt or claim. Such a development parallels finis time out or quits, possibly a shortening of Latin finis; or perhaps by the process that produced times time out.

quite adv. Probably before 1300 quite, quit, developed as the adverb form to the adjective quite, quit free, clear, QUIT.

quiver¹ v. to tremble, shake. 1490 quiveren, possibly an alteration of quaveren to QUAVEN; or developed from the adjective quiver active, nimble, quick (before 1398), cwiver (before 1250); developed from Old English cwifer- (in cwiferlice actively, quickly), perhaps related to cwic alive; see QUICK. —n. 1715, from the verb.

quiver² n. case to hold arrows. 1322, borrowed through Anglo-French quiveir, Old French quivre, coivre, probably from a Germanic source (compare Old High German kohhari quiver, modern German Köcher, Old Saxon kokar, and Old Frisian koker); itself probably borrowed (along with Medieval Latin cucura quiver) from keukur* container, said to be from the language of the Huns, who invaded the Roman Empire in the early 400's.

quixotic adj. 1815, formed from Quixote visionary and impractical person (1786; earlier Quixot 1648) + English -ic, in allusion to Don Quixote, the romantic and very impractical hero of Cervantes' novel Don Quixote de la Mancha (1605).

quiz v. 1847 quies; perhaps borrowed from Latin quī es? who are you? the first question of former oral exams in Latin in grammar schools. The spelling quiz (1886), may have been influenced by the noun. —n. 1867, an examination; from the verb. While the spelling is unusual, it is difficult to associate quiz question, with earlier quiz an odd person (1782).

quizzical adj. 1800, formed from earlier quiz an odd or eccentric person (1782); of unknown origin, + -ical. The sense of teasing, questioning (as in a quizzical smile), is first recorded in 1801.

quoins n. 1532, external angle of a wall or building; later, wedge-shaped block (1570); variant of COIN.

quoit n. 1388 coytes, pl., game played by throwing quoits; later cote a flat stone (1410) and quoit a quoit (1477); borrowed from Old French coite flat stone, cushion, variant of coille; see QUILT.

Quonset hut 1942, named after Quonset Point, Naval Air Station, Rhode Island, where this type of structure was first built in 1941.

quorum n. 1426, justices whose presence was necessary to make a court session legal; borrowing of Latin quorum of whom, genitive plural of quī WHO. The sense of a fixed number of members of a group or body whose presence is necessary for transaction of business is first recorded in English in 1616.

quota n. 1668, share (of men or supplies) to be contributed by a particular district; borrowed from Medieval Latin quota, from Latin quota pars how large a part; quota, feminine singular of quotus which or what number (in a sequence); see QUOTE.

quotation n. 1456, a numbering, number; later, a marginal notation (1532); probably formed from quote, v. + -ation, and also borrowed from Medieval Latin quotationem (nominative quotatio), from quotare to number chapters, see QUOTE; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of an act of citing or quoting is first recorded in 1646, and that of a passage quoted from a book, etc., in 1690. —quotation mark (1888).

quote v. Before 1387 coten mark (a book) with numbers or marginal references; borrowed from Old French coter; also later quoten (probably before 1425); from Medieval Latin quotare to number chapters; both the Old French and Medieval Latin forms derive from Latin quotus which or what number (in a sequence), from quot how many, related to quis WHO. The meaning of cite or refer to passages from (a particular source) is first recorded in 1574, and that of copy out or repeat exactly the words of another, before 1680. —n. 1600, marginal reference; from the verb. The meaning of a quotation is first recorded in 1885.

quotient n. About 1450 quocient; borrowed from Latin quotiens how many times, from quot how many, related to quis WHO. The Latin adverb quotiens was mistaken in Middle English for a present participle ending in -ēns, producing the late Middle English form quocient.

qwerty or QWERTY n. 1929, an attributive use of the acronym formed from q, w, e, r, t, y, the first six keys in the upper row of letters on a standard typewriter (and now computer) keyboard.

R

rabbet n. 1382 rabet, groove made on the edge or surface of a board, stone, etc.; borrowed from Old French rabat, rabat a recess in a wall; literally, a beating down, from rabattre beat down; see REBATE. —v. 1440, implied in rabetyng the joining together of boards; later, cut a rabbet in (1572); from the noun.

rabbi n. Before 1325 rabi, rabbi master; borrowed from Old French rabi, and directly from Late Latin rabbi, from Greek rhabbī, from Hebrew rabbi my master (rabh master + pronoun suffix -ī). An isolated example of rabbi occurs before 1050, but the meaning of a Jewish religious leader is not found until 1387. —rabbinate n. 1702, formed from English rabbīn rabbi (1531) + *-ate*³. English rabbīn was borrowed through French, probably from Aramaic rabbīn, plural of rab master. —rabbinical adj. 1622, formed from English rabbīn (1612) + *-al*¹, or from English rabbīn rabbi (1531) + -ical.

rabbit n. Before 1398 rabbete; later rabet (probably about 1425); borrowed from a dialectal old French source (compare modern French dialect rabbotte rabbit, and Walloon robète, in form a diminutive), found in Flemish or Middle Dutch robbe rabbit; of uncertain origin. The original reference in English was to the young animal only; the adult was called cony.

rabble n. About 1389 rabul meaningless string of words; also, probably about 1390 rabul crowd of people; possibly related to rablen speak in a rapid confused manner (before 1410); borrowed from Middle Dutch rabbelen to chatter, cognate with Low German rabbeln to chatter.

rabid adj. About 1611, furious or raging; borrowed from Latin rabidus, from rabere be mad, rave; see RAGE. The specific medical sense of affected with rabies, made mad by rabies, is first recorded in 1804.

rabies n. 1598, borrowed from Latin rabiēs madness, rage, fury; related to rabere be mad, rave.

raccoon n. 1608 arocoun, borrowed from Algonquian (Powhatan) ārāhkuṇ, from ārāhkuṇēm he scratches with the hands; so called perhaps from the animal's habit of leaving long scratches on the trees it climbs or in reference to the use of its paws in hunting for shellfish and insects.

race¹ n. contest of speed. Probably before 1300 ras a charge in a battle, an onslaught; later, onward movement, act of running, (before 1325); and in the spelling race (probably before 1350); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rās running, rush); cognate with Middle Dutch rāsen, modern Dutch razen to rage, Middle Low German rās strong current, and Old English rās running, rush which developed into Middle English resen and did not survive into modern English); derived from Proto-Germanic rāses-*. The meaning of a contest of speed is first recorded in English in 1513, developed from the earlier sense of an act of running. The meaning of a strong current of water is found in 1375, perhaps in part from Old French ras, raz strong current of water. —v. Probably before 1200 rasen to rush; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rasa to rush); later reinforced by the noun in English (1513) and implied in race horse (before 1626), racier (1649).

race² n. group of people of common descent or origin. 1520, a class of wine with a characteristic flavor; also, a group of people of a particular set (as in a new race of poets); later, a generation (probably 1549), a group of people of common origin (1570); borrowed from Middle French race; earlier rasse breed, lineage, family, from Italian razza race, breed, lineage; of uncertain origin. —racial adj. (1862), —racism n. (1936), —racist n. (1932); adj. (1938).

raceme n. 1785, borrowed from Latin racēmus cluster of grapes or berries, but recorded with the meaning of a RAISIN or currant probably before 1425.

rack¹ n. frame with bars. About 1300 rekke; 1343–44 rakke, rekke, possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch rec framework, related to recken to stretch out, cognate with Old English reccan to stretch out, Old Frisian reza, Old Saxon rekkian, Old High German rechen (modern German recken), Old Icelandic rekja, and Gothic ufrakjan, from Proto-Germanic rakjanan*.

The instrument of torture is first recorded about 1425, and its figurative sense of agony, in 1591, anticipated by the recys the racks, pain in the side (1373). —v. Probably 1435 rakken to stretch on a frame for drying; about 1433, to torture; from the noun, possibly reinforced by borrowing from Middle Dutch recken to stretch out. The sense of torment is found in 1601.

rack² n. Archaic. wreck, destruction. 1599, in go to rack and ruin to be destroyed; variant of WRACK.

rack³ v. (of a horse) move with a kind of fast, lively gait. 1530, of uncertain origin; perhaps from French racquassure "racking of a horse in his pace," itself of unknown origin. —n. 1580, probably from the verb.

rack⁴ n. broken clouds driven before the wind. Probably about 1380 rak rain cloud; earlier, rapid movement, rush (probably before 1300); possibly found in Old English racu cloud, reinforced by a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rek jetsam, wreckage, Swedish dialect rak). It is also possible the noun was formed by influence of Old English wrac something driven. —v. Probably before 1200, move quickly, rush; possibly found in Old English racian hasten.

racket¹ or racquet n. oval frame with netting and a long handle to hit a ball in tennis, etc. About 1385 raket game like tennis in which players use their palm; later rakket racket used in tennis, badminton, etc. (1500–20); borrowed from Old French requette, rechet racket or battledore, palm of the hand (perhaps reinforced by Spanish raqueta), from Arabic rāḥat, a form of rāḥa palm of the hand.

racket² n. loud noise, loud talk. 1565, of uncertain origin; said to be of imitative origin. The meaning of any dishonest scheme or activity (1812) is perhaps from *racket*¹ with the underlying sense of game (a scheme) and possibly reinforced by the sense of *rack*¹ in rack-rent extortionate rent. —racketeer n. (1928).

racy adj. 1654, having the characteristic taste; formed from English *race*² a class of wine + *-y*¹. The meaning of having a quality of vigor (1667) was extended to so lively as to be improper, risqué, in 1901.

rad n. 1918, unit of a dose of X rays, shortened form of radiation. The later meaning of 100 ergs per gram of absorbing material (1954) is said to be from the first letters of radiation absorbed dose.

radar n. 1941, formed from ra(dio) d(etecting) a(nd) r(anging).

radial adj. Before 1400, pertaining to a surgical instrument with raylike parts; borrowed from Medieval Latin radialis, from Latin radius beam of light, *RAY*¹; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

radiant adj. About 1450, borrowed through Middle French radiant, and directly from Latin radiantem (nominative radiāns) shining, present participle of radiāre to beam, shine; for suffix see -ANT. —radiance n. 1601, adopted to English from Late Latin radiantia with the suffix -ence, later -ance.

radiate v. Before 1619, to spread in all directions; back formation from radiation, and reinforced by Latin radiātum, past participle of radiāre to beam, shine; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The sense of give off in rays (said of light or heat) is first recorded in 1704. —radiation n. Before 1450, act or process of radiating; later, ray or rays emitted (1570); borrowed from Middle French radiation, and directly from Latin radiātiōnem (nominative radiātiō), from radiāre to beam, shine, radiate, from radius beam of light; for suffix see -ATION. —radiator n. 1836, thing that radiates; formed from English radiate + *-or*². The meaning of a device which radiates heat is first recorded in 1851.

radical adj. Before 1398, of or in a plant root or in the ground and thereby fundamental to existence; also (of bodily organs or fluids) vital to life, fundamental; borrowed from Late Latin radīcalis of or having roots, from Latin radīx (genitive radīcis) ROOT; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The sense of advocating fundamental reform is recorded in 1800, and that of unconventional as in radical in design, in the 1920's. —n. 1641, root part of a word, from the adjective. The sense of a person advocating fundamental reform is first found in 1802. The meaning of an atom or group of atoms acting as a unit in a chemical reaction (1816), is a direct borrowing from modern French. —radicalism n. (1820) —radical sign (1668, in mathematics).

radio n. 1903 (in radio-receiver) transmission and reception through the atmosphere of voice signals; abstracted from such earlier combinations as radiophone (1881, used by Bell of Mercadier in producing sound from radiant energy) and radioconductor (1898, a device used in early wireless telegraphy), also associated with radiotelegraphy transmission through the atmosphere of telegraph signals (1898); formed from English radio + telegraphy (after the work of Marconi). —adj. 1912, from the noun. —v. 1919, from the noun. —radio astronomy (1948) —radio station (1912) radio- a combining form meaning: 1 radiant energy, as in radiometer (1875), radioactive (1900), radiotherapy (1903). 2 radioactive, radiation, as in radioisotope (1946), radiology (1900). 3 radio, as in radiobroadcast (1922), radiojournalism (1968). In the sense of radioactive, radio- is a combining form in English abstracted from radiation; in the sense of radio or electronic it is a combining form of radio; abstracted from earlier combinations, such as radiotelegraphy; both meanings adapted from Latin radius spoke of a wheel, radius of a circle, beam of light.

radiosonde n. 1937, airborne device for transmitting atmospheric data; borrowing of German Radio-sonde (Radio- radio- + Sonde depth sounding, probe, from French sonde, literally, sounding line).

radish n. Before 1200 redic; later redich (before 1300), and radisse (1373); developed from Old English (about 1000) rædic; borrowed from Latin radicem (nominative) radix ROOT. The spelling with -ish was perhaps influenced by Old French radise, variant of radice, from Latin radīx root.

radium n. 1899, New Latin, formed from Latin radius ray¹ + New Latin -ium; so called because the element was found to give off radioactive rays.

radius n. 1597, staff of a cross, borrowed from Latin radius radius, staff, spoke, beam of light. The meaning of a line drawn straight from the center to the outside of a circle or sphere is first recorded in 1611.

radon n. 1918, borrowed from German Radon, from Rad(ium) radium + -on, as in the other inert gases argon, neon, xenon; so called because this element is formed by the radioactive decay of radium.

raffia n. 1882; earlier raphia (1866) and probably rofia (1729 rofeer); borrowed from Malagasy rafia.

raffish adj. 1801, formed from English raff + *-ish*¹; raff people, probably of a lower sort; apparently abstracted from rif and raf everyone, every scrap (1338); found in Anglo-French and Old French rif et raf, Middle Dutch rieffende raf, and probably related to Swedish rafs rubbish, also in Middle English, scrap, rubbish (1440); see RIFFRAFF.

raffle n. About 1390 raffe dice game; borrowed from Old French raffe dice game, plundering, stripping; perhaps from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch raffel dice game; cognate with Middle High German and modern German raffen to grab, Middle Low German reppen to move, Old Frisian hreppa to move, and Old Icelandic hreppa to reach, get), from Proto-Germanic Hrap-*. The meaning of a sale of chances to win an item is first recorded in English in 1766. —v. Before 1680, from the noun.

raft n. floating platform. Probably about 1300, beam, rafter; later, floating platform of logs (1497); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic raptr log, with pt for ft); see RAFTER. —v. 1706, from the noun.

raft n. large collection, crowd. 1833, variant of earlier raff heap, large amount (before 1677); also large crowd (1673); from Middle English raf, probably identical with raf in rif and raf; see RAFFISH and RIFFRAFF.

rafter n. Before 1200 refter a beam or pole; also about 1200, rafire; developed from Old English (West Saxon, before 899) ræftras, pl. and (Mercian, about 700) reftras; cognates with Middle Low German rafter, rachter rafter, and Old Icelandic raptr (Swedish and Danish rafi), related to räfi, räfi roof made with rafters, from Proto-Germanic rāf-/raf-*.

rag n. scrap of cloth. About 1325 ragge; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ragg shaggy tuft, earlier raggw-, and Old Danish rag; see RUG). —ragged adj. About 1300 ragged rough, shaggy, frayed; formed from rag + -ed, reinforced by borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic raggathr shaggy, Swedish raggig shaggy, rough, Norwegian raggad). Earlier Old English raggig raglike, shaggy, was almost surely developed from Scandinavian.

rag v. to scold. 1739, of uncertain origin. The meaning of annoy, tease, torment (1808), is found in the stronger sense of intimidate in the combination ballarag (1807).

rag n. style of jazz, ragtime. 1895, possibly a shortened form of ragged; from the rhythmic imbalance of the music. The compound ragtime (presumably rag + time) appeared in 1897.

raga n. 1788, borrowed from Sanskrit rāga-s harmony, melody; literally, color or mood, related to rājyati it is dyed.

ragamuffin n. 1344 ragamuffyn, formed from Middle English raggi, adj., ragged + Middle Dutch muffe, moffe mitten.

rage n. Probably before 1300 rage violent anger, madness, passion; borrowed from Old French rage, raige, from Medieval Latin rabia, also Late Latin, from Latin rabies madness, rage, fury; related to rabere be mad, rave. —v. About 1250, to play, romp; later, to be furious (before 1325); from the noun.

raglan n. 1863, in allusion to Lord Raglan, British field marshal in the Crimean War, from the Welsh place name Raglan, Rhaglan. —adj. 1906, from the noun.

ragout n. 1656–57, borrowing of French ragoût, from Middle French ragoûter awaken the appetite (Old French re- back + à to + goût taste, from Latin gustum, nominative gustus; see GUSTO).

ragweed n. 1790, rag + weed; from the ragged shape of the leaves; applied earlier to another plant (1658).

raid n. About 1425, military expedition on horseback, Scottish and Northern English form of rade a riding, journey (about 1200); developed from Old English rād a riding (871), cognate with Old High German reita, reiti foray, raid; see ROAD. Raid is not recorded after the 1500's as a place where ships may anchor. Modern use is attributed to revival by Scott in 1805 and 1818, with the extended sense of an attack, foray. —v. 1785, take part in a raid; implied in raiding, from the noun.

rail n. bar of wood or metal. Probably about 1300 raile; earlier reyle the railing of a ship (1294–95); borrowed from Old French reille, raille, from Latin rēgula straight stick, diminutive form related to regere to straighten, guide; see RIGHT. —v. About 1385 railen to fence in with rails; from the noun. —railing n. 1432 raylynge rail or framework; later, a fence (1440); formed from railen fence in with rails (about 1385). —railroad n. (1757), railway n. (1776) road laid with rails for wagons with heavy loads; later, a track for trains (1825).

rail v. complain bitterly. Before 1470 railen; borrowed from Middle French railler to tease or joke, from Old Provençal ralhar to chat, joke, from Vulgar Latin ragulāre* to bray, from Late Latin ragere to roar. Related to RALLY² to tease.

rail n. kind of small bird. Before 1450 rale; later rayl (probably about 1475); borrowed from Old French raale, related to rāler to rattle, of uncertain origin.

railery n. 1653, borrowed from French raillerie, from Middle French railler to tease; see RAIL², v.; for suffix see -ERY.

raiment n. About 1400 rameunt; also rayment (before 1425), shortening of arayment clothing (before 1399); borrowed through Anglo-French araiement, Old French areement (arēer to ARRAY + -ment -ment).

rain n. 1116 rein; later rain (before 1325); developed from Old English regn rain (before 725) and in regnwurm rainworm or earthworm (about 700); sometimes contracted to rēn-, rēn; cognates with Old Frisian rein rain, Old Saxon regan, Middle Dutch reghen (modern Dutch regen), Old High German regan (modern German Regen), Old Icelandic, modern Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish regn, and Gothic rign, from Proto-Germanic regna-*. —v. Probably before 1200 reinen to rain; developed from Old English (about 950) regnian, but usually rinan, a contraction of rignan; cognates with Middle Dutch reghenen to rain (modern Dutch regenen), Old High German reganōn (modern German regnen), Old Icelandic regna (Danish and Norwegian regne, Swedish regna), and Gothic rignjan.

—rainbow n. About 1250 reinbowe, developed from Old English rēnboga (about 1000); formed from rēn rain, n. + boga bend, BOW² (weapon). —raincheck n. (1884) —raincoat n. (1830) —raindrop n. About 1400 reindrope; developed from raise v. Probably about 1200 reysen lift up, give rise to, make greater, increase; later, raisen (before 1250); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic reisa to raise; see REAR², v.). —n. About 1500, a levy; later, act of raising (1538); from the verb. The sense of an increase in amount, value, etc., is first recorded in 1728.

Old English (about 1000) rēndropa. —rainfall n. (1854) —rain forest (1903, possibly a loan translation of German Regenwald) —rainstorm n. (1816) —rainy adj. About 1384 reyny; developed from Old English (before 1000) rēnig (formed from rēn rain + -ig *-y*¹).

raisin n. Probably before 1300 reisyn grape, raisin; later raysyn (probably about 1425); borrowed through Anglo-French reisin, Old French raisin grape, raisin, from Vulgar Latin racimus*, alteration of Latin racemus cluster of grapes or berries; probably from the same (Mediterranean) source as Greek rháx (genitive rhágós) grape, berry.

rajah or raja n. 1555, borrowed as rājā, a transliteration from Hindi, from Sanskrit rājā, nominative of rājan king; cognate with Latin rēx (genitive rēgis) king; see REGAL.

rake¹ n. tool for gathering leaves, hay, etc. Before 1325 rake, developed from Old English raca rake (about 1000); earlier ræce (before 800); cognates with Middle Low German rake rake, from Proto-Germanic rak-*, and with Old High German rehho rake, rehhan gather, heap up (modern German Rechen rake), Middle Dutch reke, Old Icelandic reka spade, shovel, and Gothic rikan heap up, from Proto-Germanic rek-*. —v. About 1250 raken gather, rake; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic raka to scrape, rake).

rake² n. scoundrel. 1653, shortened form of earlier rakehell (1554 and as an adjective, before 1547), possibly alteration (by association with *rake*¹ and hell) of Middle English rakel, adj., hasty, rash, headstrong (before 1300); probably from raken, v. to go, proceed (compare rakeden went hastily, rushed, probably before 1200), of unknown origin.

rake³ n. slant or slope. 1626, sloping cut of a ship's hull; perhaps from the verb. —v. 1627, to have a sloping cut to a ship's hull; of uncertain origin (compare Old Swedish raka project, reach, Danish rage protrude).

rakish¹ adj. of or like a scoundrel. 1706, formed from English *rake*² + *-ish*¹.

rakish² adj. smart, jaunty, dashing. 1824, probably formed from English *rake*³ + *-ish*¹.

rally¹ v. bring together. 1603, borrowed from French rallier, from Old French ralier reassemble, unite again (re- again + alier unite). The sense of pull together, revive, rouse, is first recorded in 1667. —n. 1651, rapid reunion for renewed effort, from the verb. A mass meeting to arouse group support is first recorded in 1840, and that of a gathering of automobile enthusiasts, as for a race, was borrowed about 1930 from French rallye, which was borrowed from English *rally*¹, n., about 1911. The act of hitting a ball, shuttlecock, etc., a number of times after service, appeared in 1878.

rally² v. to make fun of, tease. 1668, borrowed from French railler to rail, reproach, from Middle French; see RAIL², v.

ram n. Before 1325 ram, rom male sheep; earlier in a place name Ramtune (1086); also, a pile driver (1256); found in Old English ramm male sheep, battering ram (about 1000); earlier rom male sheep (before 725); cognates with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, and Old High German ram ram, and probably with Old Icelandic rammr, ramr sharp, strong, of unknown origin. —v. Probably before 1300 rammen to tramp down earth; probably from the noun in Middle English.

ramada n. 1869, arbor or porch, borrowed from American-Spanish ramada tent, shelter, from Spanish ramada an arbor, from rama branch, from Vulgar Latin rāma*, a collective (perhaps formed on the model of Latin folia leaves) from Latin rāmus branch.

Ramadan n. 1595, borrowed from Arabic Ramaḍān, originally, the hot month, from ramiḍa be burnt, scorched.

ramble v. About 1443 ramblen, perhaps a frequentative form of ramben*, variant of romen, v. to walk, go, ROAM; or perhaps an alteration of romblen to ramble (about 1378), also a frequentative form of romen to ROAM; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1654, from the verb. —rambler n. (1624) —rambling adj. 1623, from the verb.

rambunctious adj. 1830 rumbunctious; later rambunctious (1859); alterations of earlier rambustious (1853, possibly influenced by ram, v.) and rumbustious (1778, an arbitrary reformation probably influenced by *rum*¹, of robustious boisterous, before 1548). It is also possible re-formation of the medial syllable was in part influenced by bumptious.

ramekin or ramequin n. 1706, borrowing of French ramequin, perhaps also from early modern Dutch rammeken toasted bread; or from Low German ramken, diminutive of ram cream, from Middle Low German rōm, rōme.

ramify v. Probably before 1425 ramifien branch out; borrowed from Middle French ramifier, from Medieval Latin ramificare, from a lost adjective ramificus* (Latin rāmus branch; + the root of facere make); for suffix see -FY. —ramification n. 1677, branch or offshoot; borrowed from French ramification, from Medieval Latin ramificare ramify; for suffix see -FICATION. The sense of outgrowth, consequence, is first recorded in 1755.

ramp¹ n. a sloping way. 1778, borrowed from French rampe, from Old French ramper to climb; see RAMP². An earlier meaning of difference in level between the supports of an arch is recorded in 1725.

ramp² v. rush wildly about. Before 1325, especially as present participle rampand standing on the hind legs, rearing; later rampyng (about 1400), forms of the present participle of raumpen; borrowed from Old French ramper to creep, climb, from Frankish (compare Middle Low German and Middle Dutch ramp creep, Middle High German rampf, and Old High German rimpfan to wrinkle). Later use of ramp, may have been affected by the coeval raumpaunt, adj., rampant.

rampage v. 1715, Scottish; probably formed from *ramp*² rave, rage (about 1390) + -age, on the model of ramagen be furious, rage (before 1500, from the adjective ramage wild, violent, about 1300). —n. 1861, from the noun.

rampant adj. Before 1382 raumpaunt fierce, ravenous; earlier, rearing or standing on the hind legs (about 1300); borrowed from Old French rampant, present participle of rampier to creep, climb; see *RAMP*², v. The sense of growing without check (as in vines running rampant over the fence) is first recorded in 1619 and is the only use of the French meaning of creep or climb found in English.

rampart n. 1583, borrowing of Middle French rampart, rem-part (with added t), from remparer to fortify (re- again + emparer fortify, from Old Provençal amparar, from Vulgar Latin ante-parāre* prepare, from Latin ante- before + parāre prepare).

ramrod n. 1757, rod for pushing the charge of a gun in place. —v. 1948, to push forward vigorously.

ramshackle adj. 1830, from ranshacked (1675), alteration of ransackled, past participle of ransackle to RANSACK; for suffix see *-LE*³.

ranch n. 1808, hut or house in the country; later, farm for raising animals or crops (1831); borrowed through American Spanish ranchito small farm, group of farm huts, from Spanish ranchito, originally, group of persons who eat together, from ranchar, ranchear to lodge or station, from Old French ranger install in a position, from rang row or line; see *RANK*¹, n. —v. 1866, from the noun. —rancher n. 1836, formed from English ranch, n. and v. + *-er*¹ and borrowed from American Spanish ranchero (1827).

rancid adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin rancidus rank, stinking, offensive, from rancēre be spoiled or rotten (found only in rancēns present participle).

rancor n. Probably before 1200 rancor bitter resentment or ill will; borrowed from Old French and directly from Late Latin rancor rancidness, grudge, bitterness, from Latin rancēre, see RANCID; for suffix see *-OR*¹.

rand n. 1961, borrowed from Afrikaans rand, from Dutch rand field border; so called from The Rand (Witwatersrand), a gold-mining district in the Transvaal.

random adj. 1655, by chance or with no plan; abstracted from at random, at random by chance, with no plan; originally, at great speed, without care or control (1565), developed from Middle English randun impetuosity, speed (about 1300; later random, before 1470; also o randon before 1300); borrowed from Old French randon, randum rush, disorder, from randir to run fast, from Frankish rant* a running (compare Old High German rennen to cause to RUN). For a similar shift of the terminal consonant from n to m see RANSOM.

randy adj. 1698, rude, disorderly; Scottish, probably formed from obsolete English rand to rave, RANT (1601) + *-y*¹. The sense of lewd or lustful appeared before 1847.

range n. Before 1325 range row, line, act of arranging; borrowed from Old French range, reng range or rank, from rangier, ranger to place in a row, arrange, from rang, reng row or line; see *RANK*¹.

